Fool the Talented Race-Goers.

FAVORITES ALTO MIO AND ROSEBUD WIN.

The Dorebin-Iris Filly Runs Half a Mile in 48 Seconds—Altus, a 10-in-1 Shot, Beats a Good Field in Slow Time—Centella Gives Dust to a Fine Field—St. Croix and Typ Winner, Favorites, First Past the Post—Closing Days of a Very Successful Meeting.

FORTY-THIRD DAY—FRIDAY, JANUARY 6.

SURPRISES were numerous and costly to the talent this afternoon, and the bookmakers had several shades the best of the game, as they generally do, one way and another. The attendance was comparatively small, but that could be accounted for by the mediocre ability of the horses engaged in four out of five events. Epperson, Tally and Charley Weber rode one winner apiece, while Spence was successful with two of his mounts. The track was fast and the time made was creditable throughout.

Jack the Ripper opened at 4 to 1 in the hooks, and was hacked down to 3 to 1. Charger was favorite at 8 to 5 and 2 to 1. Red Rose opened at 2 to 1, but receded to 3s. Nipper and Joe Harding were not neglected at 5 to 1 each. Jack the Ripper got away in the lead after seeing that the odds were very good against his chances, was never headed, and won by a short head from Red Rose, who came up fast and gamely at the end. Only a head behind Red Rose was Nipper, who got away last. Charger, the favorite, was pushed close up against the rails, destroying his chances of winning. A howl went up that Red Rose had won, but it availed the howlers not. However, the filly did pass the Ripper immediately after the wire was reached, as did Nipper. Time, 1:01 1/2.

Alto Mio was a hot favorite at 1 to 2. Quarterstaff was played by his owner, and friends for a slaughter of the innocent bookies. The remaining trio were only nibbled at by the suckers. Bonnie Blue got away in front, but Alto Mio soon passed him, and opened up such a gap of daylight that his opponents were made to look ridiculous. Quarterstaff ran fast in the homestretch, passing Bonnie Blue a sixteenth from home. Huguenot then came up from the rear, and in a jostling, hair-raising finish Quarterstaff beat Huguenot a head for the place, Bonnie Blue half a length behind the Three Cheers colt. Alto Mio's margin at the wire was three lengths. Time, 1:16.

The third was the right kind of race—one and a quarter miles. Cyclone was much fancied, and was the favorite at 2 to 1. Jennie K. opened at 5 to 1, but a plunging caused a drop in the odds to 3 to 1. Fannie F. and Santa Fe were far from being despised. Initiation cut out the running for about a quarter of a mile, attended closest by Santa Fe and Altus, when Jennie K., on the outside, ran around her field on the first turn and was leading Santa Fe half a length passing the quarter-pole, Initiation third and the favorite sixth and last. Cyclone now commenced his mowing down, passing Santa Fe and Fannie F. going to the half-pole, where Jennie K. was leading Initiation by a length and a half, Altus third. Between the half and three-quarter marks Cyclone looked very dangerous for a moment, but Jennie K. sailed away from the big brown horse and entered the homestretch at least two lengths to the good. Clancy set to work on the favorite, and once in the straight it had looked like Cyclone was going to get up, but Jennie K., with a lot of speed up her sleeve, drew away in grand style, and won from Cyclone in 2:10, by three lengths, the latter two from Altus.

Rosebud was considered a lay-down-get-up-and-win certainty in the fourth race, five furlongs, for beaten horses, on the strength of her good run against Topgallant a few days ago. Rosebud and Prince's First drew away from the field at once, and had the race to themselves. At the finish Rosebud had an easy time of it, winning by three parts of a length, Prince's First second, four lengths from Prince, who was third throughout. Time, 1:01 1/2.

Every horse in the last race (and there were six of them) was well played except Estrella, who opened at 8 and went to 20 to 1. Queen Bee was first plunged on, then Ledalia and Red Prince, and just before they went to the post B. C. Holly went down the line on Revolver, who was as good as 7 to 1 in some books. The gelding went to the starting-point with odds of 3 to 1 against his chances. Revolver led to the half, putting half a length of daylight between himself and his nearest pursuers, Estrella and Nellie G. The last-named caught Revolver as they neared the three-quarter pole, and the gelding giving it up, the gray mare soon opened up space on him. A sixteenth from the wind-up Ledalia and Red Prince came out of the hunch like a couple of skyrocketers, and it looked for a moment as if they would give Nellie G. the go-by, but the daughter of Sampson came again gamely, winning from Ledalia by three parts of a length, Red Prince as far behind. Time, 1:29.

FORTY-FOURTH DAY—SATURDAY, JANUARY 7.

A good programme was furnished to-day, and the Blood Horse Association was favored with sunshine and a fast track besides for its closing day. The meeting has been successful beyond the fondest dreams of the most sanguine member of the organization. When the meeting began an indebtedness of $18,000 stared the members in the face, but now all the dark clouds and the debts have disappeared and there is a very thick golden lining to the association's finances and an interest has been awakened in racing here truly amazing to those who have seen the horses run the last past few years at Bay District to empty grand stands—pardon us for the term grand stand, we should have said, rookeries. The change for the better can be attributed to several things—the securing of starters of splendid ability in Messrs. Ferguson and Rowe, the improvements made in the appointments of the course, posting the entries around the city the night before the events are run, the liberality of the purses and the bringing from a distance of a new lot of horses which made matters more interesting for spectators. Then the Eastern bookmakers doing business here forced our local pencilers to put up something like decent odds against the chances of the various horses, and that has resulted in drawing many a lover of race horses to the track that would not have gone had the bookmaking been conducted under the old system, when fair odds were something unknown. Various changes for the better could be suggested, but we trust everything will be done in a short time. Suffice it to say that no one ever thought that in a few month's time racing at San Francisco could be made to draw on an average a crowd of 2,000 persons or over 10,000 to see any kind of an event. Yet this has come to pass, and the association members can now see that San Francisco people will attend the races in great force if anything like a good programme is furnished them.

The racing to-day was of a very fair order, the track being in excellent shape and the races all well filled. The successful jockeys were Johnny Weber (two races), W. Clancy, C. Clancy and Peters. Three favorites and two long shots won the races.

The Daren-Iris filly, opposed in the first race, half a mile, by Gypsy Girl, Farmer, Jim R., Flora E. and Waif. The daughter of Daren was at 1 to 5 in the books—not very liberal odds when a record-breaker like Gypsy Girl and flyers like she was asked to meet were in the field. Gypsy Girl, to a pretty start, soon showed her nose in front, with Flora E. second and the favorite third. Waif soon ran up second to Gypsy Girl, and the Iris filly was in a pocket safe enough between the half and three-quarter poles, and Clancy, seeing the position he was in, pulled back to the rear, then sent the great youngster around her horses, on the outside. Waif was soon dispossessed of, and Flora E. then fell behind. Half-way down the straight it looked as if Gypsy Girl was not to be caught, but with astonishing ease the favorite soon flew by the record-cracker and won by two lengths without special urging. Charmer came very fast from the rear, and was beaten the shortest of noses by Gypsy Girl for place. Time, 0:48—next to the fastest run ever made in California in a half-mile dash. April Fool ran the distance in 0:47 at Sacramento last spring when he beat Geraldine and Gypsy Girl. The latter ran half a mile in 0:47 at Spokane during the summer of 1892, and holds the record at three-eighths of a mile—0:34. Had the Iris filly not been pocketed and forced to run around her field, that she could have gone the four furlongs this afternoon in 0:47 few doubt.

For the second race, seven-eighths of a mile, Patricia was an even-money favorite, and well played at that. Regal and Carter B. were most fancied of the others. Santa Fe, closely attended by Altus, cut out the race. Patricia ran up second nearing the half-pole, and her backers felt jubilant, but it was only for a few seconds, for in the homestretch she tired badly and Santa Fe and Altus had it hammer-and-tongs, the last-named winning by a head. Mabel M., who had run up from fifth place in the last sixteenth, was beaten but a nose by Santa Fe for place, and had she made her run one hundred yards further back the race would have gone to the daughter of Wildside beyond peradventure. The time, 1:30, was the poorest made during the day. Patricia evidently does not care to go much over five furlongs.

The $1,000 handicap, mile and fifty yards, came next, and Misty Morn was made the warmest sort of a favorite, going to the post at 1 to 2. Pescador and Centella were well played, going to the post at 4 and 5 to 1 respectively. Pescador, as usual, cut didoes at the post and got away last. Misty Morn was first to show, but Sheridan led her a neck at the quarter-pole, Esperanza being third, Pescador next and Centella last. The latter now moved up fast, as did Pescador, who was a neck behind the favorite at the half-pole. Pescador and Misty Morn fought each other for another eighth, when Johnny Weber let Centella have her head, and she ran up to the pair with ease. Then Misty Morn, who has not proved herself the game mare in the world when collared, gave up the job of trying to win, and Pescador struck the straight track a neck in advance of Centella. The filly had him beaten in a few strides, and Sheridan came up from fourth place into second. Centella won hands down by two lengths, Sheridan second, the same distance from Pescador and Esperanza, who ran a dead heat for third place. Time, 1:45, a good run. Misty Morn finished absolutely last.

St. Croix was favorite for the fourth race, five furlongs, selling, with Jack the Ripper second choice and Mountain Boy next in demand. Jack the Ripper led at the start, with Charger second. The favorite got away all but last. Joe Hooker Jr. was in front at the three-quarter pole, with Charger second and old Stoneman third. The leaders made a very queer wide turn into the straight track, losing a lot of ground unnecessarily and allowing St. Croix to come up on the inside and take the lead, when, had a good turn been made by those in front, the favorite would have been forced to run around his field in order to win. It looked bad, for St. Croix came on and won unmolested by a length and a half, Stoneman second, half a length from Charger. Time, 1:01. The way it turned out of course suited most persons that played the race, but St. Croix might just as well have had no opponents, for they opened up and let him have a clear track coming into the homestretch.

Type-setter was an even-money favorite in the last race of the day, one of five furlongs. A lot of breakaways were made, and finally when the flag fell it was to a straggling start, with the favorite, Jennie Mintzer and Elair in front. Little Tough soon ran up third, and the positions were unchanged to the wire, the favorite winning by a length, Jennie Mintzer second, as far from Little Tough, he half a length from Huguenot, who was eighth to get away and ran a better race than the winner. Time, 1:02.

Main race record table with columns: WINNERS, SECOND HORSES, THIRD HORSES, Distance, Time, and names of jockeys and owners.

The Horse Pilots.

Below will be found a table showing the work of every jockey that rode a horse at the forty-day meeting of the Pacific Coast Blood Horse Association. While little Charley Weber has the largest number of wins to his credit, George Miller's percentage of winnings is the best among the jockeys that have ridden ten or more times. Robert Smith and W. Clancy were unplaced very few times, while Chancery Treadwell's percentage is 1,000, he having ridden but one horse, and that one a winner. Johnny Weber has done excellent work since his return from East St. Louis, while the greatest improvement noted among the younger jockeys was in the riding of Willie Spence. Epperson landed the longest "shot" of the meeting (Guadaloupe at 30 to 1), while "Boh" Smith, Seaman, H. Smith, Long and Peters have finished first with "rank outsiders" more than once that astonished the natives:

The colt G. W. Johnson will be sent from New York to start for the American Derby, at Chicago, in June, provided he does well enough in training to warrant the trip. This you will have the attraction of a noted Eastern-owned colt in your big race, the colt being now the property of Dr. Knapp, of New York, who bought him in October at the sale of the late J. M. Brown's horses for $30,000. The colt has hardly any engagements in the important Eastern events, and the most popular young men in New York, a member of all the clubs, and a keen follower of the dog and gun, and if you treat him well he will be liable to enter with you in the future. The colt G. W. Johnson will race West during Washington Park's meeting, while Dr. Knapp's crack colt Sir Walter is doing battle for the stables in the great events of the East. G. W. Johnson has not inspired racing men with confidence, however. He had a suspicious leg when he was sold, and since then it has been found necessary to fire the ailing limb. His veterinarian says the action will insure his training, but horsemen generally are not encouraged over a horse which has to be fired as a two-year-old.

The Winning Owners.

Following is a table showing the total amounts taken down by the various owners at the Blood Horse meeting which ended last Saturday. W. O'B. Macdonough heads the list, but it must be remembered he had quite a large string of horses to run for him, as did B. C. Holly. Dan Miller's small string did great work, the Iris filly, trained with the Miller horses, putting quite a smm, in addition, to the credit of S. G. Reed. Matt Storn's horses were in fully as good trim as any in training at old Bay District course. The stable winnings were second only to Mr. Macdonough's, and the amount won by the Storn and Chase horses was captured by four flyers—Marigold, Toppallant, Centella and Phebe Ann. Several parties won all their money with one horse, notably, H. Daniels, $3,700 with Democrat (a $56 horse); P. Siebenthaler, $3,200 with Sheridan; S. G. Reed, $3,160 with the Darebin-Iris filly; Dunlap & Prowse, $2,390 with Joshua; D. R. Dickey, $1,910 with Pescador; Henry Rudy, $2,275 with Lottie Mills; Rickabaugh & Earp, $730 with the same filly; George Van Gorden, $2,505 with Motto; Jones & Bybee about $2,300 with Misty Morn, while Little Esperanza has won most of the $3,055 credited to the Encino Stable. Charmion was the largest winning thoroughbred at the Blood Horse meeting, the $2,500 a side match with Princess going a long way toward putting her in that position. The Darebin-Iris filly has won more races than any animal at the meeting (ten), a most remarkable showing, truly. Lottie Mills won six times, Motto five, Joshua and Wildwood each four. The amount divided is most encouraging to owners of thoroughbreds, and we expect in consequence to see the breeding interests in California having a veritable "boom" during the coming year.

Ripans Tabules cure colic.

THAT Col. North will receive a hearty welcome from American racing men need scarcely be said. His pluck and enterprise deserve every recognition, and whether his colors are often first past the post or not, he may be quite sure that he will be cordially received and his horses given every possible chance. His string seems on paper a fairly strong one. El Diablo is, of course, a high class animal. Last year he won the Lowther Stakes, heating the Derby winner, Sir Hugo, and in a free handicap at Newmarket, at one and a quarter miles, beat Orme in his last race of the year, though he was in receipt of 16 lbs. Iddlesleigh is a good campaigner and won three races last season, and High Commissioner put the Doncaster Spring Handicap and the Westmoreland Stakes to his credit. Arturo was not a winner, but Rough and Ready scored brackets three times, in the Princess' Handicap at Gatwick, the Royal Stakes at Epsom and the Sussex Plate at Brighton, sprinting being his forte. Miss Simon only once sported colors, when she walked over for the Zetland Stakes at Newmarket. Sir Frederick Roberts won the Great Cheshire Handicap, at one mile and a quarter, and Eltham Queen won one race, the Orleans Nursery Handicap, at Sandown, with light weight, being unplaced the only other time she started.

R. E. DE B. LOPEZ presented us this week with a programme of the spring meeting of 1890 of Victoria Racing Club (Cup Day). On this date Carbine, carrying 145 pounds, beat thirty-eight others in the Melbourne Cup, running the two miles in 5:23 over a turf course. In the field were such cracks as Melos (133 lbs.), Cuirassier (126 lbs.), Sir William (123 lbs.), Richelieu (123 lbs.) and Singapore (121 lbs.). Carbine's win of this race is considered among the most remarkable in turf annals. The Barb carried 1-8 pounds to victory in the Melbourne Cup, but the field he beat was not as good as the one Carbine defeated, neither was the time made anything like as good.

THE GUN.

Little Cricket.

BY CHARLES WESLEY KYLE.

We called 'im Little Cricket,
He wuz ez sweet a child
Ez ever gladdened human heart,
Er with affection smiled;
And handsome! Why, the little lad
Hed langhtn' eyes 'nd curls,
'Nd ways ez sweet 'nd winsomelike
Ez enny little girls.
He wuz a little shaver then,
A-borderin' on four;
The time when heaven to children gives
All things we must adore.
The way he crept into our hearts
And grappled every string,
And ruled us all et his sweet will,
Wuz like a little king!
There want a man in the hull camp
But loved 'im ez his owu,
With love ez tenderan' ez pure
Ez enny ever known.

His father wuz my partner,
'Nd ez good 'nd brare a man
Ez ever struck the hills fer gold
With miner's pick 'nd pan.
His mother wuz a faithful wife—
One uv those jewels pure,
Who fer the loved ones uv their heart
Would ennything endure.
She died afore the little babe
Her mother-love hed known,
To struggle no alone.
There want a woman in the camp,
For then the hills wuz wild;
About the last place on the earth
'Twuz fer a little child;
But Tom wuz mother to the babe,
And et wuz sweet to see
The lovin' patient care he gave
To et so tenderly.

The baby somehow grew 'nd thrived,
Escapin' all the ills
Which like a host uv doubts 'nd fears,
The parent bosom fills;
He wuz so peart 'nd cheerin' like
He jest reached out 'nd drew
The feelin's uv all hearts to him,
'Nd worked 'em through 'nd through.
When et wuz Christmas 'nd the lad
Wuz jest a-turbin' three,
His Pa allowed then we must have Fer him a Christmas tree.
The notion took like wild-fire,
And all around about,
Yer could a-heard the miners all
Second'd et with a shout!
Each one uv us fell to 'nd worked
Upon this novel drift,
All bent upon discoverin'
The finest Christmas gift.

There want no gewgaws in them parts,
And every one wuz thrown Upon his own resources, which
We found not overgrown!
We owe to Nature every thing
We get while here we live,
But in most cases all her gifts
Are somewhat primitive;
And most uv 'em would hardly do.
I think we'll all agree,
Fer decoratin' ferra child
A pleasin' Christmas tree!
There ain't a soul in all the earth
But et would please to see
The gifts which we all worked 'nd hrung
To the ar' child uv three;
And when we hed arranged 'em all
Et wuz a perty sight;
Ef I should live a hundred year,
I'd ne'er forget that night.

The tree wuz right smart uv a spruce
Set in a cedar hock,
Right in the center uv the room
On which to hang our stock;
And when we'd hung our presents all,
That tree hed cur'us fruit;
'Twuz wagons, 'barrows, picks 'nd spades
And other things to boot!
Onc feller'd gone 'nd caught a 'coon,
Another'd shot a fox
And made fer 'im the cuttest caps
'Nd warmest kind uv frocks;
Whistles 'nd jumpin' jacks 'nd drums,
And every kind uv toy
Ez enny uv us could opine
Would ever please the boy,
And Little Cricket laughed with glee,
With joy a-most went mad,
'Nd every man in the hull camp
Wuz mighty nigh ez glad.

Some months passed by, 'nd when the spring
The hills hed carpeted
With softest grasses green 'nd fresh,
And pepples gold 'nd red;
Our Cricket wuz a-runnin'
And a-playin' by the brook,
And in each corner all about
Wuz taken uv a look;
Et jest seemed that all nature wuz
So sweet 'nd pure 'nd mild,
And that her every tone 'nd smile
Wuz intruded in the child,
When the wild flowers bloomed the fairest,
And spring-time skies wuz blue,
Ez enny that the golden stars

Hed ever twinkled through,
Our little treasure pined away,
And God to us denied,
The sweetest jewel uv our lives,
When Little Cricket died.

Et would a-broke yer heart to see
The grief uv Cricket's Pa,
Fer while love ez sweet 'nd tender,
Et's nature's strongest law.
I tell yer et wuz terrible
To see his silent grief,
Ez he bowed o'er the little form,
A-tremblin' like a leaf;
His looks wuz so appealin' like,
And heavy came his breath,
When he fust realized the truth
Uv Little Cricket's death.
He took the cold form in his arms,
Although he knew 'twuz clay,
And pressed et to his heart 'nd walked
The cabin floor all day.
When evenin' came we laid the child
Beside his Ma to rest,
A-prayin' that his spirit form
Wuz on her spirit breast.

The clouds wuz weepin' softly like—
The brook 'nd every leaf
Sounded ez ef they, too, wuz touched.
By Tom's unspoken grief,
The summer passed, and then the fall
Gave way to winter's p'ace:
Fer every day a year wuz writ
Upon my partner's face.
When Christmas came he got a tree,
And brought the toys 'nd things,
And fixed 'em ez they wuz last year,
To which his meanty clings.
When evenin' came he set him down
Beneath the tree alone;
When mornin' broke, he knew it not,
His spirit sad hed flown!
There ain't no doubt enters my mind
But thet his soul wuz given,
To wife 'nd child he loved so well,
For Christmas up in heaven.

Drunken Sparrows.

"What people don't know don't hurt 'em," was a favorite expression of a peculiar old gentleman whom the writer well knew in boyhood days. Full many a time and oft has the circumstance arose during the short span of a few years of observation to which the crude saying seemed peculiarly applicable. Every one has heard of this or that questionable dish being served under some popular name and muster with the so-called epicures of the country. The writer is always glad to hear that this or that dish of the plebian's diet has been palmed off on some gastronomic ignominus as something particularly fine—in short as the only dish upon which his finely-cultured taste could ever set its seal of approval. Lord! what fools these mortals be! Puck (the writer knew the knowing little cuss well) quoted the above pungent saying from the immortal hard after learning the facts hereinafter warranted. The gormands of New York, like those elsewhere, do all their thinking through the gastronomic nerve and are occasionally or rather, in these halcyon days of fraud, always imposed upon. The clever deception of which we speak was primarily introduced by a couple of noble Neapolitans (we call them by that name because it sounds well and by reason of their cleverness they are deserving of it, although as a matter of fact they were two of the most diabolical "dagos" that ever disgraced the Battery district) who saw in the desires of the ignorant gormands up town a chance to turn an honest dollar.

The "dagos" saw the large flocks of sparrows which all day long hopped about the cobblestones almost indolently picking up the grain which was scattered around, and then flying up to some neighbor hough, just to sleep and grow fat.

A diabolical idea entered their minds, and after consulting with a friend they purchased rice, and also the strongest aguariente that could be procured in "The Bend" in Mulberry street. The rice was soaked in the spirits, and before sunrise the Italians went to the Battery. They first carefully swept away any grain that might have been left from the previous day and then with a lavish hand scattered the rice around the usual feeding ground of the sparrows. With the earliest dawn the birds began twittering and quarreling, and as the tramps arose from the benches in the Battery and slunk off to the alleys of South and West streets, the birds, hungry for their breakfast, soon covered the cobblestones and were busy picking up the delusive rice. Gradually the sparrows became unsteady in their gait, and a bird would pull himself together and wonder where "he was at." Then they began to see things double, and as a bird pecked at a grain he missed it and nearly fell over on his head. Some sparrows got talkative, others morose. Some became affectionate and could not understand the combativeness of some of their comrades. Many evidently wanted to go home, but they had forgotten the way. Soon bird after bird lay down on the cobblestones and slept, oblivious of all around it. Then the Italians, picking up the birds, wrung their necks, and with smiling faces, wended their way to Washington Market, where a poultterer gave them four cents apiece for the birds, which, after being plucked were arranged in hatches of twelve in neat cardboard boxes.

That night those same birds sold for 60 cents a pair in the uptown restaurant as choice reed birds from the South, and the trade in drunken sparrows has been "hooming" ever since. Sparrow pie is a dish much thought of in England, and as long as the epicure here does not complain of the fraud imposed upon him nobody else will, for unconsciously he is ridding the community of a bird that has become a pest in the city and a terrible marauder on the farmer.

There is no safeguard against so-called accidents which are constantly occurring and recurring all over the country, owing to the handling of fire-arms. Men will be thoughtlessly and even criminally careless. The exercise of a bit of common sense by the current run of people cannot, as yet, be depended upon.

Game in Yellowstone Park.

We glean the following interesting information from the Helena Independent:

"Capt. George S. Anderson, of the Sixth cavalry, and at present in command of Troops I and D at Mammoth Hot Springs, is in the city. Concerning affairs in the Park he said: "The Park is well covered with snow just now and the troops are devoting their time to the protection of game which must be guarded with more than usual care during the winter season. This work is done by parties on snow shoes. A rough estimate of game in the Park now would include 40,000 elk, 1,500 antelope, 407 buffalo, 1,000 black tailed deer, 300 mountain sheep, with plenty of bear, beaver and other varieties. The game increases from year to year. Last year I sent five fine bears to Washington for the zoological garden. I think the service in the Park last summer was very satisfactory. The transportation facilities under charge of Mr. Hunley were excellent and the hotels were kept to a good standard. Of course there were complaints, though all but a few were groundless. There are some tourists who will even hold the government responsible for the weather."

The captain's favorite topic is the segregation bill, which he strongly opposes."

It is a matter upon which every sportsman is to be congratulated when we find such statements as the above coming from one so well qualified to speak on the subject and to find so able and interested an advocate for the preservation of the Park as it now is.

There should be no segregation. No one, we venture to state, who regards the public welfare above that of personal greed ever for one moment favored or does favor, segregation.

Let the Park, which is none too large as it is, forever remain a thing of beauty and a joy forever.

The grasping avarice of the individuals who would be benefited by the segregation of the Yellowstone would no doubt favor the establishment of factories in the Yosemite for the purpose of utilizing the power of her magnificent waterfalls. Such vandals are but a shade removed from the tramp who viciously or wantonly sets out a timber fire simply to see it burn.

Servants of Pomona.

It has ever been a study of a most perplexing nature to attempt to account for the seeming inconsistency in Nature's various forms of life, if all were intended to be preserved. On the one hand the weak, on the other the strong; the weak falling a prey to the strong on every hand. Interesting questions are the thousands which spring to the minds of even the casual observer of the great warfare in which the entire life of the universe is continually engaged.

Whatever may be the appointed sphere of other forms of life that of the butcher bird seems to be to butcher, and a right bloody butcher he has proven himself to be; a regular Black Bart. This bird seems to delight in murder simply for the love of it; the more horrible the better he seems to like the sport.

It is a well-known fact among those who have observed these birds at their work of destruction that they will take a mouse, a frog or a snake and while it is yet alive they will impale their helpless victim on the prickly pear or on a thorn of the orange or other thorn tree and then flutter about chattering as if in great glee over the torture which they have inflicted.

Perhaps Pythagoras' views of the transmigration of souls are correct, and that the egos of the Comanches have entered the butcher birds!

The blood-thirsty wretches are recognized as being servants of Pomona and are considered by the orchard and vineyard-ists of this State as being worthy of protection as they are said to be destructive not only of pestiferous insects but also of gophers, rats, mice and other vermine.

The present season should test and finally determine the definite line to which the public may go in its legislative capacity, in the matter of protecting, by legal enactment, the game of the country.

It would appear that much of the law, heretofore appearing on the statutes of the several States, has been like ropes of sand, at least has this been true in many instances. But we are inclined to think that enough sound law has been enacted to serve in most cases, the purpose for which it was intended, but it requires strong backing. One or two determined men constantly on the outlook in a community are a power for good, in the matter of enforcement of the laws. We are in need of men who will interest themselves in this matter. It is one thing to be interested in sports merely for the purpose of selfish gratification for the time being, but it is quite a different thing to be an active aggressive man willing to do whatever of practical work is necessary in enforcing the law. Let every petition to the legislature be fully signed to the end, that our legislature may know that the sportsmen of the State are in earnest in the matter of preserving the fish and game of the State by proper legal enactment.

Squirrels are a most destructive pest to the farmers of this State. There are fields which seem given over to these little rodents. They literally tunnel through them until the entire surface becomes an encrusted net work of passage ways. Poison seems about the only remedy, but this is bad, for the reason that it destroys also, and seemingly more effectually all kinds of birds, quail falling an easy prey to all kinds of poisoned grain. Then there are the other birds, many of which are the farmer's and fruit-grower's best friends, that are also destroyed by this means of getting rid of the four-footed pests. Indiscriminating poisoning is bad.

The paragrapher in our esteemed contemporary, the American Field, stumbles over the name of the Tamalpais Sporting Club and writes it Trampalpais. Now the members of this club do a good bit of tramping over the hills of Marin county, yet this fact should not be injected into the name of their Club. But what's in a name?

Have you not signed the petition requesting legislative action regarding the better protection of fish and game? If not do so at once, and after you have signed it request your friends to do likewise. A little work now may be instrumental in doing great good.

A panther measuring nine feet from tip to tip was killed recently near DuBois, Pennsylvania.

THE KENNEL.

Dog owners are requested to send for publication the earliest possible notices of whelps, sales, names claimed, presentations and deaths, in their kennels, in all instances writing plainly names of sire and dam and of grandparents, colors, dates and breed.

FIXTURES. BENCH SHOWS.

Westminster Kennel Club's seventeenth annual bench show, New York, February 21, 22, 23 and 24. James Mortimer, Superintendent, Chesapeake Bay Dog Club's bench show, Baltimore, Md., February 28, March 1, 2 and 3.

New England Kennel Club's bench show, Boston, April 4, 5, 6 and 7. J. W. Newman, Secretary.

Pacific Kennel Club's bench show, San Francisco, May 3, 4, 5 and 6. Horace W. Orear, Secretary.

World's Columbian Exposition bench show, Chicago, June 13, 14, 15, 16 and 17. Entries close May 20. Address W. I. Buchanan, Chief Department of Agriculture, Chicago.

Hamilton Kennel Club's second annual bench show, Hamilton, Can., September 7, 8, 9 and 10. A. D. Stewart, Secretary.

FIELD TRIALS.

Pacific Coast Field Trial Club's tenth annual trials, Bakersfield, Cal. January 16. J. M. Kilgari, Secretary.

Bexer Field Trials Club's third annual trials, San Antonio, Texas, January 9 and 10. All entries close December 31, 1892. G. A. Chabot, Secretary.

Southern Field Trial Club's fifth annual trials, New Albany, Miss., February 6. T. M. Brumby, Secretary.

Northwestern Field Trial Club's second annual trials, Morris, Manitoba, September 4. Tbos. Johnson, Secretary.

Beauty on a Point.

[BY CHARLES WESLEY KYLE.]

Tbar ez somethin' mighty catchin' in the smart 'nd silent way
Uv the bird dog in approachin' the cover uv his prey;
The wayn his discernin' wbar the quail er snipe ez hid,
'Nd never bein' fooled about some other bird inste'd;
Jest watchin' 'im a-suffenin' ez every limber joint Becomes ez rigid ez a stone, when comin' to a point.

The beautiful Llewellyn, er the pointer-slick 'nd trim,
Makes a pictur so attractin' thet et makes all others dim;
Leastwise et seems so unto me 'nd other sportsmen, too,
And ef your eyes ken see jest right, 'twill seem so unto you;
Fer Nature's done her level best, the bird dog to anoint,
With her best style uv beauty, when a-comin' to a point.

The usefulness of the Cocker Spaniel for quail hunting we are persuaded is but little understood or appreciated in this State.

The St. Bernard Club is in a flourishing condition and we may expect to hear some good reports from this direction at our next bench show.

Who will be the first to bring out a couple of first-class Barzoi to this coast? Whoever does will have the satisfaction of owning two of the finest-looking dogs in California.

It will require a very delicate wind gauge to accurately measure the amount of wisdom on kennel matters that will literally be blown at Bakersfield next week.

Remember that the evenings will be cool when you return from the shooting grounds at Bakersfield next week. Take along your heavy overcoat or you will get chilled through.

Goose, duck and snipe shooting vary the quail hunting in Kern County this year. If you should go down to the Field Trials be prepared to enjoy any outing that may be presented.

The conversation now among the sportsmen of the city turns to the subject of the Field Trials. There will, without doubt, be a large attendance on this, the leading field event of the Pacific Coast, for the year.

The deep impenetrable mystery which lies over and around the hands of the "crack" dogs for the coming Field Trials is akin to occult studies of the day. Every man holds the winner, in his own estimation and will continue to think so until finally beaten in the field.

Do not worry yourself one moment about the arrangements at Bakersfield, they are all right. With such men as Colonel Morrison, Wm. Houghton and numerous other residents of that city firmly wedded to the idea of making a success of this event, it could not be otherwise.

Auices from Bakersfield are to the effect that every condition there is most favorable for a grand season of sport during the coming Field Trials at that point. The handlers are all busy there with their strings of dogs and all are confident that the dogs that win will have to show first-class work.

Dr. A. DeMonco, formerly of Denver, will, in all probability, attend the Field Trials of the Pacific Coast at Bakersfield next week. Such of our kennel men and fanciers as may there meet him will find him to be a clear-headed, gentlemanly and earnest sportsman, whom to know will add additional pleasure to that leading event.

A seven-year-old boy was left alone at home near Toronto, Ohio, recently, having no company save a large mastiff. A tramp attempted to rob the house, but soon found himself in a very tattered and torn condition owing to the boy's best friend, and glad to get away even with his own worthless life as his only belonging. Good dog!

Here is a question for some of the wise men who will attend at Bakersfield: What puppy will win the Derby? "Harder to answer than it would be to decipher the handwriting on the wall which puzzled the king's wise men," we hear you say. All right, we will propound an easier one: What dog will be placed first in the all-aged stake? So far as heard from, there has been no definite answer given to either question.

The bench show committee of the Pacific Kennel Club have set to work with a will to arrange for the coming show. Mr. T. J. Watson is chairman and Mr. C. A. Haight, secretary. The committee fully realize the amount of work before them and no doubt but that they will discharge every duty in a manner highly creditable to themselves and to the club. Let no stone be left unturned which can add to the success of the coming show.

California Field Sports.

The beauties and advantages of the climate of California have been the subject of many pens. It has been the theme of many an inspirational sketch and poem, and yet not one-half ever has or ever will be told of its marvelous charms. The beauties of its climate owe much, doubtless, to the fact that here one may, at almost any season of the year, choose any climate which fancy or inclination may suggest. "Variety is the spice of life," to echo an old saying, and, to the fact that pleasurable spices are always exhilarating, may be attributed the universal encomiums passed upon the weather of this State. It goes without saying that all field sports depend, primarily, upon the conditions of the weather. One cannot expect to enjoy the acme of sport, in any given line, unless the weather graciously permits. Here the weather clerk seems to favor for most of the year the sportsman. In other parts of the country the proviso, "if the weather permits," is always an important one, when the hunt is being considered. Seldom is it so here. In better than two years' experience I have never been kept from enjoying an outing on account of the unexpected in the weather.

The idea which seems to have become prevalent throughout the Middle and Eastern States that it rains here incessantly for six months in the year was never derived from the facts as they here exist. It is a comfort indeed to know that you may prepare for an outing without the obtruding fear of having it all upset and literally spoiled by reason of events over which you have no control.

By far the greater part of wing-shooting within this State is confined to the great valleys which lie west of the Sierras down to the sea, broken here and there by the spurs of the Coast Range, including a scope of country 100 to 150 miles wide by upwards of 500 miles in length. Through the valleys the rivers wind their way from the Sierras to the ocean, and numberless small streams, having their source in the nearer hills, seek a general level.

At the mouths of the rivers usually large level stretches obtain on either hand about the bays and smaller inlets from the sea are numberless marshes that afford the best possible facilities for snipe and aquatic birds.

The California valley quail furnishes the best possible sport. It is, perhaps, the most gamey bird to be found in the entire country, and strangely constructed must be the sportsman who may not find in hunting it, full satisfaction. It may be little or no swifter than some other game birds, but it flushes with such a rush and noise that the average sportsman, when first meeting it, is more or less disconcerted, and for some time will find that to him it bears a charmed life.

In traversing the haunts of these gamey birds he will be surprised to note great hands of them, frequently numbering into the hundreds, running before him in the comparative open and he is sure that he will be enabled to bag any number he may desire of them. He advances but finds a brisk run must be taken before he can come up with them. He fires and gathering the results of his first discharges looks about him in a state of wonder and perplexity, for he held, not so much as a sign of a bird is to be noted. He advances quickly and catches, perchance, a glimpse of two or three running swiftly through the clump-grass or on the bare ground, shaded by patches of sage-brush. He starts after them and worries himself in overtaking and flushing them, at which, usually, he must be satisfied with only a snap-shot, and this too, frequently at long range, when he finds himself a hundred yards or more from where the great body of the birds lie concealed.

If he remains away too long, and a surprisingly short time is frequently too long in such cases, the birds will set out for some convenient thorn patch or thicket and will, by so doing, reduce his chances of securing a bag of them to the minimum. In such cases the pointer and setter are well nigh valueless as they cannot beat the thicket successfully and in many cases cannot enter it at all. The only really useful dog under such conditions is the small Cocker spaniel as his size and thick coat enables him to go where it is impossible for most other bird dogs to work.

In many cases as above described one may have excellent shooting by hunting the ground closely, working over the tufts of grass, kicking and tramping every part of it effectually in order to flush the birds rarely, if ever more than one flushing at a time, the others paying no attention to shots or shouts no matter how loudly given.

It has been the experience of the writer to tramp over the same ground three or four times and flushing a bird only when literally kicking it from cover.

Again the birds flush much more easily, and scattering over the entire surrounding space, will come together in a short time and proceed again in a compact body.

They are a beautiful bird and when nicely and cleanly shot present as handsome a bouquet when neatly tied in bunches as ever gladdened a sportsman's eye. They, like most wild birds that associate in bevs or flocks, have some recognized leader and it is of no small interest to watch them when secure from their observation as they set out, perchance, to make a journey to the spring or other watering place. In many places through the valleys the ranchmen have sunk mammoth artesian wells which send up a hoiling flood of water, sufficient, in many instances, to form little lakes about them from the overflow, which is constantly being carried off through open ditches through the adjoining fields the better to supply water for the cattle and other domestic animals. About these places the quail will assemble in great numbers during the middle of the morning and afternoon hours. No prouder bird exists, and few, if any, are more dainty and graceful in movement. It is a pleasure to watch them from some hidden retreat at such times.

On going through the fields or pasture lands, should you see a hawk perched on some tree, you may be sure that you will find in that immediate locality a flock of quail. The writer has seldom known this sign to fail. At such times it is more than probable that the quail are to be found in the brush, as they have likely been driven there by their stronger feathered enemy that is now awaiting the time when they will again venture into the open. Every sportsman should carry a few shells loaded with No. 6 shot in order to protect the quail by killing the hawks whenever and wherever found.

The duck shooting has now fallen off for some unaccountable reason, but a storm may fill the marshes and bays with them again before the present season closes. When favorable weather brings in the birds, few States present better ducking grounds than this. During the early part of the fall this class of shooting was all that could be desired.

In mountain hunting, for all classes of heavy shooting, California is particularly favored. Bear and deer may be found in abundance in less than 100 miles from San Francisco, and the sport promises to be of the very first order next season, when we will be given the first opportunity to shoot deer for two years past. The closed season on deer has been productive of much good, as they have increased very materially within that time.

The sportsman of this State are now endeavoring to have our present legislature pass a law which shall limit the open season on deer to 90 days and also to provide ways and means to make the closed season one in fact as well as in law. If this be done we shall have plenty of deer for all time to come, provided, the traffic in hides and bones be effectually stopped. There is an abundance of wild pigeons and upland birds, foxes, squirrels, mountain lions, 'coons, wildcats, coyotes and other animals which with the most excellent fishing of all kinds including the mammoth king salmon renders California as a sportsman's resort second to no place in the entire country.

The International Meet.

In considering a subject of so much importance to the greyhound interests of the country nothing should be done in the matter save that which will tend to the best interest of the coursing world as a whole.

In this matter Nature does more, perhaps, than all else. Nature has determined this question, we are convinced, in favor of California. There is no place in the entire country where the natural conditions may be said to approach those to be found here.

It is on this point that we claim enough is shown in favor of this State, as the place where the meeting should be held, to overcome any adverse thought which might arise as to location.

In the matter of location, only those here in America can claim anything of advantage in this behalf and it is clear that if we can secure some considerable interest from Australia, as now seems probable then this point should by all odds have the preference on the score of location.

In a matter of national interest speaking as Americans only, the courtesy to the gentlemen who have to travel so far by water should not be lightly passed over.

Again, of no small moment, is the fact that at the season of the year when the meeting must be held, there is no spot in the world that can compare with California in the beauty and agreeableness of the weather. Let our coursing men not pass over this matter lightly. Merced, California, is the best place for the meeting.

Some Fine English Setter Blood.

Mr. Al. C. Anderson, of the Elms Kennels, St. Paul, Minn., is one of the many sportsmen from the arctic regions of the States who is taking the advantage of our delightful climate to spend here the winter months. He has with him the grand little bitch Blade's Dart, No. 21022, by Toledo Blade 12215 ex Babette B., No. 12,391, he by Roderigo 3514 ex Lillian; Babette B. by Buckellen, No. 12,446, he by Druid 95 ex Ruby, No. 506; Lillian by Champion Gladstone ex Champion Sue.

This is grand breeding, and as she is due to whelp to Champion Monk of Furness about February 10th, there will be an opportunity for the lovers of English setters to secure some grand blood, as we understand that Mr. Anderson will dispose of the litter here. Mr. Anderson may be communicated with in care of this office.

It seems somewhat strange that among the great number of the fancy here that there has not as yet appeared a thorough going promoter of the Cocker spaniel. Dr. Davenport of Stockton, and Mr. McKoon of the southern part of the State seem to be about the only men who thoroughly appreciate the merry little beauties in the breeding line. There are a few however, who know something about the Cocker and appreciate the advantages which may be derived by working them afield. In this line the supply we think would govern the demand, as these little beauties will make friends wherever they may be shown.

In but few if any seasons has the outlook been so bright as now for anticipating work of the first quality at the Field Trials of this coast. True since last year the kennel interest has lost that splendid little English setter bitch, Lady Trippo, whose work last year won the admiration of the entire body of sportsmen present, but we anticipate work equally as good this year and that too from more than one quarter.

The sportsmen of this city are contemplating the establishment of a kennel for the purpose of breeding and boarding sporting dogs. This is a movement in the right direction, and if the gentlemen who are contemplating this step should go on with the work, we predict that the results will be of the highest importance to the kennel interests of the Pacific Coast.

Mr. K. Sohneke, of 1819 1/2 Lyon street, city, between California and Sacramento, offers for sale a number of fine Gordon setter puppies whelped December 10th by Mahoney's Rex, nut of owner's Mirza. The sire and dam are each good field dogs and the litter offered for sale will doubtless develop like admirable qualities.

One of the most serious features which threaten to weaken our system of government is the open and flagrant manner in which many of the laws of our land are broken and trampled under foot. The numerous cases in which this is demonstrated almost daily all over the country are enough to make the thoughtful apprehensive of the effect of such action upon society at large. A recent case is mentioned from Michigan, where a man accused and brought to trial for killing a deer out of season is to the point. The testimony was conclusive; there was no doubt about the matter whatever, yet six jurymen deliberately committed moral perjury by bringing in a verdict of "not guilty." Such miscreants should be held up to public scorn and indignation. They do not deserve to live under and receive the benefits of a government, the laws of which they so openly set aside and render void by reason of their diabolical treachery. Such men are worse even than the person committing the original offence.

SPECIAL DEPARTMENT

EDITED BY

JOSEPH CAIRN SIMPSON.

A REASONABLE EXPLANATION.—I met Mr. W. H. Hinchman on the ferry boat Monday, and the conversation turned on the Stamboul record. After the talk with John Crow, which has been reported in the BREEDER AND SPORTSMAN, I learned that he had told others that his watch marked 2:17. This he had also told Mr. Hinchman. What he told O. A. Hickok was, in substance, that his watch was 1:02 at the halt; that shortly after passing that point Stamboul was falling back, and he called to Maben, and the reply of the driver of Stamboul was for Crow to bring the teaser up. As he ran alongside of Stamboul he "yelled" and Stamboul broke, ran about twenty yards, caught and trotted; from that point to the wire he trotted faster than other portions of the mile. Crow did not tell us what the difference between the time which his watch showed and that of the timers, further than to say that they did not agree, but that he saw two outside watches, both of which were stopped at 2:07. I was greatly surprised to hear that Crow had made such a statement. My first informant requested that his information should be kept secret, but when it was generally known, and especially when Mr. Hinchman said that Crow had told him, any obligation on my part was removed. Mr. Hinchman showed me the watch which Crow carried, and which Mr. Hinchman had used for months, and he said that quite frequently it had come to a stop in his hands. But there is another explanation. The spring which governs the slip is operated by a small knob, and requires some force to make it act. The other hand is started and stopped from the shank. When a watch is carried by a person who is driving, it is held in the left hand, which, of course, also grasps a rein. The knob was pressed on the split at the half and rested on the 1:02 mark for fifteen seconds. In pressing the knob again to overtake the moving hand, the thumb also struck the other knob and both hands were stopped at 1:17. In the excitement of the finish it was not started, and the driver, seeing that it rested on 1:17 seconds, took it for granted that it was 2:17 seconds. That the time of the last half was as slow as 1:15 is beyond credibility from Crow's statement. When the horse faltered he notified the driver. When he ran alongside and "yelled" the horse broke and ran. When he regained his trot he went faster than any other portion of the mile, and after making due allowance for falling back and the loss in the break—Crow states that he did not lose in the break—1:05 is a liberal estimate for the last half.

As regards the track, Mr. Covey informs me that the track was faster than it had been at any previous time during the meeting; that the smoother had been run over it after the rain, and that there was only a slight sprinkle, and that when the horse was finishing the mile. All the talk about the track being slippery is unquestionably unmitigated bosh. There is another thing in this much-mooted case deserving of notice. I have it from the best authority that Mr. Allen was offered affidavits which would effectually put a stop upon Stamboul obtaining the record, but they had to be paid for. That awakened a suspicion that it was a contrived scheme, a foul conspiracy to extort money from the owner of Kremlin, and parties who would go into a job of that kind would not hesitate to present false testimony. From my acquaintance with Mr. Crow I did not believe it possible that he would lend himself to such a disreputable business, but when I heard the 2:07 story was somewhat nonplussed to reconcile the two statements. The peculiarities of the watch gave the cue, and that discrepancy is no longer of any weight.

As has been published before I sincerely hope that all these kind of records will be past history, and that in the future nothing will be admitted excepting genuine race contests. No tilting with blunted spears, or dawdling with swords of lath or elder pop-guns. Horses that are so ultra-moral, so highly endorsed, and so far above all other trotters and pacers that degradation will follow taking part in races, let them retain all their highly-flavored odor of sanctity, and not run the risk of tin-cup taint. But in the wordy warfare that has raged over the record of Stamboul, or rather the virulent attacks which have been published against Registrar Steiner, there has been a small exhibition of good sense, in fact a crusade against the man which is without a particle of justification.

It is an idle conjecture to claim that the rules of the American Trotting Register Association were only adopted to cover admission into the 2:30 list of small importance when compared with struggles for championships. To wear the crown, all excepting yearlings have to go a long way inside the "inner circle," and when one is of little importance the others add immensely to the standing of the fortunate animals. "For the purposes of registration" means that there shall be a goal for the Year Book, and to place the construction upon it which some do would be to reduce the compilations of the A. T. R. A. to 2:30 horses. The trotting associations recognize records made on tracks which are not members of either Society, so that if the Registrar was to be guided by their rulings, tin-cup forces would have less standing than they do now. Throw down the bars, open the gates, and accept without question performances of animals already registered, and the pneumonia would stand second in bringing horses well down in the teens.

I append a portion of a private letter received from Mr. Steiner which is explanatory of the position he has occupied. And he is emphatically justified in the stand.

CHICAGO, January 3, 1893.
 JOSEPH CAIRN SIMPSON, Esq., Oakland, Cal.—DEAR SIR: Your letter of the 28th inst. forbidding clipping, received. The clipping quoting what I said to Mr. Kellogg is not correct. First I did not write Mr. Kellogg at all. In answer to his telegram, I wired him as follows:
 "According to the official report from the National Trotting Association all performances made at Stamboul factor 131 to November 23rd inclusive will probably have to be deleted on account of not being made in accordance with the rules of this association adopted April 6th. See May Monthly. And making a thorough investigation. This you will see that I did not reject the record, but felt it due to Mr. Kellogg to give him my opinion as to the probable outcome of the controversy."
 J. H. STEINER.

EASTWARD BOUND.—January 10th would not be the date selected for an Eastern trip, if pleasure were the motive, especially by one who has spent the past nineteen winters in the genial climate of Oakland. Had I the fixing the time of excursions which were to extend on or near the forty-second parallel of latitude and ever so many degrees of longitude, June, or the last days in May would be chosen with a strong second choice for September. Much pleasure could be derived from a sojourn of thirty or sixty days in these portions of the year, but when the Frost King is holding such high levels as grace the winter-months, notably that which is the first of the year, outdoor enjoyments are out of the question. Years ago it would have been different. Before becoming enervated by these many springtime winters, when there was the hardness of youth, and before sybaritic notions in regard to weather prevailed there were huge lumps of good times, when lakes and rivers were frozen, when the snow laid deep and then there was a choice of what particular sport should rule the day. The horsey enticements were not lacking. A sleigh ride in the crisp air, the sleighbells ringing clearer and the steel-clad runners lending their share of the music when the mercury sank low in the tube, and then trotting on the ice had many attractions, fully as many when the heart was young, as it now has under a summer sun and on the best kept tracks. The pleasures of memory are more grateful, however, at this time, than the tale which Hope tells, and starting on this January journey, I have greater expectations of realizing comfort when the logs are blazing furiously in the wide chimney, than setting behind a flying trotter, no matter how well enveloped in robes. Better pleased to listen to the trotting disquisitions around the stove than visiting stalls or watching the colts caracoling through the snow.

An auspicious start.—Fog in the early morning, but when it cleared away the sun shone with apparently increased warmth and the hoar frost vanished in a haze of colorized vapor. Sparrows twittering in merry glee, and as the hour drew near for commencing the journey my daughters and granddaughters gathered flowers as tokens to their Eastern cousins of the gloriousness of the January days on the far western side of our glorious country. In their zeal they would have decked grandpa so lavishly as to be a mere center of huge masses of flowers, and I had to submit to an extent of floral adornments unusual in my staid habiliments. Had there been taken an instantaneous photograph of that scene, and with the imprint Oakland, California, January 10, 1893, it would be better than pages of description in giving Eastern folks unacquainted with our winter weather a correct impression of what those midwinter days really are. The photos colored, of course, to be a faithful transcript. Not a pretentious scene, it is true, and for that reason a better exemplification of what nature will do with little assistance than grander residences and elegantly kept grounds. In the far background the end of the main stable, covered with honeysuckle, draping a good part of the upper story and hanging in festoons from the eaves. There is a trellis summer house attached to the barn, though it is put to the utilitarian purpose of sheltering silks and light carts. On these trellises are climbing roses, visterias and other creepers. Some of the roses in bloom, and on either side of the carriage way shrubbery and flowers. Ivy in profusion, in fact many kinds of bush and flowers which are beyond my knowledge of floriculture, and aged trees hugely ugly in my estimation. The children, a merry flock with hands full of flowers, wild violets, calla lilies, etc., not the least attractive part of the picture. The laughing, joyous youngsters so happy in the sunshine, the warm air and the birds and hossous with which they were surrounded.

I went to the mole an hour and a half before the time of starting, hoping to see Frank Covey and the horses before they started on their long journey. The intention was to take the 4 P. M. train, and not coming in time for that, supposed that some accident had occurred. When crossing the ferry from Port Costa to Benicia, one of Frank's men came to the car I was in and brought the welcome intelligence that they were on the train. From Benicia to Sacramento I rode in the Palo Alto car, and the time passed pleasantly indeed. At Sacramento they were joined by the Vina contingent, and from thence on they will be run special. The intention was to stop two days in Cheyenne, and from thence through to New York, with no long stops. Cheyenne will be the only place where the horses are taken off the cars, and they will reach New York a few days before the sale, which will give an opportunity to overcome the fatigues of the journey and intending purchasers a chance to make selections. At this time of writing, Wednesday noon, my fears of cold and discomfort were entirely without foundation; and oftentimes these dismal forebodings are not justified, and whether there is more satisfaction in having these gloomy fears prove groundless than in being warranted from the fulfillment of the predictions, might offer a field for argument. With me, however, the pleasure of traveling over the alkaline plains and barren country in just as favorable a temperature prevailed at Oakland yesterday is enhanced by the unexpected condition.

A pleasant company too, on the Pocatello, the euphoniously named through sleeper and that goes a long way in relieving the tedium of the journey. Mr. Willis, who has been associated with Henry Schwartz and other bookmakers for a number of years, and he has many interesting stories to tell about that exciting feature of racing sports. Twenty-five minutes after high noon and we were laying at Humboldt. The ten minutes stop gave a good chance to stretch one's legs, and after a turn or two here came Frank and the horses all in capital condition and doing as nicely as possible.

Lunch, a hearty one, Dr. Sampson, of Lechman & Co., and not Willis, making the meal so agreeable that Winnemucca was reached before I was aware that it was so near, and hence this composition had to be brought to an abrupt termination.

Sidney.

The grand stallion Sidney, considered by many the greatest sire of extreme speed ever foaled, will be sold in February at public auction. We ask readers of this paper to kindly consider his merits, which we shall in our humble way try to present in a more lengthy article later on. Meantime we will not disguise the object of offering a prize to the one who may guess the nearest to the price he will bring when sold. Our motive is simply to get a fresh list of live addresses for the purpose of sending out catalogues, and we therefore hope that everyone interested in the American trotting horse, no matter how prominent his position may be, will favor us with his estimate.

We have decided on offering two prizes, the first of which shall be a paradee (i.e. silky) of the make preferred by the fortunate guesser; the second prize will be an elegant gentleman's road driving whip. In the event of a tie, the first and second prizes shall be determined by lot. All guesses shall be recorded in a book, then placed in a package and sealed before the horse is offered. This package will be delivered to some prominent newspaper man to be announced later, and he will compare the guesses with the list and decide to whom the prizes are to be awarded.

As an aid in making this appraisal, we wish to repeat that at the time of Count Valensin's death a three years' contract existed between that gentleman and Mr. W. C. France, under which Mr. France was to pay $20,000 per year for Sidney's services, with a contingent additional amount of $5,000 per year. This contract by its conditions terminated at the death of Mr. Valensin, but that astute breeder, Mr. W. C. France, promptly offered the executors to renew it under exactly the same terms. This fact will give an indication of Sidney's immense earning capacity, independent of his merits from a pedigree standpoint or as a sire of phenomenal speed. Address all estimates to Wm. B. Fasig, Manager Trotting Department, 55th street and 7th avenue, New York City.

P. C. T. H. B. A. Meeting.

A meeting of the Directors of the Pacific Coast Trotting Horse Breeders' Association was held at the rooms, 313 Bush street, on Monday afternoon, January 9th, President Jos. Cairn Simpson in the chair. The meeting was called for the purpose of taking preliminary steps toward preparing a programme for colt and stallion stakes and purses for the fall meeting.

The question of holding a spring meeting, to take place in May or June, was discussed; and, in view of the fact that Messrs. Salisbury, Hickok and others who intend to go East this year had signified their willingness to start their fast horses at a spring meeting, the association decided to hold one at the close of the Blood Horse meeting, its duration to be four days, viz.—Saturday, Tuesday, Thursday and Saturday.

No programme was definitely agreed upon for this meeting. The question of five or ten per cent. entrance came up, and being put to a motion it was decided that the association make all entrance fees five per cent. of amount of purses. The financial condition of the association enables the directors to thus deal liberally with its members, and they expect a greater support and more encouragement than ever in their efforts in the future.

It was also decided to make most of the races at spring meeting two in three, and dashes of various distances to be given. The idea being to give besides the two in three races each day dashes that will keep up the interest. The general plan followed by the management of the Blood Horse Association will be adopted in regard to these dashes, viz.: The payment of entrance money and division of purse, etc.

If the spring meeting proves successful the same plan will be pursued at the meeting in the fall.

Messrs. Tompkins, Loeber and Brown were appointed a committee to prepare a programme to be submitted at a meeting of the Board to be held the first Monday in February.

The resignation of F. C. Talbot as a member of the Board of Directors was presented, his reasons for resigning being that the pressure of business prevented him from giving the attention to the duties of the office that he would desire. On motion the resignation was accepted.

Frank W. Covey, of Palo Alto, was elected a director in his stead.

Palo Alto Broodmare Sale.

The great sale of well-bred Palo Alto broodmares in foal to the best sons of Electioneer which is to take place in this city January 27th is attracting a great deal of attention among horsemen. The stock will be on exhibition on and after Tuesday, January 24th, at Killip & Co.'s salesyard, Market street. The class of mares is far superior to those sold at the last sale. Most of them are young, fine-looking, well-bred, and as they are related to the best on the farm, their value will be enhanced every year. The catalogue of stock will prove a surprise to many, for they will wonder why such a fine lot are to be sold, but the management desire to see the stock pretty well scattered from Oregon to Mexico, then every man who owns a well-bred mare and a colt or filly by any of the young Electioneer stallions will take a deeper pride in the great farm than otherwise. There has not been enough of the Electioneer representatives in this State. In the East every stock farm of note has its representative of the great family, and they prize the blood more than anything else.

In regard to this sale it is perhaps needless to say that everything offered will be sold, and the lucky purchasers will never regret their investments.

The Bradtmoor Sale of Stock.

The attention of our readers is called to this sale of choicely-bred trotting stock which will take place at Suisun next Saturday, January 21. The impaired health of one of the owners and the intention of concentrating the business interests of the proprietors are the reasons why these promising stallions, broodmares, colts and fillies are to be sold. The standard stallions Our Captain and Bradtmoor are fine individuals and able to enter the 2:30 list at any time; they are of good size and color and have the gentlest of dispositions. The broodmares Capella, Corolla and Fredolia are fine looking as any in California and are worthy of gracing any stock farm in the land. The young colts and fillies are bred in the purple also and will become famous on the turf if given an opportunity. See advertisement.

Names Claimed.

I claim the name CHECKMATE for bay gelding by John A., dam Abbie W., by Don Victor, foaled in 1891.

JAMES NEAL, San Francisco.

I hereby claim the name NINE for yearling bay filly by Direct 2:05 1/2, dam Fanny K., by Redwood, 2:27.

MILK KNOW, Hayward, Cal.

DAN McCARTY seems to have had a "streak of bad luck" lately. On Tuesday a very promising Dexter Prince filly belonging to him while being driven on the Lodi track reared and fell backward, breaking her neck. She was valued by her owner at $1,000.

N. P. POND, Secretary of "Democrat and Chronicle," Rochester, N. Y., writes: Some time since I sent for a bottle Absorbine and liked it so well that I want (6) six bottles sent by express at once.

CALIFORNIA JOCKEY CLUB RACES.

First Two Days' Sport Under the Auspices of the New Organization.

FIRST DAY—TUESDAY, JANUARY 10.

BAY DISTRICT TRACK, Jan. 12, 1893.

The first day's racing under the auspices of the California Jockey Club was of very fair quality, but a chill, biting wind prevailed, and in consequence the attendance was limited to about 600 persons. In four of the races the fields were of good size. W. Clancy, Hinckey, J. Weber, Lawless and King piloted the victors to the winning post. Two brand-new book-making forms did business.

Flora E. got away in front in the initial event, five furlongs, piloting the field into the homestretch, where Prince's First, who had been running a good second from the flag-fall, made play, and less than an eighth from home drew away and won by a length and a half from Quarterstaff, who came wonderfully fast on the inside at the finish. Flora E. was third, a length away. Time, 1:01 1/2. Ten started and Donna Lilla was favorite.

The second race was also a five furlong dash, and St. Croix was an 8 to 5 favorite. Mount Carlos took the lead away from Jack the Ripper in the first eighth, was not thereafter headed, and won from Stoneman by a trifle over a length. There was a hard fight for place, but the old gray gelding beat St. Croix a neck. Time, 1:01—one of the fastest runs in California this season.

Jennie K. was a slight favorite over Malcoln in the third race, one mile, and going to the front soon after making the first turn, won all the way, reaching the wire eased up half a length from Altus, who was as far from Fanny F. Malcoln's stirrup strap broke soon after the start, and he finished last. Time, 1:44.

Jennie Mintzer went to the post a slight favorite in the fourth race over Tyrone. Prince's First's weight was raised from 122 to 152 pounds on account of his win of the first race, and twenty minutes was allowed for a new hook on account of many bettors playing the horse, supposing him to be carrying but 122. Then, after lots of buckjumping at the post, all but Prince's First and Huguenot, for some unexplainable reason, ran around nearly to the wire, whipped and spurred, though the flags were not dropped. Then it was considered a "moral" for Huguenot after they were ordered to run the race over. Jennie Mintzer led to the half, then Huguenot took up the running and appeared to be winning easily, but he quit badly a little over a sixteenth from the finish, Folly coming up with a good burst of speed and winning from Huguenot by half a length. Tyrone was third, three lengths behind Huguenot, Prince's First fourth. Time, 1:10 1/2.

Cyclone was a torrid favorite for the last event, seven furlongs. Crawford, with light weight up, led into the homestretch by three or four lengths, setting a terrific pace, but died away in the last sixteenth, Mabel M. coming up like a whirlwind and winning from Cyclone by half a length, the favorite as far from Crawford. Time, 1:28 1/2. Crawford must have run the first six furlongs close to 1:14.

Book-betting—2 to 1 Mabel M., 7 to 5 Cyclone, 4 to 1 Crawford, Carter B., 88 (Peters), 8 to 1, also ran.

SECOND DAY—THURSDAY, JANUARY 12.

The attendance to-day was considerable increased, and the races, while confined mostly to the sprinters, were of a very fair character. Unbappily an accident occurred in the last race to mar the day's sport. Lucy S. and Mountain Boy fell, throwing Peters and C. Clancy, and the former was stunned, shaken and scratched up considerably, but had no bones broken. Clancy came out uninjured. Only two favorites got home in front, the other three events falling into two second choices and a 5 to 1 shot.

Jenny Mintzer, an odds-on favorite, led her opponents all the way, winning eased up by a scant length from Prince, who came fast at the finish. Dewdrop was third, three lengths away. The horses ran the whole journey as they finished. Time, 1:16 1/2.

Gypsy Girl was played heavily in the second event, half a mile, in which race there were seven starters. Mount Carlos led up the last 125 yards, when Nellie Van, the Washington skyrocket, came up with an astounding burst of speed and won by three parts of a length, Mount Carlos second and Gypsy Girl third. The last-named got a very bad start and came very fast from the three-quarter pole, finishing about a length and a half behind Mount Carlos. Time, 0:48 1/2.

The Daren-Iris filly opened a 4 to 5 favorite in the mile handicap, but a heavy play on Topgallant and Pescador sent the odds up, and she went to the post at 23 to 1. Pescador stayed a 3 to 1 shot. He got off in front, opened up daylight, and attended closest by Charmer for half a mile, won whipped out by a length and a half from Topgallant, who made a fast finish and beat the Iris filly out a neck for place. Democrat was fourth, Charmer fifth and old Sheridan a bad last. Time, 1:42 1/2.

Lottie Mills was the original favorite in the fourth race, selling, seven furlongs. Loads of coin went in on Mabel M., however, and she went to the post a hot favorite at 7 to 5, Mills being at 3 to 1, Nellie G. at 4, Cyclone at 6, Regal and Minnie Elkins at 10 to 1. Nellie G. led until nearing the quarter, when Lottie Mills took up the running and opened up two lengths of daylight on Nellie G. Mills gave it up near the half, and the gray mare led into the homestretch, where Cyclone overhauled and beat her in the last three strides by a short neck, Nellie G. second, over a length from Mabel M. Time, 1:28 1/2.

Stoneman was favorite at 2 to 1, in the last race, selling, five furlongs. Red Rose piloted Stoneman and Charger into the homestretch, where the old gray gelding sailed to the front and won easily by three parts of a length, Nipper (who came like a shot in the straight) second, a head from Macke. Red Rose quit badly and finished away back. Time, 1:01 1/2. Mountain Boy and Lucy S. collided on the far turn, throwing their riders, C. Clancy and Peters. The former jockey was injured, but Peters was stunned, scratched around the face and severely shaken up. However, no bones were broken, though for a time it was feared his injuries were of a very serious nature.

Annual Meeting P. C. B. H. A.

The annual meeting of the Pacific Coast Blood Horse Association was held in Parlor A, Palace Hotel, last Tuesday night, President H. I. Thornton in the chair.

The Secretary's report showed that the Association had received from all sources during the year $149,555.25 and had expended $148,232.93, including purses of $111,280 offered at the recent meeting. There was on hand $9,680.32, with but very small liabilities.

President Thornton then reviewed the history of the Blood Horse Association and congratulated the organization upon its excellent financial standing. Concluding his report, Col. Thornton said:

"Our races have been for more money and for greater distances than in any other part of the United States at this season of the year. We have witnessed the fortunes of many record-breakers, and in no event has an accident of account happened to either horsemen or horses."

Henry Schwartz then arose and asked if Bay District track had been leased to T. H. Williams. He was told that it was at the rate of $6,000 per year. Mr. Schwartz then asked some more questions, among which was, "Mr. Williams, did you ever say that any horse that ran at Oakland could not run on the Bay District track?" Schwartz was told that no such statement had been made, and President Thornton declared the inquisitive bookmaker out of order, and instructed him to remain seated until "Good of the Association" arose.

Then the following was carried almost unanimously:

Resolved, That the following named officers be and are hereby declared re-elected: President, H. I. Thornton; Vice-President, Thomas H. Williams, Jr.; Second Vice-President, P. B. Quinlan; Directors, H. I. Thornton, Thomas H. Williams, Jr., A. B. Spreckels, Charles S. Wieland, W. H. Brown and J. Naglee Burke.

Bookmaker Schwartz objected to the above resolution and introduced the following, which was defeated:

Resolved, That it is the sense of this association that no officer of the association or member of the Board of Directors who directly or indirectly appoints any judge, starter or other official for any race shall be interested in the result of such race, because of ownership of any horse, or as a bettor thereon, or otherwise.

Mr. Schwartz was then accorded the floor, and made a series of trivial complaints. One was that T. H. Williams had run his horse Garcia up in selling races, letting other valuable animals that had won selling races alone. He wound up by declaring his friendship for the members of the association.

Vice-President Williams, who had made note of all Schwartz's complaints, denied nearly all the bookmaker's allegations. Regarding the hiding up of Garcia, he said that in the first place he desired to buy him for himself, and in the second place he hid horses up for the good of the association. He wanted to establish at the Bay District a precedent in vogue on Eastern tracks, where horses are hid up continually out of selling races, where they are entered considerably below their value. Mr. Williams said that he had no feeling against Schwartz, and gave as his reason for starting the California Jockey Club that racing might fall into bad odor at Oakland, and that the horses required a much-needed rest to fix them for the spring meeting of the Blood Horse Association. As an effort had been made to continue racing, he decided that it should be at the Bay District track under the supervision of honest men and competent judges.

The association then adjourned until the second Monday in April.

Important to Breeders of Thoroughbreds.

NEW YORK CITY, December 29, 1892.—A meeting of the Board of Control, held this day, the following was adopted:

The office of Bruce's American Stud-Book is designated by the Board of Control as the Registry Office for the time being. The registry office is established for the purpose of the identification of all racehorses, whether foaled in the United States or foreign-bred, and the certification of their pedigrees. The registration shall comprise the name, if any; the color and marks, if any; whether a horse, mare or gelding, and the names, with description, of its sire and dam as registered or otherwise made public. If the dam was covered by more than one stallion the names or description in full must be stated. Horses foaled in the United States must be registered by July 15 of each year. Foreign-bred horses must be registered within a reasonable time after their arrival, in conformity with rule 24. No horses will hereafter be allowed to start in any race unless duly registered. The registration fee shall be $1 for each animal. Owners desiring to register in conformity with this resolution can address their registrations to the office of "Bruce's American Stud-Book," Times Building, Park Row, New York City. W. S. YOUSBURG, Secretary.

It is perfectly plain, the purpose of the above resolution. It is to compel breeders to register their stock. No horse which is not registered will be allowed to start. Consequently every breeder who expects to sell or race himself will find it to his interest to register at once. If he don't his stock won't be worth much.

Every horse-owner and racing man I have met approves the above resolution. Many consider it late, but better late than never. James R. Keene said to day that he considered it the best movement in behalf of racing that the Board of Control ever made. "I have approved of nearly all it has ever done," said Mr. Keene, "as it has raised racing out of the mud, but this is the best. It prevents fraud. It compels careful records of horses being kept. It is a great safeguard to buyers."

The safeguard against fraud is the most important. The resolution not only compels registry of the breeding, name and color of foals, but also their marks. This is going even further than the English do. But it is right. The celebrated case of the "ringer" Polk Badget was discovered by Colonel Bruce being able to furnish the natural marks of the real horse, and thus one of the most barefaced frauds ever perpetrated on the turf was laid bare.

But the above resolution of the Board came none too soon. Colonel Bruce is almost ready with Vol. VI. of the Stud Book. He could issue it now but for the fact that there are several breeders, and, strange to say, some of them prominent ones, who have not made any report of their stock. They begrudge the payment of a paltry $1 per head for registration. This niggardly policy is beyond belief. The breeders are making more money out of the present boom in racing than any other class of men, and yet they begrudge a dollar for the registration, which is a verification of their stock, a record without which the business of breeding would be unable to proceed. Without a stud book where would one be, and as it is an indispensability to the breeders, they should certainly sustain it. All the jockey clubs of the country should take action similar to that of the Board of Control.—N. Y. Cor. The Horseman.

Dictatus, by Red Roses.

The exhaustive advertisement of this exceedingly well-bred stallion, as seen in another column, leaves very little more to be said of him. He is one of that class of substantial stallions which show plenty of quality. He is fast, and when the bell rings in the judges' stand next fall Dictatus will not be found "back in the rut in a field of horses where," as Mr. Salisbury says, "there is neither money nor glory." Dictatus is bred to go to the front and stay there. Owners of good brood mares should visit Belmont Stock Farm and see this young stallion before they secure the services of any other sire if they wish to secure that ultra fashionable Red Wilkes—Dictator cross, with Mambrino Patchen blood in every cross.

St. Louis Jockey Club.

The stakes of the Spring meeting of the St. Louis Fair Association (Jockey Club) close on January 16th. The entrance to each of the eighteen stakes is $5. The meeting commences on April 29th, and continues until June 23rd, and at least $150,000 will be divided among owners in stakes and purses.

A NOVEL race has been arranged by the California Jockey Club directors to take place to-day—a mile dash, the horses to be ridden only by colored jockeys, weights twenty eight pounds above the scale. Eight are expected to start, and the following have declared themselves by sending in their names: T. Williams, Reuben Moore, Chauncey Treadwell, Monroe Johnson, Henry Peppers and Dan Brown. Johnson will pilot Nellie G. All of these riders have had a world of experience, and lots of excitement is promised, especially in Darktown.

TURF AND TRACK.

The Sulky.

STALLION owners send in your advertisements.

HENRY PIERCE sent Veronica, 2:29, to his farm in Maine.

DIRECT, 2:05½, will not be taken East to race next year. Mr. Salisbury will only have him stand for the season.

DON'T get over loaded; see I when you have a fair offer, then you will not have to unload at some future time at a great sacrifice.

THE coming Year Book should contain the names of all trotters and pacers, under their sires, that have ever beaten or equaled 2:30.

F. W. LOEBER was in this city last Monday. He reports everything looking prosperous in Napa and all the horses looking well.

REGRETS are heard on all sides regarding the sale of Sidney. His colts and fillies are considered of inestimable value by their owners.

WE understand that the skeleton of Reavis' Blackbird will be articulated and given to one of the large educational institutions of Chicago.

MIKE BOWERMAN thinks Moquette will be in it with any of the great stallions next year if a free for all stallion race can be arranged.

WHEN Kremlin and Stamboul meet in a race we venture to predict that the largest crowd ever assembled at a trotting meeting will witness it.

A. H. MOORE will try inbreeding to a marked extent by breeding Nancy Lee (the dam of Nancy Hanks, 2:04) to Director, both being by Director.

WILLIAM RUSSELL ALLEN has set the breeders of this country a great example in relation to stallion fees by placing the services of Kremlin 2:07½ at $400.

THE youngsters by Piedmont, out of Electioneer mares that are being worked at Palo Alto this winter are as promising as any lot of colts ever foaled on the farm.

THE two-in-three rule for trotting and pacing races is being adopted by all the leading associations in America; it proved successful on this Coast last fall and cannot fail wherever tried.

J. PHIPPEN has a very large string of trotters to handle at Palo Alto, he is very proud of a brother to Anteeo, 2:16½, and Autevo, 2:19½. He is called Speedwell, and the name is a most appropriate one.

EVERY horse-breeder in California is anxious to get a copy of the Palo Alto catalogue of broodmares that are to be sold. By sending a postal to the auctioneers, Messrs. Killip & Co., copies will be cheerfully furnished.

T. O. KING, known to all habitues of Grand Circuit tracks as "Tom" King, secretary of Charter Oak Driving Park, Hartford, Conn., died at that city Friday night, Dec. 30th, death resulting from the effects of the removal of a tumor.

DON J. LEATHERS and C. M. Richfield, of Grand Rapids, Mich., will dissolve partnership, and the entire stock of the Westminster Farm, at Lexington, Ky., will be sold. The stock includes Monbars 2:11½, Pixley 2:16 and other well-bred ones.

GEO. SWAN has taken all of the young trotters and pacers that belonged to Martin Carter from the Oakland track to the Nutwood Stock Farm. They will be seen in the races this fall and many will carry away portions of the stakes and purses.

BLANCHE, by Arthurton, is only thirteen years old and is already famous on account of being the youngest broodmare with four in the list and two of them in the 2:15 circle, viz.: Hazel, 2:14½; Una Wilkes, 2:15; Native Son, 2:26½, and Silver Spray, 2:28.

JOS. CAIRN SIMPSON, President of the Pacific Coast Trotting Horse Breeders Association, started for the East last Tuesday on business. He will attend the meeting of the Board of Censors while there, and expects to be back in California in four weeks.

BUILDING improvements to the amount of $425,000 have been made in Independence the past year, which is very good for a "tank station." Visitors who attend the race meetings there in 1939 will find accommodations equal to those of any city of 100,000 population.

WHICH would you rather do, raise draft horses for $100 apiece with no chance of there ever being worth any more, or raise trotting bred ones that are certain to be worth several times that amount with the possibility that you may make a fortune out of a single animal?

THE most profitable way to toughen a colt for future usefulness is to give it a good shelter and an abundance of nourishing food, such food as will develop the system properly. Only such an amount of fat is necessary as will add warmth to the body and round out the form.

JOHN A. GOLDSMITH has the shipment of horses reduced to a science, and the admirable manner in which he had the youngsters carefully placed in the cars previous to their start for the East, showed that he understood the value of care, thorough ventilation and comfort for the little ones.

Wm. O'KANE, son of the famous horse-boot manufacturer, in this city, has a Sidney filly that will need watching in the races this fall, for she is speedy, sensible and very promising. Her dam is the handsome silver-maned chestnut mare Mignon by Elmo, that Mr. O'Kane used to drive through the Park, and very seldom was passed by any trotter.

ZILCAABE Goldst, a celebrated stallion, died at the stock farm of L. L. Dorsey, at Middletown, Kentucky, January 1st. He was twenty-six years old and his death was caused by old age. Zilcaabe Goldst was the first five-year-old to trot a mile in public in 2:25, and his four-year-old record was 2:37½. He was closely related to Maud S. and Johnson.

BOWERMAN Bros., of Kentucky, say that they will trot Mr. Drake's stallion, Moquette, (4) 2:10, next season against Stamboul 2:07½, Kremlin 2:07½, Arion 2:10½, Nelson 2:10 and any other stallions that their owners might care to enter in such a race for $5,000 a corner, the winner to take the entire sweepstakes.

ORRIN A. HICKOK will have a string of Palo Alto trotters on the Eastern circuit next year, it is rumored. If such is the case, there will be a "boom" all along the line, for if there is any driver in America that can get the greatest speed out of a horse without sacrificing the animal, Mr. Hickok is capable of doing it.

A. G. DANFORTH, of Washington, Ill., has purchased the fine young stallion Estate, son of Electioneer 125, dam, the dam of Lord Byron, 2:18; second dam, the dam of Alfred S., 2:16½; third dam by American Star, Jr. This is one of the best bred sons of Electioneer. He is coming four years old and is one of the handsomest horses in the State.

THE six train loads of fine trotting stock from Palo Alto and Vina started East on Tuesday in charge of Superintendent Frank W. Covey. In appearance the youngsters will create a more favorable impression among horsemen than any consignment ever sent from the great stock farm. If, as individuals, they do not make names for themselves on the trotting tracks, it will be because they are not given an opportunity.

THE horse is an intelligent animal and is capable of being educated to a considerable degree. Much of the horse's usefulness and value depend upon whether he has been properly educated. If he has been well educated and properly trained he will be trusty, kind and useful. If, on the other hand, he has been badly educated and spoiled in the "breaking," he will be untrusty, vicious and endanger the life of anyone who has anything to do with him.

WHILE the turf journals are discussing the great problems of breeding and training trotters, the members of the various trotting associations are puzzling their brains to solve the question: "How shall we draw crowds of people to our meetings?" We suggest to them the feasibility of waiting patiently until they hear from our live California organizations. The Pacific Coast Breeders' Association will lead the way this year, as it did last, in this respect.

THE trainers and drivers who drove the Palo Alto youngsters last year and had them enter the charmed circle were not forgotten at the end of the season. For every 2:30 performer the driver received $50, and for every one that was driven by them in 2:20 or better $100 was given as a mark of appreciation of merit. This example set by this large stock farm is an incentive for the young men to do their best, and is one that might be followed with profit by many others.

JNO. KELLY, the new trainer at the Pleasanton Stock Farm, arrived at the scene of his labors, Pleasanton, last week. He started to work immediately and by the way he moved around the colts it needed no practiced eye to see that he thoroughly understood his business. Mr. Salisbury has a number of good ones for him to begin working on and is around the county gathering others. We welcome Mr. Kelly to the coast and hope that he will remain and be "one of us" for the future.

THE bay filly Luta (foaled 1889), by Electioneer 125, out of Lula Wilkes (dam of Advertiser, 2:16), is now being worked for speed. She has been "off" ever since she was a yearling, and nothing was done with her. Last month she was taken out of the pasture, hitched to a sulky and exercised a little. When Senator Stanford was at the farm last week, J. Nolan, the driver, let her speed a quarter, and one of the proudest men in California was the owner of this mare on seeing her do so well.

IN J. Maguire's string at Palo Alto, there is a bay colt, foaled April 7, 1891, that will surely prove the value of the developed sire and dam theory; he is called The Wizard, and is sired by Electricity, 2:17½, dam Sally Benton, 2:17½ (dam of Starlight, 2:26½), by Gen. Benton 1755; second dam (the great broodmare Sontag Mohawk (dam of seven in the list), by Mohawk Chief, etc. The Wizard is a magnificently-formed youngster, and is one of the purest-gaited trotters ever seen on the track.

AN auction sale of very fine trotting stock will be held at Suisun next Saturday by that pioneer auctioneer Co. P. Reeves, of that city. The lot consists of the standard bred stallions Our Captain 19618, by Fallis, 2:22, dam Capella, by Steinway, etc., and Bradmoor 19616, by Fallis, 2:23, dam Ethel H., by Sultan, as well as their dams and colts and fillies, by Woodnut, Noonday and Mambrino Wilkes. They are all well bred, of good size and color. Catalogues will be sent to all applicants by addressing the auctioneer as above.

ONE may read how to take care of stock, but the only way to know how it is done is to go to work and do it. Theory is very good, but practice is very much better. Practical knowledge only comes by caring personally for the stock. One man may have a theory, and it may be all right, and he may be able to make it work, but the trouble comes when some one else undertakes to make a fortune by reducing somebody's theory to practice. Some people who have good theories may be able to make them plain on paper, but there are too many people trying to make a living on theory.—Iowa Turf.

GEORGE H. KETCHAM, Toledo, O., has purchased from W. E. Spier, Glens Falls, N. Y., the celebrated sire and performer, Robert McGregor, 2:17½, who will head the stud at Ketcham Farm. The fame of Robert McGregor has not reached its zenith. He is now twenty-two years old, with the vigor of most horses half his age, and many years of usefulness are yet before the stoniest son of Major Edsall. This will be good news to all owners of sons of the "Demon of the Homestretch," for the progeny of the horse from the mares on the Ketcham Farm will be developed as soon as they are old enough.

GEO. STARR will leave California for the East to-morrow. He is under engagement to a number of owners of fast campaigners who will see that he is kept busy and will also keep others busy on the circuit this fall. He may return with a string to winter in California for he is in love with this climate. Mr. Starr is a thoroughly capable driver who combines courage, and a light hand, with a cool head, three requisites absolute essential in a driver, while as a conditioner, there are very few in the United States his equal. We wish him a safe journey and a prosperous career, and should he return, a cordial reception will await him.

MATTIE H., 2:11½, has joined W. J. Andrews' string and is now with the other members of the stable at the covered track at the Jewett Farm. Besides the highly-bred Lang Farm youngsters in the Andrews' stable there are eight head from the Empire City Stud, including Nominee, 2:21½, by Stranger; Globard, 2:24, by Belmont, dam by George Wilkes; Quality, by Electioneer, dam by Almont, grandam Dolly (dam of Director, 2:17, Onward, 2:25½, etc.) and Hummer, by Electioneer, dam by George Wilkes, grandam (dam of Campbell's Electioneer, 2:17½), by Clark Chief. Mascot, 2:04, the pacing king, is also in the string, and when spring comes the Buffalo trainer will have just about as strong a stable as any trainer he will meet at the races.

NO horse ever foaled in California, has endeared himself to the trotting horsemen as Sidney, 2:19½ has. No matter what mares were bred to him the progeny were noted for early and extreme speed, perfect dispositions, soundness and constitutions like iron. He has a few sons in the stud and they are all siring youngsters that will make the name of Sidney as impossible as Rysdyk's Hambletonian. Sidney is a young horse and is just beginning his career, we might say, as a sire, for the mares that were mated to him in 1892, were the first really good ones worthy of him. When Sidney leaves California one of the brightest—if not the brightest—of all the gems left by Santa Claus to delight our contemplative and speculative breeders will be forever lost.

WITH the near approach of the next meeting of the American Trotting Register Association comes the regular annual suggestions as to changes in the trotting standard. The trotting horse is being rapidly improved under the old standard, and we see no special need for changes at the present time. The annual possibility that the standard may be tinkered with, creates a feeling of insecurity among owners of standard trotters, or those that are likely to become such, that is far from healthy, and should be eliminated. The association should either adopt a new standard which shall remain in force for not less than five years from the time of its adoption, or, still better, resolve that there shall be no change in the present standard within that length of time.

THE papers in the East published a story about the stallion in California owned by Henry Pierce, and stated that he was called La Rose, and was a full brother to Stamboul. The premier stallion on the Santa Rosa Stock Farm is Bay Rose, 2:20½; his sire was Sultan, 2:24, and his dam was Madam Baldwin (dam of Majester, 2:24), by The Moor; second dam Belle, by Ben Lippincott, son of Williamson's Belmont. Mr. Pierce is determined to give this handsome stallion as good a chance to prove his worth as any sire in America has heretofore received, and if the horse fails it will not be because of the class of mares to which he is bred. A carload of twelve of those purchased in the East arrived at Santa Rosa last week; they are gilt-edged ones, too.

THE several shipments of trotters that are to be sent to Europe within the next few weeks show that a most valuable market awaits the produce of our breeding establishments if it is judiciously developed. A few shipments of culls or inferior animals at the present time would do much to practically destroy the market now on the point of being opened, and it is for their own interest for breeders to guard against such a proceeding. The Europeans are developing a sincere admiration for the trotter, and if they are supplied with some of our best animals, there is practically no limit to the market that will be opened to us. Breeders desirous that this end shall be attained, should combine and devise some way by which the European horsemen may know what they are buying and from whom to buy. Some such plan would be of great value to the breeding interests of this country.—Horse World.

A STATISTICIAN has been doing some elaborate figuring in regard to the breeding of the various horses that have been successful in the classic events on the English running turf for the last half century, and his conclusion is that developed sires have had by far the greatest success in the stud. He says that in fact nearly all the winners have been by such sires, but adds that mares which never raced have thrown nearly as much speed as those that were famous winners in their day. The trotting horse breeders of this country are finding out very rapidly that it won't do to tie to pedigrees along where there is no speed attachment, and from what several mares with records better than 2:30 have already accomplished in the production of trotters it would seem that in a short time the stallion without a standard record and the mare that has never shown any speed will be conspicuously absent from the breeding ranks.

DAVID BONNER has a weakness for a horse that carries a cross of American Star blood and if it is blended with Hambletonian so much the better. At present he owns half of old Dictator and paid $12,500 for it when the brother ro Dexter was classed an old horse. When Dictator was a weanling, Mr. Bonner and Wm. M. Rysdyk, the owner of Hambletonian, drove over to Jonathan Hawkins' place to buy him. The price was $350. Mr. Hawkins was over to Newburg when they arrived and after waiting a couple of hours drove back to Chester leaving word with the women that they would come back in a few days. The following week George Alley and Harrison Durkee were up in Orange county and saw the colt. Durkee bought him and he remained his property until David Bonner and Major McDowell passed over a check for $25,000. At the time the horse was over twenty and had but few performers to his credit. At present, well, everybody knows where Dictator stands.

THE North Pacific Rural Press has the following: "George Misner arrived home Monday evening from California, bringing with him Ed. Wilkes, brown stallion, five years old, by Red Wilkes (son of George Wilkes), dam Nellie, by Vindex, son of Blood's Blackhawk, by Blackhawk; second dam Jennie by Gill's Vermont; third dam by Gray Eagle, etc. Ed. Wilkes is a very fine looker, fifteen bands, three inches in height, and weighs 1100 pounds. He was bred by T. B. Hume, Lexington, Ky. Last year for the first time Ed. was placed in training and showed miles better than 2:27 in a short time. Unfortunately when on the road one day a man on a galloper came running up and the stallion came near running away, and the road being hard and rocky cracked one of his quarters and nothing more was done. He is now about recovered and will go into training after the stud season." Ed. Wilkes is the horse purchased by Robt. S. Brown, of Petaluma, last summer. He is a grand looking individual and ought to prove a valuable acquisition to the breeding interests of our sister State.

The Saddle.

CHARLES KERE'S cast-off, San Emegdio, by Apache, dam Cinderella, by Cateshy, won a five-furlong race at Hawthorne on the 4th inst.

ORMONDE arrived at Southampton, Eng., last Thursday safe and sound, coming from Buenos Ayres to England via Lisbon, Portugal.

GREEN B. MORRIS, of Gravesend, L. I., has bought of John E. Madden the yearling chestnut filly Eleven, by Fonso, dam Miss Easton, by imp. Soapstone, for $2,200.

AMONG the Palo Alto-bred horses that have come out of their retirement to be trained this season are Racine, Peel and Geoffrey, and all have been good race-horses too.

MRS. CANNON, wife of Tom Cannon and mother of Mornington Cannon, the leading English jockey of last season, died Dec. 14. She was the daughter of old John Day.

A NEW set of officials went in at Roby on the 3d of January. Col. W. B. Cheatham succeeds Col. M. Lewis Clark as presiding judge, while C. H. Pettigill takes Jimmy McLaughlin's place as starter.

JENNIE K., the game and speedy daughter of Sir Modred and Wild Rose, will be mated with the mighty Salv. for this season, Tyrona, by Tyrant—Ona with imp. Reggy. The produce should be very hard customers to beat, if breeding counts for anything.

THE mares Reclaire and Zorling have been sold by P. J. Dwyer to Milton Young, but they will not be taken until they are through racing. Reclaire was but a shadow last season of the magnificent mare she once was, but rest may do a great deal to bring her back.

THE Blood Horse Association Directors, at a meeting last Saturday night, ruled off two well-known sporting writers, Sam Horton, of the Post, and Watt Brown, of the Report, for failing to sustain charges of crooked work in the saddle on the part of Jockey Joseph Narvaez.

A GREAT many persons do not like the Darehins, but as every crop of them is better, we look for the big brown son of The Peer and Lurline to prove one of the very greatest sires of winners in America. The Iris filly and Bessie W. were not outclassed much at the recent Blood Horse meeting.

THEY have a veritable "feather-weight" at Roby. This is "Tommy" Burns, and he rode the other day at 55 pounds, but can do five pounds less if required. He is said to be as smart and cool as possible, and for flowery but varnished speech to be able to hold his own with any of the other jockeys.

THAT Marigold will cut a big chunk off the California four-mile record on a good day and track we firmly believe, and even if Ten Broeck's 7:15 1/2 is beaten by the beautiful daughter of Milner and Katy Pease we shall not be struck dumb with amazement.

B. C. HOLLY last Saturday became indignant at the weights allotted in the handicap to his horses Sympathetic Last and Happy Day, who were asked to carry as much as Misty Morn, and sent his entire string to Floden. In the Holly stable were Sympathetic's Last, Happy Day, Revolver, Minnie Elkins and Cornie Buckingham.

ELMORE SLAUGHTER, the jockey, who was recently reinstated by Colonel Lewis Clark, was also reinstated by the Hawthorne Park officials last week. He celebrated the occasion in a fitting manner by riding two winners, Haydee and Fan King. Five hot favorites won the five races that day at Mr. Corrigan's track, and the Chicago talent rejoiced accordingly.

RECKON has recovered almost entirely, to judge from appearances, and will show no marks of her bad fall of October last, when she broke the frontal bone of her nose by stepping on the horse in front of her and tripping. It was thought to breed her, but this has partially been abandoned, as she being so good it is thought she can do more good on the race course.

SIR FRANCIS and Don Alonzo are at present favorites for the American Derby of 1893 with 10 to 1 against their chances, Monowai second choice at 15 to 1, while the quotations against G. W. Johnson and Dare are 20 to 1. This shows pretty plainly that the Easterners respect the Californians very much. Mr. Macdonough owns the second choice, Charley Fair the black colt Dare.

BILLY McCORMICK, who trained El Rio Rey and other famous thoroughbreds of the Winters string, will during the year 1893 devote his attention to the horses of Messrs. Simeon G. Reed, of Los Angeles, and Charles Kerr, of Bakersfield. We expect to see a few world-beaters in 1893 come forth from the lower portion of the State, for Mr. McCormick is one of the best trainers in the country.

FACUNDO, the now two-year-old colt by Ormonde, out of Philosophy, has been commonly described as being the property of Capt. Macchell, and last summer it was officially announced in the Racing Calendar that Senor Boucan had leased him to Capt. Macchell. Senor Boucan has, however, himself nominated the colt for all his recent engagements, and it, therefore, looks as if he alone will be responsible for his racing career.

It has just transpired that Richard Croker, the Tammany chieftain, owns the great filly Red Banner, as well as the two-year-old Dobbins, Yorkville Belle and Fairy. Red Banner is in Mr. Dwyer's string at Gravesend and is very much like the great La Tosca. With Dobbins in the two-year-old stakes, Red Banner in the three-year-old events, Yorkville Belle in the handicaps and Fairy in the sprints, the Croker colors should be seen very frequently first past the post in 1893.

SECRETARY EDWARD HOPPER, of the Latonia Jockey Club, has been experimenting with the track at Latonia with a view of sanding it. The test has proved very satisfactory, and Mr. Hopper, who, by the way, owns the controlling interest in Latonia, has concluded to place sand on the track. He has contracted for enough to put two inches over the entire track and mix it with the soil. It will cost in the neighborhood of $6,000, and it requires a particular kind of sand that cannot be obtained in this immediate vicinity. It is claimed that that will make the track so that it will dry out quicker.

JIM NEAL has turned his colt Checkmate out for the winter on a ranch situated not far from this city. If the younger son proves as good as the old Glen Athol—Full Cry gelding he was named after, there will be rejoicing in the camp of Neal. But we trust that when this Checkmate's racing career is over he will not be asked to do what his illustrious namesake did—pull an omnibus from a depot to a hotel in a jay town.

THAT great sire of race horses, Three Cheers, will make a season in Sacramento at $75. Everything by this horse races well, and his performers speak volumes. Among the number by Three Cheers that have made good names on the turf, we might mention Acclaim, Applause, Mystery, Cheerful and Royal Flush. Read the advertisement of W. M. Murry, 715 Twenty-third street, Sacramento, and book your mares to Three Cheers early.

PHOEBE ANN, the game filly that ran so well at the Blood Horse meeting, will be bred to Charles Kerr's recent purchase, imp. Reggy, son of Hermit and Nyl Gau, by Musjid. As Phoebe Ann is a granddaughter of Hermit, her produce by Reggy will have a double cross of that much-prized blood, (something as yet unknown in America) as well as such staunch strains as Touchstone (two crosses close up), Lexington (four crosses), Glencoe (four crosses), Bay Middleton, Jerry and Cotton.

FRANK HARPER, owner of the celebrated Nantura Stud, near Midway, Ky., is going to fill, or try to fill, a peculiar order for Pierre Lorillard. The latter wrote to Harper that he wanted a Longfellow colt, brown in color with a blaze in the face, and that the cost would not be a consideration. Harper looked around for a mare that would probably produce a foal of the desired colors and decided upon imp. Cinderella, owned by a Kentucky man, and she will be bred the coming season to Longfellow.

COLONEL FRANK M. HALL has, it is reported, been reappointed starting judge for the metropolitan tracks the coming season. Colonel Hall is the oldest active turfman in America, he having been identified with the sport ever since 1840. He is as active as a kitten, and braves all sorts of weather in attending the starts and reporting the incidents thereto. It is likely that Mr. Fitzgerald will be reappointed patrol judge, as his presence on the far turns has been found to have a good moral effect upon reckless jockeys.

THE East St. Louis Jockey Club's management have, it is said, taken the most effectual method to prevent the reopening of the Madison race track by buying sufficient stock in the concern to control it. Should the Illinois Legislature pass a measure limiting the number of days' racing on all tracks in that State it is likely that Madison would be put in order and reopened to supplement the East Side meeting. However, the strong probability is that the track will not be used, at any rate, this winter.—Daily Spirit.

AMONG the large number of two-year-olds tried out by Henry Walsh, who is handling the big Macdonough string at San Jose, the most promising shown thus far is said to be the Darebin—Fleurette and imp. Galore—Gilded fillies. Nineteen of the youngsters were given a fast quarter one morning recently, and the slowest did the distance in 0:25 1/2. Walsh has no less than thirty-one of the Macdonough two-year-olds in his charge, and soon the weeding out progress will commence, the best only being taken to the races at the East.

GOODALE, the jockey who has ridden so much in the West the past three or four years, has signed to ride for the Ramapo Stable, the property of a gentleman who has a stock farm in New Jersey, where the stallions Pontiac and Runnymede hold forth. Snedeker will train the stable, he having practically given up his public stable, and will train no outside horses, except with the consent of the owner of the Ramapo Stable. That gentleman is embarking largely in racing. He has long been identified with the turf—for twenty years nearly—and has owned many good ones, but has never had a private training stable.

IN announcing the death of Mr. Robinson, once the owner of Neville, a famous race horse in his time, and part owner of High Treason, who was backed to win an enormous sum in the Derby, several English papers have stated that he was the first gentleman to have a mount in the Derby. This is not true, as, omitting Mr. Tom Parr as a semi-professional, a Mr. Bartley rode Pegasus in the Derby of 1837, won by Phosphorus, and showed to considerable advantage. It is true, however, that gentlemen riders seldom dare try the Derby, there having been not more than live aspirants since its inauguration, none of these successful.—Daily Spirit.

THE string of gallopers belonging to Dr. Thomas Bowhill will winter at Napa race track, where the young Australian, John Porteus, will train the flyers. Dr. Bowhill's Australian stallion, Chesterfield, will make the season at Chester Bank Farm, between Petaluma and Sonoma, at an extremely low figure, considering his royal breeding. This stallion, who was a grand race horse, is by The Marquis (winner of the St. Leger and Two Thousand Guineas), son of the wonderful Stockwell, dam Lamorna, by Fireworks. Read the advertisement in another portion of this journal and book your thoroughbred mares to this grandson of Stockwell.

CHARLES KERR'S recent purchase, imp. Reggy, by Hermit—Nyl Gau, by Musjid, is being much sought after by owners of thoroughbred mares, and the following had been booked to the horse up to last Wednesday: Everglade, by Iroquois; imp. Gertrude, by Somnus; imp. Eunie; Ida Glenn, by Glenelg; Nancy Knight, by Georgetown; Ursula, by Duke of Montrose; Dairy Maid, by Shannon; Marin, by imp. Kyrle Daly; Julia P., by Wheady; Mystery, by Three Cheers; Phoebe Ann, by imp. Friar Tuck; Lurline, by Longfield—Katy Pease; Arathusa, by Joe Hooker; Tallada, by Enquirer, and Harriet, by Flood. In this list are some of the most promising matrons in this great "horse" State.

G. L. RICHARDSON, trainer of Democrat, has purchased of Peter Weber the brown horse Carter B., six years, by Duke of Kent (son of imp. Bonnie Scotland and Fannie Barrow, by imp. Albion), dam Bellona, by Jack Malone; second dam Leapetta, by Joe Stoner; third dam Emmeline, by imp. Yorkshire. Consideration, $600. Carter B. is a fairish sort of race horse, a good looker, and his breeding is stout as well as fashionable. Duke of Kent, his sire, was a good horse on the turf and his dam was not only a fine performer but produced Liza Davis (dam of Big Medicine and General Harding), Bonnie Carrie, Bonfire and Tecumseh, good performers.

IMP. HALLOWMAS, brother to St. Blaise and Candelmas, by Hermit out of Fisee, by Marsyas, is one of the recent additions to the Rancho del Paso stud. This horse arrived at Sacramento on New Year's night. We are told that he is a rather small horse that shows no end of "quality." Hallowmas is the champion equine traveler, having been imported to England to South Africa, then back to the land of his nativity, thence to New York, and now clear across the continent to Sacramento. This beats Ormonde's traveling record all hollow.

MOLLIE WALTON, by imp. Mortemer, foaled a fine bay filly last Saturday at Rancho del Paso by the famous son of Musket, imp. Maxim. This is the first of the get of Maxim to make an appearance in America, and the career of the youngster will be watched with interest. Maxim is expected to prove one of the greatest sires on earth, as he is bred right, was a magnificent performer and is a grand individual. Mollie Walton was a good performer on the turf, and is a half-sister to the mighty Hindoo, being out of Florence, by Lexington, grandam imp. Weatherwitch (dam of Fonso, winner of the Kentucky Derby), by Weatherbit, etc.

THE Owens Bros' horses, which have been extensively campaigned during the last season of racing, have been sent to the ranch in Fresno county for the winter. The string consists of Captain Al, Mero, Gold Dust, Royal Flush, San Jacinto, Moonflower, Dick O'Malley, Two Cheers, Pulaski and Lady Intruder. Pulaski is by Captain Al out of Gold Cup (the dam of Gold Dust), by Enquirer, and the first of the get of the bandsome brown horse. Lady Intruder is by Intruder out of Queen Emma (the dam of Cheerful), by Woodburn. San Jacinto is by Othello (a son of The Barb) from Phoebe Marks, a. Australian mare purchased for L. J. Rose.

RICHARD CROKER, who this year goes in for racing for the first time, met with a bit of hard luck at the outset of his career as an owner of thoroughbreds. Yorkville Belle, the filly for which Mr. Croker paid $24,000, caught a slight cold and since that time she has been a very sick animal. The nature of the disease, and indeed the fact of the illness, have been carefully concealed from even the trainers about the track, but it has been learned finally that the mare has pneumonia. If this is so the chances are that Yorkville Belle may be of little use for racing purposes next season, as her wind is certain to be affected by such attacks, and at all events the animal's chances of standing a severe campaign are materially lessened. This will be a severe blow to Mr. Croker, who has counted upon her as the star of his stable, and had no doubt that she would be able to win a number of handicaps for him. All these hopes are now cast to the ground unless the effect of the disease shall be less in her case than those of most animals.

MATT STORN has purchased of Charles E. Miller that good race horse Red Prince, five years old, by imp. Woodstock (son of Sir Bevy's and Stella, by Mogador), dam Oklohoma, by Breathit (son of Lexington and Spinola, by imp. Australian); second dam La Bruna, by imp. Scythian (son of Orlando and Scythia); third dam La Victime, by imp. Belsbazzar (son of Blacklock and Manuella, winner of the Oaks, by Dick Andrews); fourth dam imp. Britannia, by Muley, dam of the great performers Veracity, Verifier, Voucher, Vindicator, Jericho, La Verite, Vandyke and Verona (latter dam of Foster, that won the great four-mile race here in 1876). Mr. Storn has also purchased of J. B. Chase Hermitage, b c, 3, by imp. Friar Tuck—Mistake, by Wildidle; second dam Katy Pease, by Planet, etc. Hermitage beat Charmion for the Pacific Coast Stakes at Denver in a driving rain when Mr. Miller's filly was considered well-nigh invincible. The colt has been ailing for some time, but is rapidly getting around into shape, and should make a grand race horse. Consideration for both animals private.

LOS ANGELES, by imp. Glenelg, one of the best race mares of the past few years, on the 5th of January, at Santa Anita, foaled a chestnut colt by Emperor of Norfolk, the great son of Norfolk and Marion. The career of the youngster will be watched with interest by all lovers of high-class race horses in America. Los Angeles was on the turf for five years—1887, 1888, 1889, 1890 and 1891, and during that time won about $130,000 in stakes and purses, which ranks with any horse in American turf history. In 1887 Los Angeles started twenty-one times as a two-year-old, and was first under the wire eight times. In 1888 she faced the starter twenty-six times, and won no less than thirteen races. In 1889 Los Angeles landed first money seven times out of nineteen starts. The great mare won twelve races out of twenty-six starts in 1890. In 1891 Los Angeles was winner seven times out of eighteen starts. It will therefore be seen that Los Angeles won no less than forty-six races out of 110 starts—a truly remarkable record. The sire of the new-comer at Santa Anita Stock Farm is the celebrated Emperor of Norfolk, also a great racehorse. In 1887 Emperor of Norfolk started eighteen times and landed first money in no less than twelve of the races. As a three-year-old the Emperor captured nine races out of the eleven he started in and won a small fortune for his owner. The latest arrival at Santa Anita should be a record-breaker if breeding counts for anything.

THE old Katy Pease family is a great one, surely, and there is going to be a great demand for anything tracing to the grand old four-mile mare that is spending her declining years at Palo Alto. Three members of the family have started at the Blood Horse meeting and covered themselves with no little glory—Marigold, Centella and Little Esperanza. The sire of Esperanza, Judge McKinstry (by Grinstead—Katy Pease), met with an accident and was destroyed last fall, but several of his get will race this season. Matt Storn has the black colt Tobasco, that is exceedingly promising, while E. F. Fallon, of Hollister, has five that are more than likely to make great names for themselves on the turf—Easter Lass, ch f, 2, by Judge McKinstry, dam Tallada, by Enquirer; Molly Rogers, h f, 2, by Judge McKinstry, dam Ursula, by Duke of Montrose; Dashaway, ch g, 2, by Judge McKinstry, dam Skipaway, by Wildidle; Abner E., b m, 5, by Judge McKinstry, dam Lottie L., by Wildidle; Raya del Sol, b c, 1, by Judge McKinstry, dam Tallada, by Enquirer. Then he has the black colt Hathaway, by Ironclad, dam Skipaway, by Wildidle; Crescent Monarch, b g, 2, by Birdcatcher, dam Lottie L., by Wildidle; Sir Edward, b g, 3, by Birdcatcher, dam Harriet, by Flood, and Manhattan, ch g, 3, by Birdcatcher, dam Ursula, by Duke of Montrose. Mr. Fallon has offered these horses for sale, but despairing of getting anything like their true value, has about decided to put everything in training, come down to the spring Blood Horse meeting with them and clean up a large share of the races.

The attention of our readers is called to the advertisements of the Palo Alto sale of trotting stock which is to take place in New York, on the 24th inst. Many of our most prominent California breeders are anxious to recruit the breeding ranks on their farms by the addition of Electioneer blood, for this year it is, as it has been for five years, "on top;" therefore they cannot do better than send on orders for some of these youngsters.

The BREEDER AND SPORTSMAN Futurity Stakes, the fifth payment on which was made by the owners of colts and fillies named on the first of January, will prove to be one of the great events of the year. A perusal of the names of the colts and fillies with their breeding will show that the greatest and best stallions and broodmares in California are well represented. The list contains the names of seventy-three and the probabilities are that among that number there are many that will become famous in turf annals.

AS WE predicted in last week's issue, one of the race meetings had to be given up, there being little glory or coin in running two in cities so close together as Oakland and San Francisco at one and the same time. Thos. H. Williams, President of the new California Jockey Club, observing the falling-off in attendance and interest in racing these chilly days, has about decided that the meeting which has been in progress at Bay District track will come to a close to-day. The meeting conducted by Henry Schwartz begins at Oakland this afternoon with a free gate, and as a number of horses will leave this side of the bay for the Athens of the Pacific at once, an excellent meeting is promised in our sister city.

The First of the Season.

The announcement in another column of this journal of the intention of that live organization, the Pacific Coast Trotting Horse Breeders Association, giving a Spring meeting at which a number of novelties will be introduced, will meet with the approbation of every progressive breeder in this State, as well as in the United States, for similar organizations everywhere take a great interest in what is being done on this Coast, and are quick to adopt any innovation that they see has been successfully inaugurated here.

The great reform in trotting races first spoken of in these columns and adopted by our representative organization, the "two in three system," has awakened a wide-spread interest among the best class of horsemen in the United States and the associations at Independence and Nashville, have adopted this rule for their meetings this year. Their example will be followed by others and a great change for the better will be the result. The "power of the press" is behind this movement, and the universal opinion disseminated through the turf journals of the land, is to the effect that the change is a good one, and will prove beneficial to the breeders and spectators, as well as to the horses. After 1893, three in five races will be entirely abolished, for the greatest objection to it is its extreme cruelty caused by long and tedious scoring through ten and twelve heats, giving an opportunity for "working the pool box," by laying up heats, hence it will not be tolerated. Another good reason that can truthfully be urged against it is, the public gets tired of seeing the tedious scoring and every horseman knows what a disastrous effect this has in popularizing it. As an esteemed contemporary says: "No one cares to see a long-drawn-out race. In fact, races of this kind will do more to drive people away from the race meetings than anything else that could be devised. One reason why the running races in many portions of the country are so much better attended than trotting meetings, and why as a consequence the average running yearlings will sell for more money than the average trotting yearlings, is that running races are shorter, and there is consequently more variety in the sport."

Another good reform adopted at the meeting will also meet with the approval of horsemen, and that is, instead of the entrance fee being ten, it shall hereafter be only five per cent. This will enable breeders to name a much larger number of horses in every race. It is a rule that has been strongly advocated for some time by the members and the financial condition of the association is now on such a sound basis that, with good management and the liberal patronage of the members, large fields of horses and exciting races will be seen.

The great desideratum, in fact, the very life of the organization, public patronage, was not forgotten and the query, "How shall we create a greater public interest in our races?" was also advanced and we believe is at last to be solved.

The thousands that have gathered daily to witness the running races at the Bay District Track will also attend the trotting races if the same system was followed that is of giving dashes of different lengths and plenty of them every afternoon, having the rule of entrance, division of the purse, with book-making on every event similar to that now in vogue at the Blood Horse meeting. Such a rule was adopted at the meeting and if novelty is sought, and owners of horses desire an opportunity of entering their horses every day in the races they will have an opportunity of doing so; the distances being regulated according to the age of the contestants. The programme is in the hands of three good directors and everyone who belongs to the organization is anxiously waiting to see what they will devise.

The Good It Has Done.

The members of the Pacific Coast Blood Horse Association should feel encouraged by the report of their treasurer and secretary for the race meeting just ended. The financial statement is not the only cause for gratification, because the increased public interest in the races so ably conducted is something they have reason to be proud of also. The attention of every breeder, owner and trainer of thoroughbreds has been attracted to California by the reports of these races, our climate and resources.

The Eastern visitors who are returning to their cold and blizzard-stricken cities and towns will never remain as contented there as they would if they had not spent the winter here. During the intervals of the race meetings they have visited the green fields and paddocks in our valleys and have seen little weanlings that compare very favorably with their yearlings; they have inquired about the price of land and the cost of raising horses, and in nine cases out of ten, the answers have been so surprising that resolutions were at once made by the visitors "to sell everything in the East and come here to live and engage in the business they love above all others." The good this successful meeting has done cannot be contemplated by looking at the financial returns, we must look further, and, if we are only patient, every farmer as well as every horseman will see a market open for their young thoroughbreds inside of three years that will prove very remunerative. These practical students of breeding are destined to lead the way when they come for all the old-time Californians to follow. They have been forced by the very demands of the times, the rigorous climate and scarcity of agricultural resources in their Eastern homes to be aggressive and progressive. They must hooom everything; it is their nature, and no spirit in the world is so infectious or becomes as wide-spread as their spirit of rivalry, love of keen competition and desire to excel.

Another feature the Eastern people have seen and that is for winter racing California leads all other States. The terrible hardships inflicted upon the horses at Brighton Beach, Guttenberg and Garfield Park, and the storm of indignation that swept over the land in regard to these meetings will never be forgotten.

The directors of the winter meeting will look back with pleasure a few years hence at the great good they have done and the "bread they have scattered upon the waters will return after many days."

The European Market.

With the commencement of the year 1893, there is a movement noticeable in horse-breeding circles that, if properly attended to, will prove of inestimable value to every horse owner in America, and that is the opening of a market in Europe for trotting horses. The few trotters that were sent to the continent during 1891 and 1892, awakened the curiosity of the people "across the pond" and the crowds at every meeting where our horses trotted increased, instead of diminished. The interest is becoming wide-spread, and from the lowly peasant in his thatched cottage, to the nobility in their palaces, inquiries are coming to America regarding our wonderfully fast roadsters. The light sulkies and vehicles used, and the proofs shown every day of their strength and rigidity, is a revelation to them, and if the right class of horses and goods are introduced success will crown the efforts of our upright and conscientious breeders and manufacturers; but if unscrupulous men take advantage of these foreigners then the business will be ruined at its very inception. To foster this new industry and prevent such a result, the great house of Tattersalls, of England, is about to introduce the American trotter to the people of Europe in a way that will meet with the cordial approval of Americans, wherever they may be. W. B. Fasig, the progressive manager of its trotting horse department, called on us this week and stated that it was the intention of the large establishment to flood the European market with advertising notices of the sales of horses they are to hold here. They will not sell anything that is not first class in every respect, and the rights of the owners will be protected by every means in their power. With such a large institution to protect the trotting horse interests and with its encouragement as an agent for both Europe and America, the future looks most encouraging. Coming as this announcement of Mr. Fasig's does, just at the beginning of the greatest year in the annals of American history, when thousands will come from abroad to view the great Columbian exposition, the opportunities for showing these people the many advantages the trotting horse has over all others, must not be overlooked. The press of America should take up this subject with earnestness, and seek to impress upon the minds of all horsemen the value of this new market for the breed of horses which has made America famous.

THERE will be one good result effected by this discussion about Stamboul and his record if the association will take cognizance of it, and that is to abolish all time records hereafter. It has already done more harm to the trotting horse industry than anything ever introduced since the days when Lady Suffolk won her races.

THE attention of horsemen is called to the advertisement of the twenty-eighth annual meeting of the Buffalo Driving Park; an extended notice will appear next week.

A NUMBER of Elmwood Stock Farm horses have arrived at Bay District track, including the crackerjack Brutus two-year-old, Sir Walter and Index. We understand Charles Boots has purchased of John Adams, Yolo county, three half-brothers to the record-breaking Gibson, and if so, the crack sprinters will have to look to their laurels.

At the Oakland Track.

While the crowds are gathering to-day at the Bay District Track to witness the running of the thoroughbreds the various tracks in the interior of the State, and especially those in that portion called the bay counties, are the scenes of labor of many of our most noted trotting horsemen. Although it is in the middle of winter the tracks are in excellent condition, in fact they are better than they have ever been in the history of California at this time. On old days at the Bay District Track many of the Eastern visitors devote their time to watching the trotters, and at Napa, San Jose, Lodi and Oakland large gatherings are noticeable. As the long-promised "races" at the Oakland track have been postponed the owners of trotters and pacers there feel more like staying until the spring meeting of the Breeders Association, consequently they are taking a greater interest than ever in working their youngsters, for if there is anything that discourages owners or trainers of trotters, it is to be uncertain as to how long they will remain at a track.

The first one noticed at the track the other morning was that celebrated reinman, Orrin A. Hiccock, behind a fine-looking Dexter Prince mare belonging to Mr. Ariel Lathrop. In his row of stalls we noticed A. B. Spreckles' game campaigning mare Hulda 2:14. She has filled out and grown large since she left this State a "green 'un" and came back a "star." Her memorable race at Independence, August 26th, will not be forgotten. Her opponents were Muta Wilkes, Canary Bird, George St. Clair, Ramona, Senator A. and Belle Cassatt. She had to fight for every inch of each mile and with such a field of fast ones there was hardly "time for the drivers to wink." She won the heat and the race in 2:14, 2:17 and 2:15 with Muta Wilkes at her throat-latch at the end of each mile, and the rest close up. Mr. Spreckles has reason to be proud of her. We look for her to make the "queen of the turf" hustle to beat her this fall. Although she is but four years old she has had a colt, and all horsemen know that it takes some little time for a mare to get strong after weaning a youngster; Hulda did remarkably well, however, but this fall she will do better. Her last quarter in the last mile of every race she participated in, was always the fastest.

In an adjoining stall was the handsome bark bay mare Angelina, by Wilkes Boy 3303, dam Molly (dam of Gladiator Jr., 2:27), by Kentucky Cav 194; grandam Flaxy, by Edwin Forrest 49. Angelina will be a "hammer on the circuit" this fall. Azote, 2:14, has been sent to Palo Alto. He was one of the "surprises" that Mr. Hickok introduced to the Eastern turfites last summer.

Geo. L. Swan has the big brown stallion Chandelier, by Jas. Madison, 2:17, in an adjoining stall. Chandelier is out of Betsy Trotwood, by Abbotsford; second dam Alpha Medium, by Happy Medium.

M. McKenzie has his string of trotters and pacers looking exceedingly well, all of them appear as if the brush was not spared nor their feed kept away. The first horse looked at was the grand-looking son of Anteo, 2:16, James Madison, 2:17. He is looking stronger and better than when he left this State last February. We understand that his book was filled and that he was bred to some of the finest mares in Kentucky. James Madison is a racehorse, and for disposition, color, muscular development and perfect gait he is one that at once would command the attention and elicit the praise of all who see him.

Ramone, a chestnut three-year old pacing stallion, by Sidney, 2:19, dam Silver Eye, by Abbotsford, 2:19; second dam Princess, by Henry Williamson, son of Williamson's Belmont. Ramone will get a mark of 2:20 this fall. He is one of the finest formed and easiest moving pacers on the course.

Lookout is the name of a young dark bay mare that is bred "in the purple." She is by Director, 2:17, dam Adina, by Electioneer. Adina is out of Addie Lee (dam of Grace Lee, 2:29); Adair, 2:17; Berlin, 3514 and Adalia, 2:27; by Culver's Black Hawk. Lookout is to be placed in the breeding ranks.

Adinette, a bay mare by Richmond (he by A. W. Richmond, out of Preciosa, by Crichton), out of Adina, by Electioneer 123, is also going with the rest of the mares to join Col. H. I. Thornton's band of matrons at Bakersfield.

Miss Middleton, by Mariner, out of Wolloohara, by Maribynong, is a likely-looking yearling, and will be seen at the Spring meeting of 1894.

The last one looked at belonging to Col. H. I. Thornton, was the handsome chestnut mare Ernestine, by Bertram, out of Kitty H., by imp. King Ernest. She is with foal to Major Ban.

The famous thoroughbred Geraldine, and a little band of other good ones were stabled here.

Lee Shaner has a very large string of trotters and pacers. The first one looked at was Lady H., 2:18, by Sidney, out of Sultana, by Del Sur. She has gone eighths in 14 seconds and will be dangerous company in her class this fall.

Cricketat, by Altamont, is a nice-looking, well-formed bay mare that can pace very fast.

Sidney Foster is a well-shaped, substantial built son of Sidney, out of Del Foster, dam of Faustino (dam of Faustino, 2:14; Fausta, yearling, 2:22) by A. W. Richmond 1687; second dam by Geo. M. Patchen Jr. 31. This horse is shaped like Cupid, 2:18, and is a Simon-pure trotter. He is only five years old, and will be trained for the fall races. If anyone doubts the breeding qualities of the Sidneys, a look at the collection here will be most convincing proof that Sidney's sons will be greater sires than those by any other California sire.

Sidmoor, or as he is generally known, Jack Dempsey, is a small, well-knit stallion out of a mare by the Grand Moor, and has paced miles in 2:24 as a two-year-old this year; he will appear in the races this fall. As a sire, Sidmoor is entitled to more than passing notice. Two of his daughters in Mr. Shaner's string are faster than any yearlings ever seen on the Petaluma track. One is called the Marchioness; she is out of a mare by Dawn, 2:18, and after showing her ability to trot quarters as a nine-months-old wonder in thirty-five seconds, was sold for $1,300. The other is out of a mare by Billy Hayward.

The handsome bay stallion Carbon, by Stanford, dam Kate Dudley, by Tom Dudley, is being put in readiness for the races this fall. He is a well-formed horse, and as a four-year-old trotted in 2:22, but was injured and thrown out of training. He appears to have recovered, and if he stands up to his work will get a low mark.

There is a tall, rangy looking colt in Mr. Shaner's string called Treasurer; he is by Frasier's Secretary, out of a mare by Anteo, 2:16, second dam by Speculation. Treasurer's name appears among the entries in the BREEDER AND SPORTSMAN Futurity Stake.

There are nineteen in Mr. Shaner's string, and all of them are looking and doing well.

Jack Groom has a green trotter that is as perfect in conformation as a trotter can be. He has an intelligent head, fine thoroughbred neck, strong shoulders and heavy quarters; his back is short and over the coupling he is immense; his arms and gaskins are large, elbows and stifle standing out clear from his well-shaped body, joints and feet are perfect, and looking at him from any point a critical judge would at once pronounce him the biggest little horse he ever saw. He is called C. C., and is by Brown Jug, out of a fast mare by Billy Blossom. He is owned by Chas. Chase, the live stock auctioneer. How fast C. C. can trot will be demonstrated this fall. He looks as if he was good for a very low record in the sixth heat of a hard-fought race.

The Guy Wilkes bay stallion Easter W. is also taken care of by Mr. Groom, and will be prepared for the races this year.

The Palo Alto Sale.

The sale of sixty-five head of Palo Alto trotting stock, which is to take place Tuesday and Wednesday, January 24th and 25th at the American Institute building, New York, is one that appeals directly to our California breeders. The scarcity of Electioneer's daughters on our stock farms is noticeable; in fact, the great dearth of his granddaughters is something that all Eastern observant horsemen have noticed; true, there are a few mares by sons of Electioneer, but the number out of daughters by the Hero of the Lone Pine is very limited. This sale, advertised on another page, seems to be studded with youngsters, fillies and colts, out of daughters and granddaughters of Electioneer, and therefore this great consignment has more than usual interest for the California breeders.

Two sons of Electioneer are in it, and five of his daughters in foal to such magnificently-formed and well-bred stallions as Truman, 2:12, Wild Boy (sire of Douchka, 2:24) and Bernal, 2:17. These mares are grand looking undeveloped young mares that have been selected on account of their fitness to become dams of trotters; they are level headed and show great trotting action. Their produce cannot help being fast.

Then there are nine yearlings by Piedmont, 2:17, out of mares by Electioneer and Gen. Benton that will make names for themselves on the track and in the harem. As predicted in these columns last January, this great Piedmont-Electioneer cross would prove to be a most excellent one from which good-sized, heavy-limbed, pure-gaited and fast trotters would result and the records of 1892 will show that the prediction was a correct one.

Gen. Benton, the sire that has become famous through the performances of his sons and daughters, is well represented in this sale, and the remarks made regarding the lack of Electioneer's sons and daughters on our breeding farms, also apply to this great sire. His daughters in this sale are in foal to the best sons of Electioneer. As many predict that many of these sons will surpass their sire in having their progeny enter the list, because the blood of Electioneer in them has been reinforced by "warmer blood," there is no reason why many of these large, stylish, easy going Benton broodmares may not become dams of Sunols, Trumans and Bernals.

There is another great stallion, well known to all Californians, that is well represented in this sale—Nephew. His sons and daughters were famous for their pure trotting action, soundness and gameness. The little collection in this sale traces in blood-line to the equine stars of Menlo, and the value of the Nephews as a family is appreciated by every horseman fortunate enough to have a representative either near or remote.

There are colts and fillies by Azmoor, 2:20 (one of the best formed and gamest trotters in America); Electricity, the big brown stallion that got a record of 2:17 last year and will lower it to 2:12 this fall; he is out of the great mare Midnight (dam of Jay-Eye-See, 2:10, Noontide, 2:20), and Beaumont, sire of Rocknight, 2:29), by Pilot Jr. 12, etc. Whips, 2:27 (sire of Azote, 2:14), is well represented, and whoever gets one of his colts and fillies will pride himself on having something to be proud of, also. Sport, 2:22, Wildnut and others appear as sires of the youngsters to be sold.

The broodmares that will have representatives in this sale are the best in America. A perusal of their names will show this: Carabel, a great broodmare; Wildflower, 2:21, a great broodmare; Susie, 2:26, a great broodmare; Sprite, a great broodmare; Lizzie Whips, a great broodmare; Lady Ellen, 2:29, a great broodmare; Nettie Benton, a great broodmare; Norma, 2:33, a great broodmare; Lady Morgan, a great broodmare; Miss Knox, a great broodmare.

The dams of trotters are also noticeable, for instance: Maybell, dam Marana, 2:24; Glencora, dam of Lot Slocum, 2:17; Orphan Girl, dam of Orphina (3), 2:19; Flower Girl, dam of Newflower (3), 2:25; Bonnie, 2:25, dam of Bonibel (2), 2:24; Isma, dam of Vedo, 2:26; Odette, dam of The Seer, 2:19; Abess, dam of Abetto (p), 2:28, and Victoria, dam of Ivo, 2:26.

The ones with records and those that are closely related to trotters that are safe inside the charmed circle are also to be sold namely: Wavelet, record 2:28; Eualine, record 2:27; Madeline, sister to Azmoor, 2:20; Gazel e, dam of Fowler Boy, 2:29, grandam of Antella (2), 2:26; Bentoneer, 2:28; Florinne, by Woodnut, 2:26, dam Flower Girl; Eliza Dolph, dam of Aldana, 2:15; Mc'a, by Altamont, dam Dolly, dam of Director, 2:17; Czarina, 2:21; Thordale, 2:22; Onward, 2:25.

This is the best collection of individuals ever shipped to the East and as the direct progeny of Electioneer, Benton, Nephew and Piedmont will be getting scarcer every year, owners of stock farms here should lose no time in securing a few youngsters endowed with this great heritage now.

Time is precious and the non-progressive stock farm owner will be regretting his lack of forethought in securing the best stock when he had the opportunity. There are a number of geldings to be sold that are closely related to the youngsters in the same consignment; they will all be seen on the race tracks in the East inside of a year, for they are trotters that have shown great promise with very little handling. We advise our readers to carefully read the advertisement, make a selection, and if they cannot attend the sale send on a commission to purchase. An opportunity to secure such really good ones may never occur again, and the wide-awake breeder who is looking for quick returns in the future for his investments cannot afford to let this sale pass.

HOOF-BEATS.

TALKING about old horses racing, Stoneham is doing very well for a twelve-year-old.

No entries will be received from Jockey C. Burlingame in future by either the Blood Horse Association or California Jockey Club.

It is generally understood among horsemen that Samuel Gamble, formerly superintendent of the Hobart Stock Farm, will return to the Pacific Slope before many months.

KING THOMAS (the $40,000 brother to King Fox and Ban Fox), together with Dr. Koss and Del Mar, will soon be sent down from Sacramento to race at Bay District track.

H. C. JUDSON, owner of Wildidle Stock Farm, under the will of his late uncle, the prominent capitalist, comes in for one-fourth of an estate valued at over one million dollars.

The handsome young stallion King Orry, 2:23, is offered for sale. His record is no mark of his speed; he is sound and kind, perfect in conformation and will prove valuable in the stud or on the track.

MESSRS. KILLIP & Co., the well-known auctioneers, advertised a number of extra fine draught stallions, to be sold in this city Tuesday, January 31st. They are all fine looking. An extended notice of them will be given in our next issue.

B. C. HOLLY brought a number of his horses back to Bay District to race last Thursday, having got over his huffiness at the handicapper to some extent. The Flodan turfman has changed his colors from the all green to a peacock blue with gold star on jacket.

HORSEMEN should not forget that the sixth payment of $15 to the Golden Gate Futurity Purse of 1893 will be due and payable at the office of the Secretary, J. I. Dimond, 306 Market street, San Francisco, January 15, 1893. See advertisement in another column.

QUEEN OF THE WEST is a mare that should be secured by some trainer. She is a green mare with the speed of the whirlwind. Her owner has been sick for two years, consequently the mare has been turned out all this time. She is just tight to start in with. She will be sold very reasonable.

CALIFORNIA horses will cut quite a figure in the racing a the East during the season of 1893. Wildwood is entered in a number of the big handicaps, and will undoubtedly, barring sickness or accidents, make himself famous; Santa Anna and Santiago, in the Baldwin string, will also go some, as will also Marigold, Topgallant and Centella the Storn stable, and Racine, in the Williams string, while Pescador, Misty Morn, Democrat, Homer, Bessie W., Motto, Altamont, Jennie K. and Fairy, among the older horses, are more than handy animals. Among the three-year-old stake horses that will be "thar or tharabouts" at the finish are Picton, Chasm, Cadmus, Fidelia, Hermitage, Lady Pess, Monowai, Dare, Flood Gate, Charmion, Castro, Don Fulano and the Darebin-Iris filly. On our list of promising two year-olds are Yo El Key, Thornbill, Prince, sister to Tournament, Last Chance, Bordeaux, Easter Lass, Molly Rogers, Relampago, Wandering Nun, Darebin-Flenrette filly, imp. Galore—Ghidelia filly, and one of Boots' Brutus youngsters.

THE other day Monroe Salisbury, in his quest after another Flying Jib, met an enthusiastic owner of a pacer in Lorenzo, and, after exchanging greetings, was astonished to hear the gentleman say: "Mr. Salisbury, I've a pacer that can beat Direct or Flying Jit; he's the fastest one on earth!" Mr. Salisbury being a little hard of hearing, placed his hand to his ear, and loudly asked: "Eh, what's that you say?" "I say I've a green pacer that can get away with Direct or Flying Jib; they 'wont be in it' with him in a race," replied the owner. Mr. Salisbury plunged his hand into his pocket, drew out a handful of golden eagles, laid them on the desk and then covered them with a handful more and said: "I'll bet you all these and a thousand on top of them to a dollar-piece that I've a yearling now that can beat your green pacer a mile, and I have never seen your horse." The boaster was so much astonished he felt that he must have been mistaken either in his sidewheeler or Mr. Salisbury, and could not muster up courage to reply to the challenge. On inquiry after this "astonishing" interview we learned that the pacer was by Director, 2:17, out of Lily Stanley, 2:17, by Whippleton, and she belongs to Hon. Frank Coombs, Minister to Japan.

THERE is a story in connection with the old mare Alma Mater, bought by Mr. Pierce for $4,200. She is twenty years old now, and the fact that many believed her barren explains why she did not bring more than $4,200. As a matter of fact, she lost her foal by Stamboul about three weeks ago, and Superintendent Samuel Gamble, who had charge of the late Mr. Hobart's horses, determined to buy her on speculation himself, knowing that she would breed for another year or two. He guarded her secret closely, and one day in the beginning of last week asked Mike Bowerman whether he could send her to Wiltun, 2:19, the great son of George Wilkes, owned by the Bowerman Bros, in case he bought her. "You can," said Mike, "and what is more, she won't cost you a dollar, and that's something I never did before." Mr. Pierce overheard the remark, and came to Mr. Gamble before the mare was offered and asked to be permitted to buy her on shares for Mr. Gamble, Capt. Griffiths and himself. Mr. Gamble agreed to this, and Mr. Pierce did the bidding. He wanted to stop once, but Gamble said to go ahead, and afterward told him how the colt was lost. "I'll see you at the hotel and settle with you," said Mr. Gamble to Pierce. "But," said Gamble, who told the story subsequently, "when I went there what do you think he said? Why, just this: 'You're in one-third on the mare; you can't pay us one cent; you manage the mare and her produce, if she has any, as you see fit, and remember you own one-third of Alma Mater and any foals she may have.' Mr. Gamble thus found himself a few thousand dollars richer than he had supposed, and he has reason to congratulate himself upon the possession of such good friends. Gamble is a good horseman and owned the mare By-By, sold for $10,000, in partnership with Mr. Hobart

Our Tennessee Letter.

(Special Correspondence of the BREEDER AND SPORTSMAN.)

NASHVILLE, TENN., Jan. 5.—There will be no racing at West Side Park in 1893. Nor will there be at any time hereafter. A few short weeks from now and the sound of the jumpers' flying hoofs will cease to be heard on the famous old West Side track. All will be at Cumberland Park, and the gates of West Side will be closed, even locked. The Cumberland Park management now holds a lease of the West Side track for two years. It was made public here Tuesday that Frank M. Shaw, the St. Paul plunger, had leased the track and grounds for two years. This was somewhat startling news in racing circles, as the West Side people had given it out that they would race on the date claimed by them, whether or no Cumberland Park raced at the same time. It looked as though there might possibly be a clash. After it was made known that Shaw had leased the old track all kinds of rumors were afloat, and it was said that he, too, would oppose Cumberland Park and also that he would run a winter meeting. Shaw had not been the lessee of the West Side track many hours before he donned the roll of lessor and the Cumberland Park management as sub-lessee. The sub-leasing of the track has not been made public as yet, not even the late regime at West Side Park being aware of the fact that the track is now under the control of the Cumberland Park people. Mr. Shaw, in leaving the track, accepted the Two Thousand and Broodmare Stakes offered by that association, and these two will be transferred to Cumberland Park. The meeting then will commence April 29th, and will continue nine days. The programme is undoubtedly the most liberal ever offered in the West, and those who have seen the trotters fly over the smooth surface at Cumberland Park well know that it is the fastest regulation track in the world. It now looks like a season of great racing for Nashville. The management of Cumberland Park do not do things by halves, and they will make Nashville the best racing point in the West. The liberality of the Association, combined with the superior facilities for winter training, will make it the best-known race track in the West.

There is a general air of prosperity among Tennessee horse-owners and trainers. The breeders, men who make it a business, are all prosperous, and those who breed horses for love have made money out of their venture. Tennessee stables did well in 1892 and breeders had good sales. The Tennessee tracks made money, the breeders of the State were liberal buyers of first-class breeding material last year, and the same men now have many good yearlings for the market of 1893. Tennessee is in front (it cannot be doubted) in the running horse line. Here in Middle Tennessee are the crackerjack stallions in America, equally as famous broodmares, the best training track in the country, all surrounded with as good land as one ever saw. Of the money hung up in 1892 for the runners not less than $1,000,000 was won by horses that first saw the light of day from Tennessee soil. The year of eighteen hundred and ninety-three promises to be an unusually brilliant one for the name and fame of the old Volunteer State, her horses and horsemen.

Plunger Chris, Smith, familiarly called "Smithy" by his friends, was in Nashville this week to see his horses. Since "Smithy" blossomed out as a plunger he has been the cynosure of all eyes in the Western betting ring, and since his hard run of luck began at Washington Park last summer he has been the subject of many a paragraph. His run of bad luck has been as phenomenal as was his success in the early season. For months it has been said that he was dead broke and had his horses mortgaged. While here Smith made no secret that he owed a Chicago man $10,000, but said he wasn't broke by many thousands. He has eighteen head of servicable horses at the track in John Huffman's care, among them Yo Tambien, Maid Marian, Van Buren, Doll, McCone and a big string of costly two-year-olds. Smith refused $50,000 for Yo Tambien and Maid Marian last week, and as all of his horses are unincumbered it doesn't strike me that he is broke, although it has been sung in many languages that the plunger had as well be under ground. He said the $10,000 he borrowed does not have to be returned for five years, should he want to keep it so long. His horses are wintering well, and there will be no stronger string racing in the East next year than the "black and old gold" of Plunger Chris, Smith.

C. Clayton, a capable lightweight, will do most of the riding for the Smith Stable next year. He rode early in the summer with great success, and he was, in the eyes of the public, just as was "Pike" Barnes a few years ago. Although his work in the saddle was good throughout the season, it was hardly up to his work up to the Latonia spring meeting, which can be accounted for by his not being so fortunate in getting mounts that were in winning form. C. Clayton is a bright colored boy, and there are not many boys that can "do" 90 pounds that can finish with him. Charley Thorpe, the stable's main jock, last season will wear the "stars and stripes" of the Seogean Bros. the coming season. He is wintering here and I think will join his stable at Memphis. His connection with the Smith stable were pleasant enough, but I am inclined to the belief that had not Thorpe been asked to stand down for Tom Britton to ride Yo Tambien in the Garfield Derby that Thorpe would have worn the same colors in 1893. Thorpe is the best jockey in the West. Williams, Overton and Britton, three ebony-colored boys who have been closely allied for several seasons, have many friends, and are at the top, but Thorpe has the best seat and hands of them all. He can get more out of an average horse with his heels and hands than can either one of the others with as many "hats" as they could carry.

K. K. Alcock, the well-known Eastern trainer, will probably open a public stable here this winter. Alcock trained for the late George Lorillard when that gentleman had a successful stable, and he also trained for William Hendrie, the Canadian turfman, with great success, as well as a string of two-year-olds that he once trained for the Dwers. He is a native Tennesseean, and has not forgotten the days when he had a good string here some seventeen years ago.

The big handicaps and American Derby of next season are already attracting attention. A winter book has been opened on the American Derby, with Don Alonzo and Sir Francis equal favorites at 10 to 1 against each of them. It seems to me that the pencilers had quite an eye to business in making Don Alonzo first chance, for, should he come to the post fit and good, it will be a lay down for him. He ought to make the greatest three-year-old we have ever seen, and what is the matter with Lamp-lighter for the Suburban, if he does not get the worst of the weights?

TROTTERS AND PACERS.

A. B. Cook, for several years trainer for the Hermitage Stud, will train a public stable at Columbia, Tenn., this year. His string will not be a very large one, but will comprise some good material. Among them will be: Reflector, 2:10; Ella Brown, 2:11; Fred S. Wilkes, 2:11; Turk, 2:18; Monogram, 2:20; Complex, a sensational green pacer, and a black filly by Guy Wilkes, whose dam, I believe, is Manette, dam of Arion. She is owned by Smith Bros., of Birmingham, Ala., and was bought by them at Daly's sale in Kentucky last August. She is the grandest looking mare I have ever seen, and as Johnny Goldsmith said on the night she was sold, "was born a trotter." The mare is still in Kentucky, but will soon join Cook's string. Cook will train on the celebrated "kite track" ($100,000 in stakes and purses) at Columbia, but there will be no "Jonesing" there this year. The Hermitage Stud shipped away twenty-two head of trotters to-day for the Kentucky sales. The crackerjack of the lot is a yearling by Bow Bells, dam by Alcantara; second dam Noontide, 2:20; third dam Midnight, dam of Jay-Eye-See, 2:10 (2:06 p), and Electricity, 2:17. The youngsters on the farm by Bow Bells are very promising. The Hermitage Stud people expect to have a couple of his yearlings go into the charmed circle this season.

Gil Curry has returned from New York, where he attended the Hobart sale. Curry will have a big string this year, among them some promising colts. He thinks Stamboul the cheapest horse he has ever seen sold, and expects Doble to drive him in 2:05 the coming season.

Secretary Ruskurm is busily engaged these days in hustling up entries for the Cumberland Park Trotting Stakes, entries to which close Feb. 1st. The programme, which appears in this issue, is the most liberal of 1893, and as the Cumberland Park Association has made a great name for itself abroad, a large list may be expected. The meeting had last year was the best of the year, and 1893's meeting will not be behind it. KENNESAW.

Santa Rosa Scintillations.

(Special Correspondence of the BREEDER AND SPORTSMAN.)

EDITOR BREEDER AND SPORTSMAN:—The New Year's number of the BREEDER AND SPORTSMAN was a beauty, and elicited much favorable comment from Santa Rosa horsemen. They realize that with such an admirable sheet published on the Pacific Coast they have no need for any other turf journal.

Since Dave Colross left here for Cotati Rancho, Rufus Murphy has placed his horses in the care of Mr. Hellman, the young man who had charge of the Rose Dale horses a few months ago. Hellman is said to be a very careful horseman.

Charlie Gimmel, who worked Captain Guy E. Grosses' Anteeo stallions two seasons, and who took care of Anteeo himself awhile, would like to secure an engagement from a horseman for the season. Charlie is a good fellow, but has been playing in hard luck recently.

G. W. Fraser has a picture of the Napa Skinner yearling which caused a flutter of excitement by some rapid flights of speed a few weeks ago. Fraser adheres to his old opinion that the Skinners are sure to come to the front and stay there.

All of the horses purchased by Pierce Bros. at the Hobart sale in New York except two have been brought to their Santa Rosa Stock Farm. The exception is By By, the great mare sired by Nutwood for which the price of $10,000 was paid and Alma Mater. By By was left at Sacramento.

Pierce Bros.' horses, brought here from New York, have had a lively wrestle with the influenza since arriving. The trip to New York to the sale and right back again, across plains and mountains, in the midst of cold winter weather, is rather hazardous to any stock. The worst has been passed, however, and it is thought the valuable animals will all pull through nicely. Dr. Maclay, of Petaluma, was called up to consult with Dr. Davenport a few days ago and he said the influenza was the same that prevailed at Palo Alto farm some time ago.

Among those at the farm, bought by Pierce Bros. from New York, we saw Nola, chestnut mare, sired by Nutwood, dam Belle Byron, by Bowman's Clark Chief. Nola cost her new owners $2,600 and was stunted to Stamboul, king of stallions. Bon Bon, 2:26 at four years old, sired by Simmons, dam Bonnie Wilkes, by George Wilkes, is a good one and the figures in her case ran up to $7,500. The five-year-old mare Biscara, by Dictator, dam Bicara by Harold, cost them $8,250 and is one of the best animals ever brought here. She was stunted to Stamboul.

The well-known matron Alma Mater, dam of five in the thirty list brought $4,400. Alma Mater was sired by Mambrino Patchen, dam Estella by imp. Australian. This great mare was in foal to Stamboul. She will go to Kentucky to be bred. Carlotta Wilkes by Charley Wilkes, dam Aspasia, by Alcantara, is another valuable one landed here. That her owners got a bargain in Carlotta Wilkes is shown by the price, which was $825. The fine mare Alta Vela by Palo Alto, dam Kitty Sultan, cost Pierce Bros. rather more, but her elegant breeding certainly makes $1,525 look rather insignificant. Just think, her sire, the dead king of stallions and her dam by a horse that has twenty-four in the charmed circle, and of course Alta Vela is only a two-year-old. Rachel Welch brought $1,075, but of her breeding we were not informed the day we were at the farm.

Besides those enumerated above, Pierce Bros. have among the new accessions a bay yearling filly by Albert W., dam Hilda, and a bay yearling by Albert W., dam Middleton Maid. The former brought $1,400, while the latter went under the hammer for $1,190. The yearling stallion L. W. Russell, sired by Stamboul, dam By-By, by Nutwood, came to them to the tune of $1,100, and will be one of the greatest attractions on their farm.

D. A. Foster, the proprietor of the Magnolia livery Stable, has some very good horses at his barns. His yearling trotter, sired by Bell L., a son of Anteeo, dam Kentucky Pet, is a promising youngster, and, though a little rough looking, will make a valuable horse some day. Mr. Foster's two-year-old, a grandson of Electioneer, is a large, strongly built fellow, and goes off at a lively gait, considering the training he has had.

Foster's horses are not the only ones in the Magnolia barn, however. A promising young horse, Beechwood, by name, sired by Hawthorne, dam a Nutwood mare, is a stylishly built young stallion, and he shows considerable speed. Then there is R. H. Gifts' handsome black stallion, Black Hawk, a sire of some local reputation, through whose vein flows a smart sprinkling of Morgan blood.

There is some talk of reviving horse racing here this year, but the question has become a bewhiskered chestnut that creates no excitement. Our horsemen have no faculty for pulling together. They are all good fellows, but, somehow, they have a decided penchant for each paddling his own canoe. That may be the best. Many think otherwise. PUBLIUS.
Santa Rosa, January 9, 1893.

Notes From Salem.

(Special Correspondence of the BREEDER AND SPORTSMAN.)

The second annual exhibition of the Oregon State Poultry and Pet Stock Association was held at Salem last week and concluded Saturday night, after a very successful three days' session. Choice fowls from breeding pens all over this section of the coast were present, as were also numberless coops of pigeons and pet stock of all kinds. Perhaps the finest display was that of C. D. Nairn, of Balston, who was present with his Scotch collies. Mr. Nairn is the pioneer breeder of this section, and among his dogs are some of the finest on the coast.

The legislature is now in session, and an effort will be made to secure an appropriation of perhaps $20,000, to be used in changing the present State race track at Salem into one of regulation shape, and also for the erection of new grand-stands, judges' stands, etc. There is no doubt but the Legislature will recognize the demands made upon it by the State Fair, and make appropriations accordingly.

The Oregon State Breeders' and Speed Association will meet in a few days for the purpose of arranging its July racing programme. Last year the races were held at Salem in June, but this year they will be during the first week of July—for three days. The meetings at Albany and Independence will be just before the one at Salem, which will be the closing one of the circuit. This will be very convenient for horses that expect to participate in the September races, for they will not have to be removed from Salem.

Salem has a covered track. It is only a small one, but it is proving very efficient in training colts. It was built by T. A. Crowell, owner of Pilot Lemont, and is one-sixteenth of a mile in length. Some very promising Pilot Lemont colts are being speeded on it. CABL.

Chicago Racing Association Stakes.

This is World's Fair year, and Chicago is certain to have the grandest season of racing ever known in this country. On Tuesday, May 16, 1893, a splendid meeting commences at Hawthorne track, and it ends on June 23d. Owners of thoroughbreds in this part of the world should bear in mind the Chicago Racing Association, which offers the following liberal series of stake races: The Lassie Stakes, for two-year-old fillies, five furlongs, $1,500 added; C., B. and Q. Stakes, for two-year-old colts and geldings, five furlongs, $1,500 added; Hawthorne Stakes, for two-year-olds, five furlongs, $1,500 added; the Emulation Handicap, a handicap sweepstakes for two-year-olds, $1,500 added; Chicago Horseman Stakes, for two-year-olds, six furlongs, $2,000 added; the Speculation Handicap, for three-year-olds, mile and a furlong, $1,500 added; Competition Stakes, for three-year-old fillies, one mile, $1,500 added; Chicago Stakes, for three-year-olds, mile and three-sixteenths, $1,500 added; Chicago Derby, for three-year-olds, mile and a quarter, $5,000 added; Annual Stakes, all ages, seven furlongs, $2,750 added; Ullman Handicap, three-year-olds and upward, mile and a quarter, $2,500 added; Selling Stakes, all ages, seven furlongs, $1,500 added; Illinois Central Stakes, selling, for three-year-olds, mile and a sixteenth, $1,500 added; Stock Yards Steeplechase, full course, $1,000 added. The conditions in every one of these stakes are exceedingly liberal, and it requires but a very small sum to make an entry. Read the association's advertisement in another portion of this paper and address all communications to Harry Kuhl, secretary, P. O. Box 855, Chicago, Ill.

There will be a grand auction sale of trotting stock at Napa on or about the 1st of March. Among those who will send consignments will be John McCord, N. Coombs, John Even, R. G. Head, H. W. Crabb, Fred W. Loeber, E. P. Heald and a large number of other prominent breeders of the valley. It is understood that Fred W. Loeber will act as auctioneer. He ought to make an excellent one, for no one in the country understands the merits of a horse better than he, and his description powers cannot be surpassed.

MILK KNOX, of Haywards, has a mare by Redwood, 2:27, dam by Silvertail Hunter, he by Old Kentucky Hunter; last year she had a bay filly by Direct, 2:05; this year she is now in foal to Directum, 2:11. Mr. Knox also owns a full sister with a foal by Centella (he by Antevolo, out of Centennial Belle), besides a mare by Chisholm's Blue Bull that is one of the fastest pacers in that part of the county.

The Cream of the Trotting World For Sale.

No sale has been conducted this season which comprises more gilt edged offerings than the consignments catalogued in F. J. Berry & Co.'s great Chicago midwinter sale. Among the great Onwards to be sold will be found Alward 1896, out of Marietta, the dam of Valcour, 2:28, second dam Smyrna, the dam of Prince Edward, 2:20, and third dam produced Mix, 2:25. Where is there for sale another young sire with such a list of prize winners? A great race mare by Onward will be found in Lena Miller, 2:26, out of Long Lane, dam of two in the list. She made her record in 1892, and is now in foal to Pilot Medium. A prize will be found in the young Onward stallion Notice 19256, out of Miriam, by Egbert; second dam by Mambrino Chief, and third dam by Clark Chief.

Another brilliant gem by Onward will be found in Assol 19270, out of Crossette, by Egbert; second dam Judie, by Lagow, son of Belmont, and third dam by Alex. Norman. A great prize by Onward is Lady Jennyson, out of Orphelia M., by Margin, son of Almont, second dam Rachel Russell, dam of Nellie Mason, 2:14, by Woodford Abdullah. A superlative son of Onward will be found in Retallion, out of Cuppie, by Blackwood, second dam by Pilot Jr.

A great representative of the Electioneer family will be found in Florida, by Egotist, 2:22, sire of seven in 2:30 list, out of Flirt, by Princeps; second dam Dulce, dam of Greenhorn, 2:28, and full sister to Belle Dudley, dam of five in 2:30, by Belmont.

A half brother to Directum (3), 2:14, by Director, 2:17, is offered in Dick, out of Mocking Bird (2), 2:38, by Friam, sire of Frank Beck, 2:17, second dam Western Girl, dam of Honesty, 2:25, by Chieftain, a 2:30 sire.

Among the brilliant prospects catalogued will be found grandly bred youngsters by Norval, Judge Salisbury, Onward, Pilot Medium, St. Just, Egotist, Director, Milton, Red Wilkes, Hawthorne, and other leading sires, out of producing and great bred dams.

The grandest lot of animals, both in breeding, individuality and speed promise, ever catalogued in any breeding sale.

Catalogues sent only on application and will be mailed about January 15th, by F. J. Berry & Co., Union Stock Yards, Chicago.

Important to Horse Owners.

The time is fast approaching when owners of well-bred and producing mares consider what stallions to patronize next season, while owners of well-bred sires are also considering whether it will pay to make a bid for this patronage by advertising their business in the horse papers.

No business of modern times has made a success without the aid of the press and no venture can long survive in this day of earnest competition without judicious advertising.

every day's business experience proves that nothing pays better. How long would Palo Alto, Kalamazoo Farm, South Elkhorn, Woodburn and other great breeding establishments that lead the fashion be in the swim if they ignored printer's ink.

Abortion in Broodmares.

At this season of the year breeders begin to watch their broodmares very carefully for any signs of abortion, and the veterinary departments of the turf newspapers are flooded with queries regarding the treatment to be given mares to prevent abortion, and what steps to take when it becomes evident that this is going to occur.

probably more or less efficacious, and nearly every veterinarian has some particular treatment which he considers superior to all others. There can be no doubt that the best method is to use great care in the feeling and handling of the mare from the very earliest months of pregnancy, and to increase this care and watchfulness as she progresses.

Many experienced stock-farm managers recommend the use of wheat as a preventive of abortion, and advise, if a mare begins to strain or shows any indications of coming abortion, to give her immediately a handful of whole wheat, care being taken, of course, to have it clean and free from ergot or "smut."

If one mare aborts, and others who are in foal are in the neighborhood, they should be kept carefully away from the spot and all evidences at once removed. Carbolic acid should be sprinkled liberally about the stall or yard and the mare isolated from the rest for two or three days.

The Points of a Clydesdale.

"Argus" in London Live-Stock Journal: "Clydesdales have a rather long head from ear to muzzle, this length being relieved when viewed from the front by a very wide forehead, the latter being full between the eyes, but not by any means prominent. The eyes are large, full and mostly of a pale blue color, liquid and with little white. The ears are preferred large in the stallion by many of the breeders of the old school—large ears, in their opinion, being indicative of masculine character. These virtues have been to some extent modified of late, Darnley, the founder of many of the successful Clydesdale families of the present time, having had somewhat small ears. The muzzle is fine and the nostrils open and clean. The neck is in mare and stallion proportionate, and in the latter well arched. The counter is broad and full, and the shoulders well sloped, yet not so much as to allow the head of the collar to get too far back over the withers. Elbows are well thrown back, with joints clear of the body; forearms muscular; knees big, broad and well-knit, though many might be improved there; cannon bones measuring 10 1/2 inches below the knee at least, short and flat, with a fringe of silky hair or feather flowing from the curb of the latter several inches in length; a valued characteristic is to have the hair of the quality described and carried on the part indicated.

"The pasterns are long and well sloped forward. No good Clydesdale ever possessed short pasterns. Many think, however, that this point has been developed at the expense of other useful qualities. The Clydesdale girths fairly round the heart and his back is short, but in back rih he is deficient and there is 'too much daylight under him in front of his stiles,' dealers say. This defect is being obviated. The hind legs are muscular, but the quarters are very short in many, and such horses are said not to fill their 'breaching.' The hocks are very clean (the points or heels sometimes too prominent), and the hind shank drops forward a little, this being preferred to a perpendicular descent to the ground. The hind legs should also be feathered after the manner of the fore legs.

"The Clydesdale is a grand, free walker, with a long, even step. The hind legs are carried with hocks close and parallel; and width of movement or out-twisting is condemned. In height the Clydesdale averages 16.2. Than other draft horses his proportionate length is much greater than his height, his legs being generally very short from knee to fetlock. Brown is the fashionable color, the darker the shade the better. Bays are more common and white markings are more met with than black markings. The latter are getting more fashionable, though old horse-breeders preferred the former as indicative of superior breeding. The temper of the Clydesdale is somewhat hot, but he is easily broken. His constitution is very sound, and at farm work he has been known to live and do his duty for a full Scotch farm lease of nineteen years. It is as a lorry horse for street traffic that he is now most valued."

Mrs. S. B. WOLFSKILL, of Santa Monica, had the misfortune to lose a great broodmare about a fortnight ago. This was Yolone, a hay mare foaled in 1868 and noted as the dam of Jim Douglas, Heliotrope and Edelweiss, and grandam of the noted long-distance horse Hotspur, whose race at one and three-quarter miles at San Francisco in the spring of 1891 is the record (3:00) for that distance. Yolone was inbred to Glencoe, and therefore everything she dropped was both speedy and stout. She was by Norfolk, out of Mary Longstreet, by Ashland, from Lola Monte (winner of the first three-mile race ever run on the Pacific Coast), by Grey Eagle. Mrs. Wolfskill has nine descendants of old Yolone—eight fillies and one colt. The Norfolk fillies are becoming scarce.—Los Angeles Herald.

FOR SALE.
A fine four-year-old stallion, standard and registered, foaled May 5, 1889; by Anteco, 2:16 1/4. Is 16 bands big, black or seal brown, and a fine looker. Has never been trained but shows plenty of natural speed. Has shown a mile as a three-year-old in 2:44. For particulars address
W. H. LUMSDEN,
Santa Rosa, Cal.

For Sale.
THE Stallion Ringwood,
The Famous Son of Sidney.

Ringwood is a dark bay; black points; 15 1/2 bands, and resembles Sidney in formation more than any of his sours. He is a pure-gaited trotter, and has shown remarkable speed from a colt. With but little work, he showed trials of speed in 2:19 1/4 as a four-year-old, and would have received a record of 2:18 or better but for an accident at the Napa track, and was drawn from his engagements, and never has been put in race since. Ringwood is six years old, and as a sire of speed, form and color, is equal to his noted sire, Sidney. Several of his colts have been sold at high prices, and have gone East. He is a sure foal-getter and of fine disposition, and a lady can handle or drive him. Ringwood is highly bred on the dam's side. Alma was by Dashaway (the-oughtred), by Williamson's Belmont, by American Boy; second dam Fanny Cob, a noted roadmare brought from Canada to California. Alma is a noted producer of speed.

ALSO FOR SALE
Tippoo Tib,
Gelding record, 2:26. Can trot in 2:20 or better; will show quarters in 0:32; 15 1/2 bands; light bay; a great road horse; single or double, and perfectly sound. Ringwood or Tippoo Tib can be put in training and win their price in one season. For further particulars, address
A. C. DIETZ, Oakland,

FOR SALE.
STANDARD STALLION
FRED DRAKE 4834,
(Race Record, 2:26 1/4).

By Joe Gavin 564 (sire of six in the list), he by Messenger Durin 106 (sire of 20 in the list), first dam, Minnie Drake (dam of 2 in the list), by Louis Napoleon 207 (sire of 16 in the list). Fred Drake 4844, 2:25 1/4, is a splendid individual; stands about 16 hands high, and weighs over 1,100 lbs., is of excellent disposition. His record is no mark of his speed as he can trot in :30 or better with training next season. Reason for selling is that owner is engaged in other business and has not the time to devote to the horse. Will be sold at a reasonable price. For particulars address

The Thoroughbred Stallion THREE CHEERS

Will make the season of 1893 at

WM. M. MURRY'S STABLES, 715 Twenty-third street, Sacramento, Cal.

THREE CHEERS

Fourth dam Reality; fifth dam, by Imp. Medley, sixth dam, by Imp. Sentinel; seventh dam, by Mark Anthony, eighth dam, by Imp. James; ninth dam, by Imp. Monkey; tenth dam, by Silvereye eleventh dam, by Sparker. (See Bruce's American Stud Book, Vol. 1 page 422.)

HURRAH, sire of Three Cheers, produced the great winners Bonnie Lizzie, Chagata, Ohio Loy, Nellie Peyton, Little Buttercup, Red Fox, Medusa, Brad, Refaire, Monk, Hostage, Lady Middleton and many others.

NEWMINSTER, grand sire of Three Cheers, won the St. Leger at Doncaster in 1851. His dam, BEE-SWING, was the winner of fifty-four races out of sixty-four, among them being the Doncaster Cup of 1837, 1840, 1841, and 1842, the only horse that ever accomplished that remarkable feat. Her sire was DR. SWEET X, a famous race horse.

THREE CHEERS comes from in addition to the above, the great sires of Bay Middleton (winner of English Derby, St. Leger and Two Thousand (rain race) and the blood of the wonderful producing family of TITICACOS, Imp. T. STEEL, ELLIUS and BIRCHARLES.

As can be seen by the above, Three Cheers is bred in the speediest and stoutest lines. His dam, Young Fashion, was the dam of Sunrise, Scotland (the only horse that ever beat Ate-oid a beat), Liverpool, Columbia and Bonnie Kate, the dam of Little Buttercup, and the great sire of Bonnie Lizzie. His granddam, Fashion was the greatest race mare of her era, defeated Boston in that fatal match at four-mile heats that is recorded as one of the greatest events in the annals of the turf.

THREE CHEERS is a beautiful bay in color, perfectly sound in wind and limb, is family on both sides being noted for their exemption from curbs, spasms, roaring or any other hereditary unsoundness. Horsemen who can appreciate the highest type of the thoroughbred are especially invited to inspect Three Cheers. He has already sired to the splendid performers

Acclaim, Almont, Mystery, Cheerful, Applause, Ignacio and Royal Flush, AND THEY SPEAK FOR THEMSELVES.

TERMS.

Seventy-five Dollars for the Season. Good pasturage at $5 per month. Mares cared for in any manner owners may desire and fed on hay and grain, either or both, at reasonable rates. None but competent groomers employed, but no responsibility assumed for accidents or escapes.

Imp. Chesterfield

Son of THE MARQUIS (Winner of the St. Leger and Two Thousand Guineas, and second for the Epsom Derby, he by the great Stockwell out of Chizell, by Touchstone).

First dam, Lamorna (sold for 1,050 guineas), by Fireworks; second dam Nightlight (sold for 200 guineas when 22 years old), dam of Waxlight, sire of San Pedro; Nightlight by Archy (son of Camel, that sired Touchstone). The sixth dam of Imp. Chesterfield (Camarine's dam, by Rubens, brother to Castrol, sire of Pantaloon, is the ninth dam of the great filly Princess, by Imp. Goldenrod. Then he traces through the most fashionable families in the English Stud Book to sixteenth dam, Farmer Mare, by Chittany.

Imp. CHESTERFIELD won in Australia the Shorts Handicap Flying Hauler and Towel Plate, Wollongong (2 miles), Christmas Handicap, Sydney, besides being second four times and third twice in a number of the best events.

Imp. CHESTERFIELD is the sire of six winners in the Antipodes this season, including the cracks Templestone Lottier, Haughty and Lady Hardy.

This magnificently-bred race horse and sire will make the season at THE WFFRERS FARM (late Hinkson Ranch), Sonoma County, about halfway between Petaluma and Sonoma. Mares can be sent to Lakewille per steamer Gold.

TERMS: $10, with usual return privilege and pasturage for one month, but claims of stakeholders will be taken at half price. Every care taken, but no liability assumed for accidents or escapes. Apply to

THE PRIZE-WINNING

Imp. German Coach Stallion

SOCRATES 99

SIRED BY

LANDESSOHN, out of LINTZE,
by MAGNAT II.

WILL MAKE THE

SEASON OF 1893,

Commencing February 1st and Ending July 1st,

— AT —

Laurel Creek Stock Farm,
SAN MATEO.

Service Fee - - - $40

Socrates stands 16:1 1/2 hands, and weighs close to 1,400 pounds. In color, he is a beautiful shade of bay; no white. In disposition he is perfection, while in conformation he is considered by competent judges to be the best stallion of his age and class ever brought to California. His action is perfect, and as he is sound and free from all vices he is recommended to all horsemen desirous of raising large, fine-looking, stylish, well-limbed and perfectly matched horses.

For further particulars regarding conditions, shipment, and care of mares, etc, apply to

Red Wilkes
:: Dictator

DICTATUS

Will make the Season of 1893, commencing February 1st and ending July 1st, at

BELMONT STOCK FARM, BELMONT, SAN MATEO COUNTY, CAL.

SERVICE FEE..... $150
(Will be allowed to serve fifteen approved outside mares.)

DICTATUS was foaled in 1890. He was sired by the great RED WILKES 1749 (sire of 88 in the list); dam, Miss LOLLIE, by DICTATOR 133 (sire of JAY-EYE-SEE, 2:10, DIRECTOR, 2:17, and 41 others in the list, besides the dam of NANCY HANKS, 2:04, etc.); second dam, Gold Pcn (dam of Felina, 2:29 1/2, and grandam of Hill Boy (p), 2:20, by Mambrino Abdallah 2201 (son of Mambrino Patchen 58); third dam by Harold 413 (sire of Maud S., 2:03 3/4, and 41 others in the list and grandsire of Kremlin, 2:07 3/4); fourth dam, Emily Chester, by Mambrino Patchen 58; fifth dam Patsy (dam of Midway), by Snowstorm (sire of Jim Irving, 2:23). He is in color a chestnut, with star in forehead, one hind pastern white. In conformation he is perfect, being about 15.2 hands in height, very short back, strong over the coupling, heavy quarters, large, well-muscled gaskins and arms; limbs straight, cannon bones short, hocks and joints clean and hony, and feet of the finest kind. His neck, head and body denote an iron constitution. His shoulders are sloping, and, taking him all in all, a more perfect representative of the great Wilkes-Dictator cross does not exist to-day. His breeding speaks for itself. He traces four times to Hambletonian 10 through his greatest sires—GEO. WILKES, DICTATOR, HAROLD and ABDALLAH 15. He traces to Mambrino Patchen twice and three times to Mambrino Chief. His blood-lines are unequalled by any stallion on this Coast.

The best of care taken of mares, but no liability assumed for accidents or escapes.

DR. CANADAY'S IMPREGNATOR.

Especially adapted to hard breeders, but indispensable to every stock man. Saves time, annoy ance, "opening" and practically insures. Cost of instrument saved every time it is used. Thoroughly tested last season in hundreds of cases. Every one satisfactory. With this Instru ment two or more mares can be impregnated with one service of horse, thereby saving his vitality. Miller and Sibley, Prospect Hill Stock Farm, Franklin, Pa., writes: May 21, 1892. Used Impregnator on two mares that we found it impossible to get in foal any other way, and both produced colts. H. S. Cuyault, V. S.—Hagarstown, Indiana, says: I impregnated a nine year old mare that had been bred every year for five years and never was with foal until now. I transferred the semen from another mare and the horse has not touched her. Price $10.00, sent by mail prepaid to any part of the United States and Canada on receipt of price. Send money by draft, money order or registered letter. The money must accompany the order to receive attention. Sent C. O. D. by express when preferred. CALIFORNIA JOCKEY CLUB RACES.

Concluding Days of a Short Meeting That Was Not Much of a Financial Success.

THIRD DAY—FRIDAY, JANUARY 14.

There was a very fair attendance to-day, and, while the fields were not large, the racing was exciting enough for anybody in three of the five events. At a meeting of the Board of Directors of the California Jockey Club last night, it was determined to wind up the meeting to-morrow (Saturday) afternoon, therefore we will see little of the fleet-footed and blue-blooded galloper until the spring Blood Horse meeting begins, which will be on the 8th of April. At that time a season of seventeen days' sport will be inaugurated, and it may be lengthened into thirty. James B. Ferguson has been engaged to wield the flag.

Miller rode two winners to-day, Howard, Jackson and C. Weber one each.

The first event on the card was a five-furlong dash, and it turned out to be a heat race. St. Croix was a heavily played favorite. Jack the Ripper, in true quarter-horse style, dashed well to the front at the fall of the flag, with Red Rose his nearest attendant. The Ripper appeared to be winning easily until half-way down the homestretch, when Queen Bee commenced gaining fast, and the pair went under the wire head-and-head in a dead heat, Red Rose third, a length away. Time, 1:01½.

In the run-off (which took place twenty minutes later) Jack the Ripper led the filly (who was a hot favorite) to the homestretch, where Howard gave her rein, and she came away from the whipped-out son of a trotter at every stride, winning by four lengths with her jockey looking back the whole of the last sixteenth of a mile. Time, 1:02½.

Quarterstaff opened favorite at 6 to 5 in the second race, but was played so hard that a cut was made to 3 to 5. Of the others Huguenot was most fancied. McGinnis' First led Elair and the favorite in the order named to the straight, where Jackson turned Quarterstaff loose, and he went away from his friends at a great rate, winning like a sure-enough crack by six good lengths, Huguenot second, half a length from McGinnis' First. Time, 1:08½.

Centella was at 1 to 5 in some hooks, not quoted at all in most of them. Opposed to her in a mile and a sixteenth dash were Minnie Elkins and Sheridan, the former being at 15 to 1, the latter at 5 to 1. Sheridan ran out in front at a killing pace to the homestretch, with Elkins second to the half. The stale Sacramento horse gave it up at the head of the homestretch, and Centella came on and won with ease by four lengths from Minnie Elkins, who beat Sheridan handily by a length. Time, 1:48½.

The fourth race, three-quarters of a mile, was one that pleased the bookmakers, for everything in it was backed well. Crawford and Ledalia were played the hardest, however, the former going to the post a slight favorite. Crawford showed in front all the way, and although C. Weber lost his whip, he rode the son of Apache well enough with hands and feet to stall off the fierce rush of Ledalia, winning an exciting contest by a good neck, Donna Lilla third, two lengths away. Time, 1:14½.

Revolver went to the post a favorite in the last race of the day, one of a mile, selling. Initiation sailed away at a great rate when the flag cleft the air, at the quarter being eight to ten lengths from the favorite. Altus took second place near the half-pole, where Initiation commenced to come back to her field. Miller nursed Revolver along until the head of the homestretch was reached, and soon after entering the straight shoved his mount to the front, and Revolver won under a pull by a length, Initiation second, as far from Altus. Mahel M. was absolutely last. Time, 1:43½.

FOURTH DAY—SATURDAY, JANUARY 14.

The California Jockey Club's meeting came to an end in a most happy manner to-day, the rain god being exceedingly kind to the management generally and the popular owner of Marigold, Matt Storn, in particular. About 3,500 spectators saw some exceedingly sensational racing, a 20 to 1 and two 10 to 1 shots upsetting the calculations of the talent. In fact, out of six races but one pronounced favorite, Altus, got home in front.

Gypsy Girl was played all over the ring in the first race, the best-liked of her eight opponents being Ida Glenn. Little Tough was played by the Idaho outfit for a slaughtering, the odds on the little bay gelding receding under the fire of coin to 10 to 1 from 20. Gypsy Girl, Mackey and Stoneman were the first three to the homestretch, but the favorite was so far ahead when the straight was struck that it looked like a dead easy win for her. Little Tough, who made a neat turn against the rails into the homestretch, sneaked up on Gypsy Girl in the last 100 yards and stole the race by a neck, the favorite tiring badly. Only a head behind Gypsy Girl came Ida Glenn. Had the favorite been kept close to the rails Little Tough could not have won, for he would have been forced to run around her to win. Time, 1:01½. The Idaho crowd made a great clean-up on Little Tough's victory, taking in the neighborhood of $8,000 out of the ring.

Another surprise came in the second race, three-quarters of a mile, when Lottie Mills sailed away in front of the Iris filly (taken back at the start) and Happy Day, the favorite, successfully stalled off the latter's rush in the final sixteenth, and won in the gamest fashion by a neck in 1:13½. The Iris filly was a length behind Happy Day. Lottie Mills showed an astounding reversal of public form, being beaten away off on Thursday after easily leading her field for about half a mile.

Now came the great four-mile contest of Milner's beautiful sorrel daughter, Marigold, against Father Time and his scythe. A purse of $5,000 was offered if the Pacific Coast record (7:25½) held by Wildidle since the fall of 1875 should be broken by the mare and $8,000 if Ten Broeck's 7:15½ was cast in the shade. Considerable money was wagered on the result, 4 to 5 being laid by the bookies that 7:25 would not be beaten, 7 to 5 that 7:21 or better would not be made and 10 to 1 that Ten Broeck's record would not be smashed into smithereens. Marigold's appearance on the track, ridden by Johnny

Weber, attired in Mr. Storn's brand-new colors, "black, yellow sleeves and cap," was the signal for a roar of male voices and not a little applause from the fair ones assembled on the balcony. She looked an ideal race mare of quality, her sorrel coat glistening in the sun that shone through the "mackerel" sky, as she went up past the grand stand to be started on her journey by Mr. Rowe. Marigold went away at a steady pace, close to the rails, and as she neared the wire for the first time Minnie Elkins, in waiting, joined her, the watches snapping at 1:50 flat as she passed where the wire should be. Elkins was kept about two lengths away, and the daughter of Katy Pease out in front kept up her regular lick, neither decreasing or increasing her stride. Less than a sixteenth from home Nellie G. joined the pair, and the watches marked 3:40, or 1:50 for the second mile. Nellie G. also kept about two lengths in the background, and the game sorrel mare was a little slower in her pace, doing the third mile in 1:52½. Here Centella, Marigold's stable companion joined her, keeping close up to her chum all the way around, and there was a material quickening of the pace. An eighth from the finish of the four miles every one possessed of a stop watch knew that, harring a fall, the gallant Marigold had broken the California record by several seconds, and cheers echoed and re-echoed from Lone Mountain until the beautiful mare passed the winning post the maker of a new record for mares at four miles and the breaker of a California record that had stood the onslaught of game and speedy horseflesh for over seventeen years. Her time was 7:20½—5½ seconds faster than Wildidle made it over the same old Bay District track in the fall of 1875, 9½ seconds faster than the beloved Thad Stevens ever ran it in his palmy days and six seconds better than Idlewild, queen of the turf and dam of Wildidle, ever did the four miles, and she held the record for mares (7:26½) for seventeen years until Ferida, in 1886, ran the first heat of a four-mile race in 7:23½. It was a truly great performance, taking into consideration the time of year and the fact that Marigold had been campaigned during the entire season of 1892. There was no deviation in the watches held by the official timers, Messrs. Orrin Hickok, W. Overton and Peter Brandow, hence there is no chance for a dispute.

Following was the time made at each quarter up to and including the first two miles: 0:28, 0:55½, 1:22½, first mile, 1:50; 2:18½, 2:46, 3:13½, two miles, 3:40; three miles, 5:32½; four miles, 7:20½; first mile, 1:50; second mile, 1:50; third mile, 1:52½; fourth and last mile, 1:48.

Following is the pedigree of the Pacific Coast record-breaker, Marigold:

This pedigree, it will be observed is full of the names of great race mares and producers, such as Katy Pease, Minnie Mansfield, Argentic, Daphne, Alice Carnel, Nina, Chloe Anderson, Rosalie Somers and Guiccioli, while the sires in the pedigree were noted both on the track and in the stud. Katy Pease, Marigold's dam, has founded a family of her own, and it bids fair to be one that will be sought after by breeders from all over the world. Judge McKinstry, Mistake, Lurline, Marigold and Centella, all racers of high class, are from Katy Pease. The first-named sired several winners, Mistake is the dam of three winners of excellent quality in Mystery, Kildare and Hermitage, Lurline is sure to throw winners, while Centella and Marigold are certain to produce colts that will be famous as race horses and producers and command high prices in the market.

Initiation opened up a big gap in the fourth race on the favorite, Revolver, but the latter caught her at the head of the hometretch, soon passed on to the front, and won by nearly a length from Initiation, Cyclone third, a length and a half behind Roots' mare. Time, 1:43.

The fifth race, live furlongs, was a gift for Dewdrop, who got the best of the flag to the extent of three or four lengths, and won by half a length from Huguenot, who would surely have been the victor had the start been anything like fair. Madaloupe was third, a couple of lengths behind Huguenot. Time, 1:02. Dewdrop was at 10 to 1 in the betting, and few played her.

Another surprise came in the sixth race, also five furlongs. McGinnis' First was a hot favorite, Flora E. and San Felipe being plugged to some extent. Belle D., a 6-to-1 shot, led up to the last sixteenth and looked an easy winner. Here Alfred B. came up with a mighty rush, just managing to win by a neck from Belle D. in 1:02, McGinnis' First third, nearly two lengths away.

The Mahogany Derby, one mile, the entries to which were ridden by colored jockeys only, occasioned no end of fun, every one of the sable-colored horse pilots coming in for applause and screams of laughter as they galloped their fiery steeds up past the flagman. Altus was considered to have "a mortal cinch" on the winner's end of the purse, being the best horse and having by odds the best rider in Chanucey Treadwell. Folly was backed some at 4 to 1. Altus led all the way, and won eased up by four lengths. Folly, interfered with at the commencement of the race, fell behind the field eight or ten lengths, but got up and commenced mowing down at the half-mile pole. She passed everything but Altus by the time the winning post was reached, beating Prince out three parts of a length. Time, 1:47.

On January 9th L. V. Harkness, of Lexington, Ky., lost by death his five-year-old chestnut mare, by Robert McGregor (2:17), dam Nancy Lee (dam of Nancy Hawks, 2:04) by Dictator. The mare was valued at $5,000, Mr. Harkness having paid $4,500 for her in New York last month.

Among all the foals dropped at Woodburn last year only one was sired by Harold, and the chances are that the old horse will not get another colt, says an exchange.

The Speed Track.

EDITOR BREEDER AND SPORTSMAN:—"Yours truly" has talked the matter of a club house, located midway on the speed track, over with some of our prominent horsemen. Of course, they say a house with a big veranda, placed midway so as to catch the trotters coming and going, would be filled every Saturday afternoon.

Underneath in ample sheds the steaming trotter would cool out while the owner or driver would rest in an easy chair surrounded by kindred spirits who, like

"The broken soldier, kindly bade to stay,
Sat by the fire and talked the night away;
Wept o'er his wounds, or tales of sorrow done,
Shouldered his crutch and showed how fields were won."

So should the patter of the flying feet recall many a name almost forgot. The knights (of the sulky) are dust, their souls are with the saints, we trust. Temple Emmett with Lady Dooley and mate would speed down the mystic track, when with memory's aid the years had fled. Alameda Maid and mate, with Mr. Louderback up would be in the foremost rank, Brown Mack and Paddy McGee would rush in eager for the lead under the careful hand of Mr. Tobin. Chief Burke, behind Silky and Rose, wrapped up in his big fur coat, would, if he once had the lead, glide as only a fast pacing team can, away from the harder-gaited trotters.

History repeats itself. But man, active man makes history. Renew the conditions, give the drivers a chance to see and be seen. It takes but a short time for road drivers to pair off and compete for the supremacy. A marked difference will keep contestants apart until they approximate in point of speed. Then they have such joy as foemen feel when they meet another worthy of their steel. Day by day the development of each horse, and horseman, too, would be watched by the student, the rig the flying horse was hitched to, the way he was shod and hooded as he attained or lost speed under the tuition of his driver.

Many a tale of old
Would then by us be told;
Many a match be made
Beneath the friendly shade.

The rested horses led from out the sheds, their mouths washed out, their faces bathed; now they jog to the far end of the now well kept, even-surfaced speed track, turn and come up the other side of the hedge, homeward bound. What if Flying Jib, Captain Griffith up, and Direct with his veteran owner with steady hand went by a club house with ample balconies, would you and I be there to see? What if Mr. Wieland's team to bicycle wagon and Belle Button and Tom Ryder to road buggy, guided and impelled onward by their owners, straightened out for a friendly brush, who would be away? Now there is no chance for the horseman to stop and see the contests of the road where his heated horse will be safe from catching cold.

I met a friend of mine, a Major in the army, and we talked as best we could on the speed track.

"Have you ever used Spelterine, Rustic," said the Major.
"No, Major; what is it made of?" I replied.
"A natural product. I found it in Wyoming on a hunting trip; slipped and fell on it. Upon my return to the post," said the Major, "my wife said, 'why, where did you get that white soap upon your clothes, my dear?' 'That is not soap,' I replied; 'that is some kind of clay.' 'Well, never mind,' the madame replied. When I washed that clay off the coat became as clean as new. I hunted the deposit up," said the Major, "organized a company to develop the plant, and now foreign governments want Spelterine, and no jockey has a right nor can he afford to be without it."

"What kind of hunting did you have in Wyoming, Major?"

"Great; great! One day I killed eleven elk and three grizzlies."

I looked upon my gentle, polished friend—a West Pointer—and thought, "No wonder he was a soldier and in the fore front of battle."

Then, remember, this was in the speed track. My eye wandered for some quiet place to rest awhile and listen to more tales of forest, flood and field, but looked in vain. I seized the tightened rein as that Nestor of the road—Chief Burke—went by, and I tried and tried again to catch the old gent, in vain, for, once in the lead, the veteran no voice will heed to pull back his flying steed. Lot Slocum voices our sentiment—there is but one thing like a horse and that is another horse. "The love of horses," said he, "will revive. San Francisco will come to her first love again."

"Slocum," I said, "I hope that will be our lot," and so say we all of us. RUSTIC.

No Need for Discouragement.

EDITOR BREEDER AND SPORTSMAN:—The outlook of the trotting horse industry is at the present time of momentous interest in these United States.

Fully one-half of the people engaged in the business think the bottom has fallen out or is going to immediately. And they are not at all backward about expressing their sage deductions to every one who will listen to them. Nearly every number of every horse paper has some article informing the public that nothing short of developed sires and dams will pay for breeding to; oftentimes we see theories that it is unsafe to breed to any but producers. I am not going into a long list of statistics to prove that these pessimistic growls and gloomy grumbles are rank nonsense, but will assert that they are, and thereby give the man who takes the gloomy side a chance to answer easy, by making a counter assertion.

But take the 2:15 list up to the end of 1891 and see what it is composed of as to sires and dams. The entire list is composed of fifty in number, and eighteen of the lot are sired by horses of standard record. Now put a pin right there and let me say you cannot depend upon records. Hambletonian 10 has about thirty sons that are entitled to distinction by reason of having sired numbers that have made standard speed. There are but four of these distinguished sons that have a standard record, while there are seven that have standard records that have not distinguished themselves by siring as many as seven with standard records, and now I will go back to that pin and say that over thirty of the fifty 2:15 and better performers have been sired by descendants of Hambletonian 10 in the male line; nine of the 2:15 performers from standard speed sires are from the Hambletonian male line, and nine of them are from sires of standard speed from all other lines. This 2:15 list shows that where the standard speed is lacking the Hambletonian line is proportionately much more potent than that of all other lines. Well, what does it all prove? Does it prove anything? To me it proves that there are many things to be taken into account beside a record of standard speed; that is, it shows there are more chances outside of the standard speed rank than there are in that rank. But it does not prove that a man should go outside of standard speed to get speed, but it does prove that you can get it outside of that rank. And some very noted exceptions of that fact are Axtell, 2:12 at three years, and Allerton, 2:09, both of them out-producing mares and by non-producing sires, and all without record of standard rank. Another point that needs no proof is that all the great broodmares, all the distinguished sires started out as non-producers. The grumbling pessimists seem to have entirely overlooked that plain fact. It is possible to breed a myriad of mares as well bred as Miss Russell and it is easy to see how to do it. The idea that there is enough thoroughbred in the trotter is pretty well exploded. And if a man has a quantity of standard mares that have come in by slim chances, let him breed them to the very best horse in the country, no matter whether he stands cheap or dear. Do not think that they are too poor to breed to a good horse. As a compromise breed them to a compact, four-mile thoroughbred and raise the fillies for broodmares, and when he breeds those fillies back to a trotter he will have something that will pull down the money, and be a joy to look at. But to come back to the industry of breeding trotters, does any one think that the union of the blood of Guy Wilkes and Nutwood, Electioneer and Director, or a mingling of all these together, will fail to produce profit in a single instance! Yes, to be sure, there will be a single weed from any kind of a union, so there will be a single success where you have not much right to look for it. The trotting horse has more earning capacity in stakes and purses that he ever had, and that earning capacity is being increased with every season. 2:30 speed for races is of the past, but, in the light of facts, the contingent that has never come into that magic circle has shown more power on the male and female line to produce the 2:15 trotter than have those who have come within that circle. When the great year book comes in for the records of 1892 this may be changed, and the advocate of the record may say that all of these great producers could have come into the list if they had had a chance. I will admit that freely and claim the very reason of their greater success was that they had the power, but did not expend it in that way. Or that they were bred to trot and their individuality would have made them trotters. Hence, their power to produce trotters.

Do not, gentle reader, think you will have the best success by breeding a 2:35 horse to a 2:40 mare, for this lesson is not to teach you that. A gentleman said in my hearing that he would not breed to a certain horse; he was a well-bred one and brought here at great expense. I asked why. He answered that he was loosely put together and foul-gaited in front. If such is really the case they are good reasons, and somebody will meet with disappointments in years to come who breed to him.

A stallion should be an even-sized horse. He can be excused for being small but hardly for being overgrown. Let no one hope to have great campaigners of 1300 lbs. To sum up this outlook of the trotting horse industry, don't go to it in a haphazard way, don't believe that the colt you have bought or raised is going to produce trotters because you want him to, don't believe he will be a great producer unless he has it in his pedigree on both sides of his lineage, and then he should be a stout-looking one all over; and narrow heads are fast falling out of date. Don't think that with your transcendent genius you can adopt some new plan and heat your neighbor, who breeds to the best stallion to be had. If you want to heat him, pay for heating him; get a better mare than he has and breed to the same horse. Lastly, the trotter is a horse to gamble on, and whenever events are so arranged that he can earn as much as the runner, then he will be as profitable to raise, and many a man will sell off in disgust, and in a few years see the hayer reaping golden harvests from what he gave up as a worthless money. The trotter is much the more useful horse after his money-winning career is ended than is the runner, and any man who thinks the man who handles the one is more honest than he who handles the other had better keep out of the business of either breed, and the sport as well. There has been a great depression in general business that has run through several years, and all that time the earning opportunity of the trotter has been on the increase. Let us be of good cheer, breed to the best, and feed and train them. PRO PUBLICO.

Santa Rosa Scintillations.

[Special Correspondence of the BREEDER AND SPORTSMAN]

SANTA ROSA, January 16.—Every now and then a Santa Rosa horseman is heard grumbling because the Agricultural Association sold the fair grounds here. They seem to think great things would have been accomplished had the track been retained by the society.

Not all the horsemen think that way, however. One of them said Saturday that it was a splendid thing for Santa Rosa when Pierce Bros. bought the track. He said that they pay out an average of over five hundred dollars per month for feed and labor, and he thinks that is worth more to the town than a lot of assessments would be, each year. One thing is certain and that is, that so long as Pierce Bros. own it, things will always be kept in apple-pie order, and the Santa Rosa Stock Farm will always be an attraction and a big drawing card for our "City of Roses."

There have been a number of important changes among horsemen here recently. W. B. Sanborn, the running horseman, has sold his headquarters for liquid refreshments to East Street Commissioner J. W. Swank and will henceforth devote all his attention to the horse business. He has sent his heroic old race horse, Inkerman, to Sacramento to be shaped up for the spring meetings and it is predicted that the noble fellow will be first in many of the hard-fought contests of 1893. His Mamie C., by Harry Peyton, is also at Sacramento. She is in foal to Three Cheers and should produce some pretty hot stuff. She has a long list of triumphs to her credit.

W. P. Fine, another Santa Rosa horseman, has sold his Anteo livery stable and will enter the race arena. He has purchased a number of very excellent horses and one of them got second place in one of the best races in San Francisco last week. He has taken his Anteo stallion, Poco Tempo, to Oakland and he may do some pretty good trotting the coming season.

Belden & Hehir have taken up their fine young stallion, Jim Corbett, and the lad will be put in training this year. Jim Corbett was sired by Fine's Poco Tempo, dam by Gen. McClellan.

The boys say that Marcà & Robinson's, sht, by Illustrious, is one of the speediest young horses in these parts. He certainly is a very promising youngster and his owners are very proud of him.

Dan Carter's Lancelot filly is being jogged by Charley Giimmel, and Charley says she is the making of something that will be very good.

Jack Leary has two colts which cause him to inflate with considerable pride. One is by a son of Nutwood and is a kind of some little fellow. The other is standard bred, but its pedigree has escaped our memory.

George E. Guerne has a lot of horses at his place on College Avenue. Among them are some very choice brood mares. He has also a number of Philosopher and Silas Skinner yearlings, some of which he is breaking.

Chas. C. Belden paid Napa horsemen a short visit last week. He took a look at Coombs Bros.' stock and reports it in good condition for the approaching sale. He inspected John Evan's string and found the members of it in good shape. He says Coombs Bros. have sent two Director colts, out of Lillie Stanley, to Salisbury's place to be put in training; one is a trotter and the other is a pacer.

John P. Overton, president of the trotting club, has a stallion by Illustrious of which he is very proud. He is but two years old, but is of good size and remarkably active.

Councilman E. E. Morrow has a fine broodmare that he thinks is hard to beat. He calls her Tin Heel, from which euphonious name it should be inferred that her owner is a hardware dealer. May her record never be a tin cup one.

Thomas Bonner has sold his stylish young roan road horse to C. A. Wright, obtaining therefor a fancy price. Mr. Wright does not desire to pose as an imitator of Budd Doble or John Splan, but he says he must have a swift horse to be up with the times.

M. J. Streining has sold the handsome pair of grays he purchased of Pierce Bros. some time ago to Sheriff Sam Allen. These mares are both by Alonzo Hayward and are out of the same General Taylor mare. With this team, Sheriff Allen can boast of driving as good a pair as any Sheriff in California.

S. H. Sheplar was in town Saturday. He says his stock is all looking well. St. Eric, by St. Just, will go into active training this year and will probably be handled by Thomas Murphy, of Petaluma. Mr. Sheplar says he won twenty dollars from a Sonoma county official some time ago on a wager concerning the respective good points of St. Eric and a young trotter owned in the northern part of the county. Decision was left to Capt. Ben E. Harris and Major T. H. Griffin, and they awarded the verdict in favor of St. Eric by a large majority. St. Eric, however, belongs to Mrs. Sheplar. Mr. Sheplar has a half dozen very good colts from him, out of broodmares brought from the blue-grass region. One animal Mr. Sheplar is very fond of is the three-year-old filly Louise Wilkes, by Guy Wilkes, a half-sister to St. Eric. Mr. Sheplar has about forty horses, all told, and it keeps him hustling to look after them. "PUBLIS."

The Huron Case Decided Against Corrigan.

NEW YORK, Jan. 11.—Judge Dugro, sitting in the special term of the Superior Court of Brooklyn, to-day affirmed the decision of the general term, dismissing the suit of Edward Corrigan, of Chicago, against the Coney Island Jockey Club for $11,000, which he alleged was due him as the amount allotted to the horses that finished second in the Futurity of 1891. Judge Dugro gave Corrigan's counsel five days in which to submit briefs, in order that the record of the case might be completed in time to be carried to the Court of Appeals for a final decision.

The action is an important one to turfmen all over the country, and many well known horsemen were present to listen to the proceedings, among the number being Green B. Morris, Eugene Leigh and President Lawrence, of the Coney Island Club. The question involved in the present litigation is whether or not Huron, Corrigan's horse, was originally sold with his engagements, including the Futurity of 1891, which was valued at $70,000.

There is also another issue in the case, and one of more importance, namely, whether the Coney Island Jockey Club can arbitrarily preclude certain horses under the rules of the club from entering the races conducted under its auspices. The case was originally brought a few days before the Futurity of 1891 was run, and Mr. Corrigan asked for an injunction to restrain the club from interfering with the running of his horse. The matter was presented to Judge McAdam, and he decided that the horse should be allowed to run in the race. Huron ran and came in second to His Highness, Yorkville Belle being third and Dagonet fourth. The stakes awarded to the second horse amounted to $11,000, but the club refused to recognize Mr. Corrigan's claim and paid the stakes to the owner of Yorkville Belle. The club appealed to the general term of the Superior Court from Corrigan's injunction, and that court decided that the club had the right to exclude Huron from the race if it saw fit.

Judge Dugro has now sustained the decision, and the verdict of the Court of Appeals is awaited with interest, as upon its decision will depend the existence of the combination of jockey clubs known as the Board of Control. If the decision of the lower courts is not sustained the New York, Coney Island, Brooklyn and Monmouth Park jockey clubs will be compelled to accept the entries of all horses whose pedigrees are recognized as being first-class by recognized racing authorities. Otherwise the Board of Control clubs will have a right to keep up the war they have been waging against the Guttenburg, Gloucester, and Western tracks. Mr. Corrigan bought Huron from General Jackson, of Tennessee. In the affidavit which went with the horse General Jackson stated that he had sold the colt with his engagements, as he had all yearlings at the sale, and that he had not declared him out of the Futurity and had not authorized anyone else to do so. The Coney Island Jockey Club contended on the other hand that Huron had been declared out of the Futurity, and that even if he had not it had a right to reject the entry, because Corrigan, Huron's then owner, had violated the rules of the club.

THE GUN.

Song of the Sea Wind.

[BY AUSTIN DOBSON.]

How it sings, sings, blowing sharply from the sea line,
 With an edge of salt that stings;
 How it sighs aloud and passes,
 As it cuts the close cliff grasses;
 How it sings again and whistles
 As it shakes the stout sea thistles—
 How it sings!

How it shrieks, shrieks, shrieks in the crannies of the headland,
 In the gashes of the creeks;
 How it shrieks once more and catches
 Up the yellow foam in patches;
 How it whirls it out and over
 To the cornfield and the clover—
 How it shrieks!

How it roars, roars, roars in the iron under-eavens,
 In the hollows of the shores;
 How it roars anew, and thunders,
 As the strong hull splits and sunders,
 And the spent ship, tempest driven,
 On the reef lies, rent and riven—
 How it roars!

How it wails, wails, wails in the tangle of the wreckage,
 In the flapping of the sails,
 How it sobs away, subsiding,
 Like a tired child after chiding;
 And across the ground swell rolling,
 You can hear the bell-buoy tolling—
 How it wails!

Boomerang and Kangaroo.

The black man watched the kangaroos intently for a moment, and he seemed to be taking a kind of measurement of their distance from the foot of the palm, says W. O. Stoddard in St. Nicholas. Then he drew back and a second black man took his turn at looking, with the bush branches for a screen, and he also drew back. He pnt down the twigs, and the two seemed to be studying. Two men who could neither count nor measure as civilized men count and measure, were in reality counting and measuring as accurately as if they had been a pair of surveyors with perfect instruments. They had dropped their spears and sticks before peeping out at the kangaroos, and now each of them stooped and picked up a queer, crooked club. All the other black men lay flat in the grass, while these two went on with their puzzling operations. Neither of them could see any part of a kangaroo through the trunk of the tree. Each stood and balanced himself, leaning forward, with his bit of curved wood held in his right hand by one end. These crooked sticks were not much over two feet long, perhaps not over two or three inches wide at the center, the widest part, and were made to taper at each end. They were curved on one face and flat on the other and sharp at the edges. You would have said great pains had been taken to shape these sticks so that it would be impossible for anybody to throw them straight or make them hit any object they were thrown at.

Each black man held his dark, heavy-looking wooden weapon with the flat side down, until he has finished his balancing and calculating, and then he suddenly drew back and hurled it from him, with a peculiar, jerking twist of his wrist. Almost at the same moment, each of them stooped and picked another and threw it, and then a third. As the third cast was made, each uttered a loud, screeching yell, the two harsh cries bursting forth at almost the same second, followed by yells from all the rest of the party as they sprang from the grass, seized their spears and sticks and bounded forward.

Ned and Hugh had noted every movement of the green mask by the palm, and the kangaroos must also have begun to suspect danger, for all of them had ceased feeding, sat upright and pricked their ears and turned their pretty heads inquiringly. The largest of them was in the very act of rising for a forward bound when something struck him upon the neck, just above the shoulder.

There had been a faint whizzing and whirring in the air. It began behind the cabbage-palm and went out sidewise and upward through the air, while something dimly visible flashed away, in a wide, sweeping curve. Up, up, up went the whiz and whirl, and then down, down, after a strange, mysterious fashion, closely accompanied by another, just like it. Then there was a thud, thud—and the great kangaroo did not make his leap. He rolled over and over in the grass, for one of those wonderful missiles had actually broken his neck. And another kangaroo had fallen also.

Hunting Zebras.

After crossing the usual heated yellow plains, looking for all the world like an expanse of overarched hayfields and dotted here and there with droves of springbok, we outspanned two and so rode back again across the hot, weary plain for camp. We had not long quitted the forest before we sighted a good troop of Burchell's zebra, feeding quietly. We spread out in line and rode up to them.

The troop, which consisted mostly of mares with a yearling foal or two, was guarded by an old stallion, who stood sentinel nearest to us with his head up. Presently, turning half way round, he gave some sort of signal and the rest of the band galloped briskly off, curveting and capering as they ran. After moving a few hundred yards the troop suddenly wheeled round in line to have a good look at us again.

These tactics of the zebras were displayed in a retreat of some miles, the old stallion always covering the rear, until the troop, outflanked by Dove, shot off to the right and my chance came. I galloped hard to intercept them, and as they stood for a minute on seeing me in the line of flight, got a steady shot or two yards. The bullet clapped as if on a barn door, and as the troop continued their flight I saw one zebra turn away alone. Presently she stood again. I was soon within six yards, and with anther bullet finished her. She proved to be a fine mare in beautiful coat, and her head and skin now make a room at home.—Longman's Magazine.

A Natural Barometer.

One of the government engineers, Major Jones, in charge of the Yellowstone Park, gives a very interesting account of a peculiar phenomena to be found there. He was shown by a rancher a barometer spring, and found it to be one of the most wonderful freaks of nature ever discovered. The Major gives this account of his trip and the spring:

"Soda butte is a mound of travertine on a small creek in the northeast portion of the park. It was formed by the deposition of sediment from a calcareous spring similar to those at Mammoth Hot Springs. The spring is now dead, but along the creek just below are several small ones highly charged with gases and salts of sulphur, soda, etc.

"One of these has developed into a peculiarity that is decidedly unique. Passing by it recently in the midst of a severe storm, I was struck with the peculiar inky blackness of the sediment upon the bottom of the spring and the short outlet which leads its waters into the creek. Just then a rancher came along, and seeing me, said:

"See my barometer? That spring is the finest barometer in the United States. When it's going to rain or raise h— with the weather that spring gives the hull snap away by turning black all over its bottom. Otherwise its bottom is all the same as the lilies of the field, mister. The gray of the mornin' and the roses and pinks of the evenin' kinder get mixed and mingled all over it, and she's a daisy then. The bottom turns whiter than a swan when it's going to snow, redder than a volcano when it's going to be hot, greener than an emerald when a tenderfoot looks in it."

"I thought he was telling me a fairy story. A month later found me again at the spring. The day was semi-clear, but fine. Ominous little clouds were gathering in the upper sky and it was getting to be something of a question what was coming. Snow in the mountains in November is something serious.

"Going to have a little change in the weather," suggested I to the rancher, who stood near me.

"Not much, partner; barometer says no."

"I went to the spring. The blackness was wholly gone, and in its place was the pearly gray of the morning, while in the outlet the gray was softly blended with delicate hues of pink and carmine. It was beautiful to the eye, but the fumes of the hydro-sulphuric acid were unbearable.

"It is a very curious fact that the sediment from this spring changes color with the changes of the weather.

"When mother earth wrinkled out the Rocky mountains there was left a very soft and tender spot in the region where the Yellowstone Park now lies. Here her surface crust of rock was softened from close contact with the heat which is supposed to hold her interior in a fluid condition, and there was a raging of volcanoes through craters and fissures many miles in length. The face of nature must have been a lurid show in those days. Great rivers of melted rock flowed down the mountain sides, spread over great areas of valley and plain, and incidentally piled up the greatest of all the wonders of the park, Shoshone mountains. This range is a mass of peaks, in width about sixty miles, in length more than 100, which are almost wholly composed of lava. It lies in apparently horizontal beds, cut into mighty cañons by the stream and peculiarly weathered into vertical cliffs which generally cap the summits of the peaks. I have measured a thickness of over 5,000 feet of lava among these lofty peaks, which reach with considerable uniformity altitudes of 10,000 to 12,000 feet above the level of the sea. The mountain walls are weathered into peculiar shapes of colossal magnitude, making the scenery novel and magnificent."

There is a class of so-called sportsmen in our Eastern States who are trying to imitate the fashions of the English nobility in the fox hunt. They let loose a captured fox and chase him across fields and pastures with horses and hounds; or if a fox cannot be found they drag a bag of aniseed over the country and chase the smell! They don't have much regard for the damage done to farmers' crops, either in England or here. In England the laws and public feeling favor the sport; here the farmer is protected by law, but he don't want the trouble of going to law with a lot of fellows with long purses. We need a wholesome public sentiment to put down this nonsense. Not long ago an unfortunate hunter in Long Island, N. Y., lost his life by trying to jump a fence having a barbed wire over the top which his horse did not see; and now the hunters are trying to prevent the use of barbed wire by farmers, so that they can ride without incurring such risks. We see no good reason for trespassing, in a free country such as we boast ours to be, upon the private rights of farmers for the sake of the brutal pleasure of running down a poor fox, or for the sake of the excitement of leaping fences and ditches on horseback at the risk of the life of both rider and horse. It is a pity these men can't find something better to do with their idle time and money.

"I well remember," said Mr. Crocker, who keeps the "Tourist's Rest," away up toward the crest of the Sierras, on the Tuolumne road to the Yosemite, "when the squirrels in these parts were so thick that it was no trouble to kill all you wanted of them with a stick. It may seem strange to you but I am relating the truth when I say that I have had the frisky little fellows run up along my arm and perch on my shoulder, evincing no element of fear whatever. This was in the early fifties, when these mountains were virgin in the sense that man had never invaded them.

"This quality of fearlessness was noticeable in all classes of wild animals and birds. It was astonishing to me and I took no little pleasure in studying the habits of them.

"I have now back of my barn a family of tame squirrels and they continue so by reason of the kind treatment which they always receive from me. You can do almost anything by kindness."

The sportsmen in attendance at Bakersfield are having a grand time this week. The quail are plentiful and several hunting parties have found time to bag geese, duck and snipe as well. This is good news for those men who could not spare the time to attend. Next to enjoying good sport afield one's self is to hear that one's friends are having a good time.

The ducks seem to have deserted their usual haunts in this immediate section, but down in the cultivated valleys where there is an abundance of green food they are said to be unusually plentiful.

The heavy snows in Oregon have been severe on the Mongolian pleasants, and in many instances the farmers have seen them feeding contentedly with the domestic fowls in the barnyard.

ROD.

The State Board of Fish Commissioners.

It is with pleasure that we note the favorable change that has been made in the Board of Fish and Game Commissioners. The new members are just such men as should be at the head of this important public interest.

Mr. William C. Murdock, a gentleman well known as a thorough sportsman, a sound financier and one of the solid business men of this city, has but recently received his appointment and entered upon the duties of his office.

Mr. Murdock is a man in whom those who know him best put implicit faith and confidence. Bringing to the office of the Board a large and varied experience in all matters pertaining to the fish interests of our State, he is fully equipped to discharge the duties devolving upon him in a manner which will best serve the whole people. With Mr. Murdock the question of piscatorial matters is not only one of interest but it has become a passion, and no stone will be left unturned to render the work under his charge most effective.

Mr. H. L. McNeil, of Los Angeles, is the other new addition to the Board. Mr. McNeil is a leading business man and capitalist of the southern metropolis of the State, and carries with him a large circle of the influential men of the State. He, too, is one of the most ardent of sportsmen, especially in the art of angling, and with this infusion of vigorous and interested blood in the Board we confidently look forward to a new impetus in the matter.

If Mr. Ramon E. Wilson could again be induced to enter the Board the trio of workers, every one able and efficient, would be complete. Mr. Wilson is entitled to all of credit and praise for the admirable work which has been accomplished in the past two years, and when it is known under what disadvantages he labored it may well be considered wonderful that he was enabled to do so much.

It is to be earnestly hoped that the bill now before the Legislature, which has been recommended by the Governor asking for an appropriation of $35,000 for the use of the Board will be passed. With such a sum success cannot fail to attend the future work of the Board in this important public measure.

John S. Benn.

Do you know Benn, the fly-tyer? The peculiar man whose identity is wound up in his one constant aim to tie the best possible fly—the most killing fly for human ingenuity to invent. He has a shop at 822 Folsom street, where you may find him almost any day busily engaged in forming from silk and feathers the flies which experience has taught him are the best for the several kinds of fish to be found in the different waters of this coast. Benn does not think of much else but the manner in which to manufacture the very best and most durable fly. He is a perfect encyclopedia on artificial flies and the different methods to be used in luring successfully the finny tribe from their homes beneath the wave. He has been a resident of the Pacific Coast for more than twenty years, and has angled in all of its waters from Oregon to Mexico. He is never so happy as when at his work or in casting some favorite fly upon some one of the more favorable streams or lakes.

Benn is an expert at fly-casting and to his credit may be placed many of the more skillful fights with the monster salmon on this coast than to any other angler. When he goes out fishing he goes to catch fish, not to idle away the time in ease and evolve fish-tales on his return. He has been unusually successful in luring the king salmon with the fly. Most anglers use salmon roe for this purpose, but Benn invariably holds to his big red fly—one of his own manufacture.

"I take no great delight," he said to us one day recently, "in fighting a large fish. It really is not sport, for there is too much labor and downright hard work in it."

"I have hooked and fought a king salmon for three-quarters of an hour at a stretch, and I assure you that when I was done with it I was completely worn out and could enjoy no more sport for the balance of the day. This fish weighed nearly forty pounds and I took it in the Eel river. I would much prefer catching nice trout weighing from one to four pounds, for that is sport."

We think the old fisherman right on this question. Whalving may pay, but it scarcely may be considered sport.

Why Ladies Admire Catfish.

A number of ladies were leaning over the railing admiring the fish exhibit at the Mechanic's Fair the other evening. They glanced at the beautiful rainbow trout and exclaimed, "Oh, my! ain't they beauties!" The gaudy colored cut-throat trout called forth all manner of exclamations of delight and wonderment. The fry of the brook trout engaged their attention. "They are such innocent appearing little beauties it almost seems a shame to catch them," said one of Eve's fair daughters, whose headgear was formed of the dismantled plumage of some sweet songsters of the wood. Just then one of the voracious little cannibals made a dart for a cousin, sister or brother finny and seizing it by the head went through the process of swallowing it to the utter demolition of the theory of the tender-hearted damsel. Nature treads on tender hearts with an iron heel. Heaven helps those who help themselves. The ladies, however, found their greatest attraction watching the homely catfish. Noticing this an ardent angler asked, with a tone of disgust in his voice "Can any one tell why the ladies should take such an interest in the catfish?" A wag standing by quickly answered "Because the catfish have whiskers!"

Illegal Fishing.

A correspondent in the Sonoma Democrat under date of December 24th gives some pointed information for the benefit of the Fish Commission as follows:

"I do not see why the authorities and citizens of Sonoma county let the wholesale slaughter and destruction of these valuable fish go on as they do. I have lived on Austin creek for sixteen years, and during the first six or eight years in the spawning season you could see them in great numbers along the creek, in the shoals, spawning. For the last eight years there has been put in and across Russian river, near its mouth, a series of gill nets, which catch the salmon as they come up to spawn by thousands and by the ton. They are shipped to San Francisco, and peddled out there by the wagon load. This is being done now. I am told that the nets at this time are set in such a way as to completely block the stream. Let this wholesale slaughter continue a few years more as it has in the past, and Russian river and its tributaries will be extinct of these fish. Two years ago I traveled for miles up and down Austin creek, and saw, I think, four fish; last year I repeated the same journey, and two fish was all I saw. In the last week I have been along Austin creek for three miles, and not a fish was to be seen, while the gill net men at the mouth of Russian river are taking them out by thousands."

If the above he found correct it would seem that the authorities could easily put a stop to this fearful destruction of the salmon in that section.

The Game Fish of America.

What is the gamest fish of America? The question is broad and no doubt that each lover of the rod and reel will find a ready answer which will of course be the embodiment of his own experience by lake and river with the finny tribes.

Following this suggestion we should say without hesitation, the black bass.

In a recent number of the Kingston (N. Y.) Leader was the following:

"Howard P. Frothingham, deputy game and fish protector for Morris and Sussex counties, has written a letter to Rev. John Baxter, of Newton, stating "that Lake Hopatcong has been stocked three times with lake trout. The last time 20,000 yearlings were put in the lake, some six years ago, and as yet no result has been found. It is my opinion that the black bass kill the trout. Black bass will kill any fish that swims in fresh water. I don't think it worth while to try to put any more lake trout in any of the lakes in the northern part of the New Jersey that are inhabited by black bass or Oswego bass, as they cannot live in the same water the bass."

"Mr. Frothingham's opinion ought to settle the matter as between a good fond fish and a cross between a shark and a carp. However, he will do all that he can to stock streams not inhabited by black bass."

Commenting upon this article Mr. Russell McCarthy, in the Washington Post, says:

"I cannot understand how any one who has ever taken and eaten the gamey, toothsome bass can intimate that he is a cross between a shark and a carp, unless he means to imply that the bass is as good a fighter as a shark and prolific a breeder as a carp."

"It is statements like in the above clipping which discourages the stocking of our land-locked waters. For Mr. Frothingham's benefit let me state that information on the subject is growing, and it is only necessary for him to refer to the work in Illinois and elsewhere, every season fish cars engaged in the distribution of the black bass in every direction, to discover how universally our greatest game fish is appreciated and sought for."

"It is artificially bred and caught now in Southern waters swarming with every known Southern fish, and if by chance he does devour the lake trout, it is only a case of the survival of the fittest. There is no more comparison between them than between a brook trout and a red herring. There is ample room for all food fishes, and work for all men interested in them. I surely wish Mr. Frothingham success with his lake trout, but when he slanders one of the gamest and most delicious of our food fishes, he combats the widely recognized opinion of our best writers and sportsmen."

A Toe For Bait.

The clever professional liar of the St. Louis Globe-Democrat is responsible for the following:

A most singular accident befell A. M. Moore on the Fourth of July at Eagle Lake, I. T. Mr. Moore, with a party of several others, went into camp at the lake on the evening of the 3d. In the morning Moore, with his fishing pole, waded out to a log on the lake, where he sat down. He was bare-footed. While moving his left foot to and fro in the water a large fish, supposed to be a black bass, made a sudden lunge and grabbed the toe in its mouth, sinking the teeth into the flesh to the bone.

Moore rolled from the log into the water, which was waist deep. He waded to the shore, the bass still clinging to the toe. In shallow water Moore gathered the fish and pried open the mouth, the fish escaping into the lake. The toe is so badly lacerated that Moore is unable to walk and the member will probably have to be amputated.

An Interesting Exhibit.

The exhibit of California fishes presented by the State Board of Fish and Game Commissioners at the Mechanic's Fair is one of the first interest and it will do much, small as it is, to educate the public in this matter. There are the beautiful rainbow trout (Salmo Iridentis) from the Klamath river; the white fish (Goregonus Albus) from Lake Tahoe; the cut-throat trout (Salmo Mykiss) from Lake Tahoe; salmon fry from the Sisson's hatchery; black bass (Gristes Nigricans) from the Russian River, and the beautiful brook trout (Salmo Fontinalis) from the Mount Shasta region.

Do not fail to take a look at them; they are beauties and it will pay you well.

A writer in the American Angler says that he knows of but three sturgeons that were hooked and played on rod and line. One was by William F. Shattuck, who killed a forty-pound fish in Petaluma creek, California, which empties into San Pablo bay; another hooked, but lost after a long fight, by Charles M. Bennett of Lake Champlain, which was estimated to weigh sixty pounds, and the third by H. R. Clark, of Jersey City, who, when fishing with the fly for black bass, hooked a sturgeon on the outside of the jaw, killing the fish, a seventy-three pounder, on a seven and a half ounce fly rod, after a fight of forty-five minutes. "Although the above instances," he concludes, "seem to be exceptional, there is no question as to the possibility of taking sturgeon if the proper method is pursued."

We dropped into 416 Market street the other day and found Mr. W. A. Allen, of the E. T. Allen Co., busily engaged in unpacking and taking note of a mammoth stock of fishing rods which that leading house has just received. It is a marvel as to what becomes of all the fishing tackle brought to this city.

Grand Angling Waters in Montana, Idaho and Washington.

The opening of the year 1893 witnesses the completion of the Pacific Extension of the Great Northern Railway, via the Marias Pass, into western Montana, Idaho and Washington; says Charles Hollock in American Angler, whereby the ardent sportsman is expeditiously transported across the most picturesque mountain region of the United States into an Arcadia, the like of which nowhere remains this side of the "Happy Hunting Grounds." It crosses no less than nine distinct mountain ranges, to wit: the main Rockies, the Mission, the Cabinet, the Selkirk, the Columbia, Colville, Olympic and Cascades. The Selkirk is a part of that grand intermarial system whose scenery has made the Canadian Pacific route so fascinating to tourists. Here in this wide region are fish of many families and forms. The streams are fed from ice cold reservoirs which never fail, and nourishment comes down continuously from the turbid landwash to make their funny denizens lithe and fat.

Superficially outlined, the Pacific Extension leaves the Great Falls branch line at Havre, Mont., near Fort Assiniboine, crosses the fine ranching and grazing country lying south of the Sweet Grass Hills, and continues up the eastern slopes of the Rockies at an average grade of eight hundred feet in twenty-two miles. The first view of the great continental range is had at Galata, 103 miles from the foot of the mountains. Eighty miles west, at Blackfoot station, a trail leads to the famous St. Mary's Lakes. Twenty miles farther on, at Midvale, and well up in the altitudes, is an undulating mountain park, with ponds and water courses filled with trout. Only two miles farther is the Two Medicine River, crossing, with a trail leading to the beautiful Two Medicine Lakes; and in the course of thirteen more miles Summit Station, 5,200 feet above the sea, is reached by the easiest grade on any transcontinental line.

Down the western slopes, on the Pacific side, through the most picturesque scenery on the route, there are mountain trout streams all the way to Belton (in Montana), a distance of forty-five miles, with five intervening stations at convenient intervals. From one of them, named Essex, a trail leads to St. Mary's Lakes. At Belton there is a practicable trail two miles long through the forest to Macdonald Lake, the counterpart of Lake Luzerne, in Switzerland. Thence it is fish and fishing water all the way to the Flathead Valley, famous for its clear, cold streams and limpid lakes. The railroad follows the Flathead River fifty miles westward from Belton, and after that the Kootenai for sixty-two miles, both grand streams for salmonids and coregoni. Both streams are navigated by steamers, Flathead Lake is one of the largest bodies of water in the Rocky Mountain System, being twenty-eight by sixteen miles in extent. At Jennings on the Kootenai, connection is made by steamboat with Fort Steele and upper river landings for a distance of 127 miles, and at Bonner's Ferry, sixty-three miles west, with lower river points and Kootenai Lake, comprising 267 miles of navigable water. Jennings is a noted game centre. Kootenai Lake itself is eighty miles long by six in width, and very deep, located between the Cabinet and Selkirk ranges, amidst the sublimest mountain scenery. Pend d'Oreille and Coeur d'Alene lakes, with their noble feeders and far-reaching tributaries, next succeed, the latter being spanned at Albani Falls by two iron bridges which are connected by a rocky islet in mid stream. The Alhani Falls and Kootenai Falls constitute two of the most striking scenic features on the Pacific slope. From Newport, close to the falls, steamboats run up to the Priest River country, and afterward along the Little Spokane River for a distance of twenty-eight miles to the city of Spokane. There is a trail fifteen miles along from Priest River to the Kootenai River. Coeur d'Alene Lake, Port Falls, Hope, Mission and Medical lakes are favorite angling resorts near Spokane which are accessible by rail or steamboat. The mouth of the Little Spokane is a favorite place for large trout, weighing three pounds sometimes, which is frequented by the members of the Spokane Rod and Gun Club, numbering eighty strong.

Spokane, Wash., is a picturesque city of thirty thousand population, located on a broad river plain flanked by commanding heights, like Washington, D. C. For beauty of site it will rank with any other on the continent. To the east and southeast are the Coeur d'Alene and Pend d'Oreille or Cabinet mountains, with Carleton, the highest peak, rising eight thousand feet, and crested with snow nearly all the year. To the north the Colville and Columbia ranges mingle with the blue of the sky. One hundred and sixteen to twenty miles west of Spokane come the great Columbia and Okanagan rivers, the latter a mighty fluvial system in itself, extending far north into British Columbia. Lake Chelan, a magnificent body of crooked water, seventy miles long by three miles wide, is an offset or feeder of the Columbia river, lying due west of it, and is much resorted to by excursion parties of ladies and gentlemen from Spokane and tourists in general. The lower part of the lake is margined by undulating hunch grass hills and agricultural lands, but as you ascend the country becomes more rugged, and at the head we plunge abruptly into the Cascade range. Granite mountains rise from the shores to a height of five to eight thousand feet, whose peaks are covered with perpetual snow. There are three good hotels and several thriving towns at the foot of the lake, and steamers run regularly from the great Northern Railway crossing at Wenatche, three miles up the Columbia river, to Chelan Falls at the outlet of Lake Chelan, whence other connecting steamers run to all lake points. The falls are very fine. The river drops three hundred feet in three miles, and wealthy corporations are arranging to utilize the unlimited water power. About two miles below the lake the rapids press through a deep gorge with precipitous walls, where they surge and foam with all the energy of Niagara. Four kinds of trout are found in the lake, namely, the jack salmon, with white meat, the red-meated land-locked salmon, the cut-throat trout and the red-spotted mahout with yellow fins.

One hundred and fifty miles west of the Cascade comes the Puget Sound country, more beautiful than the Adriatic or Naples Bay, where the Great Northern has lines in operation from Seattle to South Westminister, B. C., covering forty-one stations, including Edmunds, Everett, Blaine, Marysville, Fairhaven and New Whatcom, from any one of which superlative fishing grounds may be reached.

From this superficial sketch the reader may gather some idea of the extent and quality of the angling on the Pacific side of America. Of all that have been mentioned Lake Macdonald is the superior gem. With every scenic feature that makes the Alpine lakes attractive, with a far greater variety of game and fish, and immunity from the petty exactions of fees and tolls which make traveling in Switzerland vexatious, it is destined to become the leading resort in America as soon as it becomes widely known. Already its annual visitors are counted by scores. Its accommodations are more ample and comfortable than the primitive hostleries at Saranac and St. Regis, in the Adirondacks, were, and the promise of a more brilliant history than theirs is before us. There are two rival camps at the outlet of the lake, operated by Chas. Horne and Frank Geduhn, respectively, and a camp at the upper end owned by the latter. The cuisine is excellent and varied; there are plenty of sailing skiffs, canoes and rowboats, and a steam launch is promised for next season. Fishing is best from June 15th to the end of August. There are few mosquitos after the opening floods run out. There are three large feeders at the head of the lake which swarm with mountain trout, and so does the outlet. Large trout can be caught with bait, fly or troll, along the edges of the submerged ledges which circumscribe the shore line; but farther out the depth is immeasurable. Partial tests have discovered twelve hundred feet. In October there is good peering on the gravelly shoals at the main outlet, where the land-locked salmon resort in pursuit of countless hosts of whitefish (C. quadrilateralis), which gather there to spawn. These fish behave here just as they do at Sebago and Memphremagog, and other lakes in the North and East wherever they are found, only the smelts and caplin of the latter localities are replaced by the whitefish here. One night we speared by torch-light six salmon and 108 whitefish, all in supreme order, but the latter had decidedly the better flavor. At the same time we captured a beautiful black sucker fifteen inches in length, and some specimen of "red ribbon sucker," both of which are said to grow to three feet in length. The latter is so called from a red stripe an inch and a half wide which runs along the lateral line from the gills to the tail. The back, dorsal fin and tail of the others were dense black; the sides were mottled black and golden yellow, with iridescent reflections; pectoral, ventral and anal fins yellow. Scales round, one-eighth inch diameter. Eye black, with yellow iris. Opercle extends one inch back of the eye. This may be a new species (?).

During my week's visit I caught one large specimen of cut-throat trout on a Pfeuger spoon by trolling along the eastern shore. It weighed a pound and was in fine condition, containing immature spawn. It was the only result of persistent tests with fly, bait and spoon, all over the lake and at the outlet. I hope to be able to try it again at a more auspicious season. Yet I doubt if a more delightful period of the year than September and early October could be selected for an outing, especially by those in quest of game, of which there is abundance and great variety in the vicinity of Lake Macdonald. The average temperature for October during a period of twelve years has been about fifty-two degrees; the sun is warm and the air perfectly calm for days together. In such an Arcadia the lover of Nature delights to dwell. It is on the up grade heavenward.

Notes on Florida Sharks and Sawfish.

The remarks on sharks and sawfish, by Mr. Harris, in the October number of The Angler, have suggested the offering of a few observations made by me while on the east coast of Florida, says Dr. Morris Gibbs. Many sawfish were taken in nets on Indian River. The nets were set in small tributary bayous for mullet, sea trout, sheeps-head and other food fishes, and the sawfish would become entangled, and in their efforts to escape would get badly wrapped up, after frightfully lacerating the net. Not rarely the condition of the net gave evidence that a monster of some kind had gone through it, the meshes not being strong enough to hold the fish.

The largest sawfish that I saw taken was slightly under five feet in total length, while the majority were between three and four feet long. At Oak Lodge, a wild, interesting place near Micco, Brevard County, the net was set twice a week for fish for the table. I remember of but one instance where the haul did not embrace a sawfish, and once we secured five. The general number caught at a haul was two. The net was in the water about four hours generally, and during darkness. If the net was allowed to remain out all night it would be about torn to pieces, and as it was, it took a man over half the next day patching up the damage done by the saws and sharks. When the net was hauled, the work of taking out the captives was in order, and the task not infrequently occupied over an hour. The catch nearly always consisted of mullet principally, and also sea cats, channel bass, sea trout, crevalle and sheepshead. The best varieties were reserved for the table, while the rest, along with the sharks and saws, were thrown on the compost heap for fertilizer. Some hauls yielded several hundred pounds, and again very poor returns, the catch being mainly cattiees and sharks. These fish were all caught a few rods from our stopping place and very near the wharf, and in three or four feet of water.

When liberating the fish from the meshes of the net, the saws were always cut from the snouts, and this can be very readily done in the case of fishes five feet long, as the tissue at the base of the saw is extremely soft and limber, and of a cartilaginous substance. The saws were slightly under one-fourth the total length of the fish. The small sawfish were rarely taken, and I do not remember of one captured under twenty inches, the saw blade, if we can so term the ornament or nose instrument, rarely being less than five inches long in those captured. I saw many large saw blades for sale which were three and a half feet in length, and it was an easy matter to pick up three-footers for a dollar apiece. One old native made it a practice to go aboard the steamers passing St. Lucie, with a varied assortment for sale, ranging in price from a quarter to two dollars.

I know nothing of the breeding habits of this species, and in doubting an assertion made, to the effect that twelve young sawfish, each twenty-seven inches long, were found in the mouth of one old one, I may appear ignorant. But it does not appear consistent, when we know the size of a two-foot sawfish, to think that one female could hold twelve of them in her mouth at once. I will venture one point in this connection, that the small fish never turned about in their mother's maw, but most assuredly came out of the mouth tail first if they sought shelter head first. It is reasonable, however, to think that smaller fish are thus protected.

An examination of the saw blade reveals some points of interest. There is a central straited division of firmer tissue, which is evidently the main support and strength of the weapon. On each side of this is a straight tube running enlarged cavities in the fore part of head to very near the tip. After the saw blade is cut off these tubes may be readily traced by aid of a broom splint or piece of wire. On each side of these tubes is a tissue constituting the margins or edges of the blade, which at an early stage is soft, but which hardens as the creature increases in size. On these margins grow the teeth, so called, but which partake more of the nature of bone, as they can be quite easily cut with a sharp knife. These teeth, which average about one-half inch in visible length, in a saw blade one foot long, are generally fifty in number or rather more. An examination of a large series has rather convinced me that Nature has evidently intended that the teeth should be in pairs, that is opposite. This is, however, not the usual outcome, for of those examined the majority of saw blades contain odd numbers of teeth. In three cases before me at the present writing, one blade of a foot in length holds forty-nine teeth or spikes, twenty-five on the right side and twenty-four on the left. Two hold fifty-one teeth each, divided twenty-six on the right and twenty-five on the left. I have counted the teeth in many specimens; I have found a range of from forty-seven to fifty-four.

These teeth, perfect and even in the young specimen, become broken and disordered as the creature grows, and it is a rarity to secure a perfect saw from an adult specimen. If a tooth is drawn out of a young specimen, I think it not unlikely that another takes its place, and I have heard that the teeth are periodically shed. In one saw that I examined there is evidence that this is the case. An abnormal, perhaps adventitious tooth, has forced its way out on the anterior or lower surface near the root of a firm tooth, which still firmly maintains its position. This somewhat corresponds to the occasional inactness of dentition in our own second teeth when hampered by the milk teeth, so called.

When the sawfish is at rest it remains at the bottom, and I never remember seeing one at the surface; nevertheless it frequently gets into shallow water, especially into small bays, and it seems to secure its food there as well as in deeper water. Its method of using its saw is by striking sideways, and from the movements which I have seen them make when partially confined in the net, I am satisfied that they are capable of fearful execution.

The shovel-nose shark is also a great nuisance to the owners of gill nets, and undoubtedly does as much damage as the sawfish. The largest one which I saw taken on the Indian River at any distance from an inlet was nearly five feet long, while the majority were rather over three feet, and many only two and two and a half long. The teeth, which are sufficiently powerful to cut a line in two or a gill net to pieces, are never of a size to take off a man's limb, and since my observations I have less respect for a shark's prowess as a man-eater. From all I could learn from reliable authority, there has never been an instance of a shark's killing a man on the Florida coast, and certainly not a case in which the shovel-nose officiated as a party of the first part. On the Halifax River I saw one nearly six feet long, which was caught on a line. I have seen a number drawn from the water, and can assure the readers that the sport is comparatively nothing after the first experience. There is little game or strategy about them, and they usually tire quick and come to haul as a simple haul away. Provided a line is strong and the lower or hook end fortified with a wire, or better still, with a light chain for three feet or so, Mr. Shark is sure to be overhauled, as he always takes the hook greedily when on the bite.

These species is also known as the sand shark, and scientifically as Carcharias americanus (Mitch.), J. & G. It is the common species about the Florida coast. One commonly observed feature about these species is its forced adoption of that stick-tight parasite, the remora or pilot fish, Echeneis remora, L., which attaches itself by a peculiar sucker arrangement on the back of its head, to the shark's lower jaw, as a rule. The sharks selected were usually the larger ones, and I have never saw a remora attached to an individual under four feet in length. These stick-tights are only found, so far as I have observed, attached to the lower jaw, and to that portion known as the jaw, but I am informed that other quarters are occupied, and that at times as many as four remoras are found on one shark. These creatures are so persistent that, when a shark is pulled in, they remain attached even after dry land is reached.

I did not meet with the hammer-head shark, but found its near relative, the bonnet-head, on the east coast. This species, also called shovel-head, is well described, and can be readily identified by its generic name of remora, meaning kidney head.

Way Down in Tennessee.

The Cumberland Fair and Racing Association is out early with its programme this year, and for the size of the stakes for trotters and pacers for this, their fall meeting, there ought to be many entries from this Coast. All the stakes will be two in three except the yearling trot which will be a mile dash. The attention of our readers is called to the advertisement. The track is one of the fastest and best constructed in America; more world's records have been made on it than on any race track in the world, and at this meeting there will be offered in stakes, purses and specials over $75,000. California horsemen intending to go East should see to it that this famous association is not omitted when they are making entries. Salisbury would not miss going to Nashville for anything, and he knows where the most money is made on the circuits in the East.

The great race mare, Lena Miller, 2:26½, by the mighty Onward, 2:25½, sire of Nelly Mason, 2:14, and sixty-three others in the list, in foal to Pilot Medium, sire of the renowned Jack 2:11½, and thirty-eight to beat 2:30, is one of the brilliant gems consigned to F. J. Berry & Co.'s January 30th to February 3rd, Chicago sale. A race mare by the greatest living sire of his age, in foal to the leading thirteen-year-old speed progenitor, and out of Long Lane, in the great broodmare list, is a prize worthy to grace any stock farm in America. Write for catalogue.

A striking exemplification of J. C. Hamlin's theory that a speedy performer, continually campaigned, cannot be valuable in the stud, is that of Maud S, 2:08½, the late queen of the turf. Maud has been nearly a score of years and in her youth she was heavily campaigned. Attempts to breed her have proved futile.

Who wants a handsome four-year-old Antevolo stallion, dam by David Hill Jr.; second dam by Black Hawk; third dam by B. Kingham. The price is only $500, and a better looking one for the price cannot be purchased to-day in California. Advertisement.

THE KENNEL.

Dog owners are requested to send for publication the earliest possible notices of whelps, sales, names claimed, presentations and deaths, in their kennels, in all instances writing plainly names of sire and dam and of grandparents, colors, dates and breed.

FIXTURES. BENCH SHOWS.

Westminster Kennel Club's seventeenth annual bench show, New York, February 21, 22, 23 and 24. James Mortimer, Superintendent, Chesapeake Bay Dog Club's bench show, Baltimore, Md., February 28, March 1, 2 and 3.

New England Kennel Club's bench show, Boston, April 4, 5, 6 and 7. J. W. Newman, Secretary.

Pacific Kennel Club's bench show, San Francisco, May 3, 4, 5 and 6. Horace W. Orear, Secretary.

World's Columbian Exposition bench show, Chicago, June 13, 14, 15, 16 and 17. Entries close May 20. Address W. I. Buchanan, Chief Department of Agriculture, Chicago.

Hamilton Kennel Club's second annual bench show, Hamilton, Can., September 7, 8, 9 and 10. A. D. Stewart, Secretary.

FIELD TRIALS.

Southern Field Trial Club's fifth annual trials, New Albany, Miss., February 6. T. M. Brumby, Secretary.

Northwestern Field Trial Club's second annual trials, Morris, Manitoba, September 4. Tnos. Johnson, Secretary.

The Week's Sport at Bakersfield.

The tenth annual meeting of the Pacific Coast Field Trials Club commenced at Bakersfield at various times and from divers places until Monday morning last when the special car arrived from San Francisco bringing a large number of sportsmen and the officers of the club.

Monday opened with dark lowering clouds hanging over the world-famed valley of the San Joaquin, which at intervals of a few moments emitted showers which were sufficient to dampen the streets and roadways, but not the ardor of the sportsmen—they were wet enough to be sure but their clothes were dry! The trainers who have had dogs under schooling for this event seem to have their dogs, without exception, in splendid condition, and of the nearly fifty dogs which will be run not one will be placed but must earn his laurels. That good work will be done, there can be no doubt. Every feature of the trials has been well arranged and but little is left to find fault with nothing, perhaps, unless it should be the delay in starting the trials. Colonel Morrison, of "The Southern" deserves the continued thanks and appreciation of the sportsman as a whole for the hospitality so freely accorded them. The citizens of Bakersfield have to a man also done everything it was possible to do under the circumstances to render the event a success. Los Angeles sportsmen attended the trials and as the contingent from the land of fruits and flowers they made a happy impression. The club met on Monday morning and held the draw for the Derby which was as follows: Howard Black's Sporty Boy and H. T. Payne's Countess Noble and James E. Watson's Doc P.; W. W. Foot's Tramp and Henry Huber's Carmel; H. E. Tonner's Brown Betty and W. H. McKittrick's Javelin; J. M. Bassford's Tommy Ticker and James E. Watson's Jim P.; James E. Watson's George P. and C. A. Haight's Honest John; L. Thibault's Booth P. and William Schriber's E. G. Schmedell's Topaderos and Frank Lane's Van; Wakeman and Handley's Merchant of Venice and Cal. Kennel's Mercury.

The trials have been an undoubted success. The attendance has been good and the weather all that could be wished for. Some delay was caused on account of scarcity of birds.

Abolition of Puppy Classes.

At present there is an animated discussion going on in the English kennel press as to the advisability of having classes for puppies at bench shows, says Sports and Amusements. Mr. L. P. C. Astley, a noted breeder of fox terriers, and a good all-round judge, in a three column article in our English contemporary takes up the cudgels in favor of the continuation of puppy classes. He says that the very evil they are charged with, that of being the medium through which distemper is kept alive, is in itself a benefit to dog shows and dog owners; he claims that if all the good pups that are born were to grow up to be good dogs, the possessor of a good dog would be no distinction, and good dogs would become so cheap and common that dog shows, and dog owners would in a measure be ruined. He claims that the same thing would happen if horse races were only for $50 stakes run for by $50 horses. We believe there is a great deal of good sense in the above. A diamond is valued because of its rarity, a Sir Bedivere brings $7,500, because there is only one Sir Bedivere. Another point taken by him and with which we agree is, as a general rule every dog visiting a dog show has distemper once in his life. And if kept away from shows until two years of age, say, it is just as likely to catch the disease then as it would if exhibited at two months.

In our experience we have known of numerous cases where dogs were not exhibited until they were in their second year, and went to the shows good, strong, healthy dogs, caught distemper and died, the same as the youngest puppy. We could mention half a dozen cases or more of this kind that have come under our own personal observation within the past year. Several from the last Chicago dog show. If a dog is to be exhibited at all it is as well to let him run his chances. When a puppy has to wait until he is a year old or so and then expose him to the disease with the result that if he is a good one you regret him much more than if he died a pup, besides the loss of the extra cost of keeping him until he is fifteen or twenty months of age instead of six or seven months. The present rule of the American Kennel Club prohibiting the exhibition of puppies under six months old is a good and wise one, and is going far enough as a prohibitory measure. At six months old if a dog catches distemper he has every bit as good a chance of living through it as he would have if he were three years of age.

A case in point in the last Chicago show was two puppies entered in a certain class. One was just over the limit of six months. The other was one year to a day. The older one was to all appearance a full grown dog, strong and healthy. The other a half-grown pup. Both caught distemper. The larger and older one died inside of two days after the show. The younger pulled through and is to-day a strong, active, healthy dog, secure in the future from all attacks of distemper, as a dog rarely, if ever, catches the disease twice, although we have pulled a bitch twice through a distemper attack. The last time she got it when brought in contact with the disease while nursing a litter of puppies, all of which died from it. Various attempts have been made to rid the kennel of the scourge, but so far ineffectually. Inoculation with attenuated virus, as in the Pasteur treatment of rabies, has been tried. We have yet to hear of a certain specific, although science and the attention dogs are receiving from scientific men today, may in the near future solve the problem, and even then whether it will be a benefit or a loss to doggy interests, according to Mr. Astley, is a question. He has suffered as much as anyone from the ravages of the disease. His excellent young fox-terrier Dudley Ravager, whose death by distemper caught in a dog show is proof in point, yet he says he is willing to take his chances, as are 75 per cent of the other English breeders, who are opposed to the abolition of puppy classes.

Death of Mollie Bawn.

The lovers of Irish setters will learn with regret that the celebrated bench show winner, Mollie Bawn, died of old age at the Glenmore Kennels, Coffeyville, Kansas, January 9, 1893. It is also to be regretted that she left none of her descendants to take her place at the kennels. Mr. Bishop, the owner, writes that he has also lost two very promising young dogs out of the phenomenal field trial winner Coleraine, a brother to Finglass, winner of Irish and Absolute All-Age Stake of the American Field Trials at Columbus, Indiana. It is to be bopped the bad luck that seems to have thrown its shadow over this kennel will soon pass away. The imported English Field Trial winner, Elphin II., also died at his place recently.

La Paloma Stock Farm.

F. G. Wickersham, owner of La Paloma Vineyard and Stock Farm, Fresno, has a collection of broodmares and fillies that are gilt edged. He has a sister to Beaury Mc, 2:14½; he bred her to Junio, 2:22, and has a filly that ought to be fast. He has two mares by Dawn, 2:18½, in foal to Junio, 2:22. One of these mares is out of an Alexander mare, and the other is out of a mare by Whippleton. They are fine-looking and their produce ought to pay for training. Mr. Wickersham purchased a mare from the Maltese Villa sale some years ago that will, through her produce, become famous. She was by Nordale (son of Norfolk and Blue Dale, by Owen Dale), out of the Selby mare (dam of Maude, 2:20), by Hamilton Chief. She was called Baldy and was a very fast trotter. She was bred to El Capitan, 2:26 (a son of Nutwood, 2:18½), and Apex, 2:26, and the produce, two fillies, were bred to Junio, 2:22, last year.

There are two sisters to Ashton, 2:24½, here, besides the dam of this game son of El Capitan. They are in foal to Junio. We understand that Junio's progeny resemble him in every way, being very uniform in conformation, solid in color and pure-gaited trotters. Mr. Wickersham has great faith in the horse, and the youngsters by this stallion on his farm are as fine looking and promising as any in the State.

Palo Alto Broodmares.

The catalogues for this great sale are issued and horsemen who are desirous of securing well-bred mares, in foal to the best sons of Electioneer, will be anxiously waiting for January 27th, that they can attend this sale. Daughters of Mohawk Chief (the great broodmare sire), Alfred, 2:25; Messenger Duroc 106; Piedmont, 2:17½; Kentucky Prince 2470; Norway 5325; Del Sur, 2:24; Arthurton 365; Will Crocker 5332; Don Victor; Falls, 2:23; General Benton; Carr's Mambrino; Hambletonian 725; Eros, 2:29½; Electioneer and others will be sold. Besides these there are two grand-looking broodmares, the property of W. Field Smith, of Sacramento, to be sold. One is Belle Blanche, by The Moor, dam Belle View Maid, by Peck's Idol; second dam by Pilot Jr., third dam that grand old broodmare Kate Taber, by Mambrino Messenger. She is in foal to Kehir, 2:28½ (at 2 years) son of Alcazar. The other mare is called Remora. She is by the mighty Guy Wilkes, out of Belle Blanche and is safe in foal also to Kehir, 2:28½.

Steiner, 2:29 1-2.

The fine looking stallion Steiner 14,341, record 2:29½, will make the season of 1893 at the Hobart Stock Farm. He is one of the finest-looking, best-muscled, pure-gaited and most sensible horses in California. He is royally bred, being by Steinway, 2:25½ (sire of W. Wood, 2:07, Cricket, 2:10, etc), out of Katy G. (dam of Chas. Derby, 2:20), by Electioneer (sire of 132 in the list); second dam Fanny Malone, by Niagara (grandam of Maud C, 2:19); third dam Fanny Wickham (a famous twenty-mile trotter), etc. Steiner has never been bred to many mares, yet his progeny are all fine-looking, strong, well-muscled trotters. His services have been placed at the low sum of $75, and owners of broodmares should look at him before booking their mares. Hobart Stock Farm is only twenty-one miles from this city, being in the town of San Mateo.

Count Anteo 14,692.

Anteo's service fee for 1893 has been placed at $1,000. He has no handsomer son than the one named above, Count Anteo, and if this young stallion does not prove a fast and game trotter as well as a progenitor of speed we will be greatly disappointed. Count Anteo is out of one of the greatest broodmares that ever brought California into prominence as a horse-breeding State, Countess, dam of the Dandy of the Home-stretch Dawn 2:18½, sire of five in the list; Strathway, 2:19; Morna, trial 2:28; Young Countess, dam of Duchess, 2:18½; she was by that great California sire, Whipple's Hambletonian 725. Count Anteo will be given an opportunity to get a low record this fall; he has shown his ability to go a mile in 2:25 in the past. See his advertisement in this issue.

A young world-beater will be sold in F. J. Berry & Co.'s Chicago sale, January 30th to February 4th, in Chief Thorne (2) 2:20, by Hawthorne, greatest producing son of Nutwood, 2:18½, out of Daisy 2:33, dam of Mount Vernon, 2:18.

Among the royal prizes to be sold in F. J. Berry & Co.'s grand breeders' sale January 30th to February 4th, will be found the great Ameer, chestnut filly by Judge Salisbury, out of Lad Willis, the dam of Red Lassie (3), 2:24, and Hixie McGregor, 2:28, by Squire Talnage, a 2:20 sire. Catalogues mailed on application.

E. STANLEY, the youth who manipulated aged pool tickets on some lady racing enthusiasts at Bay District track last Saturday, also travels under the names Miller and Smith, and is no relation of George Miller, the jockey.

The Great Sidney Sale.

"The greatest sire that ever left California" will be the words used when Sidney is shipped on the cars for Cleveland, there to be sold to the highest bidder. Wm. B. Fasig offers a pneumatic-tire sulky to the one guessing nearest the price he will bring at the sale. The second prize will be a beautiful driving whip, this will be for the second nearest guess. It will make very little difference to us who gets these valuable prizes, it is sufficient for us to know that whoever gets Sidney will get one of the greatest sires of early and extreme speed that ever was foaled. Bred to mares of any breed the produce will show wonderful speed, and if Mr. Valensin had a stock farm three years ago such as he has now, stocked with such grand broodmares, there is no question that the list of fast and game trotters and pacers to Sidney's credit would astonish the breeders in all parts of the United States. Sidney is a young horse and strongly constituted; he is sensible and all of his progeny inherits these qualities. As a foal-getter he stands at the head of all California sires. He is all that has ever been claimed for him by his proud owner, who died in the belief that there never was another horse like him; and this belief was founded upon the strongest of facts. In the interest of the horse, Millard Sanders will train all the youngsters by him on the farm and thus the horses' value will be enhanced next year. Sidney will have a number of grandsons that, like To Order, will prove sensational. He cannot help it for all of his sons are siring speedy youngsters that are speedier than any youngsters foaled. It is a curious fact but it is a true one.

In the same sale the great horse Memo that trotted a trial mile of 2:20 will be sold. Memo's few colts and fillies are held in high esteem by all who own them. They are pure-gaited trotters, showing plenty of quality, and many will enter the charmed circle this year. Grace, 2:29 1/2, one of the hand-somest Sidneys on the coast, will also be sold. She has shown her ability to get a mark of 2:20.

Besides these, there are seven of the fastest Sidney youngsters ever driven. They had shown such phenomenal speed that Mr. Valensin, and everyone who had seen them work previous to their departure East, were confident that all the yearling and two-year-old race records were at their mercy. There is another peculiar thing in regard to all of Sidney's yearlings and two-year-olds on the Valensin Farm—they are trotters. These seven are natural trotters. Fausta is as pure-gaited as any of them, and would get a very low mark at that gait.

Death of "Uncle" John Williams.

John Williams, the oldest professional driver of trotting horses on the Pacific Coast, was found dead in his bed at 5 o'clock last Thursday morning in his room at Wright's Hotel, Oakland Trotting Park. Mr. Williams was seventy-three years of age, and his death is principally due to asthma, from which he has suffered severely since about the 10th of last November. Deceased, however, was around in the hotel the night previous to his death, which came in the nature of a surprise to those who knew the extremely well-preserved old reinsman. Mr. Williams was not only the oldest driver on the Pacific Coast, but perhaps the oldest active driver in the United States. He came here first from Indiana, although a native of Springfield, Ky., and drove in most of her races the famous Belle of Wahash, dam of The Moor, grandire of Stamboul, 2:07 1/2. Last season the old gentleman, generally known as "Uncle" John Williams, handled with considerable success the extensive string of D. J. McCarty, driving Maggie, Jessie, Princess Alice (2:16) and many others to the front and to their records. As a reinsman he had few superiors anywhere, and his tall form will be sadly missed on the big California circuit this season. Ben Wright made all the arrangements for the funeral, which took place Friday.

The Bilz Cart.

One of the most attractive displays at the Mechanics' Pavilion is that of Mr. J. A. Bilz, of Pleasanton. There are two speed carts, one combination cart with steel spreader attached, one pneumatic sulky and some single and double orchard plows. The great knights of the sulky, Messrs. McDowell and Starr pronounce the pneumatic sulky and speed carts manufactured by Mr. Bilz to be unsurpassed by any in the United States and they have seen the very best manufactured in the East. Monroe Salisbury, Jos. Cairn Simpson and others who have seen and used the pneumatic sulky and carts are loud in their praise of them. Mr. Bilz claims that his hicycle sulky is superior to all others from the fact that there are no braces attached from axle to shafts and therefore the wheels are never drawn at any angle but always remain in a straight line. They have received the highest endorsement of all who know the value of sulky. His speeding carts are in universal use, and no owner of promising horses should be without one. Mr. Bilz's beautiful work is spoken of highly by all who see these specimens at the fair. Everyone who goes there should inspect these vehicles.

The Hobart Farm.

When the trotting stock left this beautifully-located stock farm, consisting of 640 acres, near San Mateo, many people believed that it would also be sold, but it seems that the sale will not take place for a year, for K. O'Grady, the well-known horseman, has leased it and is now prepared to take stock for pasturage, or to train trotters for either the road or track. The climate is lovely, the buildings, barns and paddocks as fine as any in the State. A splendidly-constructed race track, ready to be worked upon, is there, besides many fields of luxuriant grain, grasses and alfalfa and plenty of water in all of them. Its proximity to this city, and the facilities for reaching it make it one of the most desirable places for which it was intended. Mr. O'Grady's reputation as a reliable, conscientious man, capable of taking the best of care of horses is well known, while as a trainer and conditioner his reputation is one that he may well be proud of, and we take pleasure in calling the attention of horse owners to his venture; and if they wish to have their horses fed and cared for as well as those at Palo Alto at a very reasonable price we advise them to correspond with him.

MR. CHARLES REED telegraphs that the first foal of the season was dropped at the Fairview Stud on Friday, Jan. 6. This was a filly by imp. Cheviot, dam Empress, by imp. Lexington.

Waldstein, the Wonderful.

The attention of our readers is called to the advertisement of that exceedingly well-bred stallion Waldstein, 2:22 1/2. It is a very complete and comprehensive one, but still it falls far below describing the grand looking stallion. As he is bred, Waldstein has a natural right to become a sire of fast, game, level-headed, well-shaped trotters. His sire is one of the greatest horses ever foaled and his blood will be esteemed as highly ten years from now as that of his sire Dictator. Waldstein's dam died when only four years old; she was very prouising as a trotter, being a sister to the premier stallion at Rancho del Paso, Albert W., 2:20; that cross ought to be as pure as red gold. There are few sires standing for public service in the United States that have three producing dams and two of them famous broodmares. The great Director-Electioneer cross will be valuable for owners of broodmares to remember, and Waldstein's fee is lower than that of any stallion representing such great bloodlines standing for public service today.

Buffalo Driving Park.

On August 1, 1893 the gates of this famous park will be thrown open for the reception of the thousands who will come from all parts of the United States to witness the two week-racing there. Over $75,000 will be given in stakes, purse and special. The advertisement in this issue should receive the attention of all horsemen; and as many are going East with their strings of trotters and pacers, it is to their interest to make entries immediately, for they close February 1st. The advertised colt stakes are for either sex, fillies, geldings, mares or stallions. Buffalo is, and always has been, a great racing center, and with its grand race track, commodious stalls and accommodations and the large sums of money offered it will be more attractive this year than ever. Horsemen, do not neglect Buffalo when making out your programme.

At a meeting of the Blood Horse directors last Monday a resolution was carried to the effect that any bookmaker making a book on the Oakland meeting now in progress would be barred from doing business at the spring meeting of the Blood Horse Association. Eight pencillers had sent their horses over and intended to go on Tuesday, but the edict of the P. C. B. H. A. caused them to change their plans. The resolution caused no end of discussion among horsemen, and the opinion expressed by nearly every one was that the association went altogether too far and that it was intended to ruin Henry Schwartz's meeting. Col. Thornton, President of the Blood Horse Association, said: "The resolution was passed at our meeting this afternoon," "because it seemed to be the desire of a majority of those present to do what they could to discourage such methods as I am informed are practiced on the Oakland track. Our aim is to elevate this sport, and this cannot be accomplished until racing is properly conducted. We are responsible for our bookmakers, and we do not care to have them mixed up in the transactions over at Oakland. To them we say, if you wish to make books on our track you must keep yourselves above suspicion, and to do this you must have anything to do with the Oakland meeting." Mr. Williams stated that in his opinion the horses needed rest, and that it was wrong to run horses over such a hard track as the one at Oakland.

COL. M. LEWIS CLARK's last edict before leaving the judge's stand at Roby was characteristic. It consisted of re-suscitating the suspension of Elmore Slaughter, the jockey. The reason assigned by Col. Clark was that he reinstated Slaughter on condition that he was to ride at Roby but two weeks, and only on such horses as the judges gave him permission. The boy, however, went over to Hawthorne, where the trouble. Mr. J. S. Farley is Roby's new secretary.

In F. J. Berry & Co.'s great Chicago sale, January 30th to July 4th, is that brilliant young stallion Alceve 7:04, s y Alcantara, 2:23, out of Lady Herr, by Mambrino Patchen 58; grandam by American Clay 34. Here you have the double Mambrino cross though Alma Mater and Lady Herr, combined with that propitious George Wilkes racing blood though Alcantar, one of his greatest speed-producing sons. Catalogues sent on application.

DUNTON'S SPIRIT OF THE TURF now published by F. J. Berry, of Chicago, is one of the neatest and most reliable exchanges that comes to our desk. It has greatly improved in its topographical appearance, while the information found in its columns shows that a "good man is at the helm" and that it will be easy sailing for such a craft to find a harbor in the estimation of the public.

LEDA, dam of Ledalia, by Nathan Coombs, recently foaled a light bay filly by imp. Brutus at Elmwood Stock Farm, Millis, Cal. The career of this youngster will be watched with interest. Bessie, dam of the good Sir Walter, foaled a filly by imp. Brutus, but unfortunately the youngster, who came somewhat premature, lived but a day.

HOCK WILKES, a very handsome son of Guy Wilkes, will be bred to approved mares free. Owners of good mares should read the advertisement and go and see this stallion. An offer of free service to such a handsome, well-bred horse is seldom made. Read the advertisement.

Who wants to purchase one of the best bred stallions on the Coast? The handsome horse Hustler is for sale. Read advertisement, and write to any one who has colts or fillies by him and you will at once see that a bargain like this may never come to you again.

THE THIRTY-FIRST AGRICULTURAL ASSOCIATION, Hanenme, Ventura county advertises colt stakes in this issue. Horsemen in the counties mentioned in the advertisement should not forget this announcement. See advertisement.

ROBERT BYBEE, of Salem, Or., owner of Misty Morn and many other thoroughbreds, is around again after his long and serious spell of sickness in San Francisco, and this week attended the Oakland races.

LARGHETTO, sold by Matt Storn to Ed. McAbbe, of Canada, won a mile race at New Orleans last Wednesday from a good field. The horse is by Jils Johnson (son of Longfellow), dam Leveret, by Lever.

There is an opportunity for shippers of stock to get car from here to Lexington. See advertisement.

TURF AND TRACK.

The Sulky.

NELSON will be sent for the stallion record after serving twenty mares.

In thirty days Stamboul trotted seven miles in 2:10 $\frac{1}{2}$, 2:08 $\frac{1}{2}$, 2:08, 2:10 $\frac{1}{2}$, 2:09 $\frac{1}{2}$, 2:09 $\frac{1}{2}$, 2:07 $\frac{1}{2}$.

ALTA BELLE, the dam of Daghestan, 2:25 $\frac{1}{2}$, and sister to Chimes, is a notable addition to the Empire City Stud band of broodmares.

How many of the 2:30 yearlings, about which so much is being said just now, will materialize in the chase after the money in 1893?

A. H. MOORE, of Philadelphia, purchased the twenty-year-old mare Echora (dam of Direct 2:05 $\frac{1}{2}$) at the J. I. Case sale in New York for \$2,350.

The great trotting progenitor Rysdyk's Hambletonian, and the first champion trotting stallions in the 2:30 list, Ethan Allen and George M. Patchen, were foaled the same year.

GUY VERNON, A. W. Fink's handsome Guy Wilkes stallion, is now a sire; his first colt out of a mare by Cornet, belongs to A. Z. Wolfen, of this city. It was foaled January 8, 1892.

DAVE COLROSS will have a string of good ones from Rancho Cotati this fall. The youngsters by Eclectic and Mortimer are well-proportioned, beautifully-gaited and very promising.

AMERICUS, the two-year-old, owned by C. J. Hamlin, will not be the only trotter at Village Farm with Onward blood in its veins, as there are several broodmares related to that great sire.

A DOWN easter, in his stallion announcement for the coming season, makes the following generous offer, or at least it appears generous on its face: "Any mare that can beat him will be served free."

WHEN nineteen years old Ethan Allen, with four in the list, was the champion trotting sire, while now the five-year-old Lancelot has half that number, and Egotist at seven years has nearly twice as many.

MESSRS. PAULLIN & Co. have ten or twelve youngsters at the Fresno race track. Some are by Panjabi, and if the reports are true regarding them, they will prove to be "wonders on the circuit" when it opens.

RALPH WILKES, who made a two-year-old record of 2:18, never knew the restraint of a harness until the spring of that season. The dam of Ralph Wilkes has produced six male foals, never having given birth to a filly.

ABOUT sixty head of broodmares, including the stallion Guide and Sidney Roy, the property of A. T. Hatch, were shipped to his ranch in Napa County last Monday. He stock came down from his ranch at Cottonwood.

JAMES H. VANCE, who was for many years assistant to Walter Mahen, has signed to train for J. H. Outhwaite, at Savannah Park, Savannah, Cal. He is much on the George Starr order, quiet, modest and competent.

THERE is a 2:12 class for trotters on the Grand Circuit programme for Buffalo next August, in which Belle Hamlin, 2:12 $\frac{1}{2}$, will be among the starters. Belle can, it is thought, turn a mile in 2:11 with conditions favorable.

JOSEPH OUTHWAITE sent S. Saunway from this State recently to collect his mares and ship them here. Lasca, by Stamboul, is the only one that will remain in the East and the chances are that she will be bred to Wilton in 1893.

CHAS. SCOTT, lessee of the Napa track, has that splendid course in better condition than it has ever been at this time of the year, and applications for stalls have been received by him from a number of our most promising drivers and trainers.

THE stride of the racehorse when fully extended is not much greater than that of the trotter. Boston's stride did not exceed twenty-three feet, and a prominent authority gives from sixteen to twenty-six feet as the usual limits of the thoroughbred.

BELLE VARA, 2:08 $\frac{1}{2}$, the famous race mare owned by S. A. Browne & Co., was shipped to Budd Doble at Terre Haute, Ind., where she will be the stable companion of Nancy Hanks 2:04, and Stamboul, 2:07 $\frac{1}{2}$. Vara holds the championship record in a race.

TOM KEATING has left the thoroughbreds for a while, and is busy "teaming" on the Lodi track behind a number of really good ones. He believes in doing the driving, as it pays better than sitting on a fence and see a "green kid" do as he likes with his horses.

WHERE will the three-year-old champion come from in 1893? Will it be like Directum or Kentucky Union, unknown until the campaign is half over, or will Silicon, Princess Royal, Mambrino Swift or youngsters of that stripe step up and assert their right?

BEATRICE, the dam of Patron, 2:14 $\frac{1}{2}$, Prodigal, 2:16, etc., is in foal to the pacer Thistle, 2:14, a son of Sidney. As Thistle at five years of age is the sire of To Order, two-year-old pacer record 2:14, it is doubtful if a much better mate could have been found for Beatrice.

THE trotter Red Star, a gray gelding by the California stallion A. W. Richmond, got a lot of money at the race meeting in Germany last year, being one of the most consistent performers over there. When owned in this country Red Star was not a particularly fast horse, but could go two miles well for his speed.

THE famous brood-mare Mabel L. (dam of Reina, 2:13 $\frac{1}{2}$, and four others in 2:30 at 12 years of age) has been sold by H. M. Littel, of Macedon, N. Y., to A. H. Moore, of Philadelphia, for \$11,000. Every one of Mabel L.'s foals that have been broken to harness has taken a record and Reina is expected to heat 2:10 this year.

THE brown stallion Balkan, 2:15, was purchased by W. C. Brown, of St. Joseph, Mo., at the Chicago sale, and will make a valuable addition to his stable of trotters. Balkan is but eight years old, sired by Mambrino Wilkes 60:83, a son of George Wilkes, and his dam is the great broodmare Fanny Peck, the dam of Balkan, 2:15, Molly Drew, 2:27, and grand-dam of the pacer Allamah, 2:18.—Western Resources.

SEVEN members of the Pennsylvania Trotting Horse Breeders' Association, which met at Pittsburg recently had tried training yearlings and were not at all charmed by the outcome. They were unanimous in declaring that they would never train another yearling, although more yearling stakes will be opened this year than ever before.

MONROE SALISBURY says he believes that "green horses like Flying Jih and Directum are very scarce this year in California." Still we notice that he has not given up the search, and if there is another man in America that can excel him in picking out the very choicest, we have never had the pleasure of seeing his name in print.

ORRIN A. HICKOK, it is said, makes weekly visits to Palo Alto to see the youngsters work; he is to take a string of them for campaigning purposes, hence his anxiety to choose the very best. Mr. Hickok is a quiet, unassuming little gentleman, and is as good a judge of what constitutes a trotter as any horseman in America; his opinions are much respected among trotting horsemen everywhere.

H. HOGBOOM is about to send for his little band of broodmares that are at Humboldt and have them brought to Woodland, where his stallion Waldstein, 2:22 $\frac{1}{2}$, will make the season of 1893. Among them are a few fillies and colts by this great son of Director that will be heard of in the races this fall; there is one filly in particular out of a mare by Grand Moor that is said to be faster than her sire was at her age. Waldstein is a typical trotting race horse.

WM. B. FASIG, Manager of the Trotting Horse Department of Tattersall's, departed for the East on Monday evening, having completed arrangements for the sale of Sidney, 2:19 $\frac{1}{2}$, Memo and Grace, 2:29 $\frac{1}{2}$. Mr. Fasig is one of the most genial of men and is thoroughly versed on all matters pertaining to horses. He has, during his short stay, become infatuated with the climate of California, and believes that too much has not been said of it. We hope he will soon repeat his visit and stay a few months instead of a few days.

DURING the "experience meetings" that are daily held around the big stoves in the "blizzard-stricken" cities of the East, the principal topic is entitled "Trotting Around the Stove," and many a wonderful tale is told, many a hotly-contested battle to the wire is fought by these gentlemen as reminiscence follow reminiscence. In California there is no need for these "tin-jaw" record breakers. The tracks are in perfect order and the trainers are kept busy from dawn to dusk teaching the coming record breakers their lessons.

"I think Americans make a great mistake in breeding for speed only," said John Splan recently. "The one aim is to get two-minute horses, no attention whatever being paid to size, looks or soundness. We have the fast horses, and will continue to have them until our breeders make a radical change. I think Germany, France and England will be great markets in the future for trotters, and the breeders who combine speed and looks will find as good a market abroad for their horses as any other product sent out from these shores."

CHARLEY DURFEE is jogging McKinney on the road every day, and the great brown horse is looking as fine as a picture. He will never be the worse for his trifling mishap, and as soon as he can be hardened up a trifle Durfee will feel of him a short distance, just to see if he is the same old McKinney. The race is not alone to the swift, but to the steady and game, and that is why I regard McKinney as the greatest horse in the State in a fifth heat. Palo Alto is dead and Stamboul has left the State forever, so that McKinney is the champion of California by long odds.—Los Angeles Herald.

MILLARD SANDERS will return to California after the Corbitt sale and take charge of Sidney, 2:19 $\frac{1}{2}$. He will go East with him and return after the sale to take charge of the youngsters on the farm and give them race records. To do this Mr. Sanders tendered his resignation to Mr. Corbitt, and will stay with the Valensin Farm youngsters until the stock is sold. Mr. Sanders is a hard-working, capable and conscientious trainer and driver, and his work while on this coast is a fitting testimonial of his worth, even if he had not achieved a splendid reputation in the East.

A GOOD many writers appear to be borrowing considerable trouble on the subject of high service fees for stallions. So long as there are plenty of good stallions standing at low fees, and no law to compel any one to patronize the high-priced ones, the tears and ink shed bewailing high prices seems wasted. Most men who pay their money for good stallions think they have as much right to place their fees at a figure which pleases them as they have to place values on their animals, and in our opinion they are quite right. This matter of fancy stallion fees, like that of any other popular fancy article, will regulate itself in time.

W. MONTEITH, representing the Marin Stock and Farm Company, purchased three mares for $475 at F. W. Loeber's auction sale last March and gave the company's note for them. Among those purchased was the mare Queen Ad. The note has never been paid, and Messrs. Killip & Co. and F. W. Loeber were astounded to hear that suit for $1,000 had been brought against them, the complaint being that the mare was not standard-bred, as represented, and the company had gone to considerable expense in breeding this mare to a high-priced stallion whose name is not mentioned in the complaint. Queen Ad was bred by Coburn Farmer, of Vallejo, and was sired by Admiral 488, dam Nellie, by Blackhawk 767; second dam by Sovereign (thoroughbred). She is the dam of a very fast mare that belongs to A. L. Bancroft, of this city.

A LETTER from Bellota Stock Farm conveys the intelligence that Twist, one of the finest broodmares in this State, died of colic there last week. Twist was foaled in 1876. She was the dam of Steve Whipple, 2:14, the fastest of Whipple's Hambletonian's progeny. She was also the dam of Andy R., brother to Steve Whipple; Voter, by Elect, son of Elector 125; Prindex, by Dexter Prince, and a dark bay yearling colt by Director, 2:17. Twist was out of Jenny Lind, by Hill's Black Hawk; second dam Old Stub, by Young Telescope; third dam by Justin Morgan. She was a very fine type of a broodmare. All of her produce were endowed with speed, intelligence, good constitutions and the game qualities so requisite in campaigners. She was valued at $10,000, and her loss to Mr. Needham is a severe one. A curious fact in regard to this mare is that she was interred on the banks of the Calaveras; her dam, Jenny Lind, was buried on the banks of the San Joaquin; her third dam, Old Stub, was laid away by the side of the Kistlanwanke River, De Kalb County, Illinois.

JAS. F. MAGUIRE, the well known trainer and driver who has been at Palo Alto for some time, accepted an offer recently to take charge of the horses at Edgemont Park Stock Farm, Los Angeles. Mr. Maguire is a very capable man and his life-long connection with trotters has made him familiar with all the little details of conditioning, balancing and driving. He is in every way eminently fitted for the place and in his new field of labors we shall be very much surprised if he does not bring out a string of record breakers that will add money and glory to the beautiful stock farm near the "city of the Angels."

FRANK C. CORNWALL, who has been on the Alvinza Hayward place, San Mateo, for two years, died Friday morning in his room at the Union hotel. He went East with the Hayward horses last December and returned only Tuesday dangerously ill with pneumonia. Drs. Whitwell and Goodspeed attended him and Dr. Ross was called in Thursday. The disease had gone so far, however, that the doctors could do nothing for him. He was 21 years of age and leaves a father and brother in Cleveland, Ohio. Frank Turner returned with him, and together with his wife and Mr. Keeger and wife has nursed him and done everything possible to allay his suffering.—San Mateo Gazette.

"THE greatest sale of choice trotters" is a term we oftentimes hear applied to auction sales, not only in this State, but in every other. Doubtless, up to the time of publication, of this statement, it is true, but last Monday word was sent to Killip & Co. to dispose of every head of trotting stock on the Asylum Farm, 125 in all; the sale to take place the latter part of February. Such a collection of grandly-bred stallions broodmares, colts and fillies is out to be found on any stock farm in this State, for every annual has been selected with great care, and all of them are royally bred. The sale is peremptory and nothing is reserved. Such an opportunity to get grandly-bred trotters may never occur again.

RUSSIA is the largest horse breeding country in the world, but the great majority of their horses are worthless brutes—worse than our Texas ponies. The government maintains twenty-eight breeding establishments, which are classed in three categories—stables for the improvement of the draught and working breeds; those destined for saddle horses, and finally the Steppe stables, which supply mounts for the cavalry. These establishments contain in all 1,843 stallions. Of these 891 belong to the fourteen stables of draught horses which are concentrated in the central government, 549 in the saddle horse stables established in the southern governments, which also have large studs of race horses, and 403 stallions in the several Steppe stables situated in the region of the Don, in that of the Ural and on the Caucasus.

It would be much better for farmers who are engaged in horse breeding if neighborhoods or communities would combine or work together and produce one particular kind of animal for the market. There are a great many advantages to be derived from this sort of club breeding. Should ten or a dozen breeders combine and purchase a good stock horse to begin with, he should be one of the best representatives of the breed it is most desirable to produce, and the line of breeding marked out should be pursued as closely as possible, and persistently, without any change of base. The result of club breeding among farmers would be great uniformity of produce, and, as animals about the same size and build would grow up, carloads of the same would find ready market at paying prices.—Exchange.

SENATOR HEARST is to have a monument that will make his name as familiar as a "household word." His widow, Mrs. Phoebe Hearst, has resolved to create upon the estate of 450 acres near Pleasanton a home for indigent boys, where boys from eight to sixteen years of age may be educated, taught trades and fitted for the battle of life. The endowment, it is stated, will be $500,000. The place is most suitable for such an object; it consists of rolling and valley land, the soil is as fine as any in California, and numerous springs are continually flowing and feeding the stream that courses through the portion called the "valley." The ravines are well wooded and for horticulture and viticulture the hillsides cannot be surpassed. The climate is unsurpassed and the proximity of the farm to San Francisco makes it very desirable for the good purpose for which it is designed. The gift is one that will keep forever green the memory of one of the most charitable of California pioneers.

HON. JOHN BOGGS, of Princeton, Colusa county, has been identified with horses ever since he was old enough to toddle, and in his youth rode in many a hotly-contested quarter race. He was the Fred Archer of the straight-away courses in olden times and no one ever sat a horse better or used greater skill and judgment in those exciting events than he. He was one of the first to select a stock of good mares and breed them to Williamson's Belmont and General Taylor, two of the greatest sires for their opportunities that ever lived. He had one mare by General Taylor that could out-trot any other roaster in the county; she was one of the nervous, springy, untiring kind that never needed urging; he bred her to Tilton Almont, she had three colts, one of them, a gelding, was sold to James Forrester of this city. We have been informed that he thinks so much of this trotter that he purchased the other two. Bred as they are by such a sire and out of a mare of this description they ought to be the kind to win money with this fall.

SOUNDNESS and size out more of a figure when horses are put on the market nowadays than ever before. The trotting horse has reached that stage of development where anyone can secure animals having the speed and breeding to suit any buyer, and in choosing between horses equal in these respects, soundness and size turn the balance. Every man should recognize this fact, whether he is raising one colt or twenty each year, and proceed so that every foal he raises shall, in addition to speed and breeding, possess those qualities. If a broodmare throws foals deficient in these respects, sell her for what she will bring; the longer she is kept the lower grade of individuality will there be found in the collection of animals she helps to form. Breed to stallions on the same plan, and aim to produce a higher grade of individuality each year. The owner of a collection of horses built up on such a plan will not have to go begging for a market, for the buyers of to-day are looking for youngsters of high breeding and demonstrated speed, accompanied by the size and soundness that will make the two first-mentioned qualities valuable. Somebody is bound to produce what they want, and those that do not do so will have a lot of stock on their hands that will be unsought by buyers.

The Saddle.

DAN HONIG'S horses won four races at Gloucester, N. J., on the 9th inst.

A new training track is being built inside the regular course at Oakland, and in all likelihood a portion of it will be used for a much-needed saddling paddock.

LORD ROSSLYN has sold Peter to go to Belgium. Though this was probably the best racehorse Hermit ever got, his loss is not deplored in England, as he usually imparted to his offspring his own abominable temper.

NELLE VAN, who ran half a mile in 0:48½ at Bay District track recently, is a very much inbred animal, being by Vanderbilt, dam Victoria, by Vanderbilt. Vanderbilt is by Norfolk, dam Sally Franklin, by Illinois Medoc.

THE races at Oakland last Tuesday were well attended, and while the fields were rather small, the contests were as a rule very exciting. Cyclone was ridden out hard to beat Altns, and the sides of the winner were cut quite severely by the spurs.

THE crazy California-bred horse, Duke of Milpitas, will not be allowed to start at New Orleans hereafter. Recently he threw Jockey Hennessy at the post, and the directors declared him to be altogether too dangerous an animal to allow on the track.

THE chestnut yearling colt by Flambeau, out of Irish Lass, by imp. Kyrle Daly, has been purchased of B. C. Holly by the owners of the Pueblo Stable, Messrs. Burke & Ramsdell. The youngster is entered in the Futurity of 1894 and several other rich stakes.

W. M. SINCLAIR, owner of Stoneman, has purchased of Jones & Bybee, the Salem, Or., horseman, Tacoma, bay colt, 4, by St. Paul, dam Lina, by King Alfonso. Terms private. On his breeding Tacoma should be both fast and capable of going a long journey.

EIGHT mares have already been booked to imp. Paramatta, B. C. Holly's grand Australian-bred stallion. Among the mares Mr. H. owns that the horse will be bred to are Rosette (dam of Acclaim and Royal Flush), by Wheatley, and Ninena (dam of Bert Hart), by Jim Brown.

FIRENZI is due to foal to the mighty Salvator in about two weeks. An offer of $15,000 for the foal, made by an Eastern turfman, has been refused for the youngster. If it is a chestnut colt with the Salvator markings Sacramento will be flooded with champagne water beyond all doubt.

IN a six-furlong race at Oakland last Tuesday there were three entries, and every one was a member of the Norfolk family. Estrella, the runner, is by the Duke of Norfolk, son of Norfolk; Vanity, the winner-up, is by Al Farrow, he by Conner, son of Norfolk, while Elwood, third, was by old Norfolk himself.

BARNUM, that old campaigner, now fourteen years old, and one of the most honest horses on the turf as well as one of the best handicap horses of his day, is now at the track at East St. Louis, and forced to run against the cattle there that are used as gambling machines at the merry-go round track. His owner ought to be prosecuted for cruelty to animals for forcing the old horse to race.

THAT great stallion Foxhall, now in this country, will be shipped back to England. The Earl of Rosebery, who has a proprietary interest in Foxhall, has cabled to William Easton to make immediate arrangements to ship Foxhall back to England. Foxhall was brought over last year to be sold, but for some reason American breeders, though in need of stallions, did not take kindly to the horse.

MISS WOODFORD, ex-queen of the American turf, on the 8th inst. foaled a chestnut colt by the great Salvator. The youthful monarch has a big star in his forehead and one hind foot white and the "Stockwell mark"—a dark patch on his chestnut coat where the saddle will go some day. This colt will bring a great sum when he comes before the auctioneer at New York a little over a year hence.

AMONG the many great-looking yearlings at Belle Meade is a full brother to Reporter. Old Enquirer, the sire of this distinguished youngster, is one of the most remarkable horses ever known in this country. He is nearly twenty-six years old and looks to be as young and vigorous as he did ten years ago. The grand old fellow actually grows frisky sometimes and gallops in his paddock like a playful colt.

GEORGE COVINGTON, one of the best jockeys in this country, getting too heavy to ride, has been engaged as trainer by Thomas H. Williams Jr. He will have an excellent string to work on, and as Covington has received his "education" in the best stables of the West and in that of Green B. Morris at the East and is a very intelligent fellow, we look for the Williams horses to win many a stake race this season.

MANAGERS of the Saratoga Racing Association are elated over the way in which entries have come in for the stakes and handicaps to be run next summer. The entries received up to January 2 numbered over 1,600, an average of 60 odd for each stake. The Fleischman Stable leads with 109, Green Morris's nominations will reach 40, Scoggin Brothers 38, W. Hendrie 29, while many other well known stables are represented by double figures.

BREEDING often furnishes contradictions. In England the celebrated horse, Sterling, was notoriously a non-stayer, yet he got in Isonomy, the finest stayer of his generation. Vedette, on the other hand, was a stayer, yet his Galopin line are not as a rule stayers. Prince Charlie did not stay, yet he got stayers in Prestonpans, in England, and Salvator, here. Fellowcraft in this country was a famous stayer, but his progeny prefer short courses.

W. S. VOSBURGH, Secretary of the Board of Control and a great student of thoroughbred breeding, wrote a most valuable article in the Spirit of the Times of January 7th on "Winning Families," showing conclusively that mares exert by far a greater influence on their progeny than the sires. He claims that nine-tenths of all our great race horses have come from ten or twelve famous broodmares. He gives as examples Vandal's dam, Boadicea, imp. Gallopade, Young Maid of the Oaks, Miss Obstinate and Magnolia, and undoubtedly Mr. Vosburgh is correct in his conclusions. He might, however, have added the great Fashion, by imp. Trustee, and Blue Bonnet, by imp. Hedgeford, to his list.

A NUMBER of California records were broken at the late Blood Horse meeting. Gibson took up 117½ pounds and ran five and one-half furlongs in 1:06½. Charmion took three-quarters of a second off the six-furlong record when she ran the distance with 106 pounds up in 1:13 flat, while Motto ran seven-eighths of a mile in 1:27½ with 104 pounds in the saddle. April Fool ran half a mile at Sacramento, May 14, 1892, in 0:47½ with 123 pounds up.

M. F. DWYER'S good horse Kingston has been sent from his winter quarters at Stoutwood Park, N. J., to join the string at Gravesend. He looks in capital shape, and this may be said of all the horses in Hardy Campbell's string. The white with gold tassel will indeed be a hard nut to crack for any aspiring owner, no matter whether it be in a sprint race with Kingston, Fairy or Stonenell, or a longer distance with Raceland, Banquet, Demuth and others.

CLINTON C. RILEY and James Rowe, respectively associate judge and starter at the recent Blood Horse and California Jockey Club meetings, left last Monday night for their homes in Chicago and New York. Both are exceedingly clever men in their lines, Mr. Riley being an accomplished newspaper man and Mr. Rowe a thorough horseman. They made hosts of friends here by their genial manners, and we trust San Francisco has not by any means seen the last of them.

EMMA BARNES (dam of Turf Gallery, Wildwood and Boots) has been booked to Dr. Thomas Bowhill's Australian stallion, imp. Chesterfield, son of The Marquis and Lamorna, by Fireworks. Emma Barnes is by Norfolk, dam Evadne, by Winnebago; second dam Maid of Athens, by imp. Priam; third dam Lady Chesterfield, by Arab (son of Sir Archy); fourth dam by imp. Knowsley; fifth dam by imp. Dion; sixth dam by Meade's Celer; seventh dam by Frisstram Shandy.

BILLY MCCORMICK is training at the Arcade track, Rancho del Paso, thirty odd two-year-olds, the property of Simeon G. Reed, John Mackey and Charles Kerr. He also has a two-year-old by Tyrant from Cleo, by The Ill-Used, the property of Miss E. Mackey, that has this early in the season run a quarter in twenty-three seconds over the ranch track, the fastest move made thus far by any youngster in McCormick's hands. We expect to hear from the sister to Tournament this season.

DAN MILLER, owner of Charmion, Ida Glenn and other fleet gallopers, last week received the Blood Horse Association's trophy, won when Charmion defeated Princess in the $2,500 match race at Bay District in the early part of the meeting. The trophy presented was a handsome gold stop watch, suitably inscribed, and Mr. Miller was more than pleased with it. He celebrated the occasion by sending a "cold bottle" or two into the press stand and opening several for his friends in the members' stand.

SAM COOPER, who brought Charmion, the Iris filly and Ida Glenn to the post in such excellent shape for Dan Miller, has left the employ of that gentleman, and Dan Meeks, of Kansas, has been engaged to train the excellent Miller string. It is understood that Cooper (who is an excellent jockey as well as trainer) desired to go into the business of racing thoroughbreds on his own account, and is collecting some very good ones to race in California during the year 1893. Mr. Meeks, his successor, was for quite a time with B. C. Holly, and is said to be a thorough horseman.

DURING the racing season at Chicago, which began last May and ended on December 21st, there were 275 days of racing at the different tracks, 1,477 races being run, and $944,379 was divided between the owners of winning horses. Edward Corrigan's stable won the most of the local money, $53,644, the Kendall stable, belonging to the "plunger," Chris. Smith being second with $42,000. C. C. McCafferty, a brother of the McCafferty who had such a successful campaign in the East, won $33,968. Green B. Morris went out there after the close of the season in this State and won $8,946.

THE horse San Joaquin will be trained the coming season and started in the big events. He is owned by a Massachusetts gentleman new to the turf. This colt was two years ago one of the most promising in the stable of Mr. E. J. Baldwin, of California. He is a son of Longfellow, from Santa Anita Belle, and raced at Morris Park in 1891, but went amiss. He was third for the Sheridan Stakes, at Chicago, to Poet Scout, beating Kingman, the Kentucky Derby winner, and was third to Pessarra in the Foxhall Stakes at Saratoga, and then went all to pieces. He did not start last year, but if he returns to his private form of the spring of 1891 he will "bear watching," as the tipsters like to say when they don't care to commit themselves unreservedly.—Daily Spirit.

DAN MCCARTY received a letter the other day from his oldest boy, Joe, who has charge of the big string of runners that left here last spring for Chicago. The horses are wintering at Wilmington, Ill., and are all in fair health. At the present Roby meeting Cartridge, Hercules and Edith won races, Sonoma Boy and Cartridge also running second. Joe declares that Romair, Bernardo, Adolph, Narvaez, Prize, Bridal Veil, Mezzotint, Melody and Bizzard have filled out wonderfully well, but is particularly pleased with Oporto, the dark brown son of imp. Mariner and Eufaula, by Monday, whom he dubs the "daddy of the lot." Col. Thornton has a two-year-old brother to Oporto that is called Bordeaux, also a dark-skinned fellow, and he bids fair to become a more than serviceable race horse.

LADIES attending the races and intending to wager any sums thereon should beware of a young man named Miller, who claims to be a relative of Jockey George Miller. Last Saturday he infested the members' stand (balcony), and robbed two ladies of $58 in all. He first received $3 with instructions to place it on Cornie Buckingham. The ticket he brought read 3 to 9 instead of 9 to 3, and altogether the card looked suspicious. Buckingham did not win, but the ticket was taken to the bookmaker from whom it was supposed to have been purchased, who promptly pronounced it an old, losing ticket. Later on in the afternoon another lady sent $5 by the youth to put on Alfred B., a 10 to 1 chance. A ticket was given the fair purchaser with the correct odds on the card. When the horse won the lady's face was wreathed in smiles and she was as happy as the proverbial clam in high water. Miller, however, was nowhere to be found, and upon a gentleman presenting the ticket for payment it was likewise declared bogus, and the lady that imagined herself a lucky winner is mourning the loss of $55. The matter was reported to President Williams, who promised to look into the matter. It is to be hoped that the thief will be punished.

IN speaking of the resolution boycotting any bookmaker that does business at Oakland, Thomas H. Williams said last Monday: "Our chief reason for wishing to protect ourselves if that we are already making arrangements for a hundred-day meeting next winter. Marcus Daly has written us that he will send a string of his cracks, and we expect Belmont, Lorillard and Dwyer Brothers to do the same. The indications are that we will have 300 Eastern horses here—good ones all of them—and with 500 from this State we will have one of the greatest meetings in the world. In order to induce the Eastern owners to bring their stables out here it is easy to understand that we cannot be too careful, especially as to the bookmakers who will do business on our track."

JOHN APPELBY, the well-known trainer-jockey, will have quite a good stable next spring. He is now handling the following at Oakland: Five-year-old horse by Dabin—Lizzie Dunbar; Alfred B., h g, a, by imp. Kyrle Daly—Fortuna; Morton, 6, by Leinster, and Claquer, b c, 3, by Three Cheers—Belle of the Lake. This Dabin is not like most of the sons of the big brown Australian horse, being only about 15 hands in height and weighing over 1,000 pounds. His chest is wonderfully wide and his front legs very far apart, but he is said to be afflicted with speed and capable of staying almost any route. Appley won with Alfred B. in good style at Bay District track last Saturday. Claquer is entered in this year's American Derby, but his capabilities are not known as yet.

W. B. SANBORN, the Santa Rosa turfman, has a couple of two-year-olds that he will race in the spring along with the fast Inkerman and Fox's brother, Ironheart. The youngsters, whom Mr. Sanborn considers exceedingly promising, are both fillies, and by that splendid-looking race horse, Harry Peyton (son of Shannon and Miss Peyton, by imp. Glengarry). One, a bay, is from a daughter of Bayswater, he a brother to Preakness; the other filly a chestnut, is from a Wheatly mare, and the matrons by that son of War Dance have been unusually successful in the production of race horses, Acclaim, Royal Flush, Inkerman, Sam Mount, Alfred B. and others having for dams daughters of Wheatley. Mamie C., by Harry Peyton and a mighty fast little race mare until she broke down last spring, is heavy in foal to Three Cheers, and, along with Alice, dam of Inkerman, is likely to be bred back that great old sire of race horses.

FOLLOWING are the entries to the two great handicaps, the Brooklyn and Suburban, the weights in which will be allotted by February 1st: In the Suburban are Rey del Rey, Dr. Hasbrouck, Leonawell, Reclare, Tournament, Candelabra, Victory, Russell, Mars, His Highness, Yorkville Belle, Banquet, Demuth, Kingston, Longstreet, Nomad, Raceland, Tammany, Montana, The Pepper, Silver Fox, Steve Estes, Two Bits, Cassius, Pessarra, Lowlander, Fidelio, Terrifier, Parvenne, La Tosca, Lamplighter, Locohatchee, Major Domo, Judge Morrow, Strathmeath, Charade, Illume. The entries and ages for the Brooklyn handicap are as follows: Alonzo 4, Banquet 4, Cassius 4, Candelabra 4, Charade 4, Demuth 6, Diabolo 4, Fidelio 4, Illume 4, Judge Morrow 6, Kingston 4, Lamplighter 4, La Tosca 5, Leonawell 4, Locohatchee 4, Longstreet 4, Longbeach 4, Lowlander 5, Major Domo 4, Mars 4, Nomad 4, Pictolus 4, Parvenue 4, Pickpocket 4, Reclare 6, Rudolph 5, Russell 5, Strathmeath 5, Terrifier 5, Tulla Blackburn 6, Victory 4, Wildwood 4, Yorkville Belle 4.

THE Metropolitan Handicap, to be run at Morris Park, threatens to be the richest of all the American handicaps, having sixty-one entries, which is twenty-eight more than the Brooklyn has and twenty-four more than the Suburban. The following is a full list of the Metropolitan Handicap nominations, and it will be noticed that there are quite a number of California-bred horses in the handicap: Wildwood, Lady Violet, Dr. Hasbrouck, Pickpocket, Glenmoyn, Pictolus, Yorkville Belle, Lawless, Banquet, Demuth, Nomad, Raceland, Montana, Tammany, The Pepper, Sir Matthew, Steve Estes, Silver Fox, Sir Francis, Leonawell, Fidelio, Terrifier, Muldoon, Beansy, Madstone, His Highness, St. Michael, Charade, Alonzo, Candelabra, The Ironmaster, Victory, Sleipner, Willie L., Rey del Rey, Loantaka, W. B., Illume, Kennebec, Russell, Mars, St. Florian, Ambulance, Joe Cotton, Adelbert, La Tosca, Lamplighter, Locohatchee, Vestibule, Julien, Parvenne, Sir Arthur, Picknicker, Stockton, Two Bits, Pessarra, Cassius, Runyon, Spartan, Wadsworth and Faraday.

THE total value of stakes won, exclusive of matches and private sweepstakes (which amounted to £1,000), was in England, £156,383, 13s.; in Scotland, £11,275, and in Ireland £6,403, 19s., 6d. As compared with last year, these sums show an increase of £1,000 for England, and a little over £1,000 each for Scotland and Ireland. During the season which ended at Manchester on November 20th, 2,561 horses competed for the various races, of which 365 were of the age of 5 years and upward, 336 four-year-olds, 772 three-year-olds and 1,091 two-year-olds. In each instance the figures show an increase on last year, if the same method of calculation be adopted, on all preceding years. The above animals took part in 1,688 races, of which 754 were between five and under six furlongs in length, 201 over six furlongs and under a mile, 479 of one mile, 203 over one mile and under two, 41 over two miles and under three, five over three and under four, and two of four miles. As compared with last year, the foals of 1892 show an increase of 274 colts and 279 fillies, who will be available for 1891, their numbers being 1,436 and 1,520 respectively.

THE English racing officials do not care to have jockeys own horses, and, according to the London Sportsman, have issued the following: The Stewards of the Jockey Club give notice that licenses are only granted to jockeys on condition that they are not owners or part owners of any race horse. Leave may be given, under exceptional circumstances, on special application, to jockeys to own one or more horses, but this permission will only be granted when the jockey is also a trainer and the horse is to be trained in his own stable. The Stewards of the Jockey Club, observing that many jockeys have been in the habit of betting on horse racing, and of receiving presents in connection with races from persons other than the owner of the horse they ride in such races, give notice that such practices will not be tolerated, and that any jockey who may be proved to their satisfaction to have any interest in any race horse, or to have been engaged in any betting transaction, or otherwise to have disregarded this notice, will have his license at once withdrawn. Any person knowingly acting in the capacity of part owner or trainer of any horse in which a jockey possesses any interest, or making any bet with or on behalf of any jockey, or otherwise aiding or abetting in any branch of the orders of the Stewards, will be warned off Newmarket Heath.

The excellent rule adopted by the Board of Control which compels every horse that starts in a race to be registered in the American Stud Book before facing the starter will, before many years, be adopted by both the American and National Trotting Associations.

WM. B. FASIG, of Tattersalls, started East on Monday. While in California he completed arrangements for the sale of Sidney, Memo and Grace, besides the string of very promising youngsters that the late G. Valensin was confident of winning all the world's race records with last year.

THE Legislature now in session will soon have a grist of bills relating to race meetings and pool selling and the members of both houses are waiting anxiously to see who will introduce them.

Endorsed by Everyone.

The great subject of dash races for harness horses is now engrossing the attention of every horseman in California. From Astoria to San Diego letters have been received urging our association to give the novelty races a fair trial.

Novelty in speed contests will prove attractive. The three-in-five races with high wheeled sulkies are distanced by the two-in-three races with the latest improved "bikes." The numerous sulky and harness designers that are filing their applications for inventions in the patent office every week show that the aim is to provide mechanical help to aid the trotting and pacing horses to attain their highest speed in the shortest possible time.

With dash racing there can be nothing like this. A horse must win to get one-half the purse. With dash racing there will be a reduction in the size of the purses, but there will be more opportunities for horses to win money than under the old system.

The two-in-three race which will take place each day will not be prolonged, but will add a zest to the shorter races that will be appreciated by all.

There is no need for denying the fact that in order to make trotting and pacing races popular we must follow the example of the associations that manage the thoroughbreds. Then, and not till then, will success crown our efforts.

ONE of the newly elected supervisors of this city has a great project in view which, if carried to a successful issue will immortalize him, and that is the repairing of Market street from the wharf to Tenth street.

ANOTHER "bogus pedigree" mare is heard of. A man from Tres Pinos gives the following pedigree of a mare he is trying to sell. "She is by Governor Sprague from Palo Alto, and is owned by E. J. Turner in this (Monterey) county; her dam is by Billy Matthews, record 2:17 1/2, and owned by J. G. Sanchez, in this county, granddam by General McClellan."

correct, but as there were two horses of that name they are both entitled to the credit of being present when the unknown mare was bred. It would be a shame to deprive either of them of the honor. We advise the gentleman not to purchase the mare offered, but send us the name of the man trying to sell her, and we shall take pleasure in placing his name before the public.

The Stamboul Sale Again.

The telegram sent by Registrar Steiner to Auctioneer Kellogg at the Stamboul sale has been quoted by all the leading turf journals and newspapers. The impression made upon the large audience by its reading has been the source of much criticism among the "knights of the sulky" as well as the "knights of the quill," and on every side Messrs. Steiner and Allen are receiving a very liberal share of condemnation.

The interference of Mr. Steiner in the matter can be accounted for only in one way and that is that Mr. Allen's interests should be conserved by the association over which he is president. Mr. Wiggin, owner of Martha Wilkes, said publicly that whatever question there might be as to the record of Stamboul, that those of Kremlin were, to say the least, as worthy of strict investigation by the Register Association.

California Running Records.

Following are the best running records at the various popular distances ever made in California, as far as we have been able to discover. A number of them are the best on record over circular courses, for instance April Fool's half mile, Iodine's nine-sixteenths and Charmion's three-quarters, while Geraldine's thirteen-sixteenths and Hotspur's mile and three-quarters stand as world's records to this day.

Table of California Running Records listing distances, names of horses, owners, and times (e.g., 1-4 April Fool, dn g, 3, by Confidence; Fresno, 112 pounds; 0:21 3/4).

The Records That Were Thrown Out.

At the meeting of the Executive Committee of the American Trotting Register Association which was held at Chicago on Tuesday and Wednesday of this week, they decided to throw out the trotting and pacing records made at Nashville, Tenn., from November 18th to November 22d for irregularities. The performances made up to the first-named date was accepted.

The committee also decided to throw out as ineffective the performances made at the summer and fall meetings in Boston; Springfield, O.; Tonca, Neb.; Chillicothe, O.; Lansing, Mich.; Independence, In.; Coshocton, O.; Albany, N. Y.; Newark, N. J.; San Jose and Vallejo, Cal.; Meadville, Pa.; Poughkeepsie, N. Y.; Holton, Kas., and at other points on account of irregularities, claiming that they were not made in accordance with the rules of the American Trotting Register Association. The members of the executive committee present were: W. R. Allen, F. S. Gorton, Lucas Broadhead, W. J. Ijams, N. J. Coleman and C. F. Emery. In addition, there were present Directors S. A. Brown, W. A. Sanborn, F. S. Waters and Frank Rockefeller. Messrs. Broadhead and Allen did not take part in considering the records made at Nashville, where his great stallion, Kremlin, was interested.

This action of the committee will cause a sensation among owners of trotters, and a revision of the tables of the stallions becomes a necessity.

The committee's action may be criticised by a few, but to all fair-minded horsemen it will meet with approval. It is just as easy for horsemen and associations to hold their meetings according to the laws of the parent organization, as it is to hold them to suit the caprices or whims of a few owners of trotters who believe they can hoodwink the higher officials by getting up private matinees and never advertise them, but just have a few interested friends to act as judges and timers. The time for getting either time or race records under such auspices has passed, and we heartily endorse the action of the committee for the same and they have taken. Who wants a record for a horse that will be looked upon as shady? The horse may have trotted every foot of the mile, but it can only be called a trial, and will have no standing, because the proper methods were not adopted to insure its being placed to the horse's credit.

The abolishment of time records as now made must come, and come quickly. A horse with a race record of 2:25 will always be considered better than one with a time record of 2:22, and at the next meeting of the board the laws in regard to these "tin-cup" records must be revised.

At the meeting that just adjourned two other important matters came up for discussion, and both were of interest to California. Jos. Cairn Simpson was the standard-bearer that presented them. One was the establishment of Stamboul's record and the other was the legalizing of the much-disputed pedigree of the dam of Arion. The latter case was laid over until next April, while consideration of the former was postponed for several weeks; the other records made at the Stockton track will be considered at the same time.

Next week, we shall publish Mr. Simpson's letter from Chicago, and it will, no doubt, prove very interesting.

The Bottom is Still Secure.

There is food for encouragement in the telegraphic despatches that have been received from the New York sales, notwithstanding the fact that there are over 3,700 grandly-bred trotters to be sold this month in that great mart.

The San Mateo consignment of sixty-nine head brought $105,510, an average of $1,529.13. Those that brought $1,000 and over are published in another column.

The assertion that has been made by some owners of poorly-bred trotters and writers who love to look on the dismal side of life, that the "bottom has dropped out of the business," is proven to be false by this sale and that of the Stamboul stock (with the exception of Stamboul). Well-bred trotting horses that are finely-formed, constitutionally sound, level-headed, pure-gaited and game youngsters that have pedigrees strong on both paternal and maternal sides are worth nearly as much to-day as they ever were.

Two years ago Mr. Corbitt sent on a consignment of thirty-five of the progeny of Sable Wilkes and Guy Wilkes. They brought an average of $1,848.57. The list is published also in this issue. At the sale just concluded, there were colts and fillies by Leo Wilkes, Regal Wilkes, Ruppe (none of these are sires of winners), besides some campaigners by Sable Wilkes and Guy Wilkes. Therefore, this sale we consider a little better than that held two years ago. The lesson taught by it should be remembered by owners of stock farms. Since that sale in 1891, Mr. Corbitt employed the best trainers in the land. Messrs. Goldsmith and Sanders, and gave them full charge of his youngsters; he entered the colts and fillies in all the big stakes, and spared neither time nor money in preparing them for these events and they proved to be racehorses wherever they were. He used good judgment in all his breeding problems, and the results have proven that he made few, if any, mistakes. His great horses, Guy Wilkes and Sable Wilkes, are more valuable to-day than they have ever been, and their progeny will prove their worth every year, for they train and race on.

A Good Appointment.

The Government of Queensland, Australia, has created a position at this port by the appointment of a veterinary surgeon whose duty it shall be to examine stock shipped from San Francisco to the island colony. The person upon whom the appointment has been conferred is Dr. William F. Egan, one of the most prominent young veterinarians in this city. This action of the Government of Queensland was prompted by long-continued appeals from stock raisers and cattle dealers who found it decidedly unremunerative to import stock because of the severe quarantine laws. These regulations have always been rigidly enforced. The arrival of a traveling circus last year considerably increased the severity of the execution of the laws. Many of the animals belonging to the show were afflicted with contagious diseases, and in order to prevent like occurrences in the future the Queensland officials decided to appoint an inspector in this city, whose certificate shall obviate the necessity of examination at Australian ports. The other colonies of Australia have already taken up the consideration of the appointment of such an officer, and it is thought that Dr. Egan will be made the inspector for the entire number of colonies.

The newly-appointed officer is the resident surgeon of the San Francisco Veterinary Hospital and president of the California State Veterinary Association. He is also a member of the Royal College of Veterinary Surgeons, England, a graduate of the Edinburgh College, and the veterinary editor of this journal.

Shippers of live stock must get a certificate signed by him before the officials at Queensland will allow the animals to land. No other veterinarian's certificate will be recognized by them.

A Splendid Institution.

Dr. E. J. Creely, the well-known veterinarian of this city, and Dr. John Campbell, who is also a graduate of the American Veterinary College of New York, and for nine years was associated with Dr. W. J. Magee, in the Forty-second and Manhattanville and St. Nicholas avenue Railroad stables of New York, have formed a co-partnership and opened a new veterinary hospital in this city. It is situated at 820 Howard street, and is one of the best appointed institutions of its kind in this State. The very latest and most approved apparatus and instruments are placed in readiness for use by these two progressive professionals who are now prepared to take charge of all cases that are brought to them. The box stalls, Turkish bath, operating table, improved slings, and stalls fitted up for horses that are foundered, are made on the most approved plan. Drs. Creely and Campbell will meet with success in this new establishment for it is situated in the center of a district where large numbers of horses are stabled. Their acknowledged skill and ability will insure for them a liberal share of patronage, and as this new infirmary is a branch of the well-appointed one on Golden Gate avenue, (which establishment improved and enlarged will still be maintained,) patrons need have no hesitancy in telephoning to either place in case the services of these qualified veterinarians are needed. The success that has attended Dr. Creely speaks volumes for his popularity and professional skill.

Fleetwood's Great Meeting.

The driving club par excellence of New York, presents a programme of events for their meeting which, following the Hartford meeting, will attract the attention of all trotting horsemen in America. It offers $12,500 for a champion stallion race, $6,000 for races for two, three and four-year-olds and $6,000 for other classes to be named hereafter. The fame of Fleetwood track is world wide and its appointments and accommodations are second to no other course in the United States. The officers and members composing the club are representative men of New York, and if, as we understand it, a large number of our best horses are to go East this spring to compete in the races, the owners cannot do better than to make entries immediately for these events. The conditions are liberal and to win even a small portion of these large purses will pay for the investments. The testimony of all Californians is to the effect that the Eastern managers of these courses treat them royally and those who visit this celebrated course will return to California endorsing all that has been said of the people there. The stallion race for $12,500 will be the event of 1893. See advertisement.

Remember that Alward, 13,006, the royally-bred son of the great Onward out of Marietta, the dam of Vateour, 2:28, grandam Smyrna, the dam of Prince Edward, 2:20, and whose great grandam, Snow Bird, produced Mist, 2:29, and Col. Hambrick, the sire of Daphne, 2:19, is one of the great prizes offered Monday, January 30th, in F. J. Berry & Co.'s great Chicago sale.

Catalogues mailed on application.

On January 6th the jockey, Kuhn, came very close to creating a record at Hawthorne Park. He rode the first four favorites and landed them all winners, and but for the fact that he was over-confident on Mrs. Charles McCafferty's Humming Bird, in the last race, would have swept the board. Three of his mounts belong to Tom Kiley.

San Mateo Stock Farm Sale.

New York, January 17.—A large number of representative horsemen attended the opening of the great sale of trotting stock consigned by William Corbitt, of San Mateo, Cal., to Peter C. Kellogg & Co., which took place at the American Institute building to-day, forty-two head changing hands for the handsome total of $61,845, an average of $1,472.

The life of the sale was John H. Shults, the well-known millionaire and horse-fancier, who outbid all his competitors for the most desirable lots, giving $13,000 for the splendid young stallion Regal Wilkes, 2:11; $6,000 for the great young mare Lillian Wilkes, 2:17 at three years; $5,000 for the three-year-old colt Jay Wilkes, and $3,500 for the pacing mare Alanna 2:11. In all, Mr. Shults paid $32,825 for eight head.

The star of the list, in fact, the brigitt particular star of the sale, was Regal Wilkes, 2:11. The six-year-old son of Guy Wilkes and Margaret would have brought much more than he did but for the fact that Mr. Shults bid so smartly that others who wanted the horse knew they could not secure him at anything short of a fabulous price. The best prices were:

Millic Wilkes, 2:26, bay mare, 1887, by Guy Wilkes—Rosetta, by The Moor, John G. Quinn, New York, $1,800; Cho Wilkes, 2:30, black mare, 1888, by Guy Wilkes—Directress, by Director, William Simpson, New York, $1,200; Macey, 2:22, black colt, 1889, by Guy Wilkes—Mamie Conet, by Nutwood, Martin Clark, Scranton, $1,800; Sir Wilkes, 2:19, bay colt, 1889, by Guy Wilkes—Montrose, by Sultan, G. E. Holt, South Vineland, N. J., $1,200; Lillian Wilkes, 2:17, brown mare, 1886, by Guy Wilkes—Flora Langford, by Langford, J. H. Shults, $6,000; Brown filly, 1892, by Stamboul—Tabbie Wilkes, by Guy Wilkes, Santa Rosa Stock Farm, $3,000; Tabbie Wilkes, brown mare, 1887, by Guy Wilkes—Tabbie Rosenthal, by Nutwood, E. H. Harriman, $5,000; Alanna, 2:11, 1887, by Guy Wilkes—Molly Drev, by Winthrop, J. H. Shults, $3,500; Jay Wilkes, 2:23, chestnut colt, 1890, by Guy Wilkes—Sweetness, by Volnater, J. H. Shults, $5,000; bay colt, 1891, by Guy Wilkes—Ruby, by Sultan, Joseph Gavin, Chester, N. Y., $1,450; black filly, 1892, by Guy Wilkes—Ruby, J. H. Shults, $2,500; Regal Wilkes, 2:14, bay stallion, 1887, by Guy Wilkes—Margaret, by Sultan, J. H. Shults, $13,000; black colt, 1892, by Guy Wilkes—Margaret, H. W. Wardwell, New York, $1,100; Adelia, bay mare, 1880, by Electioneer—Addie Lee, by Culver's Blackhawk, W. F. Kirk, New York, $1,950; brown colt, 1891, by Guy Wilkes—Blanche, by Arthurton; George Jacobs, Brooklyn, $1,300; chestnut colt, 1892, by Guy Wilkes—Blanche, J. H. Shults, $1,500; black colt, 1891, by Guy Wilkes—Atalanta, by The Moor, George J. Harvey, Crestland Farm, Great Neck, L. I., $1,650.

The horses that brought over $1,000 the second day were:

Bay filly, by Ruppe—Melrose, Henry Pierce, Santa Rosa, $1,000; Ruppe, brown stallion, 1887, by Guy Wilkes—Sable Hayward, Walter R. Willets, Roslyn, L. I., $9,000; Beverly, black colt, 1890, by Sable Wilkes—Huntress, record 2:30, W. Beckerle, Danbury, Conn., $1,400; bay filly, 1891, by Sable Wilkes—Glen Ellen, J. A. Goldsmith, Washingtonville, N. Y., $1,950; Sable Hurst, black colt, 1890, by Sable Wilkes—Viva, by Sable Wilkes, Danbury, Conn., $2,000; Bob Wilkes, black colt, 1889, by Sable Wilkes—Manda Wilkes, record 2:32, as a three-year-old, made at Stockton, Cal., J. H. Sobnitz, $1,000; Ulee Wilkes, black filly, 1888, by Guy Wilkes—Sable, with a record of 2:23, at Independence, Ia. H. S. Henry, of the King Valley Stud Farm, Morrisville, Bucks county, Pa., $3,000; Leo Wilkes, brother of Sable Wilkes, John Morrison, Jersey City, $1,100; Vida Wilkes, chestnut mare, 1888, by Guy Wilkes—Vixen, with a record of 2:14, Henry Pierce, Santa Rosa, Cal., $2,600; bay colt, 1890, by Guy Wilkes—Rosetta, A. H. Moore, Philadelphia, $825.

This closed the offers from the Corbitt sale. There were twenty-seven horses sold to-day for a total of $43,865, or an average of $1617.22 a head. The total amount realized for the sixty-nine horses in the stable was $105,510, an average of $1,529.13.

The following is the list of trotters sold March 21, 1891, in New York belonging to the same stable and is printed for comparison with the above sale:

Hinda Wilkes, blk m, 6 years old, by Guy Wilkes, 2:15, $5,000; Cognac, blk c, 3, by Guy Wilkes, dam Lottie, by Belmont, $3,500; bay colt, 2, by Sable Wilkes, dam Anteo, Viva, by Anteo, $2,400; Almont, $1,650; blk filly, 1, by Sable Wilkes, dam Woodford Queen, by Almont, $1,150; La Tosca, br f, 3, by Guy Wilkes, dam Rosette, by The Moor, $1,250; bay colt, 2, by Sable Wilkes, dam Huntress, by Arthurton, $1,700; Tasso Wilkes, br f, 2, by Guy Wilkes, dam Tabbie Rosenthal, by Nutwood, W. A. Clarke, Butte City, Mont., $1,000; black colt, 1, by Guy Wilkes, dam Rosa, by Nutwood, $1,500; bay filly, 2, by Guy Wilkes, dam Directress, by Director, $3,100; May Wilkes, br f, 3, by Guy Wilkes, dam Bayview, by General Benton, $1,650; Princess, br f, 2, by Sable Wilkes, dam Minnie Princess, by Nutwood, $2,100; Caro Wilkes, br c, by Guy Wilkes, dam Atalanta, by The Moor, Macey Bros., Versailles, Ky., $1,600; Cecil Wilkes, blk f, 1, by Guy Wilkes, dam Sable, by The Moor, W. H. Crawford, Lexington, Ky., $1,000; Viva, br f, 2, by Sable Wilkes, dam Anteo, Viva, by Anteo, $2,400; brown filly, 1, by Sable Wilkes, dam Anteo Viva, by Anteo; H. & F. D. Stout, Dubuque, Iowa, $3,000; Rosemond, br c, 4, by Guy Wilkes, dam Melrose, by Sultan, $1,900; brown filly, 2, by Sable Wilkes, dam Sylph, by Le Grand, H. S. Goodpaster, Greenville, Ky., $1,600; Nabob, br c, 3, by Guy Wilkes, dam Hatie, by Electioneer, $2,600; Luetta, br f, 1, by Sable Wilkes, dam Hatie, by Tilton Almont, $1,600; black colt, 1, by Sable Wilkes, dam Susie Hunter, by Arthurton, $1,950; black filly, 1, by Sable Wilkes, dam Alice Clay, by Almont, $1,100; brown colt, 1, by Sable Wilkes, dam Oak Grove Queen, by Arthurton, $1,250; Rosanna Wilkes, br m, 4, by Guy Wilkes, dam Young Signal, by Arthurton, $1,400; brown colt, 2, by Sable Wilkes, dam Rosanna Wilkes, by Guy Wilkes, $1,500; bay colt, 1, by Sable Wilkes, dam Rosanna Wilkes, by Guy Wilkes, $1,700; Ventura, br c, by Sable Wilkes, dam Ventura, by California Belmont, $1,350.

The thirty-five horses sold at an average of $1,848.57 each. When it is considered that at the time of this sale in 1891 the trotting-horse market was booming and the prices realized for these youngsters compared very favorably with those of the Palo Alto and L. J. Rose's consignments, the prices realized at the sale just concluded in New York show that the "bottom has not dropped out of the market." Buyers have become educated as to the merits of the stock they want, and are willing to pay good prices for what they consider first-class promising individuals that are bred to suit them. At this sale L. J. Rose, G. Valensin and F. H. Burke also disposed of a number of very good horses. The crowd was a very large one and the bidding spirited.

Toomey's Newest Sulky.

When the bike sulky first appeared many were the conjectures of horsemen concerning the most progressive sulky builders and which of them would introduce the best "pneumatic bike." S. Toomey & Co., of Canal Dover, Ohio, as usual, were the pioneers, and not content with the first ones manufactured, they have persevered until to-day they have the honor of presenting the best truss-axle pneumatic sulky ever made. It will be in universal demand this fall, and every owner of trotters and pacers will be looking to his interest by ordering one immediately. See advertisement.

Tilford, 2:17, the great racing son of Bourbon Wilkes will be the first horse sold on Monday, January 30th at 9 A. M. in F. J. Berry & Co.'s six days' breeders' sale at Dexter Park Horse Exchange, Chicago. His record, 2:17, 2:18 and 2:19, consecutive race heats, is no measure of his speed, while he has no bar or record at the pace, he is known to be a phenomenally fast sidewheeler with a sure prospect to develop into another Robert J. or Flying Jib, if trained at the pacing gait. PRINCESS, THE DAM OF HAPPY MEDIUM.

Where Nancy Hanks Got Her Speed and Staying Qualities.

In the year 1855, Chicago was a city of only about 35,000 inhabitants, but even then it could boast of three race tracks and many good trotting horses, such as the black gelding, Reinder, 2:28; Ike Cook, 2:27; Prairie Boy, Black Ralph, Lady Kate, Lady Jane, Selim and many other good ones that were used as track horses. And the good road horses that were in the Windy City were as thick as fleas in Florida.

During the spring of 1855, David A. Gage, proprietor of the Tremont House, Chicago, purchased a bay mare in New Hampshire and took her to Chicago, and used her as a road horse. This mare was called Topsy and showed considerable speed. At that time I was connected with the Michigan Central Railroad, and running as conductor from Chicago to Detroit. My brother was proprietor of the Briggs House, and had a chestnut gelding called Sorrel Charlie, that was quite speedy for a roadster.

The Tremont House and the Briggs House were rivals in the horse business, as well as in catering to the wants of the human family. During the winter of 1855, we used to drive our horses for speed on the ice on the Chicago River, and it made a grand drive usually from November till March.

In December, 1855, a race was made for a wine supper for ten, between the bay mare Topsy and the Briggs House gelding Charlie, to be trotted on the ice over the river. The supper was to be served at the losing hotel. The race was trotted to skeleton sleighs. Topsy was driven by the old driver, Otis Dimmok, and Sorrel Charlie by the writer. Suffice it to say that the supper was served at the Briggs House, Topsy winning the race easily. This was Topsy's first race. The horses were matched that night to trot the coming May over the Garden City track for $500, mile heats. Topsy was handled by Geo. Bidwell and Charlie by Robert Champlin, both old and experienced drivers in those days. But when the day came for the race to be trotted we found that we could just save $250 by paying forfeit, as it had leaked out that Topsy was a slick piece of furniture and would cook our mutton if we started against her in the race. So our party paid forfeit. A large crowd had gathered to see the race, and to give them a show for their gate money another race was made between Topsy and the chestnut gelding Selim for $200.

The race was to wags, three in five, mile heats. Selim was the favorite 2 to 1; he was a good, steady horse while Topsy proved to be a very good breaker. They had given Topsy a trial a few days before the race, and she had showed them a mile in 2:43 to harness.

Selim was rated at about 2:40. In the best heat Topsy trotted well up to Selim until they reached the half-mile pole when she made one of her standstill breaks, and Selim came within an ace of showing her the flag, in 2:43. Of course it was then dollars to doughnuts that Selim would win the race. But sure things sometimes fail. The second heat Topsy got her right foot forward and, to the astonishment of everyone (her driver and owner as well) just distanced Selim in 2:35. This was good time in those days, and Topsy's stock went up.

Topsy was sold that night to Mr. Andy Daniels, of Chicago, and she was taken to St. Louis and trotted a number of races against local horses there. From St. Louis she was taken to New Orleans and we lost sight of her.

Flora Temple was acknowledged queen of trotters from the time she beat Tacony, "or distanced him," over the Union track in 2:24. This was September, 1856. From that time until 1859 she had few engagements, although she was hippodromed with the black gelding, Lanecet, and other horses, and did not a match race against Ethan Allen to wagon, Ethan making Flora trot in 2:25 to beat him.

In the spring of 1859 Jim Eoff arrived in New York from California with a bay mare, and offered to match said mare against any horse, mare or gelding, mile heats, three in five, two mile heats, and three mile heats, to harness or wagon, for $5,000 each race. Jim Eoff or "Dismal Jimmie," as he was called, was an able trainer and driver, and was considered a first class match maker. He was as cunning as a fox, and a great master of humbug. Eoff got up such a "mystery" and speculation in regard to the bay mare that he brought from California, that the owners of Flora Temple was afraid to match her. But an arrangement was entered into that they should trot three mile heats to wagon on the Eclipse course and divide the gate money. It was given out that they were matched for $2,500 a side, but the truth is that nothing was at stake between them. Now, that was just the kind of race that Eoff was hunting for and a kind of race that he liked to handle. Jim Eoff was a very unscrupulous man. After the arrangements had been made for the races, Eoff gave the name of his bay mare as Princess, and it proved to be the same mare, Topsy, that had trotted in Chicago in 1855.

Eoff took the mare to California in the spring of 1856, and developed her there. While in California she had trotted a number of races. She trotted two races of ten miles against Glencoe Chief, and won both races in 29 minutes 10 1/2 seconds and 29 minutes 16 seconds. The first of these races was for the large amount of $36,500, and the second race for $10,000. Her best mile in public had been 2:30, but she trotted a mile to wagon in a trial with a pacer and beat 2:20, which induced the party to bring her Eastward again. The writer was well acquainted with Jim Eoff, and got the facts of the mare's career while in California from him. Eoff told me a short time before he died in San Francisco, Cal., that he drove Princess better than 2:20 in her trials before she was shipped from California to the Eastern states.

Flora and Princess trotted the first race of three-mile heats over the Eclipse Course, June 16, 1859, in the presence of a great crowd. Eoff had so worked upon the belief of many credulous people that they actually laid bets on seven minutes and thirty seconds being made to wags in the race, which would have beaten old Dutchman's time of 7:32 to saddle. Dry Talman drove Flora and Eoff drove Princess. Before they started there came up a heavy rain storm and the track was very slippery and bad. Princess led for nearly a mile but Flora got to her head and they crossed the score head and head in the first mile in 2:37. The second mile was made in 2:01, the mares on equal terms. Princess led three lengths to the half-mile pole when Flora made a rush and was at Princess' head at the three-quarter pole. Flora then took the lead and won in 7:54.

It was whispered about that Eoff would not let Princess win. He very likely instigated the report himself, for it was part of his tactics to make people believe that Princess could beat Flora whenever he thought best to do so. There is not much doubt but that Eoff had his money invested on the other side of the house.

In the second heat Flora took the lead. The first mile was in 2:37 1/2 and the second in 2:36. In the third mile Flora pulled a shoe off half way up the stretch and broke and many believed that Eoff might then have passed her and won the heat if he wanted to do so. Flora was on a hobble all the way home, but Princess never got to her head and the little mare won in 7:59. About nineteen out of every twenty people believed that Eoff pulled Princess in the last heat on purpose to lose it. But Dismal Jimmie pulled the wool over their eyes and got away with the baggage. He was as slick as grease.

In a week after the three-mile race to wags, Flora and Princess trotted two-mile heats to harness. The betting opened 100 to 70 on Flora but before they started it was even. Talman drove Flora again in that race. Flora seemed rank and wild, while Princess, on the other hand, was quite steady. They went away at a great rate. Princess led Flora to the score in the first mile in 2:26, but Flora was at her saddle.

Flora broke on the first turn, but when she caught she made a resolute dart to close with Princess and got to her head, but made another break, and Princess won the heat in 5:02, and no doubt could have trotted it much faster had she been pressed in the second mile. It was ten to one on Princess after the first heat. She took the lead and kept it all the way and won handily in 5:05. On the 6th of August, these two famous mares again appeared to dispute for victory on the same course, mile heats, three in five, to harness. Princess was the favorite, 100 to 80. The crowd was very great. Flora was driven in this race by Jas. McMann. Flora was in good fix for the race, full of life and spirits. At the word she darted to the front and outfooted the Princess to the quarter in 35 seconds and led Princess thirty yards, but at the half-mile pole in 1:10 1/2 Princess was at Flora's wheel, so she must have trotted that quarter very fast. The mares hung together from the half-mile pole home, Flora winning the heat by a short length in 2:23. Many believed that Eoff could have won the heat if he liked. Princess had shown such a wonderful flight of speed in the second quarter and had closed such a gap so quickly that it was evident she could out-speed Flora at any part of the game.

Flora was half a length behind when the word was given in the second heat but she collared Princess half-way to the turn, and Princess broke and lost five or six lengths. Flora was at the quarter pole in seconds, at the half in 1:03 six or seven lengths ahead, but Princess closed the gap and was at Flora's wheel at the score in 2:22.

In the third heat Flora took the lead and went to the quarter in 35 seconds three lengths ahead. At the half in 1:10 Flora led five lengths, but Princess closed the gap and was head and head at the head of the stretch. It looked critical. Down the stretch they came, head and head, but Flora seemed to out-stay Princess and won the heat and race in 2:23. There had never been anything like such a race before.

Flora Temple and Princess met again at the Eclipse course on the 16th of August to trot two-mile heats to harness. In spite of Flora's grand performance on the 9th many still believed that the California mare was able to beat her, especially at two-mile heats. This feeling was so general (with Dismal Jimmie's help) that Princess was the favorite at $100 to $80. Both the mares were in fine fix and fast time was expected, and they were not disappointed, as before they went home they saw the fastest two-mile heat that ever was trotted. In the first heat Princess had the best of the start and went away at a tremendous gait for a two-mile heat. Flora gained inch by inch, and at the quarter in 35 seconds, Princess had but a neck the best of it. At the half-mile in 1:11, Princess led by a short neck. Soon after passing the pole they were head and head. As they swung into the stretch Flora had a head the best of it. They crossed the score in the first mile head and in 2:25. Flora lead at the first quarter in the second mile by a head, and thus they went to the half, when Princess closed with her. At the three-quarter pole Flora led by a short length, and from there to the score Flora led by a length. The rate of speed seemed to make Princess a little dizzy. Flora won in 4:50 without a skip or break, and both mares trotted some of the heat in a 2:20 clip. The second heat the mares went head and head. The first mile it was a neck and neck struggle in 2:24. In the first turn in the second mile Princess made one of her Jim Crow breaks and threw up the sponge. Flora jogged out in 5:05.

These mares while only trotting for gate money, had shown the two fastest trots and better contested than had then been witnessed, and let the reader remember that these trots occurred thirty-three years ago. The sulkies that the mares pulled weighed seventy-five pounds, and Jim McMann, that drove Flora Temple, was some twenty pounds over weight.

After the above race Dismal Jimmie and Uncle Jim McMann did not let the grass grow under their feet. They were not that kind of people. The mares had a world-wide reputation, and Eoff kept stuffing it down the throats of the people that Princess could and would beat Flora in the next race. They hippodromed the mares all over the country until they got to Kalamazoo, Michigan, when in a race at that place October 15, 1859, Flora Temple, Princess and the chestnut gelding, Honest Anse, started in a race, mile heats, three in five, for a purse of $2,000. The first heat was won by Flora in 2:24. Honest Anse chased her to the three-quarter pole a very fast clip, and then he shut up like a jackknife. Princess was second. The second heat Flora won in 2:22, and Honest Anse was then withdrawn. Flora and Princess started in the third heat. They went to the half mile in 1:09. Flora then cut loose and passed the score in 2:19, and that was a day long to be remembered. It was the writer's good fortune to witness the race, and I never shall forget it. The question of superiority between these beautiful and capital mares had now been fairly tested in the minds of many people, although hundreds were of the opinion that the California mare could have beaten Flora in some of their races, especially in the two-mile heat races.

The last race that Princess trotted was on May 21, 1861, and her opponent was Flora Temple. It was over the Fashion Course, Long Island. Princess went wrong a short time before the race and Flora won in slow time. Princess was then retired from the turf, and as is well known was bred to Hambletonian 10, and produced Happy Medium, and he is the sire of Nancy Hanks, whose dam is Nancy Lee. Any person who ever saw the mare Princess, can see at a glance that Nancy Hanks has to a great extent the formation of the old mare, and is gaited just like her. Princess had a low, stealing gait and trotted with her head straight out. She was rather a light waisted mare and did not look like a mare that could stand up and trot the distance that she did. She was very nervous and vicious in the stable. As stated above, many people were of the opinion that Princess could have beaten Flora in a number of their races if Eoff had wished to do so. In fact, it was proven beyond a doubt that Eoff won a large amount of money in the first and third race that they trotted. The flights of speed that Princess showed in the races were remarkable. She could out-speed Flora in any spot or place when Eoff would give her her head and in her long races in California she had proved herself a stayer from the old house.

So strong was the feeling against Eoff after the race of three-mile heats, June 16th, that, if he could have been found five minutes after the race, his life would not have been worth much. Jim just skipped out of the track and his form was invisible for a day or two. Flora Temple was sold to Wm. McDonald, of Baltimore, Md., during the above races, and after the races had been trotted, as stated above, they hippodromed over the country. It was a tacit understanding with Eoff that Flora should win every race, although the gate money was divided. McDonald was a very wealthy man and would not have Flora beaten for ten times the amount of the winnings, and he made no bones of proclaiming it to his friends during the campaign. And all Dismal Jimmie wanted was his share in the "chicken pie."

In the races that Princess trotted with Flora during the campaign, she seemed to get sour and discouraged. She was naturally an ambitious and nery mare, but we think that by being pulled behind so much, when she could have won, she got sour and lost her courage. And many good judges were of the same opinion. We have seen other horses in the same boat. Now, let the reader judge for himself where Nancy Hanks gets her speed and staying qualities from to a great extent. We give Nancy Lee's side of the house due credit for a share of the glory. As is well known, Nancy Hanks is an inbred Hambletonian. We see that "as usual," your contemporary from the Boston baked bean, brown bread and codfish-hall town, called the "Hub," contends that Nancy Hanks is indebted to a great extent to the thoroughbred for her speed, and as I stated in an article on old Lady Franklin, some months back, he seems to think that every trotter of any account is indebted to old Diomed for his "get there" qualities of speed and endurance. But as he had got old Diomed on the brain, and is entitled to his opinion, we will let him rip and say nothing, but keep sawing wood.

I believe that Princess was the property of Mr. David A. Gage, at the time of her death. She was bred by Mr. Calloway, of Orange Co., N. Y., and I think sold to Mr. Steele, of Philadelphia, and after her usefulness was gone, Mr. Gage bought her to be sure that want and suffering should not overtake her in her old age.—Geo. P. Floyd, in the American Trotters.

L. U. Shippee's consignment to F. J. Berry & Co.'s Midwinter sale represents many dazzling brilliants from the Pacific Slope, and among the great California gems will be found the following prizes: Chief Thorne (2), 2:20, by Hawthorne, greatest producing son of Nutwood, 2:18, out of Daisy, 2:33, dam of Mount Vernon, 2:18. Daisy, 2:33, dam of Chief Thorn (2), 2:20, and Mount Vernon, 2:18, by Chieftain, out of Beauty, by Doc, sire of Occident, 2:16 1/2; bred to Simmons. Disk 13.875, by Director, 2:17, sire of Direct, 2:05 1/2, Directum, 2:11, Evangeline, 2:11, out of Mocking Bird (2), 2:38, by Priam, sire of Frank Beck, 2:47; second dam Western Girl, dam of Honesty, 2:25, by Chieftain. Bay colt, foaled 1892, by Campaign, out of Troser, dam of Aaron S. (2:29), by Hawthorne, son of Nutwood, 2:18, Aaron S. (2), 2:29, foaled 1890 by California Lambert, 2:22, out of Troser, by Hawthorne, greatest producing son of Nutwood, 2:18 1/2. Nizani, trial 2:35, full brother to John C. Shelly, 2:29, by Hawthorne, out of Old Tempest, dam of John C. Shelly, 2:29, by Morgan Rattler. Norma S., trial 2:37, by Breastplate, 2:23, full brother to Moses, 2:19, out of Maud, by Daniel Lambert. Chestnut filly, foaled 1891, by Hawthorne, out of Beauty, by Chieftain; second dam Old Tempest, dam of John C. Shelly, 2:29. These pure brilliants in condition, with two score others, are all going to be sold Monday, January 30th, at the Dexter Park Horse Exchange, Chicago, to the highest bidder. Send for catalogue.

MANY breeders claim that thoroughbred mares bred to trotters never thereafter, when bred to thoroughbred stallions, throw winners—in fact, are tainted and virtually ruined. Notwithstanding this claim, a number of our greatest mares have produced world-beaters after being bred to trotters. Sprightly, dam of Volturo and Elias Lawrence, after having three foals by Dorsey's Goldust, produced the famous horses mentioned. Bourbon Belle, by imp. Bonnie Scotland, was bred to Mambrino Patchen and afterward produced the mighty Hanover. Dame Winnie was bred to the trotters Smutzler, Gen. Benton and Electioneer, and afterward produced that good performer, Diavolo. The Priam mare that threw Bob Johnson was previously bred to Locomotive and Lantern, trotters. Sally Morgan, by Revemme, dam of Sozodont, Longway and Enterprise, was bred to Second Sentinel. Fanny Lewis, by imp. Buckden, was bred to trotters several time ere she produced Slumber, Ecarte and Rico. Any number of such cases might be mentioned which would go far to prove the fallacy of the belief in tainting mares by breeding them to trotters, still many instances can be cited where mares have been mated with jacks and draft horses and afterward thrown foals that much resembled the common foals in every respect.

Col. R. P. Pepper, proprietor of the South Elkhorn Stock Farm consignment to F. J. Berry & Co.'s Midwinter Chicago Sale, comprises one of the grandest lot of youngsters ever foaled on the farm, and includes Wilhelm, by Onward, 2:25, out of Vision, the dam of Erin, 2:19, by George Wilkes, 2:22, Assertion, by Onward, 2:25, out of Cut, by Brignoli, the sire of the dam of Moquette, 2:10, and second dam Crop, dam of Code, 2:24, Counsellor, 2:21, and Blanche Amorv, 2:26, by Pilot Jr. 12, Pelion, by Onward, 2:25, out of Godiva, dam of Acolyte, 2:27, by Egmont; Norvia, by Norval, 2:14, son of Electioneer, dam Lady Innis, by Onward, second dam Kate, full sister to Colmar, 2:22, by Bourbon Chief. Every animal in the collection is a royally-bred one, and the whole consignment is a lot of brilliant gems. Write for catalogue.

WHEN you see a man just entering the breeding ranks hunting around for $60 or $100 mares you can bet your hot-tom dollar that within ten years at most that breeder will have a clearing-out sale, and nobody will want the majority of his stock.

THE FUTURITY STAKES.

The Sixth Payment Made on Eight Foals of 1890.

Three years ago the Board of Directors of the Sonoma and Marin Agricultural Society announced its intention of giving a futurity stake for trotting foals of that year, the race to be trotted at the summer meeting of the society in 1893, and open to the produce of all stallions owned in the district, mile heats, three in five. The purse to be divided into four moneys, viz.: 50 per cent. to the first horse, 25 per cent. to the second, 15 per cent. to the third and 10 per cent. to the fourth.

The entrance fee was fixed at $75, with $25 added for each starter. The proposed race took well among the horsemen of the district, and many entries were made, but every six months as another payment became due quite a number of entries were forfeited. On July 1, 1892, the fifth payment was made on fifteen foals, and on January 2, 1893, eight owners paid up their sixth payment, and as there is now but one payment more to be made (July 1, 1893) the chances are that all the following named colts and fillies will score for the word next August, and a royal race it will be. Here are the entries and a short sketch of each:

The brown filly Secret by Secretary, dam Pastime by Rustic, and owned by Payne Shafter of Olema. Secret is as game as a pebble and is no stranger to the race-goers of this agricultural district, having won the yearling stake in 1891. Last year as a two-year-old she won a heat in the two-year-old trot at Napa, finishing second to Alden W. in the race. Owing to the death of Judge J. McM. Shafter the filly did not start at Petaluma, and was let in her training. Secret should be a great three-year-old, and will come pretty close to winning first money.

The chestnut colt Alwood K., by Woodnut, dam Alice B. by Admiral, owned by M. Kemper, of Oakville, Napa county, is another young campaigner that has shown his ability to trot in fast company. As a yearling he was a cracker-jack, and was the biggest kind of a favorite in the yearling stakes in 1891. The colt, however, went wrong and was defeated by Secret. He has had a two years' rest, and should make the winner hustle to heat him out.

The bay filly Mialma, by Eclectic, dam Minnie Allen by Arthurton, owned by the Page Brothers, of Penn's Grove, is of tried quality. While not a winner in yearling form she was greatly admired for her true trotting action, going the mile like an old campaigner. Mialma's breeding is gilt-edged, her sire being a full brother to the great Arion.

The other five are "green uns" as far as the racing public is concerned. But there is apt to be something mighty speedy in that quietude that will turn out a winner.

Postmaster McNabb will be represented by his inbred Dawn colt, Red Oak, by Oaknut, dam Wildwood, by Dawn. Red Oak has a work of speed and his owner has been carefully preparing him for the past two years. Should Red Oak be first at the outcome it would be a popular victory, for J. H. McNabb is an enthusiastic lover of the light harness horse and a genial gentleman.

San Francisco will be represented by Capt. Harris' bay colt Douglas, by Redwood, dam that good old mare Lena Bowles, by Vick's Ethan Allen.

The bay colt Major Brown will carry the colors of I. De Turk and the good wishes of the Santa Rosa contingent. The young Major is by Philosopher, dam Miss Brown, by Brown's Volunteer.

Dan McGovern pins his faith on the bay colt Executor, by Secretary, dam Kitty, by Don Juan, and as the Secretaries are all trotters from the day of foaling, the son of Kitty is just as apt to turn out a winner as any one of 'em.

Down at the Oakland Trotting Park Lee Shaner is putting the bay colt Treasurer through his paces, and this youngster must be a trotter or else he wouldn't be in Shaner's stable. Treasurer's breeding could not be improved upon, his sire being Secretary, by Director, dam Media, by Anteo, he by Electioneer.—Petaluma Courier.

Capital Turf and Driving Club.

One of the best meetings held in the State last year was that of the spring meeting of the Capital Turf and Driving Club. It gave five days' racing, hung up good-sized purses, was largely attended and gave very general satisfaction.

The club is only one year old, yet it has a membership of about one hundred gentlemen interested in the breeding and training of horses.

Last night was the date for their second annual meeting, and it was held in the parlors of the Golden Eagle Hotel. Among the well-known horsemen present the following were noted: Ed. F. Smith, Isaac Christy, George Meister, J. W. Wilson, Frank Bergman, W. O. Bowers, Homer Buckman, Dr. A. McCollum, Daniel Flint, Thomas Snider, Kirk Todd, Wm. Gardner, Arthur Wilson, James Stafford, Charles Goddard.

The Board of Directors of the club is composed of nine members, three elected for a term of three years at each annual meeting. The names of the three whose terms expired yesterday are J. W. Wilson, W. O. Bowers and George C. McMullen. Much of the success of the club is due to the untiring efforts of these gentlemen, and in recognition of their past services they were complimented by being re-elected by acclamation.

The Board of Directors is composed of the following well-known citizens: A. J. Rhoads, J. E. Terry, C. A. Luhrs, Edwin F. Smith, J. W. Hughes, Daniel Flint, J. W. Wilson, W. O. Bowers and George C. McMullen.

Financially the club is in first-class condition. It has $676.61 in bank, some $1,500 due from members that can be collected at any time, and will secure stakes from different business houses in this city that will send up the purse-sack into thousands. The following stakes were donated at the meeting last evening:

- "Golden Eagle Hotel Stake," by W. O. Bowers, $150.
"Pioneer Hop Stake," by Daniel Flint, $150.
"Agricultural Park Stake," by William Gardner, $150.

It was unanimously decided to offer good sized stakes for one, two and three-year-old trotters. This, however, will be left to the programme committee, which will be appointed later on.

The holding of the Spring meeting it was unanimously agreed should be during the week following that of the Blood Horse Association at San Francisco. The latter will undoubtedly occupy the entire month of April, and consequently the Sacramento meeting will take place during the first week of May.

There will in all likelihood be six days' racing, three for the trotters and pacers and three for the runners. The trotting and pacing will be given during the first three days and the running races during the last half of the week. This is a new departure, they heretofore having been held on alternate days. The reason of this innovation, into what has become a time-honored custom, is that the animals going to sulkies want a hard track, while the hob-tails want plowed ground. By having three days in succession for each class there will be no trouble in having the track so that good time can be made.

There was considerable discussion regarding the offering of stake purses for runners. Many contended that more interesting and better contested events could be obtained by adopting the method of the State Agricultural Society, giving nothing but over-night purses.

After informally discussing many matters pertaining to membership and finance, the meeting adjourned to next Monday evening.—Sacramento News.

Trotting Colt Stakes.

The annual meeting of the Monterey District Trotting Colt Stakes Association was held at the City Hall, Salinas, Saturday, January 7th, afternoon, President M. Lynn in the chair.

The minutes of the previous meeting were read and approved.

The old officers were re-elected, as follows: M. Lynn, President; J. B. Iverson, Treasurer; C. Z. Hebert, Secretary.

Upon motion, the Secretary was directed to receive second payment on nominations to the two-year-old stake of 1893, until Tuesday, January 3d, Monday being a legal holiday.

TWO-YEAR-OLD STAKE FOR 1894.

A trotting-colt stake for foals of 1892, to be trotted in 1894, was opened with the following conditions: The stake to be open to foals of 1892 in Monterey and San Benito counties, the entrance fee to be $50, of which $5 is to accompany nominations, which close February 1, 1893; $10 due January 1, 1894; $10 June 1, 1894, and the last payment of $25 due September 1, 1894. Failures to make payments when due will forfeit all previous payments. The money to be divided into 50, 25 and 10 per cent., and to trot according to rule, distance not to be waived.

The following nominations were then made on the two-year-old stake:

- W. J. Hill names sor f Berigene, by Eugeneer, dam Trixy, by Erwin Davis; second dam Flora, by Dan Voorbees; b f Wickste, by Napa Wilkes, dam May Queen, by Little Dan, a son of Dan Voorbees.

E. P. Iverson names br f Etie E., by Eugeneer, dam by Paul's Abdallah, Hebert & Son names gr f, by Alpheus 8847, dam Maegie Voorbees, by Dan Voorbees; br c, by Val Fleet, a son of Valensin 2,23, dam Lady Nelson, by Mambrino 1789; br c, by Val Fleet, dam Pateben May by Geo. M. Pateben Jr. 31.
M. Lynn names b f by Eugeneer, dam Junieta, by Junio, 2,22; b f by Eugeneer, dam Lady; br f by Alpheus 8847, dam Mary Anderson, by Pirate, a son of Buccaneer.
P. E. G. Anzar names spotted c, by Grosvenor Jr., dam Lalla Rookb, by Eebo.
W. Parsons names sor c by Alpheus 8847, dam Gypsy, by Erwin Davis.

THREE-YEAR-OLD STAKE.

A three-year-old stake was, upon motion, ordered opened for foals of 1890, to be trotted in 1893, open to Monterey and San Benito counties, $10 to accompany nominations, which close February 1, 1893; $15 due June 1, 1893, and $25 due September 1, 1893, the moneys to be divided into 50, 30 and 10 per cent. The following nominations were then made to this stake:

- J. D. Carr names br c Eros Jr., by Eros, a son of Electioneer, dam Bertha, by Carr's Mambrino.
Wm. Vanderhurst names b f Lilly V., by Junio, dam Mamie V., by Carr's Mambrino.
Hebert & Son name br f Etie D., by Altoona, dam Dolly, by Mozart, a son of Ajax 724.
J. B. Iverson names bf Christine, by Christmas, dam Salinas Belle, by Vermont 322.

FOUR-YEAR-OLD STAKE.

A four-year-old stake, to be trotted in 1893, open to Monterey and San Benito counties, the conditions the same as for the three-year-old stake, was then ordered opened, and the following nominations made:

- J. D. Carr names b f Little Change, by Carr's Mambrino, dam Stella D., by Elmo; b g Morning Star, by Hawthorne, dam Lizzie, by Carr's Mambrino 1789; b f Lucky Girl, by Carr's Mambrino, dam by Carr's Mambrino.
Hebert & Son name br c Brno, by Junio, dam Dolly, by Mozart.
The meeting then adjourned, to meet again at the call of the chair.

The following matrons in the great broodmare list are among the great producers catalogued in F. J. Berry & Co.'s Chicago, Jan. 30th to Feb. 4th, sale. Daisy, 2,33, dam of Chief Thorne, (2), 2,20 and Mount Vernon, 2,18, by Chieftain, out of Beauty, by Doc, sire of Occident, 2,16, bred to Simmons, sire of Greenleaf, 2,10, Coralloid, 2,13, and thirty in the list. Polka Dot, dam of Durango Maid, 2,23, and Bertha, 2,29, bay mare, 15,2 hands, foaled 1876, by Senor Madden, son of Sweepstakes, sire of twenty-four in 2,30 list and seventeen others with records better than 2,35, son of Rysdyk's Hambletonian, out of Never Mind, 2,41, could trot in 2,25, dam of W. L. Sprague (4), 2,34, trial 2,29, by Walker's Patchen. Polka Dot is in the great broodmare list; is a regular breeder. Dropped a colt in 1892 to Campbell's Electioneer, and now in foal to Nutpicker, son of Nutbreaker (3), 2,24, by Nutwood, 2,18.

ED. PYLE hits the nail on the head in the following epigrammatic paragraph: Before we can breed extreme speed to a certainty we would have to have the laws of nature changed, so that each foal of the extreme speed producing dam would be of the same size, with bone, muscle and vital organs to exactly correspond. Then they would speed just the same, as watches or locomotives built at the same manufactory.

Breeders' Association.

The annual meeting of the stockholders of the Monterey County Breeders' Association was held in Salinas City last Saturday afternoon.

By unanimous vote of the stockholders present it was decided to withdraw the association's stallion Eugeneer (20450) from public service and allow stockholders three breeding privileges for each five shares of stock owned by them for the season of 1893.

The following named directors were elected to serve for the ensuing year: J. B. Iverson, M. Lynn, D. McKinnon, Wm. Vanderhurst and M. J. Hill.

The annual meeting of the stockholders then adjourned, immediately after which the directors elect met and organized by choosing the following officers: President, J. B. Iverson; secretary, W. J. Hill; treasurer, Wm. Vanderhurst.

On motion, duly made and carried, an assessment of five dollars per share was levied upon the capital stock of the association.

Eugeneer's season begins February 1st and ends July 1st.—Salinas Journal.

The Lexington Stock Farm, O. P. Alford, proprietor, consignment to F. J. Berry & Co.'s grand Chicago Breeders' sale, January 30th to February 4th, comprises a strong array of brilliant youngsters with many promising speed prospects.

This gift-edged stock is by Salisbury, the great son of Nutwood, 2,18, out of Kate, the dam of Homestake, 2,14, by Volunteer, and second dam the dam of the great racehorse, Powers, 2,21, by American Star. In the lot are such great bred ones as Aimee's Baby, by Judge Salisbury, sire of Rory O'More, 2,19, dam Aimee, record, 2,30, by Bayard, a producing son of Pilot Jr. Alice Ward, by Judge Salisbury, sire of Glendine, 2,20, out of Lizzie W., by Abdallah Mambrino, sire of Mattie H., 2,11, etc. Lela to by Barney Wilkes, sire of Wilkes Knox, 2,17, out of Lucy Pope, 2,35, dam of Frank E., 2,19, by Onstaf's Telegraph. Here is a grand opportunity to buy a stallion, broodmare or racehorse of the most fashionable breeding.

Catalogues sent on application.

THERE is more satisfaction and profit in one really first-class brood mare than in twenty of the ordinary every-day sort of animals.

VETERINARY.

Conducted by Wm. F. Egan, M.R.C.V.S., F. E. V.M.S.

Subscribers to this paper can have advice through this column in all cases of sick or injured horses or cattle by sending an explicit description of the case. Applicants will send their name and address, that they may be identified. Questions requiring answers by mail should be accompanied by two dollars and addressed to Wm. F. Egan, M.R.C.V.S., 1117 Golden Gate Avenue, San Francisco.

H. S., Stockton—I have a filly two years old that got hurt on the outside of her fore leg, about three inches below the knee. It looked like a heavy scratch from a nail about two inches long. It has healed up nicely but has left quite a bunch there and it is getting very hard. I have applied a light blister but it does not seem to reduce it. She favors it a trifle. What can I do to remove the enlargement? Answer—Apply the following blister to the part after clipping the hair. Recipe: Benzoate of mercury, one dram; nite, causthetics, one dram; vaseline, one ounce. Mix well and rub into the part with considerable friction. Give her rest from exercise for a few weeks and keep her on soft food.

L. C. F. Oakland—Would you please let me know through the columns of your valuable paper what is meant by "a false quarter" on a horse's foot, and what generally causes it. Or is it merely a quarter crack. Answer—It is a break or separation of the hoof towards the quarter, caused by some injury to the coronary band. The coronary band secretes the forms hoof and an injury to this, such as that caused by a "quarter crack," a tread between the hoof and hoof (where the coronary band is located), or any external injury sufficient to produce violent inflammation, arrests the secretion of hoof at that point, and as the hoof grows down this breach in the hoof grows down also, having a groove called false quarter, "sand crack" or "quarter crack" is a crack or fissure in the hoof, which may, with treatment, be grown out, leaving no mark on the hoof.

Subscriber, San Mateo.—I have two horses that eat soft food all right, but do not appear to care for grain or hay, and don't chew well what they do eat. My horse-shoer says that they have both got the "lam-pas" so he burned them with a red hot iron on the roof of the mouth, as he says to burn off the "lam-pas." He burned them about three weeks ago and they are still fully as bad as at first; it did not help them any. Now what can I do to remove the "lam-pas," or do you think it is the "lam-pas" that is troubling them. They are each about nine or ten years old. What does the "lam-pas" look like? I could not see anything more in the roof of their mouths than in any other horse. Answer—"Lampas" is an inflammation of the palate, just behind the teeth. It is generally caused in young horses by teething, and requires very little treatment. If it is very painful, and much inflamed and swollen it may be scarified with a lancet or knife, but most cases subside after feeding on soft food for a few days without any local treatment. I should judge that your horses, being almost nine years old, are suffering rather from irregularities of the molar teeth, and if possible you should get a veterinary surgeon, or dentist to attend to them. It is probable that they may have some caried or decayed teeth also, which may have to be extracted.

Inquirer.—Belle Button and Tom Ryder paced a mile as a term at Woodland on Thanksgiving Day, in 2:16, lowering their previous record of 2:16 3/4.

P. C. B., Grass Valley, Cal.—Are the names for trotting colts Daytime and Don Juan taken? I think they are both taken but have no register at hand. Answer—We find Don Juan taken, but not Daytime.

N. S., Independence, Ore.—1. Is B. G. Bruce a stud? 2. Who was riding Willie Martin at Sheephead Bay in 1886 in one-eighth of a mile? He was a sorrel gelding by Watson, owned by C. H. Brackett, of Memphis, Tenn. 3. How light did Galbraith ride in 1886 and where did he ride the lightest? Answer—He was, the last we heard of him, 2. Galbraith, 3. 105 pounds, at Memphis.

W. B. C., Walla Walla, Wash.—Please publish the breeding and quality, as far as known, of Lady Signal, wagon record 2:33 3/4, and her sire's breeding. She is the dam of Signal Wilkes, which Mr. Corbitt sold to Mr. Dunnean, of Chico. Answer—There is, we understand, a dispute about this record, and if the mare did not get it she is not standard. Her sire, Signal 327, was by Bunday's Rob Roy, dam unknown.

D. G. H., Vacaville.—I would be much obliged to you if you will inform me through your paper the breeding of the dam and grandam of Western and whether either of them had any records and whether or not they ever produced anything but Western that could trot any. Answer—Dam Lady Livingston (dam of Lady Blanchard, (2:26 3/4), by Gen. Taylor, Whippleton, from Lady Livingston's dam was the Lou Wilkes mare, untraced.

E. J. B., San Francisco, Cal.—Would you please give pedigree of horse named Nordale, owned in Santa Barbara County? Also of Accident? Did they ever win any races? At what distance? If not, were they ever raced and where did they show and what horse did they meet? Answer—Nordale is not in the stud book, but an old horseman informs us that he was by Norfolk, dam by Owen Dale, and that he won races at six furlongs. Accident was by Monday, dam by Hubbard. We know nothing of his racing.

X. Y. X., Grass Valley, Cal.—Please state (in next issue if possible) if bay stallion Reville has a two-year-old record of 2:27, or any record of 2:30 or better. He was recently owned at Dixon. Give pedigree of the old running horse Blomed, also record of trotter Hendricks. Answer—There is no Reville (registered 1482) by New York 524, dam Fleet, by Rearsage 192. He got a record of 2:21 3/4 at Lexington, Ky., in 1887, and was bred in Ohio. Blomed was by Florizel, (dam sister to June, by Spectator. We find no horse named Hendricks with a record as good as 2:30.

G. M. L., Baker City, Ore.—Will you please be kind enough to inform me in your next issue if this colt is standard bred and entitled to registration? Chestnut colt, foaled in 1889, bred by R. G. Welster, owned now by me, named Alfred G., sired by Hinley's Al-mont 614, first dam Lizzie McGregor, by Robt. McGregor 647; second dam Lizzie McGregor, by Dan Welster 888; third dam Lizzie McGregor, by Ivan-boe, thoroughbred. Answer—The horse is standard bred as you say. His dam and grandam will, however, have to be registered before the colt can be given a number in the register.

J. F. M., Harney.—There has been a dispute as to the mare Ada C., by Revenue, as to her being a thoroughbred? There are some here that claim she is not, and we are to have you settle it. Answer—

Bruce says in the preface to his stud book, Vol. 5: "We have adhered to our custom not to fix any standard of what constitutes a thoroughbred. The custom is to call those thoroughbreds having five uncontaminated crosses to a thoroughbred, but none are strictly so which do not trace to Oriental origin. Many animals are in this volume which cannot be traced to the requisite five crosses, but public form has justified their retention." Mr. Bruce being generally accepted as the American authority, as Weatherly is in England, we should say that there being a flaw in the second dam of Revenue, who was by Virginian, the question is settled. Now, Virginian was by Sir Archy (thoroughbred), dam Meritix, by Magog, who was not thoroughbred. The pedigree of Magog will be found on page 433, Vol. 2, Bruce's American Stud Book, and described: "Magog, h. foaled —, bred and owned in 1807 by J. Gordon, Virginia. By Clodius, first dam by imp. Flinnap; second dam by imp. Tom Jones." This is as far as Magog is traced. There are several doubtless pedigrees on the dam's side of Revenue, for instance in Sally Pointer (Virginian's fourth dam), by imp. Sterling, and in the imp. mare Silver, said to be by Blaize Arabian. Therefore, we shall have to decide that Ada C. was not strictly a thoroughbred. "Stone-henge" a well-known authority, declares that no English horse is thoroughbred that cannot be found in Weatherby's Stud Book.

Names Claimed.

I claim the name of WORTHWELL for my bay horse colt, sire Connelius, dam Belle Me. W. O. BOWERS, Golden Eagle Hotel, Sacramento.

JAMES SHERIDAN, who used to start on the Eastern race tracks, but who has of late years been in the West altogether, has gone to Florida for the winter in hopes of there recovering the health that he has impaired by his constant and arduous work at the race tracks. He will find a lot of horsemen there, including M. F. Dwyer and the Brooklyn "inseparable," Messrs. Hyde & Farey. The two latter are now hunting English snipe and duck near Oak Hill, where the former has a handsome cottage.

THE report that Yorkville Belle was on the sick list seems to have been a mistake due to the fact that Red Banner, the filly belonging to Richard Crocker, and which was ill, was mistaken for Yorkville Belle by visitors to the stable. The two horses look very much alike, and that is how the story that the Belle was ill came to be announced. Red Banner is now all right, having fully recovered from the indisposition from which she was suffering.

RECKON, the fast mare belonging to J. A. & A. H. Morris, has entirely recovered from the effects of her fall at Morris Park last October, and will be trained this season, instead of being bred. Amulance has also recovered from the effects of a had quarter-crack, and she will be trained this year. She will make the sprinters some trouble if she retains the speed she had when a two-year-old.

TRISTAN will be at the head of Mr. L. O. Appleby's stud this season instead of being trained for racing purposes, as was at first intended. Stockton will be trained in hopes of getting a few races out of him at the Monmouth Park meeting.

HENRY CLAY DUMAS, of New York, has sold the aged horse Dunboyne to Major S. R. Crumhaugh of the Elkwood Stud, Kentucky, and the good handicap horse is now a stable companion of the Suburban winner Elkwood.

"TINY" WILLIAMS has been engaged to ride for the Avondale Stable next year. The stable is owned by Ed Gardner, the turf correspondent.

IMMENSE EARNING CAPACITY

—OF THIS—

GREAT HORSE!

At the time of the death of Mr. Valensin, Sidney was under a three years' contract with W. C. France, by the conditions of which the latter gentleman was to pay $20,000 per year with a contingent additional payment of $5,000 per year. This contract, by its conditions, terminated on the death of Mr. Valensin; but that astute breeder, W. C. France, promptly offered the Executors to renew it under the same conditions, thus showing the immense earning capacity of this great sire.

Consignment from the ESTATE JAS. P. KERR:

MEMO 15,907.

TRIAL 2:20 1-4.

FULL BROTHER TO FROU-FROU, 2:25 1-4.

Not only is MEMO full brother to Frou-Frou, the champion yearling trotter in the world, but he is also one of the very best-bred young stallions in service, having three crosses of Rysdyk's Hambletonian, one of Harry Clay, sire of Green Mountain Maid (dam of Electioneer, etc.), and Long Island Black Hawk. Through Flaxtall he traces to Canadian Pilot (sire of Pilot Jr. 12), through Bull Pup, sire of Rowdy Boy, 2:13 1/4, and two others. Sidney, Memo's sire, is universally known and recognized as the best young sire in the world as a producer of extreme speed at an early age. The average speed of his progeny is lower than that of any of the get of the twelve leading stallions of America.

MEMO trotted in public in his two-year-old form; was close to Grandee in a race on the Bay District track, the second heat of which was made in 2:31 1/4, the first in 2:32. He exhibited phenomenal speed when three years old, for on the Oakland track he was timed a mile in 2:20 1/4, and frequently trotted quarters in from 32 1/2 to 34 seconds.

He is sixteen hands high, and of powerful built throughout. His color is a glossy black, with both forefeet white. His disposition is all that could be desired, and his action is superb. He is a sure foal-getter, and has yearlings and two-year-old colts that show phenomenal bursts of speed and are splendid individuals.

For Sale Cheap For Cash.

A NUMBER OF

Fine Standard-Bred Mares

(With Foal to Dexter Prince).

Three are registered and the others are eligible to be registered.

—ALSO—

Three Thoroughbred Mares, One by Hyzer All, dam Kate Fletcher, by Harry O'Fallon. One by Kyle Daly; first dam by Joe Daniels; second dam Queen Emma, by Woodburn. One by Bryant W.; first dam by Joe Daniels, full sister to Lord Brock, winner of the Australian Derby last year.

The first mare is Undine, full sister to Lisette, the winner of $10,000 purse last fall in New York. All these mares are for sale cheap. Reason for selling, my ill-health and wish to close out all of my stock. The standard-bred mares are all good individuals as well as the runners. Will sell them together or singly. For full pedigree and further particulars address

C. S. SARGENT, M. D., Stockton, Cal.

FOR SALE.

Intending to put my ranch in fruit, I offer my

Stud of Percherons

For sale at prices less than the cost of weanlings in France. I only intend to keep enough of the stock to work my place, as I am going out of the breeding business. The stock I am offering for sale are the best bred and finest individuals on the Pacific Coast. Parties buying the entire stud will be given a very low price. Time will be given at 6 per cent. interest on approved paper.

For particulars, address WM. B. COLLIER, Lakeport, Cal.

Kentucky Jack.

I have for sale a large, finely-formed and perfectly-proportioned jack. Can be seen at the race track in Petaluma. Information regarding breeding, price, etc. of owner,

DR. GEO. W. LEEK, Cor. O'Farrell Street and Grant Avenue, S. F.

For Sale.

THE Stallion Ringwood,

The Famous Son of Sidney.

Ringwood is a dark bay; black points; 15 1/2 hands, and resembles Sidney in formation more than any of his sons. He is a pure-gaited trotter, and has shown remarkable speed from a colt. With but little work he showed trials of speed in 2:19 1/4 as a four-year-old, and would have received a record of 2:16 or better but for an accident at the Napa track, and was drawn from his engagements, and never has been put in race since. Ringwood is six years old, and as a sire of speed, form and color, is equal to his noted sire, Sidney. Several of his colts have been sold at high prices, and have gone East. He is a sure foal-getter and of fine disposition, and a lady can handle or drive him. Ringwood is highly bred on the dam's side. Alma was by Dashaway (thoroughbred), he by Williamson's Belmont, he by American Boy; second dam Fanny Cob, a noted roadmare brought from Canada to California. Alma is a noted producer of speed.

—ALSO FOR SALE—

Tippoo Tib,

Gelding record, 2:26. Can trot in 2:20 or better; will show quarters in 0:32; 15 1/2 high; light bay; a great road horse; single or double, and perfectly sound. Ringwood or Tippoo Tib can put in training and win their price in one season. For further particulars, address

A. C. DIETZ, Oakland, Or, Breeder and Sportsman Office, San Francisco.

FOR SALE.

STANDARD STALLION

FRED DRAKE 4834,

(Race Record, 2:26 1/4).

By Joe Gavin 564 (sire of six in the list), he by Messenger Duroc 106 (sire of 20 in the list), first dam, Mione Drake (dam of 2 in the list), by Louis Napoleon 207 (sire of 16 in the list). Fred Drake 4844, 2:26 1/4, is a splendid individual; stands about 16 hands high, and weighs over 1,100 lbs., is of excellent disposition. His record is no mark of his speed as he can trot in :20 or better with training next season. Reason for selling is that owner is engaged in other business and has not the time to devote to the horse. Will be sold at a reasonable price. For particulars address

H. R. WARNER, San Gabriel, Cal.

— AT —

Laurel Creek Stock Farm,
SAN MATEO.

Service Fee - - - - $40

Socrates stands 16 1/2 hands, and weighs close to 1,400 pounds. In color, he is a beautiful shade of bay; no white. In disposition he is perfection, while in conformation he is considered by competent judges to be the best stallion of his age and class ever brought to California. His action is perfect, and as he is sound and free from all vices he is recommended to all horsemen desirous of raising large, line-looking, stylish, well-limbed and perfectly matched horses.

Red Wilkes
:: Dictator

DICTATUS

Will make the Season of 1893, commencing February 1st and ending July 1st, at

BELMONT STOCK FARM,
BELMONT, SAN MATEO COUNTY, CAL.

SERVICE FEE.....$150
(Will be allowed to serve fifteen approved outside mares.)

DICTATUS was foaled in 1890. He was sired by the great RED WILKES 1749 (sire of 88 in the list); dam, Miss LOLLIE, by DICTATOR 133 (sire of JAY-EYE-SEE, 2:10, DIRECTOR, 2:17, and 41 others in the list, besides the dam of NANCY HANKS, 2:04, etc.); second dam, Gold Pen (dam of Felina, 2:29 1/2, and grandam of Hill Boy (p), 2:20, by Mambrino Abdallah 2201 (son of Mambrino Patchen 58); third dam by Harold 413 (sire of Maud S., 2:03 3/4, and 41 others in the list and grandsire of Kremlin, 2:07 3/4); fourth dam, Emily Chester, by Mambrino Patchen 58; fifth dam Patsey (dam of Midway), by Snowstorm (sire of Jim Irving, 2:23). He is in color a chestnut, with star in forehead, one hind pastern white. In conformation he is perfect, being about 15.2 hands in height, very short hack, strong over the coupling, heavy quarters, large, well-muscled gaskins and arms; limbs straight, cannon bones short, hocks and joints clean and hony, and feet of the finest kind. His neck, head and body denote an iron constitution. His shoulders are sloping, and, taking him all in all, a more perfect representative of the great Wilkes-Dictator cross does not exist to-day. His breeding speaks for itself. He traces four times to Hambletonian 10 through his greatest sires—GEO. WILKES, DICTATOR, HAROLD and ABDALLAH 15. He traces to Mambrino Patchen twice and three times to Mambrino Chief. His blood-lines are unequalled by any stallion on this Coast.

The best of care taken of mares, but no liability assumed for accidents or escapes.

Training The Trotting Horse.

BY HARLES MARVIN.

This great practical horse book is a handsome, three hundred page octavo, bound in cloth, elegantly printed, superbly illustrated, and explains in every detail the remarkable success of CHARLES MARVIN and the whole plans and methods pursued at Palo Alto as to breaking, training, shoeing, gaiting, driving, keeping, racing and breeding trotters.
Read what J. C. Sibley, the owner of St. Bel, says of this book: "In this work Marvin has let out all the mysteries of the craft, and it is so simple and plain that any breeder, owner, trainer or rubber who has any relish for his business can take a colt as a yearling and develop to the highest and fullest extent that colt's capacity as a trotter. The work impressed me so strongly that I have ordered twenty copies, and shall place one in the hands of every rubber on our farm."
Mailed postpaid for $3.50. Address

To Strengthen the Muscles. ANTI-STIFF To Strengthen the Muscles.

This is a marvelous preparation for Strengthening the Muscular System. With Anti-Stiff there is no fault required; it goes straight for the muscles, and you can eat at work. It has a peculiarly warming, comforting and stimulating effect on all weak or stiff muscles and nerves. Quick in its action, cleanly and pleasant in use. Rub it into the muscles every night for a fortnight, and you will be pleased at its supporting and strengthening properties. There is not, nor has been, anything like it till now. It differs from all Oils, Embrocations and Liniments, both in substance and effect. Some Athletes are so fond of it that they rub it all over them.

The Old Log Stable.

Do you remember that stable, boys,
The one with its deep straw thatch,
With its unhewn logs and chinks between
And oaken door and latch?

Do you remember that stable, boys,
When spring brought a warmer sun,
And while we basked in the kindly rays
What wonderful yarns we spun?

Do you remember that stable, boys,
And the ricks of fragrant hay,
Where so oft we met on moonlight nights
With the neighbor boys to play?

Do you remember that stable, boys,
And the stories of ghosts so white,
And you had to pass by the graveyard lone
To your home in the waning light?

Do you remember that stable, boys,
When the ground was cold and bare,
And we cut a slice with the old bay knife
And foddered the cattle there?

Do you remember that stable, boys,
When the snow was drifting deep,
And the inmates dumb from the blinding storm
Were safe and sound asleep?

Do you remember that stable, boys,
But why do I ask this of you
When to naught of my own of all that's past
Is memory more fond and true?

Yes, you'll remember that stable, boys,
And the scent of the new-mown hay,
Till over the hill the sun is gone
And the earth has faded away.

IDLEWILD'S FOUR-MILE RACE.

How the Great One-Eyed Mare Defeated Jerome Edgar.

When the late Captain Thomas G. Moore, the well-known turfman, was asked shortly before his death what one of the numerous racehorses he had ever owned he thought the most of he answered, unhesitatingly, "Idlewild, sir, by long odds. On the day that she ran her four miles in 7:26, over the deep and slow course on Long Island, she recorded a better performance, in my opinion, than Lexington, Lecompte, Ten Broeck, Fellowcraft or any other fast four-milers of my day. Yes, sir; I think that one-eyed mare that day was the best four-miler ever stripped on an American race course. She carried 117 pounds, as a four-year-old mare, and galloped four miles on a slow track in 7:26. Match it if you can."

And now that the former owner of Mollie Jackson, Stonewall Jackson, Privateer, Foster, Idlewild and a number of other great long-distance horses has left the arena of life, few will gainsay his statement as to the great merit of Idlewild's four miles at Centerville, Long Island. Foaled in 1859, Idlewild, in the spring of 1868, at Paterson and Philadelphia as a four-year-old, had shown some good performances, as noted in my two last sketches of early racing at those two places. After the Suffolk Park meeting in June closed with some meritorious races on the last two days between the horses Captain Moore and Lodi, also Jerome Edgar and John Morgan, and two wins by Mammona, the horses were pointed for a race meeting two weeks later at Centerville, Long Island. Idlewild and Blackbird had been matched at Suffolk Park for $10,000, three-mile heats, but the latter paid forfeit, after Idlewild's two-mile heat win on the opening day from John Morgan and Reporter.

Two weeks later, on June 25, 1863, a three day's race meeting at Centerville was begun. It was gotten up under the auspices of Captain T. G. Moore, the cause for his sponsorship of the meet being a somewhat peculiar one. In short, his mare Idlewild was so good that the embryo Saratoga Racing Association, which was to open its race course at the Springs in the following August, had harred Idlewild out from its prospectus of purses and stakes. This unprecedented action was taken to insure the entry of other horses, who would not compete against the great mare for second money, and the Passaic Agricultural Society of Paterson took the same action as to Idlewild in its fall announcements for 1868. James S. Watson's horse Captain Moore was also barred from one stake at Saratoga and two at Paterson.

These rather unsportsmanlike actions left Tom Moore with virtually no alternative but to take his strong stable West again, and as a sort of farewell to the Eastern turf public he arranged the three days' meeting at Centerville, ably assisted by James McGowan, who was the secretary of the course. If any of those early friends of Secretary McGowan, or later ones at Brighton Beach either, wish to extend to him the greetings of the season in Brooklyn they can find out his address at the office of The Sporting World. One of the few old timers left to connect past racing to the present James McGowan is well deserving of substantial sympathy in his present enforced retirement.

So by the last week in June the stables at Centerville, L., I. found many of the horses domiciled there who had been racing at Paterson and Suffolk Park. The railroad facilities for getting to the course, however, were very primitive and decidedly unequal to the demand, and most people who could vent by road in preference. On the first day the sport was of a light order, only two races taking place. Dr. Weldon's Lizzie W., 3 years, by Scythian, 87 pounds, won one at mile heats, beating F. G. Murphy's Southerner, 3 years, by Oliver, 90 pounds, in two heats, 1:47 and 1:48. The other, a mile and a quarter, went to T. G. Moore's Mammona, 5 years, by Sovereign, 111 pounds, who defeated two others in 2:14. Betting—Mammona 100 to 10; and Auctioneer Underwood could get few takers for the short end at that.

The second day's sport, however, was the best of the series and drew out fully 3,000 people. A four-mile dash was the attraction with Idlewild, Reporter, Jerome Edgar, and Dangerous as entries, and as the track was in as good order as it could be made, fast time was looked for. But compared with the specially prepared courses of to-day the old Centerville courses was away behind in speed. At the track Reporter was found to be lame, and he was scratched, but Mr. Francis Morris started instead of Dangerous, by Bonnie Scotland, a very handsome chestnut horse and a fair performer also. Mr. John M. Clay was represented by Jerome Edgar, by Star Davis, who had won good races at Paterson and Suffolk Park, while Idlewild started for "Tom" Moore.

With Davison to ride Dangerous, Gilpatrick Jerome Edgar and Patton Idlewild, the three horses were well served in the matter of jockeyship, but the pools at Idlewild $100, field $25, looked as if the race was considered a foregone conclusion for the one-eyed mare. Jerome Edgar was thought to be a bit short of work, but the contrary was the case, and he ran a great race. So good, that had any of his people imagined he would show four miles over that slow course in 7:27 he would have been backed to beat Idlewild or any other horse that could be produced against him. Dangerous was only considered as a possibility.

In her preliminary Idlewild came out with bandages on her legs, which looked rather ominous to her backers, but as she moved up the stretch like a bird with her blind eye, the left one, to the crowd, she looked fit to run for a kingdom. Colonel W. G. Buford, of Kentucky, who bred the great mare, and Mollie Jackson as well, had a side bet with John M. Clay, owner of Jerome Edgar, the two gentlemen betting on time. Fashion's 7:32 was previously the best four miles ever run in this vicinity, and wagers were freely offered and made at Centerville that both Idlewild and Edgar would heat it. And they did by a long way.

The saddling of the three horses over, the "toilet" of each having been witnessed by an interested crowd, the course was cleared for the race. In the drawing for positions Dangerous got the pole, Idlewild the second place and Jerome Edgar the outside, the latter setting the pace in the first mile slow, with Idlewild next and Dangerous last, the three horses a couple of lengths apart. This mile was run in the slow time of 1:59, and Edgar's owner at once signalled Gilpatrick to "go on" with his horse, which he did, running the second mile in 1:48. But Patton on Idlewild, never letting go of the mare's head, was right with him, shadowing him closely, a couple of lengths back, and ending the third mile, run in 1:51. Jerome Edgar's three lengths' lead of Idlewild was still the same.

Here Dangerous was plainly beaten, but the other two were going so strongly that it was plain to be seen that the last mile would show a faster pace than any yet. And so i proved, for beginning the last mile the leader increased his clip, and as Patton let out a wrap on Idlewild, the mare did the same. On the backstretch Idlewild began to close the gap, which set the crowd shouting, and at the half she was close behind Jerome Edgar, "treading on his heels," in turf parlance. The run to the three-quarter saw her close up to Jerome Edgar's neck, but the latter gamely held her there as they swung into the homestretch nearly level. As the two horses came rushing home neck-and-neck the crowd went wild with excitement, as neither jockey had yet gone to the hat.

But nearing the last furlong Gilpatrick's whip hand was seen to rise and fall, and his spurs were driven home on Jerome Edgar's shining flanks to hold his place. But the one-eyed mare alongside of him, relentless as fate, began drawing away under a pull, inch by inch, but still leaving Jerome Edgar behind at every jump. Then the crowd set up a roar of greeting as the two horses dashed past, Idlewild under a pull with her ears pricked, heaving game and stout Jerome Edgar only a scant two lengths. Dangerous was at the furlong pole when the others finished.

The time when hung out, 7:26, was matter for fresh applause. The last mile was run in 1:47, the fastest of the four, and all hands knew that they had seen the best four mile race from a weight and track standpoint ever run in America up to that day. Lexington's 7:19 and 7:23 at New Orleans were made on the specially prepared Metairie Race Course, while that great horse, Idlewild's sire, only had up 103 and 103 pounds in each race, and he by January racing rules a five-year-old. Yet Idlewild, a mare, put up 117 pounds as a four-year-old and recorded 7:26 at Centerville. It was a great performance. Twelve years later her son Wildidle, at San Francisco, ran four miles in 7:25 with 114 pounds, and William Lakeland up, beating Grinstead for the Wise plate.

Truly a family of four milers—Lexington, Idlewild, Wildidle. Father and daughter each run four miles in the best times of their day, and then the grandson of the horse and the son of the mare almost equals the deeds of each. I say almost, for while Wildidle beats his mother's time three-quarters of a second, from a time and track standpoint, all conservative students of racing will look on Idlewild's race as the best by long odds. The old mare was well nigh invincible on that noteworthy day, in the leafy month of June, 1863, over the old Centerville course.—The Gleaner in the HorseWorld.

The Oregon Trotter, Jane L.

Jane L., a mare that was bred in Oregon about ten years ago, and that while still owned in the far West made a record of 2:19, is in foal to Wilton. Out on the Pacific Coast Jane L. in her day was quite a trotter, and so sanguine were those who had seen her perform that she would be a good one in the 2:20 class through the big circuits of the East that they finally brought poolseller Armstrong, who was West for his health one winter, to the same way of thinking, the result being that when he came home he brought the mare with him. For some reason, which has never been explained to those who were familiar with the mare's history, she was never able after leaving her birth-place to show anything like the speed that had made her locally famous out there. The spring after Armstrong brought the mare from California she was placed in John Splan's stable, but the best that master of the trainer's art could get from her was a mile in about 2:24. Since then she has been in the breeding ranks, and ought to accomplish something as a producer, being fairly well bred. She is by Hambletonian Mambrino, and out of Mollie Welch (dam of Hannibal Jr., 2:27), by Paul Jones. Hambletonian Mambrino, the sire of Jane L., was bred by E. S. Wadsworth, of this city, twenty-one years ago, Mr. Wadsworth being at that time the owner of Menelaus, a son of Rysdyk's Hambletonian that was bred by Mr. Chas. Backman. Hambletonian Mambrino was purchased from Mr. Wadsworth when a suckling and taken to Oregon. He is now the sire of eight representatives in the 2:30 list, two of them having records better than 2:20, and considering the limited opportunities afforded him by the class of mares that naturally came to an Oregon stallion, has done remarkably well. In fact some of the far west horsemen who were acquainted with Electioneer and have also had a chance of seeing Hambletonian Mambrino say that the two horses greatly alike in many respects and that had the Oregon stallion been so fortunate as to be placed at the head of a great stock farm early in life he would have made a great name for himself as a sire. Menelaus, the sire of Hambletonian Mambrino, was in some respects a queer sort of a horse and barring the fact that he was a son of Hambletonian there was not much to recommend him in the eyes of a horseman, and when it came to the question of speed it is doubtful if he could go ten miles an hour at any gait; at one time he was, through the courtesy of Congressman John L. Mitchell of Milwaukee, kept on that gentleman's farm, but Mr. Mitchell did not fancy the brown stallion and bred no mares to him. Menelaus died in 1884 and his 2:30 list consists of eight trotters and two pacers, his daughter Altona having a record of 2:16 1/2 pacing, and 2:22 trotting. In addition to this three sons of Menelaus were sires of 2:30 speed at the close of 1891, so that although the old horse was not so much of a success as some other sons of Hambletonian he was nevertheless an addition to the horse-breeding interests to this part of the country. His dam was Jessie Bull, a daughter of Long Island Blackhawk that also produced Black's Hambletonian, the sire of four in the 2:30 list; Hamblehawk, the sire of two, and Blue Grass, the sire of one, these figures being to the close of 1892. This season there appears in the list of new sires the name of Romeo, a horse that was the fastest of the get of Menelaus. During his colthood Romeo was kept in Chicago, where he was bred, and frequently shown at speed up and down one of the streets in the outskirts of the city with a boy on his back. He was one of the bold young kind, reminding those who saw him of Dexter, but various circumstances combined to prevent his making as fast a record as his speed entitled him to, his best mark being only a trifle inside of 2:30—Dutton's Spirit of the Turf.

Australian Horse Notes.

ALUM, by Idalinm, carried 107 pounds and ran second to The Bud in the Nidric handicap.
 NINETY-ONE pounds is now fixed as the lowest weight in any handicap on the flat in New South Wales.
 LORD COXCOMB, by Chesterfield, ran second in hurdle race at Moonee Valley, Melbourne, packing 142 pounds.
 AT Maribyrnong, Melbourne, Submission, by The Hook, won The Horatio handicap, running the four furlongs in 49 seconds.
 THE Sandhurst Cup, one and one-half miles, was won by W. Osborne's Leviathan, 110 pounds. Leviathan is by The Hook, now owned by E. J. Baldwin.
 MOSCOW, three years, by Suwarrow, ran second in the open welter handicap, at Ascotdale Park, Melbourne, and won welter handicap at Epsom. Suwarrow, the sire, is now owned by W. O'B. Macdonough.
 LITTLE BERNIE, by Cheviot, won the Rosehill December Stakes on December 10th, 122 pounds, beating a field of twenty-two (one and one-quarter miles and 100 yards). By the courtesy of Mr. Hart, chief officer of the Mariposa, we have seen a telegram that Little Bernie, with 113 pounds up, won the Summer Cup, one and one-half miles.

An interesting account of old Hogmanay's performances has been compiled by "Javelin." "By way of showing how Hogmanay's favors have been distributed, the amounts realized in excess of his selling prices by the various clubs on whose courses he has run total £2,071 for twenty-four races. He has won races on seventeen different courses, viz., Towong, Flemington, Dowling Forest, Richfield, Dandenong, Oakleigh Park, Miners' Rest, Sherwood Park, Moonee Valley, Caulfield, Sandown Park, Elsternwick Park, Mentone, Williams-town, Ascotdale Park and Epsom. He won six races in 1886, two in 1887, nine in 1888, four in 1889, thirteen in 1890, seven in 1891 and six in 1892; it will therefore be seen that the old fellow's most successful season was when he was ten years old. During Hogmanay's long career on the turf he has frequently changed hands, but a majority of his most recent victories have been in a great measure due to the skillful treatment at his present mentor, Mr. I. T. Carslake, of Caulfield, whose exceptional skill in patching up cripples is proverbial. That Hogmanay was one of these is undeniable, but in the hands of his clever trainer his blemishes appear to have become callous, and as age apparently cannot wither him, it is possible that the gallant old gelding may go on winning selling races ad infinitum. Hogmanay's winnings in stakes alone aggregate £4,500."

Horsemen, Attention!

Dr. Thos. Bowhill, Fellow Royal College Veterinary Surgeons, was elected Fellow of the Royal Physical Society of Edinburgh (instituted in 1771) last month, in consideration of his microscopical investigations. This is quite a valuable recognition by his fellow-countrymen, although he is far away. Dr. Bowhill has been delivering a series of lectures on bacteriology at the University of California, medical department, during the past year. His work was well received, and he will continue the course through the present session. The doctor is fitting up a laboratory, and will be thankful for any specimens from diseased and dwarf animals that our stockmen may have any doubts about. The specimens to be of any use must be preserved in alcohol and forwarded to this office without delay, and the history of the case from which the specimen obtained. Dr. Bowhill also agrees to visit localities within fifty miles of San Francisco to investigate animal diseases, the only charge being the actual expenses.

Owners of Sidney Foals.

EDITOR BREEDER AND SPORTSMAN:—I wish to notify the owner of Sidney colts that all foals of 1890 by him, regardless of ownership, are in the Stallion Representative Stakes of Kentucky for 1893, worth not less than $10,000, all forfeits paid to within ten days of race. Also, that all of the get of Sidney foaled in 1891 are eligible in three races (Stallion Representative Stakes, Kentucky), to be trotted respectively in 1893, 1894 and 1895, each worth $5,000. In each of these stakes $25 must be paid by those expecting to start June 1st of year of race.
 W. W. MENDENHALL.

MR. SHAWMAN, of Payette, Idaho, is offering Florence R., 2:26 1/2 by Nutwood, for sale. She has two colts, a yearling and a weanling, that show her to be a first-class producer.

The Horse.

[First of the eleventh Lane course of public lectures, delivered January 13, 1893, by Dr. L. C. Lane, at Cooper Medical College, San Francisco.]

Before entering on the consideration of the horse, the subject selected for this address, some prefatory remarks should precede in which his place in the animal kingdom should be indicated.

A century ago the first practical classification of the animal kingdom was given by the world by Cuvier, a French naturalist. Prior to this, Linnaeus divided natural objects into three groups, viz., minerals, which grow; plants, which grow and live, and animals, which grow, live and feel. Such a classification aided the naturalist and student but little in their work. Cuvier, from his exhaustive study of animated nature, discovered that though these exist there in finite variety and boundless diversity, yet on surveying the subject comprehensively he saw that the countless individuals of the animal kingdom could be separated, according to their structure, into four grand divisions, as follows:

1. The vertebrates or backbones, in which there exists a brain and spinal cord contained in a bony case. This class comprises mammals, birds, reptiles and fishes.
2. The mollusks, which have a soft integument, and the nervous system is arranged on each side of the intestinal canal. The oyster and mussel are representative of this class.
3. The arthropods, or many-jointed group, of which the nervous system lies on the front of the abdominal cavity, and their bodies consist of a succession of soft and hard sections. The bee and ant are examples of the many-jointed class.
4. The remaining group consists of animals which have bodies of radiated form, and their nervous system is a star-like disposition; examples of this class are sponges, star fishes and the Portuguese man-of-war, and numerous specimens of these stellate objects can be found on the neighboring beach.

Numerous other classifications of the animal kingdom have been given by those who sought to improve this of Cuvier; yet his still remains, commended by its simplicity and easy application; so easy, indeed, that I am sure any of the students whom such a classification has hitherto been unknown will be able hereafter to assign to any animal they may see to its proper place in one of these great divisions.

So great was the fame which Cuvier acquired in natural history, that his portrait has been honored with a place as a fresco painting on the ceiling of the Museum of Geology, near the palace of the Luxembourg. He is there represented in full figure alongside of the genius of Science, in supernatural form, is teaching him the natural history of our globe.

If the classes of Cuvier be constructed into a pyramid of four stories, man may be conceived as standing on the summit, while the broad base is occupied by the many-jointed and the star-shaped classes, and just beneath and including the summit stands the mammals, in which the horse is found.

Mammals which are similar in their respects are often distinguished by the number and form of their teeth. The form of the crown of the tooth tells so much of the history of the animal, that from a fossil tooth of a species which has become extinct the naturalist decides the kind of food on which the animal subsisted. Thus the amusing story is told of Cuvier that some one brought him a tooth of which it was reported that it was one which the Devil had lost. Glancing at it, he said it had belonged to a carnivorous animal.

The dental formula of the horse is as follows: Six incisors, two canines and fourteen molars, above, and six incisors, two canines and twelve molars, below; in all making forty-two teeth. Man has thirty-two teeth. The canine teeth are often wanting in the mare and sometimes in the horse, and in both they are imperfect. The great number of the molars which grind the food identifies the horse as an herbivorous animal. Homer speaks of the steed "champing his golden grain." There is a gap, called the bar, between the incisor and molar teeth, in which the bit rests.

The horse has peculiarly shapen molar teeth, and this shape characterizes this class of animals. This dental form has enabled the naturalist to discover the fossil horse, which has been found in the most of Europe and North America. The fossil horse of America remains of the horse have been discovered which were in a state of transition between the present species and the original forms, for like many other animals, in the course of ages the horse has undergone many changes in his form. Fossil remains of him show that he was once a small creature, so small, indeed, that our Shetland pony would be a giant compared with him. In his diminutive form the horse's foot was provided with four toes in front and three behind. Such were the feet of the horse in the miocene age of our earth; but as time passed these toes underwent transformations, and finally they were fused into their present soliped form.

In obedience to the principles which obtain in the development of organized beings, the legs of the horse have become simplified from the mammalian type, when analyzed, the knee of the foot corresponds to the human wrist; the next part named, the cannon bone, is the middle bone of man's hand; and the next two, called the crown and the coffin bones, correspond to the second and third joints of the human finger. In the hind leg the hock or knee corresponds to man's ankle, and the next long bone answers to the third metatarsal bone in the human foot, and the remaining bones correspond to the first, second and third middle or third toe. The part above the knee corresponds respectively to man's forearm and lower leg. The horse's hoof corresponds before and behind respectively to the nail of the middle finger and middle toe. And in the several parts of the limb are found vestiges or remains of bones which have undergone a dwarfing, in brief, the well-shapen hoof of the horse was once the nail of his hind toe, and that toe, after its fellows were dropped, has become the shapely leg.

The horse, like other solid-footed animals, has no collar bone. And his stomach is so shapen that it does not permit regurgitation; hence he cannot ruminate or chew the cud, as the cow does. He has muscles by which he moves his skin, a property which only our possessors on some parts of his head. The sense of touch in the horse is best developed in the upper lip, and by eversion the lip can remain subdued, as if he disgust of something, with which he has come in contact by smelling, touching or tasting.

There are about forty varieties of the horse, and these differ in form and dimensions. The Shetland horse belongs to the most diminutive type; while the Beluim horse used in drawing great burdens is a noble animal, whose size, height and clamor, that his attempt to trot is a ludicrous sight. The Arabian horse has a remarkably short neck; so short, in fact, that it seems a deformity to one accustomed to the sight of the horses of our country. The most beautifully-formed horses are to be seen, on a Saturday afternoon, in Regent Street or Hyde Park, in London; the beholder is charmed by their color, form and movement. One thing, however, pains the American's eyes, that is, the cropped tails of the horse. Except this, the elegantly-shapen, mouse-colored and daintily-stepping horses there fascinate and delight the eye. And a similar sight I recall in New York, when, in the "golden prime" of Bloomingdale Road, horsemen sped there, their flying teams. Foremost in that maddened scene were Bonner and Vanderbilt, each wildly trying to leave the other in his dust. And to me, a witness of this contest, the greatest wonder was how the vehicles in their reckless velocity did not collide and dash each other to pieces. In fact, they seemed to solve the problem in mathematics of two lines ever approaching each other, and yet never touching each other. Or, if they did touch, the driver's immunity verified the doctrine of the Philosopher Berkeley, that impinging bodies do not touch each other.

From the wild periods the horse, with other domestic animals, became the servant of man, and through the care of the latter, the horse has been improved and much altered in his form. If, however, he be allowed to run wild, his form soon deteriorates; he becomes misshapen, has a large clumsy head, and his hair becomes frizzled and of a chestnut by color. Such wild horses exist on the plains of the Argentine Republic; they are also found on the island of Hawaii, where the horse, ox, goat, hog and turkey have returned to their wild state. Mr. Horner, a resident of this island, told me that, however wild such horses become, they can be subdued by the Kanaka. When the latter mounts such a horse the steed cannot dislodge the rider; the man holds his place despite the frantic efforts of the horse in every direction, falling and rearing. The reluctantly yielded his liberty, but when he falls the animal remains subdued thereafter. The old fable told by Horace is retold: The horse engaging in combat sought an ally in man; the latter, once seated on the horse's back, remained there ever afterwards. Nor need one seek in fable for illustration; our own State has been mounted by many riders, who, in the form of commissions and other useless incentives are having a pleasurable ride on its capacious back.

The horse is found among all nations, whether cultured, half-civilized or barbarous. The name of the horse and Arabia are closely interwoven; he is the most prominent figure in the wars, brigands in love, romance and chivalry of sons of the Sahara. The love of the horse has passed into the heart of sons of the desert. He is the inseparable comrade of the chief of the tent; of him the latter sings and chiefly talks.

This intimate relationship between this noble animal and the sons of Ishmael has furnished some of the most interesting chapters in the literature of the horse, so that I am justified in borrowing largely from these sources in a lecture on the horse, especially as it will enable me to bring the generous treatment of the animal by the Mussulman in contrast with the barbarities often practiced on the horse by those who claim to have a higher morality and a higher culture.

Says an Arab proverb, "The good things of this life and even of the next are suspended from the hairs between the eyes of your horses."

The prophet gave two-thirds of the prize money won in races to those who had accompanied him on the best horses. This inspired the best care for the horse.

According to Mahometan account, Allah created the horse out of the south wind, and the work was preceded by the divine command: "I will that a creature shall proceed from thee, O wind! Conduce thyself. Then an angel came and presented the creature to Allah, who blessed the animal, saying, 'Good fortune shall attach to the hair that falls between the eyes.' And as a sign of glory and good fortune a star was made in the middle of the forehead of the horse."

After the horse, the first man, Adam, was created, who found himself in the presence of the animals, the horse and borak, with the privilege of choosing which one he preferred. Adam chose the horse, while the famous animal, borak, was reserved for Mahomet, for, according to Moslem tradition, the Prophet made his celebrated pilgrimages to heaven on borak, where, having approached within a bowshot of the throne, he received messages from Allah.

After the creation of the horse Allah said: "I have made nothing more dear to me than the horse and the horse." After Adam the first man to mount the horse was Ishmael.

The Arabians believe that the color of the horse is determined by the nature of the earth on which he lives, and that where the ground is rocky the color is gray, but in ch. lky places it is white. As marks which indicate excellence of blood and purity of descent are the following: Thin lips, wide nostrils, thin nostrils, the carotids, with a broad chest. If he be thoroughbred the horse has no vice, and he will permit no one except his master to mount his hack. Such a horse fleetly carries his master, as well as the arms, food and standard of the latter.

On the occasion of one of his victories, the conquered tribe presented to Mahomet five mares. The prophet, however, refused them with his hand, and said: "Blessed be ye, O daughters of the wind! He who keeps and trains a horse for the cause of Allah shall surely have his reward; his sins shall be forgiven."

The favorite steed of the prophet was named The Torrent. In the Koran the horse is named The Treasure, and in his divine book the Prophet is made to say nothing undone to find food for his horse. To do this he is hidden, if he be necessary to the care of his children. It had been well for the horse, if, in the Bible of the Western nations, some similar command had been written. In reference to his favorite dog Byron wrote the line: "Denied in heaven the soul he had on earth." The Moslem endows his horse with the gift of prayer, and according to him the animal prays three times a day. In the morning his occupation is: "O Allah, bless me, be the friend of my master! At noon: Do well by my master that he may do well by me! And he closes the day with the prayer: May my master enter Paradise on my back!"

As a command to properly care for the horse, a close companion of the prophet said: "Love your horses; tend them well, for they are deserving of your tender affection. Treat the horse like your own brother; nourish him with the best of your food, and your family; do not neglect these commands or you will repent of it here and hereafter."

As a promise to his faithful followers, Mahomet said that when they had entered Paradise each would ride a horse of rubies. It was also said that evil spirits do not enter a tent in which there is a well-bred horse, and that those who run horses have about themselves the guardianship of angels.

According to the Arab's religion, money which is spent in the care of horses is the same as that spent in alms to the poor. Indeed every grain of barley that is given to the horse is inscribed in the Register of Good Works.

Abi-El-Kader, who was a devout lover of the well-bred horse, says that he has three things long three things short, three things broad and three that are clean. The things which should be long are the ears, the neck and the forelegs; the three short are the dock, the hind legs and the back; the three broad things are the forehead, chest and the crupper, and the three clean things are the eyes, the skin and the hoofs. And the eyes should be turned inward like a man who squints, thus doing like a beautiful coquette who loves with her eyes, his horse's eyes should be turned inward like the carotids, with his nostrils should be wholly black; and the hair of his fetlock should resemble the down underneath the eagle's wing, and the frog beneath his hoof should be akin to the date-stone in hardness.

The rushing courser makes a sound like wings in motion, and his neighing is like the mournful note of a bird. The elegance of a horse of perfect form is like the picture painted in a palace. The horse, when of faultless proportions, can stand erect on his feet, and drink water that flows at his feet.

In this description of the perfect horse Abi-El-Kader reveals his ardent affection for the horse, and also a glimpse of the poetic vein which runs in the Oriental character.

The Arabian care for the horse begins at its birth, for no sooner has the foal seen the light than it is crowded into its arms, or rolled up and down amidst the wildest noise and uproar, in which all the neighbors join, and these loud sounds being the first which salute the ears of the young creature, he becomes so accustomed to the noise that no sound can afterward frighten him. A prayer is then said in which all join: "May Allah bless thee." And the delighted owner closes with the exclamation: "Our Lord, Ishmael has entered our tent!" Some after the foal is born amulet is hung about its neck. If it be born on a journey it is placed on the back of a camel to protect it from fatigue. When the time arrives for weaning the foal, a band armed with porcupine quills is placed around its nose.

Among the Arabs it is customary to commence the training of the horse at a very early age, and in this way he is rendered active and his management by no means a hard matter. At the age of thirteen months he is mounted by a child, who rides him short distances. Thus, in the work of training the foal, the child soon becomes an expert horseman. The first time the boy mounts the foal he is taught to exclaim: "Glory to Allah who has subjected the horse to us."

In his work of training the Arab never speaks to his horse except in a low voice, and he never speaks to him in a passion, and any reprimand which he gives is given in a low voice, and with a calm mildness than those harsh tones mingled with profanity which in our streets one often hears from drivers!

By his gentle yet patiently continued training the Arab acquires a control of his horse far beyond anything known among us. His horse is taught to stand still by merely throwing the rein on the ground and placing a stone on it. Such discipline dispenses with hitching posts and blocks.

The Arabian proverb is that aneels have two missions in this world: To preside at marriages and at the courting of horses.

Racing seems to have been a popular amusement among civilized men of all ages. The chariot tournament was one of the remarkable contests in the famous Olympian games. These contests were celebrated by the Greeks in some of the best times of their history. Near Athens are seen the remains of the stadium where games on foot and in chariots were celebrated. On the banks of the Ilissus which flows near by, a few years ago I sought for a flower as a memento of the place where the ancient courser won national glory. The search for a living flower was in vain. Since the plains of Athens, like those of California, are rainless and parched in summer, yet not to be filled I plucked a few stalks of dried grass from that soil which had been a witness of so many noted events, and is ever memorable as the site on which Pericles stood and delivered his matchless oration, the masterpiece of masterpiece of ancient eloquence.

The Arab and his steed are not only close companions by day; by night they are often quite as intimately associated, for the master sleeps resting his head on the horse's neck, and the horse, as the steed, the horse cannot be stolen and the rider has a comfortable pillow.

Among the cavaliers of the Sahara the naming of the horses is a matter of no small moment; prominent among their names are the following: The Scout, The Victorious, The Patient, The Savior, The Perfect, Happiness, The Known, The Noble, The Rapid, The Persevering, The Brave, The Hero, The Gentle, The Ostrich, The Corn, The Bride, The Lowest, The Rose, The Moon, The Dove, The Ruby, The Doeile and The Night. These names are tinged with touches of love, pride, sentiment and chivalry peculiar to the East.

The Arab does not teach his horse to trot, but to gallop, and, if the latter, the horse is taught three gaits, a short gallop for pleasure, a strong and regular one for war, and the third one is at full speed, which is used in the case of a flying fire lance.

Mahomet had a great number of horses; his favorite one was named Torrent or Running Water, another was given a name which referred to the beauty of his neigh, which sounded like poetry and musical verse. He had also others which was named on account of some virtue or quality, as The Hill, The Rose, The Swimmer. His followers are taught to perform a number of tricks with the horse, and this the animal learns to avoid his fault. Governor Stanford, who has done more for the improvement of the horse than any citizen of the West, once said to me that the horse is the most tractable of animals, and will always do his master's bidding if he can be made to comprehend what he wishes; that is, teach a horse what you want him to do, and he will always do it. This should be posted in every stable, and this the animal learns to avoid his fault. Governor Stanford, who has done more for the improvement of the horse than any citizen of the West, once said to me that the horse is the most tractable of animals, and will always do his master's bidding if he can be made to comprehend what he wishes; that is, teach a horse what you want him to do, and he will always do it. This should be posted in every stable, and this the animal learns to avoid his fault.

The inhabitant of the Sahara need great care in feeding his horse, the latter is fed on camel's milk, barley and dates. The animal is never given the compound, so often used with us, of bran, barley, meal and water, for it is claimed that such food relaxes and weakens the horse. He is given green grass, but not dried hay, since the latter is believed to weaken and sicken the muscles of the neck. Camel's milk is thought to make both man and horse beef-footed.

In his wars in which the conditios to the conquered were the Koran tribute and the sword, Mahomet was usually on horseback, though in one of his battles he is represented riding a white mule. According to his religion it behooved all to become expert riders, for, before entering Paradise, every man must ride a white camel across a bridge which is as narrow as the edge of a razor. I think those who have ridden along the trails which are suspended on the sides of the precipices which enclose Yosemite Valley might safely venture on the razor-edged bridge.

A horse is said to have once been brought to the prophet covered with sweat. In his care for the animal Mahomet wiped the sweat from his eyes and nose with the sleeves of his shirt, whereat his friends, manifesting surprise, he replied that the Angel Gabriel had commanded him to do this. And, as all these conditions are treated up with religious reverence, this one has often insured the horse a good grooming and a warm cover after a hard ride. In thus caring for their horses Mahomet taught that they were caring for themselves. Even the noble chieftain is enjoined to labor without basking for his horse, his father and his guests.

The children of the desert attach great importance to the color of their horses. The favorite colors are white, black, bay and chestnut.

The white horse should be as white as a silken flag; and contrasting with this the circle of his eyes should be black. The black horse should be as black as night, in which there is no star or moon. The bay should be like the sunset, and the chestnut like the color of the bark of the oak. The dark, dappled gray, similar to the hue of a wild pigeon, is a popular color.

As proverbs about the color of horses are the following: If one tells you he has seen a horse fly in the air, if he tells you he was a chestnut, believe him. In a combat against a chestnut you must have a chestnut. Again, if one tells you a horse is a bay, believe him. The warrior fears his enemy mounted on dark bays, or on dark chestnuts; on one occasion a chief, seeing his opponents thus horsed, he cried aloud, "Strike out, and give your horses heel, for they may overtake us."

The spotted or piebald horse was an object of utter contempt, and he was avoided. Of the piebald horse it is said that it was said that his color resembled the tints which the setting sun leaves in the horizon, while the running white horse is like a star hurled against the evil genii. A horse of ill marks is like the hour-poison, that is, a poison which kills its victim in one hour. Briefly summed up, the chestnut is the fleetest, and the most enduring; the bay, the most spirited; the black, and the most blessed one is the horse with a white star in his forehead.

The white feet have a meaning; such feet are said to have stockings on; and if a horse have a white fore foot and a white one behind he is called the hand of a writer and the foot of a horseman, and a man riding such a horse is sure to be lucky, since he mounts and dismounts over white. But if the horse have four white stockings and also a white face, shun him as you would death, since such a horse carries a shroud with him, or his master, or himself.

Peculiar marks which deviate from normal form are not infrequent in man and in the domestic animals. Superstition and imperfect knowledge of the laws of organic development have attributed to such marks some extraordinary significance. Thus, among the Romans an excrescence found sometimes on the forehead of the coat was greatly prized by the diviners, and the excrescence, named hippocamp, the sorcerer culled a portion which would inspire love in him or her who drank it. It was an ingredient of the amulet which was believed to influence the fortune of the bearer.

And in the horse, tufts of hair which appear on his skin, among the Orientals have special meanings. A tuft on the neck is specially precious; the horseman sees in this the finger of the prophet, and such a one may rise to the rank of a prophet, or a king, or a ruler. And a horse having a tuft which runs down the whole of the front of the neck is a prize to the owner, since it will bring love, riches and success, and such a steed offers the three prayers daily, before referred to, in behalf of his master. But a tuft by the tail denotes trouble, misery and famine; while one on the cheek indicates debts, tears and ruin. But the hair on the neck, which is called the horse's prayer, is said daily that he may be stolen, and if such a horse may die. The ill-treated horse among us, though he has no tuft near the fetlock, doubtless prays thus more than twice a day.

Besides the congenital marks which appear on the horse in accordance with the natural law of variation, one too often sees among us marks which have been acquired; marks which have been placed on the animal by the hand of man, and which are not natural. One of the practices of nicking him, a custom which, fortunately, is less often seen now than formerly. This mutilation consists in dividing the flexor muscles of the tail so that the extensors, having no opposing force, lift the tail upwards, and hold it there. And to finish the work of desecration of form, the tail is docked, or nearly deprived of hair. And thus the animal besides being changed into an object of abominable ugliness, is deprived of the means by which he defends himself against the insects of summer. In this work of nicking, the barbarous knife, in addition to the pain which it inflicts, incurably mars one of the most beautiful features of the horse. A parallel to this would be to sever the flexor muscles of the human hand, by which it would remain open ever afterwards. And if to the old rule, an eye for an eye, a tooth for a tooth, a muscle for a muscle, be added, such barbarous work on the horse would be justly punished, and effectually stopped by severing as many muscles on the mutilator.

In Eastern lore one finds many reformers to the protection which the horse gives his master. He is said to warn his master by sight, hearing and smell of approaching danger. The early pioneer in his journey to California was sometimes warned of the lurking Indian by his horse. One man told me that he had his horse warn him that his horse came and thrusting his head into the tent or wagon, would sound around for him, and when he found him he walked away contented.

Though the horse by his fleetness may rescue his master from pursuing danger, he is quite as often preserved from danger ahead by the animal's sharp sight; especially is this so at night. I remember once to have driven on a night of extreme darkness through a dense wood, in which were streams of water crossed on narrow bridges. It is needless to say that my safe journey was wholly due to my horse's eyes, and not to mine.

The acuteness of the horse's sight is proverbial, and we are told that a contest once took place between the horse and the lion on this point. In the trial the lion saw a white hair in milk at night, the horse saw a hair in black pitch and he was pronounced the victor. The horse, however, like the lion, is not a creature of the night; he is near-sighted, and, to correct this, the ingenious shift has been resorted to of putting glasses on him. The horse and dog are subject to cataract of the eye, and in each case the animal may be relieved by an operation. A dog with cataract was once brought to me for operation. I succeeded on one of the eyes. The only fee he paid me was a scratch on one of my hands, and perhaps he thought that was enough, since I only gave him my eye for his, and in his case a glass would have been of little use in his accustomed business as a Scotch terrier.

In the sale of horses the Arab in his language and ingenious arts surpasses the Western jockey. The following are samples of the phraseology between the seller and the purchaser. Says the buyer: "Sell thou wilt gain, speak thy price, was he purchased or was he reared?" Says the seller: "He was reared by my father, and he is a good child." "I offer 10 piastres," says the other. "I accept," says the seller, "and may thou be successful on his back as many times as he has hairs on it." The purchaser with us, however, seeks for and expatiates on every defect, fancied or real, about the horse, in fact, judging from the parlance usual on such occasions, one might fancy that the purchaser would not have the horse were it given to him. On the contrary, the owner uses every art to induce the purchaser to believe that he would not part with him for any sum of money. The Eastern seller in his praise deals in phrase sparkling with Oriental personification and metaphor, as seen in the following. "Say not it is my horse; it is my son; he outstrips the flashing powder, or a glance of the eye; he is pure as gold; his sight is such that he can see a hair in the night; he can overtake the gazelle; he says to the eagle, come down, or I will mount to thee; in his gallop he is as fast as the eagle's eye of the beholder. No one has ever possessed his like; he has no brother in the world. Though speech is denied to him, yet he can understand as well as any son of Adam. His pace is so gentle that you might ride him with a cup of coffee in your hand without upsetting it. So light is his movement that he could dance on your breast and not bruise it."

The Arab proverb is: "Never buy a sick horse, for mined and son of a ruined one is he who buys to cure." Sometimes the horse has the ill-habit of interfering with his fore feet and wounding himself. To test whether the horse has this defect, let a man place his wrists together and then put them between the horse's legs near the breast; if the wrists do not touch the legs then the feet will not interfere.

side above. His trunk is straight and his breast is broad and open, his hoofs are high, hard, pointed, and resound in their movement. The knees are straight, round and not inclined backward. His tail of long hair is broad and hangs in waving folds. His color is one of the most prized; it is that of the chestnut which is just opening its shell. Observe the graceful movement of the horse in starting and stopping. How he lifts his foot and displays his light and nimble step! See the beautiful arch forward by his head and neck. Remark his entire gait and his firm neck while he looks proudly around him, and shows in every motion the white of his black eye. What witness is there to his own-mind, and what agile lightness! Behold him as he stands at the head of the road, and impatient from standing! He cannot rest, but he treats the ground, heights and is impatient to start. See when the rider loosens his rein how he moves away like the wind, and like a flash he disappears from sight.

It is not the beauty alone of the horse which awakens our admiration; it is rather the kindly goodness of his nature. He seems to find delight in serving his master. He patiently submits, whether he be attached to the plow, the carriage, or a burden is laid on his back. But he seems to find a special honor when his master mounts his saddle. He then shows his delight, exultation and pride. He seeks in every way to please his rider. He is an attention to every hint that he receives. He is ever ready to slacken, hasten or precipitate his speed. The length, roughness, difficulties and obstacles he meets in the way in no wise discourage him. He struggles through all; he glides away like a fish, and nothing impedes his movement."

Budon, the naturalist, whose heart, mind and fancy were absorbed in love of the animal creation, writes of the horse as follows: "The noblest creature that man has is this animal and the high-spirited animal which suaves with him the labours of war and the glory of combat. He is as fearless as his master, and seeing peril, he coolly meets it. He rises at the sound of arms, which he seeks, loves and is inspired by. The horse partakes man's pleasures in the chase, race and tournament, and in these he shines and dazzles. He can repress his spirits and be as calm as the sea in a storm. He is as patient as the ox in the saddle of his master. He is a being that returns his own will for that of another. He never refuses his services and he acts with all his force and dies in his obedience."

The honest character of the horse in contrast with that of human nature is pointed by Swift in Gulliver's Travels in terms of acrid sarcasm. The traveler is represented as having arrived in the country of Houyhnhnms in by many horses and their masters. Gulliver, having learned their language, tells an old horse of his own people. He says: "I remember in frequent discourses with the horse concerning the nature of manhood in other parts of the world, having occasion to talk of lying and false representation, and it was with much difficulty that he comprehended what I meant, although he had otherwise a most acute judgment, and he argued thus: 'That the use of words is to give information, and not to receive it. To receive information of facts. Now if any one said the things which were not, these ends are defeated, because I cannot properly be said to understand him, and I am so far from receiving information that he leaves me worse than in ignorance, for I am led to believe a thing black which is white, and short, when it is long.' And these were the motives which the horse had concerning the faculty of lying, so perfectly well understood and used by the human species. Finally the horse inquired concerning the condition of horses in the land of human beings, and was told that when young and strong they were employed in training, racing and drawing carriages, and were then treated with kindness and care until they fell into diseases and were foundered in their feet, then they were sold and used to all kinds of drudgery till they died, and their worth and their bodies left to be devoured by dogs and birds of prey."

The horse has been one of the nearest allies and chief aids in the progress of civilization and maternal advancement.

Without the horse man would occupy a position much inferior to what he now holds. And for all these untold favors man has made a return to the animal. For the horse has been treated in many ways, and in many instances, for kindness, cruelty; for generosity, miserly meanness; for obedience, oppression; for gentleness, harshness; and for unrepaying meekness; the whip ever in hand, has returned stinging lashes. A few horses have kind masters; more have indifferent ones; and the majority have cruel ones. One daily sees horses overladen, over-driven and over ridden. He is sometimes seen when sick, and not cured, and when he is nearly dead, he is driven. He is often forced to work when his lungs are worn out; and then his horse struggles for breath, instead of awakening the sympathy of the drivers, only bring an additional stroke of the whip to hurry him on. And if he stumbles, or the vehicle is jolted, the lash is applied for what was due to the awkwardness and unskillfulness of the driver. The man beats his horse for running into a rut for which he is not to be blamed, and then the driver's eyes are shocked by the sounds of the whip and the profanity of the greater brute, which in wild rage applies the instrument of torture. The only answers are the groans of the horse.

Cruelty is not limited to the whip; the harness worn by the horse is often an appliance of torture. The check-rein which holds the head in a tight, cramped position, finally causes excruciating torture. To get the head out of this position, the horse is caused to hold his own head backward for fifteen minutes. Every driver should be forced to hold his own head thus for a half hour. After that he would lengthen the check-rein of his horse.

Queen Victoria, noted for so many generous acts, has lately added another bar to the escutcheon of her nobility by directing the check-rein to be dropped from the harness of her horses. And the harsh curb-bit with which the horse's mouth and tongue often are cruelly lacerated should be consigned to the lumber-room, there to rest along with other fendish appliances with which animals have been maltreated.

Horses, when driven in pairs, are forced to hold their heads divergently, or turned from each other. This is most tiresome; if one doubts it, let him walk thus for one hour. And these positions of forced uplifting and lateral defection are no useful purpose. They are simply cruel fashions.

The horse in his structure has nerve for nerve, muscle for muscle, and sentient part for sentient part similar to those found in man; and in each of these he can suffer as acutely as man. Yet they cry by which the dog and other animals announce their suffering has not been given to the horse.

And the horseman besides the whip in his hand, is armed with a device of torture on the head, the spur, with which he can cut his horse's flank. This harsh instrument is only suited to the foot of a savage, yet it is often worn and used by those who should do better. Mr. Hutchings, of Yosemite Valley, once told me that he hired a horse to a man of this city, and when he returned from a ride in the valley the horse's sides and legs were covered with blood from cuts in the poor creature's flanks, made by the rider's spurs. And this man was not a brute, but a gentleman, and refinement; for years he formerly occupied a pulpit in our midst and weekly discoursed on meekness and other matters of righteousness to a large congregation.

The horse can utter no word of remonstrance against those who thoughtlessly or intentionally injure and oppress him. As a pleader in his behalf I have appeared before you this evening, and offered this earnest petition in behalf of him who is denied the privilege of begging for food and shelter.

I hope and trust that none of my hearers were in need of the lessons which I have sought to impart; but I know that you daily come in contact with those who greatly need such teaching; on such urge the command of Mahomet: "BE KIND, BE KIND, TO YOUR HORSES."

The Power of Dictator's Blood.

The blood of Seeley's American Star carried with it many evidences of thoroughbred character. In silken quality and bloodlike appearance nothing in the Stud Book surpassed it. It is much diluted as we find it in these days, yet it is a powerful factor in trotting pedigrees, especially where the task is to carry a high rate of speed through broken heats. American Star handed down most of his greatest bequests through his daughters, though his son Magnolia has transmitted much excellence. Among so many of Star's daughters that were great it is difficult to choose, but Clara, the dam of Dexter and Dictator, probably transmitted a more valuable influence than any other. Her blood carries a breeding force with it that is remarkable, not only for the frequency with which its trotters appear, but the extreme limits to which many of them trot. Dictator got very extreme speed, as all know, and his daughters are breeding in kind. A sister to Dictator produced Dexter Prince, that is regarded by most California breeders as one of the greatest sires that has ever been taken to that State, having added eleven new trotters to the list this year, and they having racing quality as well as speed.

Clara's influence, as shown through Dictator, is almost incomparable. Director, by Dictator is proving one of the greatest sires of very extreme speed at early ages that has appeared, and all of his get having the racing instinct. Phalaris, by Dictator, held the stallion championship in his day, and added eight new trotters to his list this year. Jay-Eye-See, after holding the trotter's record in his day, came out this year from a long retirement as a pacer, "shouldered his crutch, and showed how bells were won," taking a record of 2:06. It was a daughter of Dictator that gave us Nancy Hanks, the queen of the tracks; it was a daughter of Dictator that gave us Lockhart, 2:13, the fastest trotter that his famous sire, Nutwood, has got to date; it was a daughter of Dictator that produced Keller Thomas, 2:12, by far the fastest trotter ever got by Pilot Duroc; it was a Dictator mare that produced Pincost's great five-year-old son, Garnet, 2:13, and it was a Dictator mare that produced Brown, 2:18 (J), Williams, 2:20, etc., the fastest got by Combat. When Dictator's blood becomes an active force in a pedigree it is liable to impart a degree of capacity for extreme speed seldom attained by other trotting strains. Whether this is due to the refined organization which American Star handed down through many channels, but most copiously through Clara, the dam of Dictator and the ex-king, Dexter, or to other causes, must remain a matter of conjecture, but the results are there whatever they come from.—Horse Review.

Trotting Bred Pacers.

It seems only a few years ago that the blind gelding Sleepy Tom reduced the pacing record to 2:12. At that day such a thing as a trotting-bred pacer was practically unknown and it seemed not only natural but inevitable that the champion of the sidewheel gait should come from pacing families on both sides of the house. Since that time, however, there has been wonderful advancement in the breeding of light-harness horses and the accessions to the 2:15 list of pacers that are by trotting-bred stallions have become so numerous that now one rather looks for a considerable proportion of tested trotting blood in the pedigree of a star performer at the pacing gait. To illustrate fairly how important this feature of trotting-bred sires getting pacing speed has become, a list of all pacers with records better than 2:12 is herewith given, together with their sires:

Table with columns: NAME, RECORD, SIRE, RECORD. Lists various horses and their sires, including Hal Pointer, Director, Algona, Dictator, Johnstone, Guy Bassett, Shiloh, Starway, Blackwood Mambrino, Adrian Wilkes, Etsign, Ethan Wilkes, Favorite Wilkes, Nutwood, Starway, Black Wilkes, Steiny, Major Edsall Jr., Gibraltar, Gaubretter, Gambalet Wilkes, Abdallah Bruce, Drexel (p), Happy Medium, Del Sur, Dalbrino, Shadeland Owner, Guy Wilkes, Wisconsin, Red Wilkes, Sidney (p), Guy Wilkes, Almont Boy, Bruce Pulaski Jr., Legal Tender, Ferguson, Montgomery, Tom Hal (Gibson's), Better on.

Here are forty pacers that have beaten 2:12, and all but six of them are by sires that may fairly be termed trotting-bred, in the male line at least. They are certainly not pacing-bred. In this list of trotting-bred sires that have sired better than 2:12 speed at the pace appear the names of thirteen trotters with records better than 2:30 and these thirteen developed trotters have sired fifteen pacers with records better than 2:12, Guy Wilkes and Steinyway being responsible for two apiece. In addition to these trotting-bred sires with trotting records better than 2:30, there is also found on the sires' side of the above table, such well known trotting stallions as Happy Medium and Red Wilkes, while among the trotting-bred horses in the list that have no record are Algona, Dictator, Adrian Wilkes, Almont Boy, Ferguson and Betterton.

Sidney figures in the above list as a pacer, because he got his record of 2:19 at that way of going, but he is not pacing bred. On the contrary he is one of the most intensely trotting-bred horses in the books, tracing three times to Rysdyk's Hambletonian through his sire and his first and second dams. He is by a trotter with a record of 2:17, and out of a trotter with a record of 2:21, and the three strains in his pedigree which led to Hambletonian, came through such well known sons of that horse as Strathmore, Volunteer and Edward Everett. Therefore, although Sidney's fastest gait is the pace, he is a trotting-bred stallion, and can be reckoned on in another way. One of the best race-winning pacers out this season is Flying Jib, by Algona, dam by Middleton; second dam a sister to the trotter Voltaire, 2:20, he being by the trotter Tattler, 2:26, and out of a daughter by Mambrino Chief. Direct, who stands just ahead of Flying Jib with a record of 2:05, is by a trotter with a record of 2:17, and out of a trotter with a record of 2:23, his grandsire being Dictator, a brother to the trotter Dexter, 2:17. Dictator also figures in this list as the sire of Jay-Eye-See, 2:06. In fact, the only pacing bred pacer in the first half-dozen horses given above is Hal Pointer, and it is only doing that grand horse justice to say that a better one was never seen. There is nothing to be said against pacing-bred pacers, because some of the best sidewheelers in the history of the American turf have had blood lines of that character. The object of the above presentation of records is simply to show how great an influence trotting blood has come to have in the male line at least, and often times in the female line as well, in the production of extreme speed at the pace.—Dunton's Spirit of the Times.

THE KENNEL.

Dog owners are requested to send for publication the earliest possible notices of whelps, sales, names claimed, presentations and deaths, in their kennels, in all instances writing plainly names of sire and dam and of grandparents, colors, dates and breed.

The Pacific Coast Field Trials Club.

The regular annual meeting of the Pacific Coast Field Trials Club was held at Bakersfield, California, commencing on the 16th and continuing until the 21st inclusive. The event was a grand success. From the opening to the close there was perfect harmony of purpose and unity of interest expressed in all that was done and said.

The interest in the event had been somewhat shaded by the report which became circulated prior to the date of the trials that there were but few birds to be found in the vicinity of Bakersfield. This rumor was found to be, to some considerable extent, well founded, especially when viewing the matter in a comparative sense, for if we contrast the supply of birds this year with that of previous years then they were scarce, although the California quail are more or less like the jack-snipe in that they are here to-day and on the next section to-morrow.

The headquarters of the Club were, as usual, at The Southern, that most excellent hostelry kept by that prince of entertainers, Colonel John C. Morrison. Everything that could be done for the pleasure and comfort of the visiting sportsmen was done in the most cheerful manner, to the end that all found enjoyment and pleasure on every hand.

The delegation from San Francisco was large and enthusiastic. They came down, for the most part, in a special car, leaving the city on Sunday evening the 15th inst and arriving at Bakersfield on the following morning. Among them were noticed the following named sportsmen:

J. G. Edwards, the popular president of the Club, J. M. Kilgarif, the efficient secretary, Henry Huber, P. D. Linville, Wm. Schriber, Thos. Higgs, H. J. Kilgarif, C. N. Post, J. N. Harper, E. Huhn, W. J. Golcher, with many others too numerous to mention.

Mr. George Crocker ran down in his special car, having Messrs George Sperry and W. S. Kittle as shooting companions.

Mr. D. M. Walters scored a high card in winning the first in the Derby for three years in succession.

Mr. James E. Watson is to be congratulated on the outcome of his black pointers. Four of these black pointers ran, all of Mr. Watson's breeding, three of them being placed. This, it would seem, is a fulfillment of his predictions for and faith in the quality of this stock.

THE ANNUAL MEETING.

The annual meeting of the Pacific Coast Field Trials Club was held on Friday evening at 8 o'clock P. M. at the Southern. The meeting was called to order by President J. G. Edwards. Secretary J. M. Kilgarif reported that after paying all expenses there yet remained a small balance in the treasury for the season of 1892.

The following new members were elected: C. A. Miller, of Raymond; Charles Swisler, of Placerville; C. A. Haight, of San Francisco; P. F. Thibault, of Butte, Mont.; Coliu Stewart, of Pasadena; James E. Watson, of San Francisco, and W. J. Mathews, of Oakland.

J. G. Edwards was unanimously re-elected president and J. M. Kilgarif to the office of secretary and treasurer. Joseph Bassford, of Vacaville, was elected first and Mr. Payne, of Los Angeles, second vice-president.

The standing committee elected comprises Messrs. Bassford, Linville, Post, Schriber and Kirkhoff.

A committee consisting of Messrs. J. W. Harper, R. T. Vandevort and D. M. Pyle were appointed to investigate grounds in Los Angeles county and at Raymond, and to report subsequently as to conditions found looking to choice of grounds for next year.

At the suggestion of the writer a committee was appointed to draft a resolution expressive of the will of the club in support of the movement in the present legislature, looking to the better protection of fish and game. Messrs. Post, Payne and Bassford were appointed as such committee, introducing the following resolution, which was unanimously adopted:

TO THE LEGISLATURE OF THE STATE OF CALIFORNIA, GREETING: Whereas, The fish and game of the State of California is an important and material part of the food supply of the State, and said supply is decreasing with alarming rapidity; therefore,

Resolved, By the Pacific Coast Field Trials Club at this, its annual meeting, that the Legislature now in session be respectfully and earnestly requested to pass the Assembly bill introduced by the Hon. Harry Emeric for the protection of fish and game.

The subject of revising the rules so as to introduce more fully the spotting system came in, and a committee was appointed for that purpose.

The Derby this year required almost four days running. What will it require next year? This emergency must be met and provided for. The All-Aged Stake was smaller by three or four entries than it would have been had not Messrs. Linville and Schriber been called home on business before the Derby was finished. The week was filled up, yet the membership stake was entirely dispensed with. The club ran very finely.

THE DERBY.

The first brace was put down at 1:43 P. M. Monday, January 16th, being SPORTY BOY-JOHANNA—The first named was handled by George T. Allender and the latter by R. M. Dodge. This brace was put down near the school house, six miles south of town at 1:43. Johanna was best in pace and range at first, but as Sporty Boy warmed up he became her equal in this respect. Both dogs under good control. Johanna made game first, but the birds flushed before she pointed. She pointed, but broke point and flushed a small heavy. Johanna pointed, and Sporty Boy refused to back. Both ran over birds. Heat awarded to Johanna. Down 30 minutes.

COUNTESS NOBLE-DOC P.—The former handled by owner, H. T. Payne, and the latter by D. M. Walters. Countess had the advantage in speed and range, working beautifully and in splendid, independent form. After running for fifteen minutes and no birds found, a move of a mile was made to another field and put down again at 3 P. M. Countess made a snappy covey point, following up by pointing a single. Payne flushed and killed, both dogs dropped to shot, Doc P. pointed. Countess caught two more points in rapid succession. Doc P. ordered up to hack, caught scent and pointed birds Countess had located. Countess pointed a bevy. Dogs ordered up after 30 minutes heat, Countess winning.

TRAMP-CARMEL—The former was handled by D. M. Walters and the latter by George T. Allender. This brace was put down at 3:25 in comparatively open cover. Tramp showed a shade the best pace and range. Both dogs ran over the birds without apparently noticing them. Carmel flushed a bevy. Tramp pointed. After being down for 30 minutes the dogs were ordered up and Tramp given the heat.

BROWN BETTY-JAVELIN—The former was handled by her owner, H. M. Tonner, and the latter by R. M. Dodge. They were cast off at 4:10. Betty pointed fresh scent where bird had fallen when shot in previous heat. Javelin had a bit the best of the range and pace. Javelin pointed, no bird found. Betty improved greatly in pace and range, showing herself a splendid mover. The dogs were ordered up at 5 o'clock P. M., with the heat still undecided.

SECOND DAY.

The second day of the trials opened with most beautiful weather; the morning was obscured for the first quarter of the day with a bank of clouds which capped the serrated mountain range to the eastward, but the air was not too cool for comfort and this condition rendered the drive of some fourteen miles, to the grounds chosen for the day's work, most pleasant and invigorating. The most of the work for the day was run on the Miller & Lux ranch, which presents for the most part a smooth surface, dotted with cottonwoods and willows in the gentle depressions which run through it, being interspersed with open spaces, the timber patches being skirted in many places with tall grass and weeds, the opens being studded with "damfino" brush and other varieties of the California perplexus growing in bunches, all being about three feet high, with comparatively bare ground between them. In other places willows and again sage and wild pea-vine, which, by the way, is not a pea-vine, but a long wire-grass which falls in tangled hunches making remarkable good covering for the birds when they are thoroughly frightened. The day's work opened by the finish of the last heat of the previous day Brown Betty and Javelin. This brace was put down at 9:55. In a very few moments Betty struck a covey pointing nicely. When the birds were flushed a flock of 200 or more arose and the handlers fired for the purpose of scattering them and making them lay well. In a moment more Betty came to a staunch point, over which her handler killed. Both dogs steady to wing and shot. Each of this brace ran over the birds which were afterwards flushed by the spectators. Brown Betty under perfect control. Javelin made point and was nicely backed by Brown Betty.

The dogs were ordered up at 10:17 and the heat given to Brown Betty.

TOM TICKLER-JIM P.—The former was handled by Wm. DeMott and the latter by D. M. Walters. The brace was cast off at 10:20. Tom started out at a grand pace and kept it up for the major part of the heat, ranging nicely. The black pointer's pace and range was not so good as that of his competitor. Both dogs ran over birds and work so near them that the failure to locate was most pronounced. Working through the timber into an open elevation the black pointer came to a fine point on a small covey, Tom backing him in good form. Further on Tom located and came to a staunch point, the black pointer backing. A turn of some fifteen minutes through the timber was drawn blank, when swinging out into the open beyond the black pointer came to a staunch point, but when bird was flushed, broke to shot, Tom dropped to shot. Tom pointed, Jim backed well, no bird found. Jim staunch point, no bird, roading farther he pointed again, bird was flushed. Tom pointed, DeMott flushed and killed dogs steady to wing and shot. Jim P. won the heat.

HONEST JOHN-GEORGE P.—The former was handled by Allender, the latter by Walters. This brace was put down at 12:25. George P. soon found a covey and pointed staunchly, the birds were seen plainly ahead of him. Moved on, he pointed again and broke to wing. After taking a severe punishment from his handler he went to work again and located another single, pointing staunchly. Honest John when called to back, jumped over George in his eagerness to flush—he succeeded. Honest John did not appear to have any nose at all, running over birds constantly. George P. won handsly in thirty minutes.

BOOTH B. FRANCISCA—George T. Allender handled the former, while Charles Studarus handled the latter. The dogs were ordered on at 12:58. Francisca evinced a desire to chase and kept flushing the birds; she is a very trim, stylish bitch and may yet prove the hopes naturally raised by her grand breeding. Booth B. ranged well and showed the bird sense which has brought the family of black pointers into favorable notice. After being down 54 minutes Booth B. was awarded the heat.

TAPADEROS-VAN.—This brace was cast off at 1:55 in the low sage cover, but passed on into the timber. Allender handled the former, Walters the latter. Tapaderos did not seem to range out but little, and worked overcautiously, being timid and lacking independence. Van ranged out with a merry swing motion which captivated everyone. He made one good, staunch point, drew onto another when the bird flushed before he had fully located. After a run of the minimum regulation time, 30 minutes, Van was given the heat.

MERCHANT OF VENICE-MERCURY.—Mercury initiated a long line of demerits in which this pair were about as equal as dogs could be and yet reach a point where a decision could be made in favor of either. Mercury flushed a good heavy. Merchant pointed a single and shortly thereafter pointed another single. Then began a wearisome and monotonous round of flushes in which each dog seemed to seek to excel the other in aakness. Time of heat, 1 hr. 3 min. Mercury won, though why it is hard to tell.

SECOND SERIES.

JOHANNA-COUNTESS NOBLE.—This brace, the first of the second series, were put down at 3:55. Johanna false pointed almost immediately. Both dogs ranged very well and worked beautifully. Johanna greatly improved on her yesterday's form. Both dogs showed excellent bird sense. The birds were first found in the timber and scattered out into the open in sage brush and pea vine cover. Countess found a single and made a very stylish point. Johanna false pointed. On reaching the open Countess made a remarkable point, going at race horse speed she caught scent and wheeled as if on a pivot and pointed a small covey; Johanna backed the instant she sighted her. On moving on Countess got two more snappy points on singles, Johanna failing to locate. Countess Noble won the heat within the time limit.

TRAMP-BROWN BETTY.—This brace were put down at 4:30, Betty far the best in range and style, the best worker, and showing the most bird sense. Tramp flushed a covey and failed to locate anything. Birds were very scarce until the last of the heat when a covey was located. Brown Betty pointed a single staunchly and drew to several running birds. Betty won after being down forty minutes.

THIRD DAY.

The continuation of the Derby was carried out on the old field trials ground. The day was very pleasant and the conditions very favorable for excellent work. The previous day's work, however, had not been of such a nature as to raise the expectations of the spectators to a very high pitch, and in consequence the attendance was not so large as on former days. The day's sport opened by casting off

JIM P.-BOOTH B.—D. M. Walters handling the former, and Geo. T. Allender the latter. The heat opened at 9:10 in open field with slight patches of low cover. Jim pointed staunch to point and steady to wing. Booth B. refused to back. The same performance was repeated after going a little farther. Jim P. established another point. Dogs ordered up, Jim P. winning after being down one hour.

GEORGE P.-MERCURY.—Down at 10:25. The former handled by Walters, the latter by Dodge. George P. established a good point. Mercury pointed and George P. hacked, drew too near and flushed. In a few minutes George P. located a single, pointing staunchly. Dogs ordered up at 11 A. M. George P. winning.

THIRD SERIES.

COUNTESS NOBLE-VAN.—Van was withdrawn, giving the Countess the heat by default.

JIM P.-BROWN BETTY.—Were cast off at 11:05 in the open with grass cover. Jim P. located a single and came to a very staunch point; Jim R. steady to wing. Working on for a short distance the black pointer came to another staunch point on a single, proving steady to wing. In working over the comparatively bare ground, Jim P. made a point in very catching manner, but no bird could be found. Brown Betty located a single and pointed staunchly, Jim P. backing in excellent style. Dogs ordered up at 11:40. Jim P. winning.

COUNTESS NOBLE-GEORGE P.—This brace was cast off at 11:45. George P. lead off by making game at once in the low matted grass cover of the open roading, a single in excellent style to a stand where he pointed staunchly, bird flushed, the pointer proving steady to wing. Working on a short distance the black pointer located another single and pointed, bird flushed, again proving steady to wing. After making another staunch point George P. was awarded the heat. Time of heat 35 minutes. Countess did nothing in this heat.

LUNCH.

Lunch was then spread under the trees, hard by and a social hour was spent in a dual discussion, the gastronomic argument being engaged with cold tongue sandwiches, boiled eggs, oranges, apples and beer, while the mental struggle was engaged upon the respective merits of the young dogs that were making their first efforts at winning honors in the trials. After lunch GEORGE P. and JIM P. were put down to test their right to first place. After a long run in which the two "blacks," litter brothers, showed magnificent speed and range before any birds were found. The field having been drawn blank, a move was made to another field, where after a short time, a small bevy of birds were found, being sighted by the judges as they ran across the open. Each of the black pointers established a point but a Jim P. seemed to fill the eye of the judges better, and thus, we think correctly, was awarded the head and first money.

COUNTESS NOBLE-MERCURY.—The brace was cast off at 4 P. M., and after some time Countess caught sight of some birds running over the open and came to "stand." This was repeated by each of the dogs several times, until coming to a small irrigating ditch Countess pointed staunchly, bird flushed, Countess steady to wing. Countess established another point, which was honored by a fine "back" by Mercury. Dogs up, Countess winning the heat.

COUNTESS NOBLE-GEORGE P. were then cast off to determine second honors. The black pointer quickly established four points on singles, Countess ranging in the distance. Countess then came in to her work and located pointing staunchly, while the black pointer backed in good style. H. T. Payne, the handler of Countess, flushed and shot the bird which, with broken wing, fluttered down in front of the black pointer, flapping about which proved too much for his energy and he chaced and caught. Going on a bit farther Countess pointed; at the same instance George P. pointed, Countess' bird flushed but no bird could be found on the black pointers indication. Working down into the willows the same performance was repeated. The points made in this heat was four each, but the Countess having no demerits and having the best style was given the heat, which gave her second place and mouey.

THURSDAY.

An early start was secured, and as the day's work was done on the old grounds of the Club, but six miles from town, the morning hours found the work well in hand, and the day's sport turned out all that could be desired.

The morning hours were shrouded in a folding of dense gray fog; about ten o'clock A. M. Old Sol cut the strings and backward rolled the wrapping, permitting a flood of sunlight to pour in upon the merry scene.

Ladies' Day is a California institution, and right royally do the ladies of Bakersfield support the event intended for their pleasure and recreation. The Club feels highly honored and greatly thankful to the ladies for the interest which they have shown in these annual events of the club.

The first brace cast off at 9:45 was the California Kennels' PELHAM (Harold—Sunlit) and SAM K. GLADSTONE (Gladstone's Boy—Ruby D.). The former was handled by R. M. Dodge and the latter by D. M. Walters.

DORA O'MOORE (Pat O'Moore—Fawn) Irish setter, and CLAY, pointer (—Queen Croxteth).—The former handled by Geo. T. Allender, the latter by Charles Studarus, were cast off at 10:57 after the trials had been moved to a field some two miles farther south.

The dogs passed on over the open and the pointer located in a patch of low cover of red tumble-weed. This was followed by two more stylish points to the credit of the pointer, he being steady to wing and shot, retrieving in good form.

OLD BLACK JOE II.—QUEEN CROXTETH.—The former handled by Allender is of the famous Pace stock; the latter by Rush T. out of Patti Croxteth, being handled by Charles Studarus.

Black Joe cut out the pace and range in grand shape. Joe established a fine point, Queen running in, flushed the bird. Queen false pointed Joe hacking in good form.

LUNCH.

The dogs were then ordered up for lunch, which was spread out under the trees upon the soft carpeting of fresh velvet-like grass. That the social hour was enjoyed very much is but stating the facts but mildly.

After lunch all parties assembled in a group and were "taken as they were" by the local photographer, Mr. C. A. Nelson, which will form a very interesting souvenir of the occasion.

The grounds were then moved to a new field some two miles distant, where the heat, suspended for luncheon, was continued as follows: Queen roared to a small bevy in the comparative open and dropped to flush. Joe established a point, steady to flush.

SALLY BRASS II.—LADY FANE.—The former is by Graphic out of Mealy; the latter by Toledo Blade out of Sulu C. The former handled by Allender, the latter by Walters.

Each secured a false point, or rather no bird could be found when flush was attempted. Sally hacked the setter's false point nicely. They were about equal in style, range and speed, there being little to criticize in either of them in this connection.

PELHAM—STARLIGHT.—The latter is by Dan Gladstone—Miss Alice, handled by Wm. DeMott, the former handled by Dodge. Starlight is a white, black and tan, and one of the most stylish and merry workers ever presented on this coast.

During a cast into the comparative open, where nothing was found, a bird came sailing over the judges and handlers, dropping into a brush fence. Dodge saw it and directed Pelham to the spot, where he made a beautiful point, Starlight hacking at twenty-five yards or more; the two dogs thus presented a picture rarely excelled in field sports.

FRIDAY.

The early morning hours were foggy and somewhat uncomfortably chilly; about 7:30 the sportsmen set out for some new grounds which lay a bit west and north of town. After driving some six miles the grounds were reached, and the pickets thrown out to locate the birds.

Arriving on the grounds, OLD BLACK JOE II. and CLAY were cast off in the open field where the weeds and grass of the year's growth had been raked and left in wind-rows some two and a half feet high. Each of the dogs false-pointed. Joe located a single which immediately flushed; he then began one of his sensational roading performances, and after following the trail or winding the birds for 300 yards or more, came to a point.

STARLIGHT AND LADY FANE were then cast off at 1:30, and after running for half an hour Starlight came to a point on a single. After consultation it was decided to move some eight miles westward to more favorable grounds and soon the throng were testing the speeding qualities of their horses in that direction.

Arriving on the grounds selected the party lunched and at 1:08 the dogs were again cast off in the comparative open, the cover being low sage and matted grass.

Lady Fane pointed, no bird found. Starlight pointed single, DeMott shot, killed and Starlight retrieved in good form. Starlight pointed single, Lady being called up to back stole in on the point, DeMott fired, missed, both steady to wing and shot.

STARLIGHT—OLD BLACK JOE II.—Cast off at 3:55. Starlight pointed, Joe refused to hack, rushed in and flushed. Joe pointed twice in quick succession Starlight hacking in good form. Joe pointed, Allender shot, bird falling near Starlight who rushed in and retrieved.

SATURDAY.

In the final heats of the trials were to be finished to decide the second and third honors of the stake. The party secured an early start and consequently the three heats were finished early in the afternoon. Birds were found more plentiful than on any previous occasion or, perhaps, those found were handled to better advantage than the beves found on the previous days.

LADY FANE—PELHAM.—Lady Fane pointed almost immediately, Pelham backed, but no bird could be found. The two were about equal in pace and range.

OLD BLACK JOE II.—PELHAM.—Down at 10:20. Pelham started in by chasing fur. Joe pointed. Moving on to the timber from the open Joe pointed a single. Joe pointed again and Pelham rushed in and flushed.

LUNCH.

CLAY—PELHAM.—After lunch came the trial for third place and money. This brace was cast off in the open near a small growth of willows near school house on section 29 at 12:44. Pelham pointed, moved, a bird flushed and Pelham proved unsteady to shot.

SUMMARY.

Table listing winners and their owners for various trials. Includes entries like 'The California Kennel's English setter dog Pelham', 'Flood's pointer dog Clay', etc.

PREVIOUS WINNERS.

Table listing previous winners of the trials, including names like 'Walttown Timber, 1883', 'White Rock, 1884', 'Point Reyes, 1885', etc.

The judging at the trials was most satisfactory during the entire event of the Pacific Coast Field Trials Club's field trials, and Messrs. Vandevort, Pyle and Dormer have the thanks of the entire body of sportsmen interested therein, for the care and good judgement exercised on all occasions during the week of sports.

Death of Kent of Blumo.

One of those cases in which pure gall mixed with low, vulgar ignorance and the essence of all that is detestable and unmanly, was the insinuation published in one of the dailies of this city regarding the unfortunate occurrence above mentioned. The owner of the dog, living here and having the clear and direct statement of Mr. Charles Studarus, the handler of the dog, as to the habits and manners of the dog, which led him to be continually picking up any and every kind of bones and meat that he would run across while out hunting still saw fit to give out the matter published.

Mr. Studarus said regarding the matter: "There can be no possible ground for the insinuations made in the Examiner. The dog was in the habit of picking up all kinds of bone and refuse. I had been out hunting the dogs as usual in the forenoon, when I came back the dog drank plentifully, and when I went out to secure him for the afternoon's run he was stretched out dead. I learned afterwards that a man had scattered about over the grounds on which I was hunting poisoned jack-rabbit cut up in pieces for the purpose of poisoning coyotes. I have no doubt but that Kent of Blumo secured a piece of this poisoned meat. I am sure the poisoning occurred this way. There was no one near the place by some thirty miles or more who could have had any object in poisoning the dog, even admitting their possession of such a devilish intent. It is foolish and absurd to suppose so for one instant. It was entirely accidental and no one is to be blamed."

The Prize Winners.

The Pape stock of black pointers have established, wherever tried, the fact that they are dogs of superior "nose." Whatever else they may be they are sure to be able to find the birds and point them well.

In the recent trials on this Coast there were five black pointers run, four of them Derby entries from the same litter, four out of the five dogs winning. Where can a better record be shown? Mr. James E. Watson is entitled to the thanks of all lovers of field dogs for bringing out and breeding the black pointer.

H. T. Payne's Countess Noble is a grand little bitch, and by her excellent work on the first and second days of the Derby won the admiration of everyone present on those occasions.

Starlight, the winner of first in the All-Aged stake, is one of the most stylish and attractive dogs ever seen on this Coast. His work was well high faultless, and his handler, Mr. Wm. DeMott, is to be congratulated on the splendid way in which he handled the dog.

Old Black Joe II, handled by Mr. George T. Allender, again won second in the All-Aged stake. It is to be doubted if any dog ever wined birds farther than did this black pointer on more than one occasion in these trials.

Pelham, winner of third, is a phenomenal worker when it is considered that he is as deaf as a post. Mr. R. M. Dodge, his handler, is deserving of all praise when it is remembered that he had this difficulty to contend with in training and working this dog.

Sales.

J. B. Martin, San Francisco, Cal., has sold —, fox terrier bitch pup, by Blemton Shiner ex Jess, to Colin Cameron, Lochiel, Arizona.

— fox terrier bitch pup, by Frisco, Joker, ex Nancy, to same party.

SAN FRANCISCO, Jan. 25, 1893.

EDITOR BREEDER AND SPORTSMAN:—Allow me to send you a copy of the unequal record of winnings by my black pointers.

Old Black Joe—January, 1889, first Derby and first All-Aged Stakes.

Old Black Joe II—January, 1891, second Derby and second All-Aged Stakes; January, 1892, third All-Aged Stakes; January, 1893, second All-Aged Stakes.

January, 1893, George P. won first Derby, and Jim P. and Doctor P. divided third in Derby with Johanna.

Nine winnings with five dogs in four Field Trials. Every dog that run got a place. Both Old Black Joe and Old Black Joe II were imported direct from W. R. Pape, Gun Maker, Newcastle-upon-Tyne, England.

Black Bess, the dam of the three pups, was imported from Wm. Graham, Belfast, Ireland, who judged at the Pacific Kennel Club show in 1889. She was bred by Mr. A. M. McDonald, Scotland. Sired by Sweep, out of Gloom.

George P., Jim P. and Doctor P. are by Old Black Joe II, out of Black Bess, and are litter brothers. Yours truly, JAMES E. WATSON.

On Ladies' Day Mr. W. H. McKittrick, of Bakersfield, attended the trials, and with his accomplished and estimable wife led the coterie of fair ladies who attended the sports of the day, on horseback. The healthful flush of the rose is best cultivated, and blooms most fair on the cheek of beauty, when the glow is stimulated by a dash of a few miles on horseback. This the ladies exemplified, and by their attendance added a most pleasurable feature to the day's outing. These ladies have the soul of true sportsmanship well implanted within them as the following bit of comment, which was overheard by the writer, goes to show. It was when Pelham (lemon ticked and white) and Starlight (black, white and tan) were running.

"Oh! Lil," said one, "I think the white dog sprinkled with old gold with feather trimmings the most beautiful. Don't you?"

"No, indeed," answered Lillian, "I think the white and black the most beautiful."

Just then Pelham pointed and his fair champion triumped for a short season, which was cut short by Starlight making a swinging east and dashing up at full speed, came to a staunch back at twenty-five yards or more. The first speaker "acknowledged the corn" by saying: "Shake, Lil; your dog is just as beautiful as mine."

The sportsmen at the Field Trials were sorry to lose the presence of those genial and courteous gentlemen, Wm. Scherber and P. D. Linville, who were called back to the city on business immediately after the finish of the Derby. They were sadly missed.

The gentlemen attending the trials, and more especially all members of the club, have again been placed under renewed obligations to the citizens of Bakersfield for the splendid hospitality shown them by the sportsmen of that beautiful little Queen of the Valley. Everything that cultivated and refined hospitality could suggest or invent for the pleasure of the visiting lovers of the gun and dog was done, and done in such a spirit as added ten fold to the gift. When Hospitality takes Pleasure by the hand the trinity is complete and unity and happiness is the result.

Regrets were pronounced and frequent on account of the absence from the field of that social and companionable gentleman Mr. W. E. Houghton, of Bakersfield, he being confined, for the greater portion of the time, to his home on account of a mild attack of pneumonia. We are glad to learn of his improvement.

THE GUN.

The Wounded Moose.

There are few wild animals more dangerous to the hunter than a wounded bull moose. The strength and viciousness shown by one of these wild antlered lords of the northern forests is something which is most surprising to any but those who are in a practical sense acquainted with the actions of these peculiar animals.

The charge of a wounded moose when thoroughly maddened, and yet not sufficiently wounded to deprive him of his usual strength, is one of the most terrific in its effects known to the animal world. The grizzly bear is not more to be feared by the hunter than the moose when by any chance he may secure the slightest advantage in the encounter which is always a fight to the finish, the stake being fought for life, but in many instances both hunter and the hunted meet with death at the close of the contest.

It has fallen to our lot to spend some time in the region of northern Michigan and Minnesota, where some thirty years ago, there was to be found any quantity of moose by the hunters who were hardy enough to seek them out and undergo the severity of the winter weather which there rules for the period devoted to and appropriate to the capture of wild game.

During the winter months the moose are fond of seeking the shelter of the low swamps in the timbered regions of the sections above mentioned and there feeding on such young growth as the swamps are wont to produce, the twigs and branches of the low brush about the swamp lands being more succulent and palatable than the dryer growth of the more elevated country. At such times the moss and grasses which form a perfect matting on the soil in places about the swamp lands furnish the moose their principal food; this they secure by pawing away the snow until they can crop the grass and moss which they find beneath. It is surprising when the severity of the climate is considered that any animal should be enabled to find plenty of food in this way, but it is one of nature's provisions which has fittingly arranged countless thousands of circumstances which permit of the sustenance and development of life under conditions well nigh incomprehensible to man.

The winter of 1874 was one which seemed to bring with it an unusually prolonged quantity of arctic weather.

The lumber camps were literally in a state of siege during the winter and there was no thought of braving the howling storms and intense cold which kept guard about the camp. Those were long, weary and troublesome days. In company with an uncle we had been caught in a path of a storm which lasted for nearly two weeks, and long before it had in any measure abated, we knew that our chances for escape and return to civilization were about on a par with those of the political prisoners in Siberia.

The snow was piled to a height of six feet or more on the level, and the only means we had of subsistence was the prepared food of the logging camp, which consisted of beans and meat mixed and cooked before shipment; packed in strong barrels and this had become frozen through and through. But this food is not bad to take when one is hungry, and hunger comes on one at regular and frequent intervals when placed in such surroundings; the system seems to demand fuel and plenty of it in order to keep up the heat of the body.

The month of November was an unusually severe and trying period and all hands, to the number of about sixty, were confined in camp at close quarters.

The camp proper was formed by throwing up the snow so as to form paths, winding about from tent to tent, where for greater safety and comfort, together with economy of fuel, or rather the labor necessary to procure it, were gathered as many of the men as possible. It was a unique and not in attractive scene presented in that wild region with the white mantle of snow covering all the ground and reaching, frequently up to the first or lowest branches of the trees, the limbs of which were coated with an insulating of sleet and snow.

The monotony of camp life was enlivened by the recital of reminiscences and stories, varied by song, and it was truly wonderful to note the rich stores of interesting facts which these rough frontiersmen had caught from their life experience, and related with that peculiar earnestness of eloquence for which the true narrative of facts and experience is always noted. It is usual at such times for the deer, elk and moose to assemble in bands and tramp out for themselves to "camps" or resting places which afford shelter from the winds, by reason of the wall of snow about them. Thus they are wont, in a large measure, to spend the more rigorous months of the winter, making such excursions as are necessary in quest of other or greater food supplies, than their resting places afford. As the weather settles and grows more tolerable they break up into lesser bands and proceed about the swamp land as usual. It is not uncommon to find a bull elk or moose alone at such times, usually browsing on the limbs of the swamp willows and sheltered from view, in a measure, by taking a stand in some clump of the wooded growth to be found in such places, the general surroundings being comparatively free from wooded growth. This makes an encounter with these mammoth-horned animals extremely dangerous in such places, as their speed, even when wounded, is far greater than that of the most expert hunter, especially when encumbered with the heavy clothing and trappings of the hunt.

During the three months of the practical blockade which we were forced to endure, the "hash" of the camp—as a mixture of beef and beans was termed—grew very stale to our tastes, and everyone longed for something else to eat, and we were not particular as to choice of viands, as anything for a change would prove most welcome. With this, all but actual necessity continually staring them in the face, the more venturesome of the camp were eager to go out upon the hunt and secure some fresh meat, if possible. The only animals we had noted about camp were the wolves, which came regularly and cleaned up whatever of refuse was thrown out where they could reach it.

The prospects for a successful hunt were not very flattering, and my boyish enthusiasm never lasted beyond a few moments' absence from the roaring fire of the camp. The cold was so intense that one could hear almost constantly the bursting of the trees from its effects, which reports sounded sharp and distinct. Our bedding was formed for the most part of the clothing which we wore, which was of the heaviest material to be secured; boots and shoes, as ordinarily understood, being discarded, and the feet swathed in several thicknesses of blankets cut so as to extend well upon the thighs and held in place by wrappings of cord, first having heavy socks and these encased in several foldings of paper. Heavy overcoats with outer covering of blankets formed with hood attachment, held in place by strap or belt. Then came the bed proper, possessed by the more fortunate being, formed of sheep or deer skins, double thickness, with the wool or hair forming both the inner and outer portions. This was arranged, also, with a hood, being sewed up save an opening in which one could slip feet foremost, then drawing the hood over the head and pulling the opening together and fastening with lacing-cord, one could lay down anywhere and sleep comfortably, barring the danger of being completely snowed under. Beside a camp-fire stretched about, with feet to the fire, the men looked like the diverging spokes of a wheel, the roaring fire representing the hub. Thus we slept in comparative comfort. Of course there was always a fire watch of two or more, whose business it was to keep the flames leaping high from the center of the tent.

After a time some of the men started out on a hunt. The weather had abated somewhat and was more tolerable but yet very cold, my uncle being of the party. They all were provided with snow shoes and were experts in this peculiar art of locomotion. It was toward evening when we heard two of them returning to camp, coming down the steep hillside near.

They came in like a whirlwind. No one who has not observed an expert on snowshoes can form any adequate idea of how swift a man can come down hill on them.

My uncle's companion was all but frozen as he looked like he had been in a tussel with a grizzly, his clothing hanging in shreds about him. He proved, however, to be otherwise uninjured and in a short time was all right, whisky within and fire without being potent to restore him to his normal condition.

It appeared that while approaching such a swamp or low depression, as herein before described, they had sighted a bull moose in a clump of bushes. Creeping up as closely as he thought prudent, my uncle's companion had fired at the bull with an old Henry rifle while my uncle kept his fire in reserve. Every one who has any practical knowledge of the Henry rifle of that time knows of the inefficiency of that weapon. The shot only stung and maddened the animal and the next instant he broke cover and came charging down upon the man with lowered head and flashing eyes. The man saw that escape by flight was all but impossible and determined to accept a great risk, which he thought the most prudent thing to do. My uncle fired from his distant position three shots but without apparent effect. The man waited until the maddened bull was within a few paces of him and then with a degree of self-possession most remarkable under the circumstances, fired full at the breast of the infuriated beast just as he lowered his head for the final charge. The man attempted to spring aside but too late to escape the horns of the moose, one of which caught his clothing diagonally in front and by an upward toss completely severed them, throwing the man at the same time some distance where, from fright and the force of the shock, he lay completely stunned and unconscious. My uncle, running up at this moment, was pleased and surprised to see the moose stagger and fall in his death struggle. The last ball was found to have entered the animal's heart.

The Evening Telegram of Portland contains the following mention of an important improvement in the line in which all sportsmen are interested. It says:

The long agitation of the question of a fishway over the falls of the Willamette at Oregon City has culminated in the introduction of a bill into the lower house of the legislature by Representative Miller, of Linn county, providing for its construction.

Mr. Miller recently made an inspection of the falls in company with Governor Pennoyer and Hon. E. W. Bingham, of this city, with a view of examining into the practicability of a fish-ladder at that point. The bill provides for an appropriation of $6,000 for this purpose.

The fishway is to be constructed in the bed of the river on the west side of the main fall, by making excavations in the solid rock when the water is low, so that the slope will be more gradual, and when the water is higher the excavations will form a series of pools connecting with each other, all constructed and arranged in such a manner that salmon can freely ascend from below to above the falls by passing from pool to pool.

The plans, location and construction of the fishway will be under the control and direction of a Board consisting of the Governor, Secretary of State, and State Treasurer, who are authorized to purchase tools and supplies and employ workmen to construct the same.

In order to construct the fishway, the board, its employes and agents are authorized to remove all obstructions, whether natural or artificial, to the construction of the fishway or the passage of fish over the falls.

After the fishway is constructed it is to be under the care of the board, which shall make any extension, additions, alterations or repairs to the same that may become necessary.

It will be made unlawful for any one to hinder, annoy or disturb the fish entering, passing through or leaving the fishway, or to obstruct the passage of fish through the same at any time, or in any manner, or for any one to place anything in the fishway, or use any device for catching fish, such as wheel or net or hook or lines, in the fishway, or within fifty feet of it, or to catch fish at any time anywhere within fifty feet of the fishway.

For violations of this provision the bill will impose a minimum fine of $200, or imprisonment in the county jail for not less than ten days nor more than one hundred days. It also provides that justices shall have concurrent jurisdiction with the circuit courts of all offenders under the act.

HOOF-BEATS.

WILLIAM DENNISON, sixty-five years of age, rode in a race at Hawthorne Park last week. This man wore a beard, which was covered with ice when the race was over.

JOSEPH D. LUCAS, proprietor of the Goodwood Stud, has bought of Chris Doyle of Carrollton, Ill., the bay mare Maggie B., by Elkhorn, dam by imp. Billet, being also the dam of Turk and Hymen. Maggie B. is in foal to Lord Coleridge, by imp. Buckden, out of Catina, by imp. Australian.

It is said that Mr. James R. Keene is negotiating for the purchase of Enthusiast, 1886, the full brother to Energy, by Sterling, dam Cherry Duchess, by The Duke; second dam Mirella, by Gemma di Vergy, etc. Enthusiast won the Two Thousand of 1889 by a head from the great Donovan, and the Sussex Stakes at Goodwood, besides running well up in the other classic events.

FROM a return lately made up of the performances of horses in Australasia got by The Drummer and Goldsbrough since 1879, it appears that no less than 221 winners have represented The Drummer with 408 races, totalling £45,051. The Goldsbrough stock have won 390 races, 204 animals being on his list of winners, the stakes won amounting to £57,193. This is heavy scoring for two stallions, the total between them being £102,244.

A BILL has been introduced in the Minnesota Legislature prohibiting the operation of pool-rooms, except at race tracks during meetings. It provides for the punishment not only of men who operate pool-rooms, but the employes and patrons and the owners of buildings occupied for gambling purposes as well. It makes even private betting a dangerous experiment, and does not except the stakeholder in these transactions, providing that he shall share the fate of the principals.

MESSES. LOUIS & GUS STRAUS have sold to Lu Nelms, of Lovelady, Texas, the thoroughbred chestnut stallion, Isaac Lewis, by imp. Prince Charlie, out of Bellona, by Virgil. Isaac Lewis was a good race horse, and the Guide Book will show many a good winning to his credit. He won races at all distances, from six furlongs up to a mile and a half, his best performance being a mile in 1:41½, with an impost of 115 pounds, as a three-year-old. If he can get some good mares he will send out some Texas thoroughbreds that will be hard to beat.

THE New Orleans winter meeting does not compare with the recent Blood Horse meet. At the former the two largest winners are D. W. Kelly with $2,335 and the Orwell Stable with $1,760. The largest winners at our meeting were W. O. B. Macdonough with $8,235 and the Storm-Chase Stable with $7,800, while B. C. Holly won $7,500. Eastern horsemen are not likely to stay away from San Francisco another year, when such amounts can be won by horses at a time when the snow is falling in the East and South, gentle Annie, while all is sunshine in San Francisco.

A STRONG racing combination has recently been formed, the interested parties being Ernest Chrisman and George Foster, both of Gallatin. The training will be done by Chrisman, while Foster will do the riding. They have a stable now at Cumberland Park, and the horses will be shipped to New Orleans as soon as they can be gotten in condition. Chrisman will be remembered as the well-known turf correspondent who writes under the nom. de plume of "Kennesaw." Foster, who can ride as light as 100 pounds, is a son of ex-Judge Oliver Foster, who for years presided over the County Court of Sumner County, Tennessee.

DAVID GIDEON has secured the services of Overton, who was the best jockey in the West last season, to ride for him during the coming season, paying him $5,000 for the privilege of the first call on him for his services from May 15th to October 15th, which is at the rate of just $1,000 a month. Overton will have a strong stable to ride, and he may have a chance of piloting His Highness and Merry Monarch in some of the handicap races if either or both stand the ordeal of training, which is a matter of considerable doubt as yet, though Hyland hopes to be able to get them to show something like the form they showed as two-year-olds. Though Mr. Gideon does not say so, it looks as if he would have a chance to get some of the three-year-old stakes next year with Cactus, St. Michael, the Annie F. colt, Kinglet, and one or two others he has in his string, none of which was raced to death as two-year-olds, and all of which had a bit of speed that was good enough to make their competitors run when they met.

MR. E. D. WIGGIN, of Lake View Farm, Bellingham, Mass., the owner of the race queen, Martha Wilkes, 2:08, announced some time ago that, in all probability, Martha Wilkes would not only be in the free-for-all next season, but that she would also be sent against the time record. He also announced that he would send the great mare a mile at Cleveland to the old-time sulky, in order to obtain reliable data as to the difference in speed between it and the bicycle sulky. This public statement has brought out a letter from Mr. Robert Bonner to Mr. Wiggin, in which the owner of Maud S. reiterates his determination to give the sum of $5,000 to the first horse which trots to the old sulky a mile in 2:05 over any of the tracks in the Grand Circuit. Mr. Wiggin thinks that on a poor, rough half-mile track the bicycle sulky is from four to five seconds faster than its predecessor but with a first-class smooth track like Independence there is little or no difference of speed in the stretches, the advantage being only in the turns. The experiment will be an interesting one.

A FATAL accident happened at the Gloucester track on Wednesday, January 4th, by which Jockey Joseph Bergen lost his life, and the horse John Atwood had to be destroyed. Jockey Macauley was also severely bruised, but is recovering. Poor Bergen was riding the horse Keyser, who was in the lead, with Macauley on John Atwood close behind. Keyser struck the rail and fell with Bergen, when John Atwood and Macauley fell on top of the prostrate horse and rider. Bergen was helped to his feet while Macauley had to be carried from the track, but it turned out that Bergen was the more seriously hurt, and he died the same night. His remains were sent on to Fordham, where his mother resides, and on Sunday he was buried in the new Westchester cemetery. Seventy-five carriages followed the remains, and the floral offerings were very numerous. William Thompson, president of the Gloucester track, sent a handsome broken column, and the bookmakers and jockeys also contributed in this direction. The dead jockey's four brothers were all present at the funeral.

ISAAC MURPHY, the celebrated jockey, is taking things easy at his home in Lexington. He now weighs over 150 pounds and is in perfect health. In talking to a Lexington Press representative as to his future plans Isaac said he intended to do a great deal of riding in the West this season. The rich stakes offered by the Western Association will cause riders of his ability to be in demand, and he will not sign with any owner, selecting mounts to suit his pleasure and convenience.

LUCILLE GOLDDUST, 2:15½, Goldsmith Maid's old-time competitor, is owned by M. G. Thompson, Utica, N. Y., the gentleman who purchased her as a three-year-old. Mr. Thompson, in company with Charles Green, saw her work a quarter in forty seconds before they purchased her, and thought the fastest trotter on earth was before them, for it was a thing unheard of then—a three-year-old showing a 2:40 gait. Of her seven living foals all are owned by Mr. Thompson save Lucille's Baby, 2:20½. Four of them are in the list and the other two will trot into the charmed circle yet, it is believed. She is in foal now, it is hoped, by Sprague Goldust.

A CHICAGO dispatch dated last Wednesday reads as follows: "Entries to the nine recently opened stakes streamed into the office of the Washington Park Club to-day. The rare quality of the nominations and the promises of magnificent sport for the World's Fair meeting surprised even Secretary Brewster. The following are among the nominations: W. O. B. Macdonough, with a long list of two-year-olds; Walcott & Campbell, thirty, including Pessara, Diablo and Cassius; James E. Pepper, thirty-six; R. T. Holloway, nineteen, including Wadsworth and Faraday; J. E. Madden, twenty-five, including Illume; C. L. Fair, fourteen, including Yo El Rey, Dare, Princess and Floodgate; B. C. Tracy, thirteen; 'Pittsburg Phil,' with Parvenue; R. A. Swigger, with Carlsbad and Michael; Gideon & Daly, with His Highness; the Oneck Stable, with G. W. Johnson and Sir Walter; the Etna Stable, with Tulla Blackburn and Randolph, and the Oakdale Stable, with Falero. Entries came from New York and Huntington, W. Va., Pocatello, Idaho, and San Francisco. The total for the nine stakes up to to-night was 1133 and the 1200 mark will surely be passed."

GEORGE STONE, the celebrated colored jockey, died in Auburn (N. Y.) prison on January 12th. He was serving a term of imprisonment for killing a bartender named Miller at Coney Island in 1888. He was once sentenced to be hanged, but Governor Hill commuted the sentence. Stone rode several years ago for Churchill & Johnson, owner of Belle of the Highlands and many other noted performers, and later came to Brighton Beach and North Bergen. He became famous with B. Kahn's Saxony, a horse that won a large number of races as a four-year-old, in nearly all of which Stone had the mount. The first season of the North Bergen meeting he weighed about 100 pounds. He approached the scales one bitter cold day, when the temperature averaged nearly as low as at present, and being told he was two pounds over, took off a two-pound woolen undershirt and went out with only his silk jacket over his bare skin. At the time of his incarceration in Raymond-street jail he weighed 120 pounds. While there he was visited by a number of jockeys, L. C. Behman, for whom he rode, and others. As a jockey Stone caused no end of trouble to starters by his daredevil anxiety to get away. He was somewhat vain, and told with relish a story about how he lost the Twin City Handicap with Saxony to Elkwood in 1887, because he was "trying to ride pretty for the ladies, and make a head finish."

BROWN PRINCE, by Lexington, dam imp. Britannica IV. by The Flying Dutchman, out of Barbata, by The Barb, bred by Mr. M. H. Sanford, had three foals dropped in Ireland in 1890, two of which were winners last year, says the Turf, Field and Farm. Erin, two years old, by Brown Prince, by Hollythorn, by Hollywood, son of Orest, grandam Sweet Briar, by Strathconan, out of Verbena, by Sir Tattam Sykes, won four out of eight races in which he started; won the Sudbury Stakes at Derby, ran second to Ravensburg in the Great Lancashire Breeders' Produce Stakes with five others behind him; won the Leopardstown Grand Prize for two-year-olds, defeating five others; ran second to Best Man in the Harrington Stakes with four others behind him; won the Scoury Nursery Stakes at Newmarket, with eighteen others behind him; won the Surrey Nursery Stakes at Gatwick, beating a field of nine others, and ran third in the Chesterfield Nursery Stakes with twenty-three others behind him. Killosser, a three-year-old brother to Erin, won two races, and was second in two in eight starts. Kilsallaghan, a two-year-old by Brown Prince, dam Gipsy, by Astrologer, started eight times, ran a dead heat with Court Jester, and divided the stakes in the Hassock Plate; ran second to Lucky Devil in the Durdane Plate; second to Shelley in the Second Nursery Handicap, at Newmarket; second to Orontes in The Southfield Plate, and won the International Produce Stakes. In all his races there were fairly good fields.

AS AN illustration of how the malformed "hollow-backed" foals are produced, the following letter from Australia to the London Live Stock Journal has a value: "We had to send two thoroughbred mares with filly foals at foot, each about three weeks old, for about fifteen miles. Owing to the negligence of the men in charge, the mares got ahead and finally took to galloping. A stern chase and a long chase, and a good five miles had been compassed before the mares were headed and their pace regulated. Very shortly after the four arrived the foals were noticed to show signs of drooping in the back. They got from bad to worse, and eventually became so hollow-backed that the owner of the stallion determined to have them shot—when two-year-olds—as useless deformities. A friend, who knew the pedigrees and the story, offered to give £3 for the two. The bid was accepted and the fillies were at once put to the stud. The worse (a chestnut) bred a splendid colt foal without a sign of his dam's infirmity, and it was sold as an entire for £100. The next year the same mare threw an equally good filly foal. The other (a black) refused to breed. More pitiable objects than these two fillies were never seen. We attributed the misfortune to the long gallop with the sun shining hot upon the backs all the way, and possibly the evil was increased by the condition of the milk in the udders of the dams, to which the foals resorted as soon as the gallop was stopped. The malformation was not hereditary, because the produce of the one that did breed did not show any tendency to it, nor was it caused by the foals being prematurely weaned, for they showed it before weaning and they were allowed to suck the full time. Nor was it the soil, for there were thirty foals fed that year at the same station, and these two were the only ones so disfigured."

Sacramento Scribblings.

[Special Correspondence of the BREEDER AND SPORTSMAN.]

SACRAMENTO, January 23, 1893.—I send you a few horsev items from this abode of the legislators which may be out of place. There seems to be a demand in Indiana for good representatives of the Blue Bull family. T. C. Snider received a letter from them asking him to set a price on Creole, 2:20. It seems that there is a Creole colt out of Flash, by Egmont, there that is a wonder. If Mr. Snider can make Creole stand upon that game leg he will be seen on the circuit with him. There are few finer-formed or gamer-looking horses than he anywhere. I understand the horse is registered 21,702. Mr. Snider is jogging Erin, 2:29½, and the Eclectic-Roka Patchen lilly on the road, and by the way he drives them it would seem as if his love is pretty well divided between the two.

There are not many horses working at the Sacramento track; lots of the old-timers have gone to other tracks. This is not because the track is not a good winter track, for you can work there any time almost; the next day after a severe rain storm and drivers on the outskirts of the city are as good as can be found anywhere, but it must be that there are not many horses working this winter. Wilbur Smith is working seven or eight bang-tails, General Hart's Director filly (out of Almonta, 2:24½); she is a nice looker and reels off quarters in forty seconds very easy; she is a trotter sure, and last but not least that great colt Kibir. I think he made a mistake in not giving him a record as a two-year-old, for he could have trotted then very close to 2:20. Tom Holmes has Hylas Boy, 2:23½, a horse that can beat 2:20 several seconds; Brilliantine, 2:30, a mare that ought to be hot company for the side wheelers in her class this year, for she could beat 2:20 as a three-year-old, with less than four months' handling; he also has a very promising green pacer by Prompter that has shown quarters in thirty-two seconds and miles below 2:30 with very work and a Director three-year old that has just been broken.

O. Smiley, one of our old-timers has returned from Oregon to winter here, bringing with him Judge Bloomfield, 2:33, and four other young horses; and report has it that some of the old "chap's" horses can "go along some."

Worth Ober has quite a string, among them the erratic Nevada pacer Frenchy, 2:20½. Worth hopes to get him steady by the time the bell rings; if he does he will make the best of them go some, as the horse has plenty of speed. He has Col. Hickman, 2:25½, also a nice-looking three-year-old colt by Hawthorne, belonging to Mr. Dan Flint, of the Pioneer Hop Yard.

Chas. Schlutius has Almonta, 2:24½. She has been fired and will be prepared for the 2:25 class next fall, and also a nice-looking mare belonging to Mr. Tery, one of our popular young lumber dealers.

Mr. Geo. Barrett has charge of Mr. Hugh Casey's stable of young horses. They include a five-year-old mare by Fallis, 2:23, that is quite promising, and two Don Marvin fillies.

Mr. Chas. Goddard, our popular young horse-shoer, has a very promising two-year-old colt by Don Marvin that steps quarters in thirty-seven seconds and acts like an old campaigner.

Frank Depoister has three two-year-olds, two by the Prince of Norfolk, and a Greenback filly that is one of the finest two-year-olds here. Ab Stemler has five or six bangtails belonging to Dan Burns. Tom Boyle has three two-year-old colts by the Prince of Norfolk that are an exceptionally fine-looking lot, but he has not done much with them as yet. They belong to Mr. Todhunner.

Mr. Chas. Dilman has several trotters in his stable, among them a very handsome chestnut two-year-old colt by Silver Bow, belonging to our popular boniface, Mr. (Joe) Bowers, of the Golden Eagle Hotel.

There was a very enthusiastic meeting of the Capital Turf and Dreing Club. Monday evening last they decided to give a spring meeting, to be held the first week in May. It will be divided between the trotters and the runners, and will, in all probability, last six days. Yours truly, WOODLAND.

Sturgis to the Front.

Horsemen who are making up their programmes for their Eastern trip this summer are invited to send in their entries to the Sturgis (Michigan) Fair Association. The meeting will commence July 31st and end August 1st. Over $50,000 will be given in stakes and purses, and as the entries close next Wednesday, February 1st, there is no time to lose in attending to this preliminary. Animals must be named at the time of making the entry. The Citizens' State Bank is the custodian of the funds of this thriving institution, and the meeting to be held will surpass all others heretofore held. Read the advertisement in this issue.

Special attention is invited to Col. R. P. Pepper & Son's South Elkhorn Farm consignment, to be sold January 31 in F. J. Berry & Co.'s great Chicago sale. This offering comprises the foals of 1891, and are a grand bred lot of youngsters by Norval, 2:14½, an extreme speed-producing son of Electioneer; Gems, by Onward, 2:25½, sire of Nelly Mason, 2:14, and sixty-four in 2:30, including nineteen in the 2:20 list, and grand sire of eighty-seven in 2:30, including Athadon (1) 2:27, Belle Acton (1), 2:29½, and Online (2), 2:11, all champion records. The collection represents Taxgatherer, by Nutpatch, by Nutwood, out of a daughter of Madrid, by George Wilkes, second dam by Egbert, sire of Egthorne, 2:12½, and fifth dam Vic, dam of Mattie Graham, 2:21½, and grandam of three in 2:30, by Mambrino Chief. Assertion, by Onward, nut of Cut, by Brignoli, second dam Crop, dam of Code, 2:22½; Counsellor, 2:21; and Blanch Amory, 2:26, and grandam of Boaz, 2:17½; Brown, 2:18½; Williams, 2:20½, etc., by Pilot Jr. In the lot are Norris, Chase, Robosa and other gilt-edged bred ones by Norval, 2:14½, out of great bred dams and others by Onward, comprising many brilliant speed prospects, and youngsters fit to head any stud. Write for catalogue to F. J. Berry & Co., Union Stock Yards, Chicago.

"It is my opinion," remarked a horseman in the office the other day, "that no stallion ever founded a great family that did not have an individuality peculiarly his own. One that does not look like any other horse but that will command attention anywhere. Look at Nutwood. No one ever saw a horse that looked like him unless it was one of his descendants. Robert McGregor also was a horse that commanded universal admiration, and Red Wilkes is another one that has no counterpart. A great horse is like a great man. He will remind you of no one, but stands as a distinct type in himself.—American Trotter.

There will be numerous bills in regard to veterinary affairs before the Legislature this year, we are informed. If there is any class of bills that will demand great care and deliberation in considering it will be these. It is hoped that there will be no factional fights in regard to their discussion and that the question of party politics will not enter into the subject. It is of vital importance that these bills be drafted by competent veterinarians and that the regulation of the practice of veterinary surgery and medicine in this State be made so plain that the legislators may fully and clearly understand them. The Legislature should place the control and issuance of licenses to non-graduates in the hands of competent veterinary surgeons appointed by the State, and not leave the matter to be controlled by any society; by doing so, such scenes as were enacted at the last Legislature will be entirely dispensed with and the control of veterinary affairs be placed on a footing favorable to the general public.

THE racing at Oakland is proving to be quite successful notwithstanding the edict against the "bookies." An outfit of these gentlemen are in attendance and are doing a land-office business.

Time and Weight Tests on Turf Tracks.

It is, of course, only natural that the natives of any country should believe that the section in which they first saw the light excels in the production of many things which delight the heart of man. The Kentuckian will not admit that in any other portion of the world can be produced such a large percentage of brainy and brawny men, beautiful women and fleet horses or whisky of such excellent flavor. The Englishman will tell you that his country excels in the production of almost everything under the sun, and especially proud is the "bloomin' Britisher" of the quality of his ale, the domesticity of his wife and the ability of his race horses. The Australian will tell you that in all athletic sports his people are a long distance in the lead of the nations of the earth, and that the gallopers of Kangarooland can give the horses of other portions of the world about twenty pounds and a "donkey-licking." Pride is a good thing, and we admire it very much in any one, but braggadocio can be carried to such an extreme that of necessity a halt must be called.

An American writer in the Turf, Field and Farm of a recent date (and the gentleman evidently was suffering at the time from a terrible case of kangaroo fever, super-induced by hospitality), in a lengthy article, told of a number of good English horses that had reached the colonies at various times and reproduced themselves in their new-found homes, so far away from the "tight little isle." This part of the article was very good, and showed that the writer had delved deeply into the Australian stud books. But at the tail-end of the production there was a lot of figuring that would weary any one but an Australian or some one that glories in deriding everything American. Among other mathematical examples the American writer had figured out that Carbine could leave Miss Woodford in her palmist days about a quarter of a mile (or at the head of the homestretch) in a race of three miles, each to carry 145 pounds. Just how he made this calculation will never be known, in all probability, but it is no more ridiculous than a few other comparisons he made in the same article.

The average Australian will tell you that Carbine, Nordenfeldt, Abercorn or Marvel, had they been brought to this country to race, could run a mile and a quarter over our tracks and with the weight up that our scale allows them, in about 2:01, and easily do a mile in 1:36. Talk is inexpensive, but as yet few thinkers can be brought to believe that their horses are superior to ours on the turf until the crack horses of the two countries meet on some race course and settle the matter. In no other way can one tell which excels. Their tracks are of turf, ours generally of clay; their top-notchers are generally asked to carry more weight than our best horses and the distances in the Antipodean races are as a rule greater than in this country, but we have a host of horses that have shown ability to pack great weight and win in fast time. In America there are not over two first-class turf tracks, and it will be acknowledged by all fair-minded men that only our second and third-class horses have raced over courses of this description. By most of our horsemen turf tracks are regarded as being not so safe as the clay or sandy courses. The time and weight tests, in the absence of racing between the horses of America and Australasia, are about all that we can go on in making a comparison. This is hardly fair, in view of the fact that our best horses have never run over a turf course, but even then the American thoroughbred does not suffer very much. Following is a table showing the best performances "on the grass" of American and Australasian horses in distances up to two miles:

Table comparing American and Australasian horses with columns for distance, horse name, weight, and time.

We found it impossible in most cases to get the weights carried by the Australasian record-breakers, but presume that in most of the distances the Antipodean horses carried almost as much as ours. It will be readily seen by the foregoing that our horses, considering that they were not used to running on turf tracks, that they are not "keyed up" for any one particular race, but generally race about twice a week, did exceedingly well. And in the American list, it must be remembered there are no Firenzi, Salvator, Luke Blackburns, Tremonts, The Bards, Hanovers, Miss Woodfords, Kingstons or horses of the very highest class to be pitted against their best in a test of speed and endurance, hence the comparison is hardly a just one. One thing, however, we will say for the Australian horses, and it is that they are a hearty lot, free from most of the diseases to which horses in England and America are heir to. That the Australian thoroughbred horses are accomplishing wonders in this country in the way of producing fast and powerful racers few will deny, and at the same time our Antipodean brethren might improve their stock immensely by taking a lot of American mares with considerable Lexington blood in their veins over to put in their studs for an outcross, and some stallions from the tried Leamington and Vandal families as well. We have had too much of a Lexington craze in this country, and the blood has not proved very good in the male line. In the female line, however, it is difficult to excel. England has been unloading her refuse on our market for quite a while. The few really good stallions we have had from the "mother country" have been handsomely paid for, and we will in all likelihood in the future have to pay for the best, as in the past. During the last twelve months an astonishing lot of English pedigrees have been disposed of at low rates, but we are afraid comparatively few sterling performers or producers.

Approach of the Breeding Season.

The large number of sales that have taken place this winter is unprecedented in the history of the trotting horse. Not only has there been scores of really choice ones sold at auction in Chicago, Lexington, St. Louis and New York, while thousands, that a few years ago might have been considered first-class, but are now known as "weeds," were also disposed of. Some of the largest stock farms have been sold and the stock scattered, because of the decease of the owners. Never before has there been such a fatality among the most prominent of our breeders. The choice individuals that they purchased at large prices years ago were sold with their offspring, and are scattered to the farthestmost parts of the United States. The small breeder has profited by these disposal sales, and where one breeder was found two years ago in some of the counties of the older States, three or four have placed their dependence on a reaction in the market for good trotters and have stocked their farms with choicer individuals at lower figures than they would have otherwise done.

The "bottom" has not "dropped out of the business;" there are more enthusiasts in it to-day than ever, and with the abolishment of the time records, the introduction of the dash system and two-in-three races, by which public interest is certain to be revived, there will be an increasing demand for well-trained, fast trotting horses.

The opening of the European, Mexican and Australian markets for horses is an auspicious one, and, in this Columbian year, while tens of thousands will visit the great world's fair, the exhibition of trotters and pacers, and their superiority will at once be acknowledged by all; and an interest will be taken in them by these wealthy and influential foreigners that cannot help being beneficial to the industry.

This will be a great year for the small breeders in California, and owners of well-bred stallions should not hesitate to advertise now. Men who own finely-bred mares are not dismayed by the reports of the sales, and look forward to the time when they will raise a great performer. The opportunities for making money with a good trotter will increase, instead of diminish, and these far-sighted gentlemen know it. The demand of the hour is for the best; nothing else will do, and if owners of stallions do not get as large a number of mares for their horses this season, there is this consolation, they will get better bred ones. The union of Electioneer, Nutwood, Wilkes, Almont, Moor, Director, McGregor, Happy Medium, Mambrino Patchen, Steinyay, Jay Gould and Sidney blood is sought by breeders, and the more of these great families they see in the pedigrees of the youngsters the more hope they have of owning a 2:04 trotter.

The man who has not lost faith in the future of the trotting horse is as deep a student as ever of pedigrees, performances and conformation. He sees in the weeding out of all unknown 2:50 stallions that are built like saw horses, a sufficient cause for the sales at low figures of that class of stock, and knows that their doom is sealed. The man who sends a mare to such a horse deserves to become a bankrupt. This is an advancing age in breeding, and the man who looks for success in it must keep up with the times. He must be in the "bike sulky" of progression. He must advertise his stallion in the leading turf journals, breed him to approved mares only, (for every ill-bred and bad-formed mare that is sent to the horse will be a very poor walking advertisement of his prepotency), and he will then look with pride upon the produce of such a union. Every owner of good mares is carefully scanning the turf journals to see what horses are to stand for service in 1893 and it behooves stallion owners to send in their notices early. It not only brings in money, but also places the stallion and his breeding before the public, where it belongs, and from the Atlantic to the Pacific, and from Canada to Mexico, the horse becomes known to every one.

Records Thrown Out.

The following dispatch was received in this city, Tuesday:

CHICAGO, January 23.—Stamboul's grand performance of 2:07 1/2, made on the Stockton, Cal., track on November 23d last, the world-famous mile that crowned him king of trotting stallions, has been rejected by the American Trotting Register Association. Kremlin, who coveyed a mile at Nashville, Tenn., in 2:07 3/4 on November 12, is, according to the Register, the acknowledged trotting king.

When the matter of the Stockton records come up for consideration at a special meeting of the Trotting Register Association held in Chicago on January 18th, the secretary of the Stockton association asked for a continuance until January 27th. Thereupon the following resolution was adopted by the executive board:

It is ordered that all the performances at the Stockton, Cal., track from October 13th to November 23d inclusive, shall be rejected for record unless the said association furnish sufficient evidence on January 27, 1893, the date selected by their secretary, that such performances were conducted in accordance with the rules of this association.

The secretary of the Stockton association has notified Registrar Steiner of the American Trotting Register Association that he does not think he can furnish the required evidence and that he will not be in attendance at the adjourned meeting, and be further states that his society will not be represented at the said adjourned meeting.

Under the resolution above quoted all the time performances made at Stockton, Cal., from October 13th to November 23d inclusive, stand rejected. The other time performances made at Stockton, which will not appear in the official register, are ninety-seven in number:

Table listing various horse names and their owners, such as Allannah (pacer), Airly, Acrobol (pacer), Advance (3), Alfred, Anteo Wilkes, Astron S. (2), Ameer (2), Avoca (2), Alect, Athenia (2), Auntie (6), Alcona Jr., Bernal, Brown Thorne, Bessie Bel (2), Bonnibel (2), Bell Bird (2), Besterly (2), Colonel May, Coral, Capt. Lambert (pacer), Clio Wilkes, Clarion (2), Daghestan (2), Daisy, Desgrado, Donckba (2), Dexter Thorne, Donzella, Elwina, Election, Elbezer, Elma Sontag (2), Elden (3), Electrina (4), Guide, George Dexter, Helen (3), Harry Winchester, Ida May, Jim Milvanna, Jessie (2), Jassamine, King Oro, Lull, Lon Wilkes, Lynwood (2), Lily Dale, Lilac (3), Lent, Leo Wilkes, Manton, Lorance (2), Lottery Ticket, Major Lambert, Millie Wilkes, Menlo Belle, Menlo, Maud Alameda, Morning Glory, Marie (2), Maggie May, Majester, Melrose Boy, Mount Vernon, Nettie C., Native Son (3), Oronoco, Puritan, Parthenia (3), Paola, Pleasanton, Regal Wilkes, Rowena (2), Redondo, Sweetwater (2), Silght (6), Sidwood (pacer), Sidwood, Sam Brown, Susie S., Sir Wilkes, Sbe, Stamboul (10), Sweet Rose (1), Truman (4), Thornwood, Veronica, Wilkes Blanche, W. Wood (pacer).

The official action of the Register Association will cause a big sensation among trotting men and will affect many interests. At the last Independence meeting many performances against time were made, but only two animals are affected by the rejection of records by the Trotting Register Association. They are Dinah Cossack, 2:23 1/4, and Kate Poverty (pacer), 2:24 1/4. These animals started for record instead of being started, as required by the Association, "to equal or beat a specified time," and their performances were therefore rejected.

The above dispatch created no little excitement, and owners of trotters and pacers who paid their $25 for every trial against the watch, besides all the expenses of training and caring for their horses, are loud in their denunciations of the officials who did not comply with the law adopted in 1892 regarding these time records. Their horses trotted and paced every foot of the distance on the "Guideroy" course, and now they have a record that will not only be a bar to them in the races this fall, but their names will not appear among the performers in the Year Book.

The magnitude of this question and the effect it will have upon the horses in this State is of such importance that we feel it a duty to all breeders to not make any further comments upon it until we receive a full and comprehensive account of the proceedings of the American Trotting Register Association meeting.

NOTWITHSTANDING all the long-winded articles in the various dailies of this city regarding the formation of a new racing organization, building a fine track and magnificent grand stands, nothing but talk has been indulged in, as yet no organization has been effected, and not a dollar has been subscribed for the purpose. Some enterprising gentlemen will doubtless eventually muster up courage to buy enough ground for a track and grandstands, as yet they have not appeared, though we have plenty of rich men in our midst. Oh, that San Francisco capitalists had a lot more local pride—something of the Chicago spirit, for instance!

THE work of compiling the catalogue of the Hopland Stock Farm and the desire to have the sale held during fair weather necessitated its postponement from the 27th of February to March 2d and 3d. Nearly all of the stock—some 150 head—will be shown in harness, and from present indications the sale promises to be one of the largest ever held on the Coast. Every great horse in California will have representatives, and the many famous broodmares, trotting horses with records, colts and fillies, besides the group of choice stallions, will attract one of the largest crowds ever assembled at the Bay District track to witness an auction sale.

Napa News.

[Special Correspondence of the BREEDER and SPORTSMAN.]

EDITOR BREEDER AND SPORTSMAN:—The horse industry seems on the increase in Napa. Every clear day many of our horsemen may be seen on the streets and avenues exercising their trotters. Since the building of the race track and fair grounds our city fathers have awakened to the necessity of improved streets and thoroughfares, where five years ago the main streets leading out of town were almost impassable there are now smooth, well-kept streets, where the horses quartered at the track and in private stables can be exercised comfortably any day right after a rain. Mr. A. T. Hatch's stallions, Guide, 2:16 1/4, and Sid Roy, have arrived at their new home, the ranch recently purchased by Mr. Hatch, near town. Mr. Hawes, manager for Mr. Jennings, has Lenmar, 2:16 1/4, at the track preparing for the season; he also has a few choice colts. Fred W. Loeber, of the Vineland Stock Farm, is wintering a large string there also under the management of Clarence Hill; among them are Grandissimo, 2:23, Alconeer (full brother to Alcona Jr., 2:19), Caducas, by Almont Medium 2:18, dam Amelia T. (full sister to Prince Warwick, 2:15, sold to the Australian government for $20,000, by Alcona 7:30; second dam Warwick Maid (dam of Warwick Medium, two-year-old record, 2:35) on half-mile track against aged horses), by Almont Mambrino 7:61; third dam by Delmonico 1:10 (sire of dam of Sultan, 2:24, the sire of Stamboul, 2:07 1/2); fourth dam by Cassius M. Clay Jr. 2:2, etc. What a royally-bred chap this is, and he is a trotter. King Whippleton is another handsome, large three-year-old stallion that should make a great carriage horse, sire like Whippleton. Myrtle Thorne, two-year-old record 2:35, by Grandissimo, 2:23, seems to be Hill's pet. He thinks he will be on hand next fall when the three-year-old stakes are trotted for. Myrtle should be a good one; she was not broken until June, and at the Breeders' meeting she was separately timed in the race against Rowena in 2:30 on the outside of the track. He has several other very promising youngsters.

Thos. Kinney, formerly B. C. Holly's lieutenant, has a large string of colts at the track, principally the property of Messrs. Zollner & Even, which are being put in shape for the auction sale, March 8th. This will be one of the largest and choicest sales ever held in California. The entire collection of broodmares and fillies of the Coombs' Bros. are to be disposed of, also all the stock of John McCord, who has been a liberal buyer at the large sales of choice material the past four or five years. Zollner & Even will put in their entire collection. There will be represented such sires as Director, Steinway, Stamboul, Alcona, Whippleton, Mountain Boy, Grandissimo and others. The gem of the flock will be the noted mare Lilly Stanley, 2:17. It is also reported that if Mr. Loeber does not dispose of his stallions Alcona, Alconeer, Caducas and King Whippleton at private sale, they will all pass under the auctioneer's hammer.

NAPA.

THE handsome brown stallion James Madison, 2:17 1/4, will make the season of 1893 at the Oakland track. See the advertisement in this issue.

The Palo Alto Sale.

The sale of geldings, colts and fillies from the Palo Alto Stock Farm was not a financial success. There were sixty-eight head sold for $21,295 and the average was $313.16. There are various reasons given for the great falling off in the prices in the New York market and especially of this lot. Over 3,700 were advertised to be sold there in December and January, and the prevailing opinion among horse-men has been that the market is overstocked and the prejudice against thoroughbred blood in the trotter is so strong that buyers do not care to purchase and keep breeding up from it. They prefer to have plenty of it hack in the third and fourth generations. Many of the colts and fillies sold are by sons of Electioneer and General Benton that have never had their progeny worked for speed. The necessity of having fashionable Wilkes, Nutwood, Dictator, Happy Medium blood blended with that of Electioneer was never more urgently shown than at present. That every animal sold was a bargain no one who knows anything about the stock can deny, and many of these sold will be seen on the circuit this fall.

Director as a Sire.

I want to call your attention to Director as a sire of race horses. Nearly every one knows that Director was a great race horse, and that his last season on the turf he was the largest money-winning trotter of the year. His winnings that year amounted to $13,325. He was then seven years old. I don't find any other sire who has four of his produce, considering age, that have won anywhere near as much money as the Directors, as the following figures will show:

Table showing Director's earnings: Direct, to seven years old $26,357.50; Margaret S., to four years old 20,224.25; Evangeline, to four years old 4,224.00; Director, at three years old 12,657.50. Total $60,469.25.

Neither do I find any other sire that has produced two trotters with race records better than 2:12, and these records were made the last and winning heats in the races, and they are also the race records for their age. They are Director, 3, third heat, 2:11 1/4, and Evangeline, 4, fifth heat, 2:11 1/4. By referring to the summaries published in the Year Book you can find the horses that they have beaten. Director is still a young horse, foaled 1877. He has not been represented by many of his produce in races, but the amount of money they won proved better than anything else their qualities as race horses.—F. S. Gorton, in Horse Review.

Wildidle and Monday Final.

In another portion of this paper will be found advertised the great stallions, Wildidle and Monday Final. The former, who will be limited to ten mares at $250 each the season, is one of the greatest sires of the present day, having produced the grand race horses Wildwood, Flambeau, Ella Doane, May D., Sinfax and Nomad among a host of high-class winners. Monday Final is a young horse, consequently has had little chance as yet to show what he can do in the producing line, but as his youngsters are more than promising and he is by that wonderful horse Monday (sire of Peel, Shannon, Duke of Monday, Carrie C., Phebe Anderson, Mark L. and Argyle, among others), dam Lottie J., by Wildidle; second dam Lizzie Brown, by Rifleman; third dam Kate, by imp. Sovereign, etc., should make a splendid sire. Monday Final is limited to twenty mares at $75 each. Address, for particulars, H. C. Judson, care of William Osborn, Box 223, Santa Clara, Cal.

Salt Lake's Spring Meeting.

The testimony of all horsemen who attended the spring meeting of the Salt Lake Driving Park in 1892 was very favorable, and as this organization this year intends to give another, at which $20,000 in purses will be given, the same large stables and many others will attend. The management of this organization is intrusted to a number of the most prominent and influential citizens of the "City of the Saints." Everything they undertake is conducted in a first-class manner. The track is an excellent one, while the hotel accommodations, stables and buildings are unequalled in any city of its size in the United States. The date of meeting will be announced hereafter, but the entries will close March 15th. See advertisement.

DAGONET, the black son of the unbeaten Tremont, died here this mornng from the effects of a severe attack of pneumonia. Last year he raced on the tracks governed by the board of control in Mike F. Dwyer's name and colors. He passed into the stable of Samuel Stedeker, becoming one of the outlaid Hill Toppers. Early last summer Mr. Dwyer purchased Dagonet and Chicago from John Hunter for $12,000.—New York Exchange. He was by Tremont, dam Fair Lad, (dam also of Bermuda), by imp. Glenelg. Fair Lady is now at Menlo Stock Farm, $12,000 having been paid for her last year.

BROOKPALE, that famous old stud farm, the property of the late D. D. Withers, near Red Bank, N. J., has been sold. William P. Thompson, head of the Lead Trust, a man of large fortune with a decided taste for breeding fine stock, is the purchaser. The price agreed upon is thought to be in the neighborhood of $150,000.

THE fastest and most forward youngsters in Henry Wald's hands are said to be the colts by imp. Cheviot, from Julia P., by Wheately, and Little Flush, by Leinster. The Cheviots generally "come to their speed" very early, anyhow.

IT is rumored that Los Angeles will have a race meeting in March lasting two weeks. The gallopers will have plenty of work in 1893 in California, surely.

JOE COTTON, the old Oregon sprinter in Keating & Otinger's stable, is entered in the Toboggan Slide handicap at Morris Park.

TURF AND TRACK.

The Sulk.

DUBOIS BROTHERS, of Denver, Colo., have a full sister to Hazel Wilkes, 2:14, in foal to Superior, 2:17.

THERE is some talk of organizing a spring circuit which would include Sacramento, Stockton, San Francisco and San Jose.

If Trnman, 2:12, goes East in O. A. Hickok's care next year, it would not surprise us if he returned wearing the crown.

LUCY, 2:14, is the fastest mare in the great broodmare list. She was the fastest mare in a long-drawn out contest way back in 1882.

THERE is talk of establishing a union of all trotting associations in Germany, Austria and Italy, on the plan of the American Grand Circuit.

ALLERTON'S fee has been cut down from $1,000 to $300. Arion's has come down from $2,500 to $1,000, while Kremlin, the king of trotting stallions, to $400.

CUT your miserable little 2:40 stallions, says an exchange. Their lives will then be tranquil at least, yours happy and the future race horse will rise and call you blessed.

THE "bombshell" has burst in the camp of trotting horse owners who sent their youngsters to Stockton, paid all expenses, and now learn that the records earned are not allowed.

A BILL has passed the Ohio Legislature making it a penitentiary offence to enter a horse in a class to which he is not eligible. Ringers will have to give Ohio a wide berth.

Full many a flower is born to blush unseen,
And waste its fragrance on the desert air;
Full many a colt is entered in rich trotting stakes,
Then proves to be a pacer fair and square.
Grey's Elegy (improvement.)

THERE is a Director colt, out of a mare by Abbotsford, at the Santa Rosa Stock Farm, that will make Mr. Henry Pierce think Flying Jib and Direct are very slow horses when he sees him pace.

DAN McCARTY will go East with a string of mares by Dexter Prince (with records) to sell at Fasig's sale. The fame of these horses has extended all over the United States and they ought to bring good prices.

THE able article on "The Horse," published in this issue, is one that will be perused with pleasure by every lover of the noble animal. Dr. Lane is an enthusiast on equine topics, and "knows whereof he speaks."

IF there is any one thing that will make a breeder disgusted with the business, it is to send a mare away in good condition to be bred, and have her returned poor in flesh and every appearance that she has been half starved.

THE Red Wilkes-Dictator stallion Dictatus is getting his book rapidly filled; breeders who have faith in the future of the trotting-horse industry are not afraid of a representative or two of such breeding on their stock farms.

THE Manchester Driving Park, Manchester, N. H., has recently been purchased by a company of five business men of that city. They will sell a portion of the property for building lots, but will reserve the track proper for several years.

THE tracks at Lodi and San Jose are "alive" with trotters and pacers, and a person would think this was summer instead of winter in California, if the dozens of sulkies moving back and forth on these smooth courses were any criterion.

THE fool-killer is needed at Lexington, Ky., for the callow youth who is crying down the horse business. He has already hurt the trotting horse interests of the blue grass region thousands of dollars by his Nihilistic utterances through the press.

WHAT is said to be the fastest yearling in Toledo is C. A. Harley's Marion, by Greenlander, 2:15, dam Brilliant, by Electioneer; second dam Bright Eyes (sister to Prussian Boy, 2:26), by Gen. Benton; third dam Prussian Maid, 2:19, by Signal.

J. KELLY is doing his best at Pleasanton to work some of the fat off the colts and fillies that were wintered there. He will have a string of real fast ones this fall; and as he is "an artist" he will make things boom in the Eastern circuit with them.

CRITTENDEN & BARRY, of Bridgeport, Conn., owners of Fallis, by Electioneer, have some great young stock by that stallion, the oldest of which are two years, and from reports, unless all signs fail, they will be among the fastest youngsters that will appear this year.

ED. CONNOLLEY, the famous knight of the sulky, has resigned his position at the Wisburn Stock Farm and henceforth will be seen behind the youngsters on the Chino Stock Farm. M. McManus has been engaged by Dr. Wise to fill the vacancy left by Mr. Connolley.

THE grass on the Oakwood Park Stock Farm is quite high and the stock is looking well. The youngsters by Chas. Derby and Prince Red are phenomenally fast, and next year there will be a number ready when the bell taps that will not be behind the distance flag when the race ends.

THERE is a gelding by Chief of the Echoes at East San Gabriel in charge of Walter Maben that is a wonder, and even at this period of the year is trotting quarters in thirty-four seconds. Mr. Maben will have a cracker-jack to bring some of the money back when the circuit ends this fall.

THE recent edict of the American Association has been the means of suppressing several articles that contained glowing accounts of what the California trotters and pacers did in 1892. When the writers recover from the shock the readers of this journal will be entertained by a recital of their "little tales of woe."

F. S. GORTON, Gretna Farm, Chicago, has sold to parties in Indiana the brown filly Dare, foaled June, 1892, by Director, 2:31, dam Alberta, by Albert W., 2:20 (sire of Little Albert, 2:34), second dam Echota, by Echo (sire of dam of Direct, 2:34), pacing; third dam Lady Gray, by Algona, sire of Flying Jib, 2:05, pacing.

MONROE SALISBURY purchased the brown gelding C. C. that was spoken of in these columns last week. Mr. Chase, his former owner, says he is by Brown Jug out of a mare by Napa Rattler; second dam by Billy Blossom. We expect C. C. will make some fellows secede from their coin when the 2:30 trotters are called out.

G. W. LEAVITT, of Boston, has bought of William L. Simons, of Lexington, Ky., the roan colt Mickie, two years old, by Jay Bird, dam Irish Mag, by George Wilkes, second dam Mag Lock, by American Star, third dam by Hambletonian, for $6,000. The purchase is said to have been made for ex-Congressman Frank Jones, of New Hampshire.

THERE is a sidewheeler in Los Angeles that is a second Flying Jib. He is by Dashwood 14962, dam untraced. He was taken out of a wagon that was used for carrying pumpkins and in his third workout paced the last quarter in thirty seconds. Hears horses like San Pedro will have to give this pumpkin horse plenty of room, for he's a boomer from Boomville and knows no such word as quit.

WALTER MABEN left Edgemont Stock Farm last month and opened a public stable at Los Angeles. J. Maguire has taken his place at the farm. Mr. Maben has a string of fifteen very promising trotters; among them is Richmond Jr., 2:15, and Native Son, by Star Sultan. The latter is one of the best "green" four-year-olds in California, and in Maben's hands will be one of the sensations of 1893.

THE sale of Sidney has been authorized by the Superior Court of Alameda county, so nothing remains to prevent the grand-looking stallion from being sent to the auction sale. Some wide-awake breeder who wants to get a quick return for his investment will purchase him, for he knows that in California there are sons and daughters and grandsons and granddaughters that will be making low records for years to come.

IN new oats the outside of the husk is bright and shining, having almost a glazed appearance, especially in the black variety. In old oats this glazing is lost. The outside, though it may be perfectly clean, is dim, and the ends of the husks in white oats and the point of the kernel in both white and black oats are always a little darkened. Badly sowed new oats may in these respects sometimes resemble old oats, but in such cases they will probably be distinguished by their sogginess.

THERE will be an addition to the brigade of California trotting owners that will go East this year with strings of trotters. Messrs. Ottinger & Keating are handling ten very likely movers at Lodi and have them engaged in all the big events in the East. With Orrin A. Hickok and his string and the addition from Palo Alto; John A. Goldsmith with the San Mateo Farm representatives, and the Pleasanton string of fast ones, California's name will be kept on high in 1893.

THE following sales were made recently at the Saginaw Stock Farm, Saginaw, Mich.: Kiny Fisher, bay filly, foaled 1891, by Sphinx, 2:20, dam Maggie Fisher, by Byerly Abdallah; second dam by Louis Napoleon, to Cadwell & Everts, Chicago, Ill. Bay colt, foaled 1891, by Sphinx, dam Lou Rowell (dam of Kate Rowell, 2:29), by Louis Napoleon, to Henry Hand, Shenandoah, Iowa; Dixoneer, bay colt, foaled 1892, by Sphinx, dam Jessie Dixon, 2:28 (dam of John Dickson, 2:28), by Mambrino Patchen, to Dana Rhoades, Groton, N. Y.

GOOD stock requires good care. The thick-skinned, long-haired burro of New Mexico will breed well enough and rear her colts without much difficulty if she can shelter herself from the northers behind a cactus plant and have an occasional nibble at a bunch of buffalo grass, but such treatment will not do for the velvet-coated, high-mettled, sensitive American trotter. Such magnificent specimens of animated mechanism are not produced in that kind of work-shops.

THERE was foaled at the Valensin Stock Farm January 22, a beautiful chestnut filly, star, snip and off hind pastern white. It is by Sidney, 2:19, dam Faustina, by Crown Point, 2:24. This new comer is a sister to Fausta, 2:22, as a yearling, and Faustino (1), 2:35; (2) 2:24; (3) 2:14. She is the first foal on the farm this year; her dam is the only one that ever produced by one sire two record breakers. Everybody on the farm is pleased with this one. All the mares that were bred to Sidney last year are in foal, so Superintendent Mendenhall has good reason to be proud.

THE Tattersalls-Brasfield Company sold 32 head of trotters last week, the property of R. G. Stoner of Paris, Ky., for $19,135, and average of $597 per head. A large crowd was present, but no fancy prices were realized. George W. St. Clair, of Lexington, has sold to J. W. Sealts of Lina, O., his two-year-old bay colt by Eagle Bird, 2:21, sire of Monhars, 2:11, dam Molly, 2:30, dam of King Rex, 2:26, by Sweepstakes; second dam by Conqueror 97. The price paid was $3,000.

A FIVE-DOLLAR mare bred to a ten-dollar horse will bring a two dollar and a half colt, sure, and as cheap street cars are not used any more, the poor unfortunate will have to hustle among the sand hills of a poor deserted common for a living. Who among the human family wants to father the existence of such a despised monstrosity in this day of progression? Breed in lines of beauty, size and productive sources, and you can wear diamonds, while your countenance will bear the stamp of happiness, showing that you belong to the modern race.

DR. A. M. WORTMAN, proprietor of the Vermont Stock Farm, Vermont, Ill., has sold to parties in England the highly-bred two-year-old colt Julian Rayhoyd 13238, by Ray Boyd 7949 (son of Harold 413), dam Miss Redwood, by Chesterwood, son of Nutwood, 2:18, and sire of Rehus, 2:14, second dam by Blood Chief 792; third dam by Ned Forrest (Sims), son of Edwin Forrest 49; fourth dam by Cogwell's Eclipse; fifth dam by Green Mountain Morgan; sixth dam (thoroughbred), by Grey Eagle, etc. This colt was shipped from New York City to London one day last week.

THE sale of all the trotters of the Hopland Stock Farm has been postponed to March 2d. Among them is a dark brown filly sired by Pancoast 1439 (sire of Ponce de Leon, 2:13, Garnet, 2:13, Patron, 2:14, and other fast ones), dam Bessie Bowne by Dictator 113 (sire of Director, 2:17, Jay Eye See, 2:10, and the dau of Nancy Hanks, 2:04); second dam Lady Lightfoot, 2:35, by Mambrino Time 1636 (sire of Four Corners, 2:20, Mambrino Dick, etc.). This filly is one of the purest-gaited and best-formed ones in the State, and being bred just like Garnet, 2:13, and just as promising as he was at her age, she cannot help being fast.

At a meeting of the officers of the Bluegrass Circuit of Trots and Fairs, held at Lexington recently the following dates were fixed for this year: Mt. Sterling, July 4th; Shelbyville, July 12; Eminence, July 18; Sharpsburg, July 25th; Danville, August 1; Nicholasville, August 8; Versailles, August 15; Maysville, August 22; Lexington, August 29; Paris, September 5; Winchester, September 12; Cynthia, September 19th. Danville, it will be noticed retains her old date, the first Tuesday in August, and Versailles, now being a member of the Circuit, the two meetings will not conflict this year, as they did last. Harrodsburg has dropped out and will have no fair this year, though a trotting meeting may be held there sometime during the season.

MONDAY, the opening day of Woodard & Shanklin's sale at Lexington, forty-eight head of trotting stock was sold at an average of $648. J. T. Huguey's mare Ermine 2:14 was knocked off to Al Hutchings at $7,700. Andy Cutter, 2:19, was bought by George Scattergood, of Philadelphia, for $1,225. Following are two of the best sales: Birtie Girl, 2:27, h m 3, by Jay Bird; Bowerman Bros., $1,300. Elsie Wilkes, 2:24, at two years old, by Thorne Wilkes; John F. Payne, $3,400. Tuesday forty-four head sold at an average of $1,209 per head. The stallion Allendorf, by Onward, dam Alma Mater, was bought by E. D. Wiggins, the owner of Martha Wilkes, of Boston, for $10,000. The tallion Egbert, a great sire, was bought by W. B. Hawkins, of Lexington, for $12,500. Sentinel Wilkes, that cost Mr. France $11,000, was bought by Joe Thayer, for $3,800. Al Hutchings bought a mare by Happy Medium, dam by Almont, for $685.

AS WITH mares, so with stallions—the very best only should now be kept for breeding purposes. It should be borne in mind that while one can not afford to breed outside the standard, there is still abundant room for selection within its limits. There are many standard horses that lack every essential qualification of good sires. If the object is to produce speed, breed to horses that have good trotting action themselves and that uniformly produce it, and, as the horse that will be in demand in the future will be the money winner, breed to horses that produce good race horse quality along with speed. The day when 2:30 tin-cup records were highly valued has gone by. The tendency of the future will be more and more towards racing capacity. We are now entering a new era in breeding, and the stallion of the future will be the stallion that produces the greatest number of winners. Speed is good, and indeed essential, but it is far from being all. Breeders must adapt themselves to changing conditions or they will be left in the lurch.—American Trotter.

THE auction sale by C. P. Reeves of standard-bred trotting stock of the Bradtmoor Farm, near Suisun, the property of Rush & Hastings, was poorly attended last Saturday, and bidding was not very spirited. The thirteen head sold brought $4,260 in all. The following were the animals sold: Capella, b m, by Steinway, $600, F. Denio, Vallejo; Carolla, h m, 11, by Steinway, $600, J. W. Haile; Our Captain, h s, 4, by Fallis—Capella, $650, D. Fitzpatrick; Bradtmoor, h r s, 5, by Fallis, $700, J. W. Haile; Pinwood, b s, 4, by Woodnut, $400, C. H. Edwards; Fredolia, blk m, 9, by Fred Arnold, $150, J. W. Bowlin; Capella Day, h m, 3, by Noonday—Capella, $300, and Capella Wood, ch m, 4, by Woodnut—Capella, $400, J. Steffan, Vallejo; Fredolio Wilkes, blk f, 2, Mambrino Wilkes, $235, Mr. Davis, Vacaville; h g, 3, by Noonday, $475, J. W. Bowlin; h g, 3, by Noonday, $150, and h g, 2, by Noonday, $425, J. W. Haile; h g, 2, by Bradtmoor, $175, E. Dinkelspiel.

AT the Talbot Stock Farm there are a number of very promising youngsters by Mount Hood, Simmicolon and Eros out of fine trotting mares that have been noted for their speed and gameness. Mr. Talbot, the owner of this well-equipped and well-stocked farm, is one of the few breeders who takes enjoyment in driving his trotters along the roads, and the roadie who wishes to have a race with any of his horses will always find that he can be accommodated. The other day a well-known citizen of Oakland who prides himself on his team of trotting stallions, thought he would give Mr. Talbot a brush and, as he drove up alongside, challenged him. In about two minutes he was wishing he had been more discreet, for the little team of trotters belonging to his rival left him as easily as if he were hitched to a post. The residents along the San Leandro road enjoyed the scene and the cheers that greeted the winner will never be forgotten by the "bold man with the pair of brown stallions."

IT is well enough for men of wealth in the breeding business to talk about changing the standard rank from 2:30 to 2:25, but the small breeders, the rank and file, who are the bone and sinew of the business, are opposed to any such an alteration, which would be a death-blow to their interests. Apropos of the subject, Clarke's Horse Review says: I see a good many turf writers are urging the raising of the standard from 2:30 to 2:25 or better. While it is true there are vast numbers acquiring 2:30 rank every year, it is also true there are more who do not obtain records of 2:30. During the season of 1892 there were in training at the Iowa Driving Park 100 horses, and out of that number less than ten got in the charmed 2:30 circle. There are complaints of the bottom dropping out of the trotting horse business. A little more tinkering with the standard and there will be no bottom to drop out. Every sane person can appreciate a 2:30 record at its actual value, no more and no less. "A rolling stone gathers no moss," and a changing standard thoroughly unsettles the horse business. Let well enough alone.

THERE is somewhat of a similarity in the manner of the deaths of Zilecadi Golddust and that of Revenue, the thoroughbred stallion of John Minor Botts, which died during the early years of the war. Revenue died on one of the brightest and sweetest days of June. The old horse, then approaching thirty years, was led out of the stall in the morning. He was very feeble, but when he came out into the bright sunlight he braced up as if inspired by the radiant beauty of the day. Across the road and beyond a swiftly flowing stream in a green meadow a young mare, in all the freshness and vigor of early life was grazing. Raising her head she caught sight of the old stallion and uttered a low whinny. At the amorous call old Revenue turned his head, and as his dim eyes caught sight of the mare his ears pointed forward and he returned the salutation. That afternoon he died. If reports are true, Zilecadi Golddust died like a philosopher. He slowly walked around the limits of the farm, looking to the right and left across the fields as if taking a farewell look at his earthly surroundings and bidding adieu to earth, air and sky. He then walked into his stable, lay down and died in a few minutes.

The Saddle.

CHARLES BOOTS brought up Sir Walter and a lot of two-year-olds from Elmwood Stock Farm this week to race at Oakland.

ORIEL, four-year-old, by Joe Hooker from Nellie Bly, and owned by E. Savage, won a nine-sixteenths of a mile dash at Roby, Ind., on the 13th inst.

HEREAFTER $2.50 per month will be charged for stalls at Bay District track, and no trotters will be allowed to work over the time-honored course.

APPARENTLY Boots' Brutus—Bonnie Jean colt is all that was claimed for him by the San Joseans, because he won away off with ease in good time last Tuesday at Oakland in his first essay.

At the East St. Louis track, where phenomenal time has been made this winter by very poor class horses, the course has just been measured, and was found to be about 200 feet short to the mile.

THE crack jockey, Slaughter, was again suspended at Hawthorne on the 18th inst., for suspicious riding. This time it was on Ja Ja. However, it was afterward found that the horse had strained a tendon.

THE Latonia Jockey Club management has contracted to place two inches of sand over the entire track and mix it with the soil. This will greatly improve the course, and the cost will reach over $5,000.

CARTRIDGE, the three-year-old Jim Brown—Chestnut Belle filly, in the stable of Dan McCarty, won a five-furlong selling race at Roby on the 18th inst., and was bid up to $700 by Dave Waldo, who secured her. She was entered at $500.

ALLIE HILL (dam of Santa Fe) has been booked to imp. Chesterfield. She is by the good horse Wildidler (son of Wildidle), dam Mary Wade, by Woodburn; second dam Viola, by imp. Knight of St. George; third dam Lucy Wade by Lexington, etc.

NOTHING will kill a meeting quicker than horses entered in races not being "out" at all times for every cent of either the first, second or third money. In the second race at Oakland last Tuesday Guadalupe made no effort to win and did not get a place, but came out and won the third race easily.

BILLY APPELEY is now training the old bay horse Jackson, by Luke Blackburn out of Ivy Leaf (dam of Bramble and Bramaleta), and a two-year-old brother to Janus, by Duke of Norfolk out of Elaine, by Wildidle. E. Savage owns the horses, and the youngest is said to be very promising.

COL. THOMAS OCHILTREE, greatest of all single-handed liars and raconteurs, starts for America on February 5th with the horses of Col. John T. North, the English nitrate king. These horses are entered in most of the rich stakes at Washington Park, Coney Island, Brooklyn, Monmouth and Morris Parks.

BILLY BOLLINGER, sire of that good-looking and useful animal, Altus, is a stoutly-bred horse, being by Woodburn (son of Lexington and Heads-I-Say, by imp. Glencoe), dam Maggie Brenham, by Langford; second dam Mary Chilton (dam of Thad Stevens), by imp. Glencoe; third dam by American Eclipse, etc.

CHARLES A. BROWN, owner of the great Wildwood, will not only send the brown son of Wildidle and Fedora IV East, but will also take the fast sprinter Joe Cotton and a two-year-old Monday Final colt along. Brown is an excellent judge of horses, and we would not be surprised to see the last-named prove another Wildwood.

THE judges at Oakland completely overlooked Alfred B. last Saturday when they gave third place in the second race to Guadalupe. Alfred B. was about a length in front of the Grinstead gelding when the wire was reached and catching Charger at every jump. Many think they erred in giving Mabel M. the verdict in the third race, but that was a very close affair; the other wasn't.

THE starting of Asa Hamilton at Oakland was very poor the first week, but he has improved considerably since. Jockeys have to be taught that they must mind a flagman's command, and the most successful starters in this country are those that do not mind matters in the least with saucy horse pilots, but set them down or give them a taste of the whip. Fling teaches jockeys nothing, because owners have to pay the amounts.

TRAINER HARRY STOVER and the jockey, Piantoni, were ruled off the track at Roby, Ind., near Chicago, on the 19th inst., for suspicious work with the horse Governor. Piantoni was raised near the late Senator Hearst's San Simeon ranch, and went East with D. J. McCarty's horses last season, becoming quite proficient in the art of riding. Stover is well known in this part of the world. Jockey J. Mooney was ruled off at Hawthorne on the same date.

LADIES' stand thieves are working Oakland, it appears, as they did San Francisco. Last Tuesday a young fellow who had been acting as betting commissioner for Mrs. C. W. Chappell, Mrs. J. Butler and Mrs. Harry Corbett, disappeared with $146 belonging to the two first-named ladies, the amount due them on the race won by Guadalupe. There should be a paid official commissioner in the ladies' stand at every meeting the Association being held responsible for him.

ROSEBUD, the very speedy filly by St. Paul, out of Neyella, in the Bybee stable, is entered in both the American Derby and Queen Isabella stakes at Washington Park, and her owner thinks she has a very fair chance of winning the latter event if she keep on improving as she has lately and fills out a little. Some of the local papers have been putting the name of Rosebud's dam down as Nayetta. It is Neyella—a combination of the names of Marshall Ney and Mr. Bybee's wife, Ella.

GERALDINE equalled the best on record at four and a half furlongs (0:54) over Oakland track last Saturday, with 115 pounds up and W. Clancy in the saddle, and the way she did it was remarkable, for almost at the first stride the great mare fell to her knees and was six lengths behind Misty Horn ere she got well on her stride again. She ran the first half-mile of the route in 0:46½, and just now it would take a world-beater to give her dust. After winning this event, the first on the day's programme, she went on and captured the last race of the day, a half-mile dash, from a big field, and this time Geraldine carried 125 pounds.

NICK FINZER will be the owner of the sensational colt King Lee, after all. On the night of Jan. 13th a conference was held between his representatives and representatives of J. E. Maddox, who is suing for the possession of King Lee, and an agreement was reached by which Maddox was to take the colt and pay Finzer a suitable monetary consideration. The following evening, however, another conference was held, and the result was that Mr. Finzer agreed to take King Lee. He will pay Maddox a certain sum; how much neither will say.

UNLESS a horse has brains he is not teachable. A horse that has breadth and fullness between the ears and eyes will not act mean or hurt any one. The eye should be full and a hazel color, the ears small and thin and point forward, the face straight with square muzzle and large nostrils. The under side of the head should be well cut under the jaw with jaw-bone broad, and wide apart under the throatle. The hack short and straight and rump square, high withers, shoulders well set hack and broad but not deep into the chest, fore feet short, hind legs pretty straight, fetlocks low down, pastern joint short with a round, mulish foot. There are all kinds of horses, but the animal that has all these points is almost sure to be slightly graceful, good-natured and serviceable.—Horseman.

THE clique which is now operating the alleged race track at Roby, Ind., is to receive attention from the present Legislature. The agitation against winter racing in Indiana has been given definite shape by Representative Barnes, who will introduce a bill in the House prohibiting horse racing in the State during the months of December, January, February and March of each year. The bill will also provide that owners of race tracks who allow their tracks to be used for the trial of speed horses or mares for a period of more than sixty days during the months of April, May, June, July, August, September, October and November before any public assemblage shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and punished accordingly.

OLD BARNUM, now fourteen years old, and whom most persons would suppose deserving of being retired from work, is being raced at the East St. Louis track says Turf, Field and Farm. This horse during his career has run in no less than 294 races, without counting his present season. He won of this number on 82 occasions, his greatest successes being his six and seven-year-old form, since which time his powers have been gradually on the wane. Although the most remarkable horse of the decade, he was of no great account in his early youth, for he did not start as a two-year-old, and in his three-year-old form failed to score a win out of nine attempts. He did very little better as a four-year-old, for although he started thirty-eight times he earned brackets only three times out of this number, but after this he improved so marvelously that at one time he was almost invincible, and defeated such cracks as Eole, Barnes, Hidalgo, Volante, Pontiac, Fosteral, Mona, Arctino, Elkwood and other good ones, besides running a dead heat with that peerless mare Miss Woodford in the Coney Island Cup. Surely such a record should entitle him to spend his old age in peace; but the avarice of some men knows no bounds.

SPEAKING of the presiding judgeship at Cumberland Park reminds your correspondent that there is likely to be a new light in the racing field this year in the person of C. H. Gillock, the accomplished secretary of the West Side Association. Racing men believe that Gillock is the coming presiding officer in this country because of his high standing socially, his unquestioned integrity and his intimate knowledge of racing rules and all that pertains to the turf. Gillock began his apprenticeship to the running turf under the guidance of that popular turfman, George Darden, now long since dead, and he has improved each shining hour. In his early connection with the turf he owned and raced the famous mare Aranza, one of the best-bred horses that ever wore plates. This mare was trained and raced by Gillock until she had built for him a pretty home in East Nashville, and he afterward sold her to George Lorrillard for $12,000, a fabulous price in those days. Gillock is thoroughly posted on the condition of horses, and when he is in the stand he is pretty apt to pick the one that should win. Then if it does not come home in the van he is certain to know the reason why.—Corr. Sporting World.

INCOMPETENT jockeys make race-goers sick quicker than almost anything. There are a lot of raw boys riding out this way, and they burn up the money of the public at a great rate. One little bit of an urchin named Ryan is very ambitious to become a jockey, and does the best he can, no doubt, but he has made two rides that caused a lot of howling—on Esperanza when he cut to the inside less than a sixteenth from home and tried to make the little filly run around that speedy mare, Misty Morn (this when Esperanza was leading a little and only had to be kept straight to have at least a fair chance of winning), and on Fanny F., when he got the mare (a notoriously quick starter) away from the post absolutely last, four lengths in the rear of everything, then ran her on the extreme outside of the track most of the way, and when she could not have lost the place (if indeed the first money) with the least bit of urging, sat like a marble statue on the lightly-weighted mare he was riding on the outside of the course, and finished third, less than a length behind Nellie G. No wonder the hackers of Fanny F. groaned as the horses passed under the wire.

THE following important dispatch came from Springfield, Ill., January 19th, sounding the death-knell to pool-selling in the State of Illinois. The bill introduced that day by Representative Erickson, of Cook, to regulate pool-selling is as follows: "Any person who keeps any room, shed, tenement, tent, booth, or building, or any part thereof, or who occupies any place upon any public or private grounds within the State with any hook, instrument or device for the purpose of recording or registering bets or wagers, or of selling pools; or any person who records or registers, bets or wagers, or sells pools upon the result of any trial or contest of skill, speed, or power of endurance of man or beast or upon the result of any political nomination, appointment, or election, or, being the owner, lessee or occupant of any room, shed, tenement, tent, booth or building, or part thereof, knowingly permits the same to be used or occupied for any of these purposes, or therein keeps, exhibits, or employs any device or apparatus for the purpose of recording or registering such bets or wagers or selling of such pools, or becomes the custodian or depository for hire or privileges, of any money, property, or thing of value staked, wagered, or pledged upon any such result shall be punished by imprisonment in the county jail for a period not longer than one year or by fine not exceeding $2,000 or both."

GEORGE COVINGTON will train the stake horses this season in Thomas H. Williams' string, which will be ridden by George Miller and Charley Weber. The selling platers and horses not entered in stake races will be trained by Mike Kelly and ridden by Joe Narvaez. It would thus appear that Kelly's desertion of Porter Ash did not bring home much good luck, for the string he will train will hardly have a Geraldine or a Don Fulano in it, and Narvaez certainly will not relish taking a seat in the background, while Miller and little Weber are basking in the sunshine of success. Dame Fortune's wheel cuts some curious pranks at times, surely. Kelly's division will race at Denver, St. Paul and Chicago while the others are at the far East.

THE mares that will eventually take their places at the Menlo Stud, in California, are a grandly bred lot, and a good testimony to their worth is found in the fact that Mr. Francis only secured them after a brisk competition with Mr. Allison, who acted on behalf of Mr. James R. Keene. Happy Hampton's dam, Cantiniere, also threw the great race mare Dutch Oven, winner of the St. Leger of 1882; Bal Gal and Forager, and her second dam, Cantine, produced Adventuriere, who, at three years old, won the Cesarewitch (1887) and the next year the Goodwood Cup. The third dam, Vivandiere, was full sister to Voltigeur. Sonsie Lass, dam of Cottage Girl, is half-sister to Sonsie Queen, who produced Eirodspord, winner of the Epsom Grand Prize, Shall We Remember and Netheravon, winner of the Alexandra Plate. The third dam, Glen-gowrie, threw imp. Glenlyon and was the granddam of Wellington, winner of the Australian Derby, while the fourth dam, Glencairne, was full sister to the great Glencoe. Even these few notes on their pedigree will show that Mr. Macdonough has aimed to secure high-class stock.—Daily Spirit.

GREEN B. MORRIS shivered in the St. James Hotel lobby while he told of his experiences in trying to buy horses in Kentucky, from which State he returned last week. This quaint and shrewd horseman said it was cheaper to buy gold mines than thoroughbred yearlings out that way, even though there are very few that had showed anything phenomenal in the way of speed except in the columns of the newspapers. He bought one filly, for which he had to pay $5,000, and now that he has got her safely home he does not hesitate to say that he thinks she is the best young horse he saw in Kentucky, and that he would not sell her for twice what she cost him, even though he has not tried her at all. Morris has got rid of a couple of the most expensive horses he ever bought, the two brothers to Troubadour. For one of them, Library, he paid $5,000, and he never showed speed enough to warrant sending to the post. His brother was about as slow, and Morris was glad when he had a chance to trade the pair of them and give $1,500 into the bargain for a selling plater. Library will be used for a barnes horse, he having been gelded when a youngster, but his brother has been sent to Texas, where he will be mated to the little Mexican mares for the purpose of getting saddle horses. He may be good for that; he was for nothing else. Mr. Morris had both of the horses heavily engaged because of their relationship to Troubadour, and they cost him a couple of thousand dollars in forfeits, though neither appeared in a race.—N. Y. Times.

A WRITER in the Turf, Field and Farm, comparing the Australian horses with American recently, had the audacity to say that in a race of three miles, each carrying 145 pounds, Carbine would have left Miss Woodford (queen of the turf in America in her day) at the head of the homestretch, or about a quarter of a mile behind. Now the writer has no ground for the basis of such a claim, for Miss Woodford was a great weight-carrier and liked a distance very much. Her two-mile heats are the best on record to this day, and while Carbine was a grand race horse, so was Miss Woodford a wonderful performer and just as superior to the majority of horses in this country during the years 1882, 1883, 1884 and 1885 as Carbine was to the Australian thoroughbreds in 1890 and 1891. Freeland defeated Miss Woodford twice, to be sure, at a mile and a quarter, and she beat him once, but had the route been a quarter of a mile longer or more the mare would not have been beaten by him at all, in the opinion of good judges. Carbine met his match in Abercorn on a number of occasions, we are informed on good authority, and Marvel beat him at a mile in 1:43, hence he was not any more superior to the antipodean races in his day than Miss Woodford to the American. We cannot allow that the Australian stake horses are any better than ours until they have proved it. The top-weights in their handicaps are asked to pack much more than ours, we admit, but our horses as a general thing, in a mile and a half race will run the distance five or six seconds faster than their antipodean brethren, making up for the turf, track and difference in weight, so that we fail to see that our thoroughbreds are a whit behind the Australian horses.

THE treatment of colts when weaned has been a more or less perplexing question to all breeders. The common practice is, where there is room enough, to separate the youngsters as much as possible, thinking to lessen or minimize thereby the chances of their getting hurt. Major B. G. Thomas, whose knowledge of horses and their treatment is at least up to the average of horsemen, gives his opinion on the subject highly favorable to congregating the colts in one large lot, with plenty of range. His experience, he says, is that when a colt is in a lot by himself he is constantly fretting and trying to get to his neighbor. If the fence is not tight he risks his head by putting it through between the rails. Otherwise he climbs upon the top rail, in all cases running the chances of being disabled. To obviate this Major Thomas put two together. Then he found that when the colts became fat they would spend much time in play. Lean colts never play. In this play they frequently met with accidents. He then experimented with three in the same lot. He discovered that when two played the third generally interfered and put a stop to it. Seeing that three worked well, he tried five, and the result was so satisfactory in ministering the chances of accident that he concluded it would be best to let them all run together, separating only the colts from the fillies. He has never had any reason to regret this course. He has thirty-five or forty yearlings at "Timberland," on the Lemmons' Mill road, and they are allowed to run in this way, all of the fillies in one large lot and the colts in another. At this time, when the disposition of the young stock on the farm is a matter of some consequence, the opinion of so experienced a man as Major Thomas may be of some interest to the young breeders. His plan, besides being reasonable and feasible, has the recommendation of economy in the matter of fencing.—Sydney Referee. This is a strange coincidence, for Major B. G. Thomas, of Lexington, Ky., is as noted a horseman in this country as Major B. G. Thomas of Australia, is in the Antipodes.

Racing at Oakland, Cal.

FOURTH DAY—FRIDAY, JANUARY 20. OAKLAND RACE TRACK, JANUARY 20, 1893.—Weather fine. Track fair. First race—Purse $200. Four furlongs.

Won by a neck, a length between second and third. Betting—3 to 1 Jim R., 4 to 1 Stoneman, 5 to 1 Mountain Boy, Nellie Van 111 (W. Clancy), 1 to 1, Dewdrop 115 (C. Clancy), 15 to 1, Joe Hooker Jr. 117 (Spence), 15 to 1, also ran.

Second race—Purse $200. Four furlongs. Vic Jenkins' ch h Young Thad, 5, by Sam Steveson—by Rifleman 120 pounds..... Williams 1 G. H. Kennedy's ch g Mackey, a, by Alta—by Langford, 117 pounds..... Bally 2 Sutton & Co's b m Flora E., 5, by Uncle Tom, 117 pounds..... Sutton 3 Time, 0:49 1/2.

Won by two lengths, a half length between second and third. Betting—8 to 5 Young Thad, 8 to 5 Mackey, 4 to 1 Flora E. Vallida 119 (H. Hill), 10 to 1, King Alpb 101 (Peters), 8 to 1, St. John 116 (Hinckey), 6 to 1, also ran.

Third race—Purse $250. Six furlongs. Elmwood Farm's b m Ledalia, 5, by Argyre—Lida, 99 pounds..... C. Weber 1 W. L. Appleby's b m Raindrop, 6, by Wildidle—imp. Teardrop, 103 pounds..... Cota 2 Encino Stable's b m May Pritchard, 4, by Tyrant—Lily Leinster..... Ryan 3 Time, 1:16 1/4.

Won by a nose, three-quarters of a length between second and third. Betting—1 to 5 Ledalia, 5 to 1 Raindrop, 50 to 1 May Pritchard. McGinnis' First 92 (Peters), 8 to 1, also ran.

Fourth race—Selling, purse $800. Thirteen-sixteenths of a mile. Jones & Bybee's ch h Broadchurch, a, by Leinster—Tibbie Dunbar, 107 pounds..... Disastrous Fire at Brookside Farm.

Last Sunday morning at two o'clock one of the employes at the Brookside Stock Farm was startled from his slumbers by hearing the crackling of timbers; on looking out of the window he noticed that the big barn was on fire. Calling for help he hastily dressed and in a few moments was joined by Mr. N. J. Stone, the proprietor, and several assistants. The fire must have been started some time, for when they arrived at the doors of the stalls the smoke was in vast volumes and the flames in the center of the building and directly over the box-stalls seemed to be thirty feet high. The greatest difficulty was experienced in rousing the horses and mares, and although the doors of most of the stalls were thrown open the poor animals seemed overcome by the smoke and heat and could not get out. Humphrey Sullivan, the superintendent, made his way through the smoke to the stallion barn, and after much difficulty rescued Election, 2:28 1/2, the premier stallion. While he was struggling with the horse the men, under Mr. Stone's supervision, managed to get four animals out of the burning stalls, the balance—twelve head—were destroyed. Following are their names and breeding:

- Bessie Sedwick, ch m, by Joe Daniels, dam Minnie Smith, by Star light. In foal to Election, 2:28 1/2.
Lodi Princess, blk m, by Dexter Prince 11,363, dam by Black Boy 2291. In foal to Election, 2:28 1/2.
Happy Signal, b m, by Brigadier, 2:21 1/4, dam Signal Mare, by Signal 3327. In foal to Election, 2:28 1/2.
Clara Belle, br m, by Alaska, dam Dooley Filly, by Muldoon 20,533. In foal to Election, 2:28 1/2.
Woodrose, b m, by Rosewood, dam Black Nellie, by Blackhawk 767. In foal to Election, 2:28 1/2.
Brookside Maid (1), by Election, dam Fanny Bayswater.
Tobasco (1), by Election, dam Bessie Sedwick, by Joe Daniels.
Wild Rose (2), by Sultan, 2:24, dam Woodrose, by Rosewood.
Election Belle, a fine two-year-old, by Election, 2:28 1/2.
Pascador, by Walker, dam Sibly, by Singleton. Property of J. Layng, San Francisco.
Whippleton mare in foal to Leo Wilkes. Property of A. M. MacPherson, San Francisco.
Clara Belle's colt, by Election. Property of J. Autionelli, San Francisco.

The loss is estimated at $10,000, insurance $3,000. The fire is supposed to be of incendiary origin. Mr. Stone sold his remaining three mares at auction yesterday.

Entries at Saratoga.

The entries for stakes of the Saratoga Association to be run in 1893, which closed December 31st, number as follows:

Table with columns: No. of Nominators, Number of Entries, Number of Entries to Start in 1893. Includes entries for Flash, Springbok, Saratoga, Hudson, Watkins Glen, Kentucky, Moet & Chandon, Grand Union Hotel, Hurricana, American Hotel, United States Hotel, Troy, Morrissey, G. H. Munn H'd'p, Foster Memorial, Albany Handicap, Spencer Handicap, Sea Foam, Okolana Steeplechase, Kensington Hotel, Bererwyck, Ballston, Van Tassel, North Bergen Steeplechase.

The following stakes for three-year-olds which closed January 1, 1893, will also be run at the meeting of 1893: Iroquois, 54 entries; Travers, 46; Kenner, 41; Ladies', 37; Foxhall, 42. S. WHITEHEAD, Secy.

WILDWOOD is in the Brooklyn and Metropolitan handicaps, to be run at Brooklyn and Morris Parks respectively, but is not in the Suburban handicap. Handicapping by private individuals who should know something about weights has been invited by Daily Spirit of New York, and the highest weight placed on the magnificent son of Wildidle that we have seen is an even 100 pounds, in the Brooklyn. One man puts the colt in fat 90 and another at 63 pounds. We would like to see the big Californian get in at the latter figure and see if any horse could get within four or five lengths of him. Our idea is that the official handicapper will give the brown colt in Brown's stable about 110 pounds, and he will be played pretty well in the hooks by Pacific Coasters at that.

The peculiar arrangement under which Matt Allen will train a number of fillies belonging to Charles Reed has led to the belief that Allen and the proprietor of Fairview have formed a racing partnership, but as far as I know there is no genuine basis for such rumors. Mr. Reed is a very kind-hearted man, and as he likes Allen there is nothing strange in the fact that he should have turned these fillies over to the well-known trainer to be raced for two years for what he could make out of them. The fillies are to be returned to Fairview at four years of age, to become brood mares, they being Mr. Reed's own selection for this purpose.—Nashville Cor. Live Stock Record.

To R. Sears, Box 340, Chicago, Ill.—P. P. Johnston, president of the National Trotting Association, says: "I have tried the Lindsey hits, and find them a valuable addition to the training stable."

Glanders and Its Detection.

EDITOR BREEDER AND SPORTSMAN:—Having for many years been a reader of your valuable journal, and recognizing the fact that it has always been foremost in protecting the interests not only of fast turf performers—trotters and runners—but also the thousands of horses owned by men who are daily driving through this city, I take the liberty of calling your attention to an article which appeared in the Chronicle on the 14th inst. The caption of the interview was "Deadly Glanders," and such a startling one was enough to arrest the attention of every horse owner in this State. While I do not wish to pose as an alarmist and am not seeking any notoriety as a "kicker," still the article in question contained so many curious confessions that for the benefit of horsemen elsewhere it should not pass unnoticed. This question of "glanders" some months ago was discussed in a daily newspaper of this city, and the result was that it raised a howl of indignation that reverberated across the United States on one side and to the Pacific Ocean on the other. In Australia an official order was adopted forbidding the landing of all stock from California, on account of the publication. But I am digressing. In the interview with the reporter this veterinarian answers the question: "Are there any glandered horses in San Francisco?" "A few; I have one at my hospital now. Whenever they are found they are seized, passed upon by the surgeon of the Board of Health, and then turned over to me. If I decide that the disease is really glanders I order the animal shot, etc." A little further down in the article this veterinarian gives the following diagnosis of the symptoms of glanders and tells how to detect it:

"A man may think a horse has a cold. In three or four days the animal has apparently recovered except for a slight discharge from one nostril or sometimes from both. The discharge is oily, greenish in color, sticky and tenacious, sometimes mingled with bits of hay and grain. It comes from a ragged ulcer in the nostril. Before dying the horse may be able to travel about three or four years, but he is all the time spreading the contagion, particularly through watering troughs, which he infects with bacilli. We detect glanders by the discharge and by a lump which always forms on the under jaw. If in doubt we give a horse a purgative and two drachms of turpentine, which raises his temperature and develops the disease at once if it really exists."

If he brought a horse to his infirmary that he says had the glanders, it is his duty as a veterinarian and also of the Board of Health to see that the horse be destroyed immediately, and all the woodwork in the stable removed and the place thoroughly fumigated and renovated.

Perhaps it is stomatitis the animal is afflicted with and is similar to the case illustrated last April. There are few, if any, cases of glanders in this city, for our veterinarians have been very diligently looking for animals suffering from the disease; so this interview will accomplish more harm than good. The veterinary surgeon of the Board of Health should, on hearing of this case, see to it that the veterinarian in question be more careful in future and reprimand him for harboring any animal afflicted with such a contagious disease.

The claim made in this interview that glanders can be detected by the discharge and the lump which always forms under the jaw, is an assertion that can hardly be understood as coming from such a prominent professional, for there are many cases of glanders existing in which no discharge is present and no swelling of the glands is noticeable. These cases are spoken of as pulmonary glanders. As far as this veterinarian's diagnostic lump is concerned, I may state, if such is the case, there is no use for scientists like Nocard and Kolminy of Dorpat, Hellenan of St. Petersburg and M. Roux. They have spent the greater part of their lives in the study of this important subject. They finally conclude that by the use of mallein the most satisfactory results in detecting this dreaded disease can be obtained. The latest report from the German government in regard to this is as follows; if the officials had only heard of the wisdom of our young and prominent veterinarian, such an order would be entirely unnecessary:

GERMAN WAR ORDER TO MALLEIN.

"It is stated that the Prussian authorities are so satisfied of the value of mallein subcutaneous injections as a means of diagnosing glanders that the Ministry of War have directed the Veterinary Department, Berlin, to supply mallein to its officers along with instructions as to its use. In accordance with this order the Veterinary Department has the pleasure of informing generals in command that the military veterinary school possesses a full supply of mallein."

The material is delivered cost free; only in the event of its being sent to armies abroad is a small charge made for packing. A detailed report must be written of all experiments made on army horses with mallein, and the results obtained therefrom. TOM HILL.

Royally-Bred Thoroughbreds at Auction.

On account of the great increase of population in Merced, there is in consequence a strong demand for land in and around that city. R. Porter Ashe's Maltese Villa Stock Farm lies just outside the place, and he has decided to sub-divide the beautiful farm and sell it off in the shape of town lots. The famous training establishment has to be disposed of, therefore, and twelve head of royally-bred horses from Maltese Villa Farm will go under the auctioneer's hammer on Saturday, February 4, 1893, commencing at 11 o'clock. First on the list is the famous racehorse and sire, Ed Corrigan, who was never defeated in California and won the Sheridan Stakes at Chicago. He traces twice to the great Honnie Farrow, dam of Mollie McCarty, Flood and Shannon, being by Joe Hooker, dam Countess Zeika, by Norfolk. Ed Corrigan sired that good colt, The Drummer, and should prove a first-class sire. Dinero, by Alta, dam Smilax, by Imp. Saxon, and a good racehorse, four years old, is in the lot, as is Alta Mio, a three-year-old, by Alta, dam Charlotte, by Lyttleton, and Panchita, by Alta, dam Constellation, by St. George (son of War Dance). Then three excellent broodmares are offered—Gladys, by Flood, dam Rignin, by Imp. Glangary; Mirope (a winner) and Constellation, by St. George (son of War Dance), dam Planetette, by Planet—three grand two-year-olds by Alta, a suckling, along with its dam, and that good racehorse Mozart, by Flood, dam Mozelle, by Monday. This is the first opportunity ever offered the public of securing Alta stock, for the great dead sire was never allowed to serve outside mares. This sale will be absolute, there being no strings to any of the bids and no by-hidding allowed. Read the advertisement in another portion of this paper carefully and attend the sale. Killip & Co. are the auctioneers.

Figures Don't Lie.

If there need be any argument in favor of shorter races and more of them, and that the earning capacity of the trotter needs to be increased in some other manner than the past, the following paragraph should furnish sufficient proof. Tammany won $73,410 on the running turf last season, which is as much as the combined winnings of five of the largest winners of the trotting turf. They are Guy, Muta Wilkes, Flying Jib, Nightingale and Directum. I leave out Nancy Hanks for the reason her money was made in exhibitions, not in races. The table is as follows:

Table with columns for Thoroughbreds and Harness Horses, listing names and winnings.

The only salvation in shorter races and more of 'em. This will increase the attendance and betting at trotting meetings. When this is increased then money, not gotten from horsemen, will go toward increasing the stakes and purses, which will increase the earning capacity of the trotter. This is the only way.

The Etna Stable (George Hankings and B. J. Johnson), it is said, are at outs with their late partners, the Roby people, and have sided with Ed Corrigan. The fact that some of the Etna Stable horses have been sent to the Hawthorne track gives color to the statement. There will be a fine meeting at Garfield Park this year, and in view of the coming change in the municipal administration of affairs, it is thought there will be no hitch in getting the necessary license.

At this season of the year many of the colts become lousy, and for such as do the following will be found excellent: Take two pounds of quassia bark, steep it in water, and wash the colt thoroughly from the tip of his nose to the roots of his tail. If one application does not kill all the lice repeat. Not only will this kill all the lice, but it acts as a stimulant to the colt. There is no danger from the colt taking cold from this treatment, even in very cold weather.

The daily Spirit of the Times of New York has the following to say regarding Millard Sanders' work at the Corbitt sale: "Millard Sanders, who coaxed the erratic Guy to trot in 2:10 1/2, and who has been for the past year with the Corbitt trotters and gave many of them their fast records, is a perfect master in the saddle, and a full share of the success of the sale was due to the mastery in which he handled the youngsters in the ring."

ACCORDING to dispatches received last night, Frank Shaw has received the Washington Park betting privileges. The exact figure is not stated, but it is said to be very close to a quarter of a million of dollars. Charley Bush was a hider, but I believe he did not quite reach the $200,000 limit. Shaw, who is a live and energetic fellow, has also the betting privileges for the St. Louis Fair Grounds Spring and Summer Meeting.

VIC JENKINS, the popular young trainer-jockey, recently purchased at Bakersfield a mighty good-looking and useful sort of thoroughbred in Young Thad, a five-year-old chestnut horse by Sam Stevenson (son of Thad Stevens), dam by Rifleman.

ROBERT AND BUSH SMITH, owners of Cyclone and other horses, arrived from Guthrie, Oklahoma, last Tuesday night. They will remain in California for several months, where they have made lots of friends.

The owner of the stallion Dictatus has set the price of service to $100 for all dams of performers. See advertisement.

Answers to Correspondents.

Answers for this department must be accompanied by name and address of the sender, not necessarily for publication, but as proof of good faith. Write the questions distinctly, on one side of the paper only. Positively no questions will be answered by mail or telegraph.

J. H. C.—We do not know whether Bullet, 2:25 and Frenchy, 2:20 1/4, were by Royal George (Neely's) or not.

E. W. Hogle, Hanford, Cal.—To get your mare registered send to J. H. Steiner, Rialto Building, Chicago, for blanks and fill them out.

T. F. Sacramento.—A bets B Cleveland carries Oregon. B bets A Harrison carries Oregon. Weaver gets one electoral vote. Who wins? Or is it a draw? Answer—B wins, for Harrison got a majority of the votes cast.

D. J. C. Santa Rosa.—I am looking for a little information in regard to Bell A. (Can you tell me if Bell Alta is standard? Answer—He was by Williamson's Belmont, dam the Mendebell mare, said to be by Illinois Medoc. He is not standard.

Inquirer—Can any one give me information respecting a horse called Butterfield's St. Clair? Answer—By St. Clair, 2:15, dam not traced. Owned by a man named Butterfield, who lived on the upper Stockton road, near Sacramento. He was a stocky, muscular horse, with a short neck, rather on the Morgan type, and would have made a good sire.

C. G. R. Meridian, Sutter Co.—I have a two-year-old filly that was bred by M. W. Hicks, of Sacramento. Sired by Privateer 8135, first dam Flash, by Egmont 1828; second dam Lightfoot, by Flaxtail 8132. Under these names is this filly eligible to registration? If so, I want her registered and will send you a more definite pedigree. I would also like to ask you for the pedigree of her sire, Privateer. Answer—Sire is standard. Privateer was by Buccaneer 2625 (son of Iowa Chief 528), dam Lady Salyers (dam of Empress, 2:20 1/2), by Marion (son of Mambrino Chief).

G. K. Los Angeles, Cal., Nov. 29, 1892.—I please inform me through the columns of your valuable journal the fastest horses sired by Dashwood, the number Dashwood has in the 2:30 list, and his number. 2. The number Stamboul has in the list and the fastest of his got. 3. The time made by the running horse Almoat made at the State Fair at Sacramento. One of the races was the Night Hawk Stake. The weight he carried and the second and third horses. Answer—Dashwood has only two in the list. Leonor, 2:24, is the latest. His number is 1492. 2. Stamboul has nine in the list, with Dashwood's record taken away. Murba, 2:18 1/2, is the fastest of the Stambouls. 3. You do not say what year.

W. F. L. Tulare, Cal.—Please inform me through your paper the breeding of Erelong, his record, if any, and the name of his present owner. Answer—Erelong 1141 is by Belmont 64 (sire of Nutwood, 2:18 1/4), dam Eventide (dam of Kremlin, 2:07 1/2). Evenod, 2:28, and Erin, 2:24 1/4, by Woodford Mambrino; second dam Vara (dam of Vatican), by Hambletonian 10; third dam Venus, by Seely's American Star. We don't know the name of his present owner, but the letter of inquiry to his breeder, A. L. Alexander, Spring Station, Ky., would probably result in your getting the desired information.

L. G. Sacramento, Cal.—Please give name of sire and dam of Imp. Glengarry. Is he still alive and was he considered a good race horse? Also give name of sire and dam of St. Paul, the sire of the Oregon race mare, Misty Morn. Answer—Imp. Glengarry was by Thornyman (winner of Epsom Derby and Ascot Gold Cup), dam Caroline, by Rileton (son of Touchstone). Glengarry was on board the ill-fated Helvetia in 1866, when thirty-five out of thirty-nine head of horses on board were lost, and those that survived were so badly used up that they were afterward unfit to race. However, Glengarry did race, but not with much success. We believe he is dead. St. Paul is by Alarm (son of Imp. Eclipse and Imp. Mend), by Stockwell, dam Lady Salyers, by Longfellow.

Inquirer—Sisson Girl and Capt. Jenks trotted in San Francisco in a team race November 28, 1872, and won; best time, 2:47.

Can any of our readers tell us of a mare called Eudora? She got a record of 2:32 near Petaluma. She was by Alexander.

Please correct error in your publication under heading of "California's New List." My filly she is mentioned as having a record of 2:26 1/2 when it should read 2:26. CHAS. W. SMITH, San Francisco.

F. W. Penington, Cal.—Can you furnish me the pedigree of La Harpe, if so I will pay you for all trouble. Answer—By Fame (son of Belmont 64) dam Prairie Bird, 2:28 1/2 (dam of Prompter and Flight), by Flaxtail 8132.

To Inquirer—I saw an inquiry in your paper concerning the pedigree of Alta Reina. It is as follows: Alta Reina, 2:29 1/2, two-year-old by Alto Rex, 2:25, first dam by Jim Hawkins, he by Jack (son of Harvester). Answer—L. By Guy Miller (son of Hambletonian 10), dam Martha Washington, by Washington 332. Fifteen in 2:30 list. 2. By Abdallah 1.

A. G. B. Ukiah, Cal.—Please give in your paper the pedigree of Overman or Overton, owned by Hickok in 1877. A says he was sired by Elmo. Elmo was sired by Mohawk, of Mount Vernon, Ohio. Answer—By Elmo 891, dam Fern Leaf, by Black Hawk 767; second dam Auglia, by McKenny horse.

Subscriber, Marysville.—I please give breeding of Whipple's Hambletonian, and the number he has in the list. 2. Also the second dam of Harvest Queen, the dam of Harvester. Answer—L. By Guy Miller (son of Hambletonian 10), dam Martha Washington, by Washington 332. Fifteen in 2:30 list. 2. By Abdallah 1.

To Inquirer.—In the BREEDER AND SPORTSMAN I see you ask for the breeding of Lilly Dale, 2:27 1/2, and Conductor. Lilly Dale, 2:27 1/2, was sired by Conductor 18,779 (see Vol. XI); first dam by Overland (sire of Ned, 2:29 1/2); second dam s. t. b. by Williamson's Belmont. I have not got the pedigree in full, but will have before having her registered. N. CLANTON.

W. H. C. Newbury Park.—Please give me the breeding of Henry's Roalen (and number registered), said to be by Vick's Elban Allen. Also the breeding of Ben Fish's comet. Answer—We know nothing of Roalen. Ben Fisher's Comet (Morgan Black Hawk Comet), was by Young Black Hawk (son of Vermont Black Hawk 5), dam by Morgan Tally Ho; second dam by Andrew Jackson 4.

J. L. L. Rancho del Prado.—Will you kindly enlighten me whether there is any truth in what I often hear: That mares having foaled mule colts and then stunted to a horse the following season, that the progeny is quite liable to resemble more or less the jack? Answer—As a rule the progeny does not resemble a jack, but there have been exceptional cases where the produce looked like a jack in respect to coarse head and hair.

T. P. Plainsburg, Cal.—1. What, when and by whom was Raymond 1482 bred? 2. Was there a two-year-old colt by Steve Whipple, 2:14, dam by Nephew, that made the season at Merced in 1892? 3. When will Wallace's Year Book for 1892 be out? Answer—1. Foaled in 1879. Bred by Spencer Borden, Fall River, Mass. 2. Write to C. E. Needham, Stockton, Cal. He owns Steve Whipple, 2:14. 3. About the 1st of March.

You ask the pedigree of the buck g Dynamite, record 2:29 1/2. He is by Gavito No. 7567. His dam was an old stage mare that ran between Salinas and San Luis Obispo. He is owned by Mr. J. Cashin, of Paso Robles; his dam cannot be traced. John Sevenokos is owned by J. P. Sargent, Esq., Sargent's Station. Royal George was brought to this State by William Corbett, Esq., of San Mateo, and sold to Geo. B. Polhemus, of this city. He is said to be by Herald. G. H. BRAGE, San Jose.

I read an inquiry in the BREEDER AND SPORTSMAN some time ago as to the breeding of Flora B., 2:22 1/2, and as I own her mother I will give you her breeding. Flora B., sired by Mambrino Wilkes, first dam May, by Chiefain 721; second dam sired by a thoroughbred horse called Lummo. This horse was brought here from Oregon, and I think he is the sire of the first or second dam of Dorsey's Nephew. However, I want to be certain about that. Third dam sired by Young Sherman Black Hawk, a horse which stood for public service at Knight's Ferry in the year 1871. The above is a true statement of her breeding as I have known them for a great many years. I have the fillies out of May, the mother of Flora B. The first is a black mare by Dexter Prince, four years old, bred in foal to Wilkes; the second filly is a bay, three years old, by Sidney. She is pure-gaited and acts like a race mare; the third filly is one year old, bay, and is sired by Pasha. T. J. D.

G. H. Brage, Secretary District 5 Association, San Jose, Cal.—I see in your valuable issue of the 3d inst. under the heading of "Answers to Correspondents" to A. H. B., Los Angeles, he asks you for the time, etc., of a race during our fair of 1888. First, I will say Maggie E. and Gus Wilkes did not come together, but was both here and trotted against other horses. Below I give you the summary of three races which the two horses mentioned above were engaged in, during our fair of 1888.

T. P. S., Oakdale, Cal.—Please state through the columns of your grand paper the breeding of a bay stud, named, raised by Theodore Winters. He is sired by Norfolk, dam full sister to Lottery. This is as far as I know. Please give pedigree in full as far as can be traced, and how many crosses of racing families are there in his breeding? Is his breeding among the best or not? Answer—Norfolk (son of Lexington and Nuvie, by imp. Glencoe) was of course a grand racehorse and successful sire, and this cross is fashionable enough. Sister to Lottery was by Monday, dam Virginia, by Revenue (son of imp. Trustee); second dam Corinne, by imp. Glencoe (son of Sultan); third dam Ariel, by imp. Sarpedon (son of Emilia); fourth dam Lances, by Lance (son of American Eclipse); fifth dam Aurora, by Aratus (son of Director); sixth dam Paragon, by imp. Buzzard; seventh dam Indiana, by Columbus; eighth dam by Wade Hampton's Paragon; ninth dam by imp. Figure; tenth dam Old Slamerkin, by imp. Wildair; eleventh dam imp. DeLancey Cub mare, by Cub, and on to the nineteenth dam, Layton Barb mare. Monday was by Colton (son of Lexington), dam Mollie Jackson, by Vandal. Monday was a great racehorse and sire, as was Colton, for his opportunities. Mollie Jackson was queen of the turf in her day, and traced back to producers of racers. From this family came Fannie Ludlow, Chockay, Foxhall, Aloha, Harkaway, Inspector B., Getaway, Koscisko and Bella B., Revenue bred Planet and many other high-class racers. Lance was a good racehorse. Imp. Sarpedon sired the dam of Lexington, and scores of our best racehorses trace to the imported Cub mare. The pedigree is very much of an American one, but exceedingly fashionable.

—OF THIS—

GREAT HORSE!

At the time of the death of Mr. Valensin, Sidney was under a three years' contract with W. C. France, by the conditions of which the latter gentleman was to pay $20,000 per year with a contingent additional payment of $5,000 per year. This contract, by its conditions, terminated on the death of Mr. Valensin; but that astute breeder, W. C. France, promptly offered the Executors to renew it under the same conditions, thus showing the immense earning capacity of this great sire.

TRIAL 2:20 1-4

FULL BROTHER TO FROU-FROU, 2:25 1-4.

Not only is MEMO full brother to Frou-Frou, the champion yearling trotter in the world, but he is also one of the very best-bred young stallions in service, having three crosses of Rysdyk's Hambletonian, one of Harry Clay, sire of Green Mountain Maid (dam of Electioneer, etc.), and Long Island Black Hawk. Through Flaxtail he traces to Canadian Pilot (sire of Pilot Jr. 12), through Bull Pup, sire of Rowdy Boy, 2:13 1/4, and two others. Sidney, Memo's sire, is universally known and recognized as the best young sire in the world as a producer of extreme speed at an early age. The average speed of his progeny is lower than that of any of the get of the twelve leading stallions of America.

MEMO trotted in public in his two-year-old form; was close to Grandee in a race on the Bay District track, the second heat of which was made in 2:31 1/4, the first in 2:32. He exhibited phenomenal speed when three years old, for on the Oakland track he was timed a mile in 2:20 1/4, and frequently trotted quarters in from 32 1/2 to 34 seconds.

He is sixteen hands high, and of powerful build throughout. His color is a glossy black, with both forefeet white. His disposition is all that could be desired, and his action is superb. He is a sure foal-getter, and has yearlings and two-year-old colts that show phenomenal bursts of speed and are splendid individuals.

Socrates stands 16 1/2 hands, and weighs close to 1,400 pounds. In color, he is a beautiful shade of bay; no white. In disposition he is perfection, while in conformation he is considered by competent judges to be the best stallion of his age and class ever brought to California. His action is perfect, and as he is sound and free from all vices he is recommended to all horsemen desirous of raising large, fine-looking, stylish, well-limbed and perfectly matched horses.

DICTATUS

Will make the Season of 1893, commencing February 1st and ending June 1st, at

BELMONT STOCK FARM, BELMONT, SAN MATEO COUNTY, CAL.

SERVICE FEE FOR THE SEASON..... $150
(Will be allowed to serve fifteen approved outside mares.)

DAMS OF 2:30 PERFORMERS WILL BE TAKEN AT $100.

DICTATUS was foaled in 1890. He was sired by the great RED WILKES 1749, (sire of 88 in the list); dam, Miss LOLLIE, by DICTATOR 133 (sire of JAY-EYE-SEE, 2:10, DIRECTOR, 2:17, and 41 others in the list, besides the dam of NANCY HANKS, 2:04, etc.); second dam, Gold Pen (dam of Felina, 2:29 1/2, and grandau of Hill Boy (p), 2:20, by Mambrino Abdallah 2201 (son of Mambrino Patchen 58); third dam by Harold 413 (sire of Maud S, 2:03 3/4, and 41 others in the list and grandsire of Kremlin, 2:07 1/2); fourth dam, Emily Chester, by Mambrino Patchen 58; fifth dam Patsey (dam of Midway), by Snowstorm (sire of Jim Irving, 2:23). He is in color a chestnut, with star in forehead, one hind pastern white. In conformation he is perfect, being about 15.2 hands in height, very short hack, strong over the coupling, heavy quarters, large, well-muscled gaskins and arms; limbs straight, cannon bones short, hocks and joints clean and bony, and feet of the finest kind. His neck, head and body denote an iron constitution. His shoulders are sloping, and, taking him all in all, a more perfect representative of the great Wilkes-Dictator cross does not exist to-day. His breeding speaks for itself. He traces four times to Hambletonian 10 through his greatest sires—GEO. WILKES, DICTATOR, HAROLD and ABDALLAH 15. He traces to Mambrino Patchen twice and three times to Mambrino Chief. His blood-lines are unequalled by any stallion on this coast.

The best of care taken of mares, but no liability assumed for accidents or escapes. Service fee must be paid before mares leave the farm.

Count Anteeo

14,692

WILL MAKE THE SEASON OF 1893 AT

Woodland Race Track.

DESCRIPTION.—COUNT ANTEEO 14,692 is a handsome dark bay in color, with a star in the forehead and two white feet behind. He was foaled in 1888, and is remarkably good horse in every respect, and while he has had but little training, he can easily show quarters in 37 seconds and, barring accidents, will be given a low record this year.

PEDIGREE.—Count Anteeo, sired by Anteeo, 7865, record 2:15 1/4 (sire of James Madison, 2:17 1/4, Myrtle (3) 2:19 1/4, Alfred G., 2:19 1/4, Redwood, 2:21 1/4, Maudie, 2:24 1/4, Ethel Mae, 2:29 1/4, Sunset, 2:29 1/4, Anteeo Jr., 2:25 1/4, Anteeo Richmond, 2:24 1/4, Electeeo, 2:29 1/4, Eoline, 2:22 1/4, Maud M., 2:20 1/4 and two others in the list). Anteeo was sired by Electioneer 125 (sire of Sunol, 2:08 1/4, Palo Alto, 2:08 1/4, Arion 2:10 1/4, Advertiser (3) 2:16 and 123 others in the list).

First dam, Countess (dam of Dawn, 2:18 1/4, Stradway, 2:19, Morna, trial) 2:28 and Young Countess, dam of Duchess, 2:18 1/4. Countess was sired by Hambletonian, 725 (sire of Gravelly Olivette, 2:24, Empress, 2:24, Leadfellow, 2:24, and 10 others in the list); second dam Fly, a very fast mare.

TERMS, $60 FOR THE SEASON, payable on 1st of July, 1893. Excellent care taken of mares in any manner that owners may desire at reasonable rates but no responsibility assumed for accidents or escapes. Mares may be sent to the undersigned. For further particulars apply to or address

Son of THE MARQUIS (Winner of the St. Leger and Two Thousand Guineas, and second for the Epsom Derby, he by the great Stockwell out of Cinzelli, by Touchstone).

First dam, Lamorna (sold for 1,050 guineas), by Fireworks; second dam, Nightingale (sold for 200 guineas when 22 years old, dam of W. Light, sire of San Pedro, Nightingale by Archy, son of Camel, that sired Touchstone). The sixth dam of Imp. Chesterfield (Camarone's dam, by Hubens, brother to Castrel, sire of Pantaloon), is the ninth dam of the great filly Princess, by Imp. Chevolit. Then he traces through the most fashionable families in the English stud book to sixteenth dam, Farmer Mare, by Chittany.

Imp. CHESTERFIELD won in Australia the Shorts Handicap Flying Handicap and Town Plate, Wollongong (2 miles), Christmas Handicap, Sydney, besides being second four times and third twice in a number of the best events.

Imp. CHESTERFIELD is the sire of six winners in the Antipodes this season, including the cracks Templestone, Lotterer, Hangthy and Lardy Dardy. This magnificent bred race horse and sire will make the season at CHESTERFIELD FARM (late Hinkston Ranch), Sonoma County, about halfway between Petaluma and Sonoma. Mares can be sent to Lakeville per steamer Gold.

WILL BE ALLOWED TO SERVE FIFTEEN MARES OF APPROVED BREEDING. FEE $75. Season commences February 1st and ends June 1st, 1893. Other conditions same as Silver Bow.

DESCRIPTION.—Park bay; 15 1/2 bands; foaled 1890. Fine head and neck well set on to strong pair of shoulders; fine mane and tail. I consider him worthy of his royal breeding. He was foaled in Kentucky on or about August 15th, 1892, as I bought him at Lexington, Ky., and was unable to get him shipped out sooner. He already shows himself to be a trotter. His gait is faultless, and he can show speed enough already to make me think him a trotter. I think I could easily put him in the list if I wanted to this season, but no "in-cup" record for me, as I raise horses to win money with. His breeding needs no comment from me, and I will allow you to be the judge. Address all communications to

ELECTIONEER 125. Sire of Sunol, 2:08 1/4; Palo Alto, 2:08 1/4 and 130 others in the list

NELLY W. (Died at 4 years) Waldstein was her only foal

WALDSTEIN was foaled in 1885; in color, he is a dark shade of brown with two white coronets; stands 15 1/2, this state. His fine, intelligent head, well-shaped neck, strong shoulders, short back, powerful loins, heavy quarters, well-shaped barrel, heavy, muscular stiles and arms, clean, straight, strong knees and hocks, short cannon bones, excellent pasterns and feet at once command him to the observer as a representative trotting horse. In disposition he is faultless, being kind, gentle and level-headed. His gait is perfection, and his races during his short career on the track ably demonstrate the game qualities which he possesses. His breeding cannot be surpassed. He is the only son of Director out of an Electioneer mare standing for service. Of his sire, can any more praise be said than that his sons and daughters prove more sensational every year, and the races won by Director, Evangelina, Direct, Margaret S. and the rest stand him as one of the most prepotent sires. Waldstein's dam is by the immortal Electioneer out of Sister dam of Albert W., 2:20, the sire of Little Albert, 2:04, the gamest trotter seen in 1892, and Vixen, the only mare that has a two-year-old and a three-year-old with records lower than 2:10. Waldstein's third dam was the famous Lamott mare, one of the greatest mares that ever came to California. She was also a great brood mare. Waldstein has four yearlings that have records; one has a record of 2:51 1/4, another 3:05, another 3:06 and the other 3:08. All his colts are natural trotters, perfect in form, cord of 2 1/2, and very strongly built. Waldstein cannot help being one of the greatest of sires. To the student of breeding, conformation and quality he fills the ideal.

SERVICE FEE, $60 (with usual return privilege), for the season commencing February 1st and ending June 30th. No responsibility assumed for accidents or escapes, but the best of care taken of mares. Address H. S. HOOBOOM, Woodland, Cal.

The Thoroughbred Stallion

THREE CHEERS

Will make the season of 1893 at WM. M. MURRY'S STABLES, 715 Twenty-third street, Sacramento, Cal.

THREE CHEERS. Young Fashion, Monarch, Jovial, Newminster, Hurray (Imp), Any Middleton, Beechwing, Potosi stone, Banquet of Blue, Princes (Imp), Phoebe, Arrian.

HURRAY, sire of Three Cheers, produced the great winners Bonnie Lizzie, Chaquita, Ohio Boy, Nellie Peyton, Little Buttercup, Red Fox, Medusa, Brad, Referee, Monk, Hozeaga, Lady Middleton and many others.

NEWMINSTER, grandsire of Three Cheers, won the St. Leger at Doncaster in 1851. His dam, BEESWING, was the winner of fifty-four races out of sixty-four starts, among them being the Doncaster Cup of 1837, 1840, 1841 and 1842, the only horse that ever accomplished that remarkable feat. Her sire was DR. SYNTAX, a famous race-horse.

THREE CHEERS combines, in addition to the above, the great strains of Bay Middleton (winner of English Derby, St. Leger and Two Thousand Guineas) and the blood of the wonderful producing families of TOUCHSTONE, Imp. TRUSTEL, EMILUIS and SIR CHARLES.

As can be seen by the above, Three Cheers is bred in the speediest and stoutest lines. His dam, Young Fashion, was the dam of Sunrise, Scotland (the only horse that ever beat Asteroid's heat), Liverpool, Columbia and Bonnie Kate, the dam of Little Buttercup and the flying Bonnie Lizzie. His grandam, Fashion, was the greatest race mare of her era, defeating Boston in the historical match at four-mile heats that is recorded as one of the greatest events in the annals of the turf.

THREE CHEERS is a beautiful bay in color, perfectly sound in wind and limb, his family on both sides being noted for their exemption from curbs, spavins, roaring or any other hereditary unsoundness. Horsemen who can appreciate the highest type of the thoroughbred are especially invited to inspect Three Cheers. He has already sired the splendid performers

Acclaim, Almont, Mystery, Cheerful, Applause, Ignacio and Royal Flueh, AND THEY SPEAK FOR THEMSELVES.

TERMS. Seventy-five Dollars for the Season. Good pasturage at $5 per month. Mares cared for in any manner owners may desire and fed on hay and grain, either or both, at reasonable rates. None but competent grooms employed, but no responsibility assumed for accidents or escapes.

THE

Stallion Ringwood, The Famous Son of Sidney.

Ringwood is a dark bay; black points; 15 1/4 hands, and resembles Sidney in formation more than any of his sons. He is a pure-gaited trotter, and has shown remarkable speed from a colt. With but little work, he showed trials of speed in 2:19 1/4 as a four-year-old, and would have received a record of 2:18 or better but for an accident at the Napa track, and was drawn from his engagements, and never has been put in race since. Ringwood is six years old, and as a sire of speed, form and color, is equal to his noted sire, Sidney. Several of his colts have been sold at high prices, and have gone East. He is a sure foal-getter and of fine disposition, and a lady can handle or drive him. Ringwood is highly bred on the dam's side. Alma was by Dashaway (thoroughbred), he by Williamson's Belmont, he by American Boy; second dam Fanny Cob, a noted roadmare brought from Canada to California. Alma is a noted producer of speed.

STANDARD STALLION

FRED DRAKE 4834, (Race Record, 2:26 1/4).

By Joe Gavin 564 (sire of six in the list), he by Messinger Duroc 106 (sire of 20 in the list), first dam, Minnie Drake (dam of 2 in the list), by Louis Napoleon 297 (sire of 16 in the list). Fred Drake 4834, 2:26 1/4, is a splendid individual; stands about 16 hands high, and weighs over 1,100 lbs., is of excellent disposition. His record is no mark of his speed as he can trot in :20 or better with training next season. Reason for selling is that owner is engaged in other business and has not the time to devote to the horse. Will be sold at a reasonable price. For particulars address

H. R. WARNER, San Gabriel, Cal.

For Sale Cheap For Cash.

A NUMBER OF

Fine Standard-Bred Mares

(With Foal to Dexter Prince).

Three are registered and the others are eligible to be registered.

ALSO

Three Thoroughbred Mares,

One by Hyoer All, dam Kate Fletcher, by Harry O'Fallon. One by Kyle Daly; first dam by Joe Daniels; second dam Queen Emma, by Woodbury. One by Bryant W.; first dam by Joe Daniels, full sister to Lord Brock, winner of the Australian Derby last year.

The first mare is Undine, full sister to Lisette, the winner of $10,000 purse last fall in New York. All these mares are for sale cheap. Reason for selling, my ill-health and wish to close out all of my stock. The standard-bred mares are all good individuals as well as the runners. Will sell them together or singly. For full pedigree and further particulars address

THE STANDARD-BRED TROTTING MARE QUEEN OF THE WEST.

Bay mare, foaled 1884. Sired by Re-Echo 14,439, he by Echo 462, out of Belle Mason (dam of Bob Mason, 2:27 3/4), by Belmont (Williamson's) etc.; 1st dam, Gustia by Gus 899, record 2:26 3/4, son of Bellefounder 62 and Jenny Noyes; second dam, Reta by Geo M. Patchen Jr 31; third dam, Mollie by Speculation 928; fourth dam, Ashcat by Hambletonian 10, (dam of Ajax, 2:29); fifth dam by Black Hawk 24. Queen of the West is a large, well-formed mare, perfectly pure-gaited and has trotted quarters in 32 seconds and halves in 1:08; she is perfectly sound and can be taken in hand and given a record. She is game, level-headed, and in condition is hard to excel. She is offered for sale at a low figure, as ill-health compels the owner to part with her. Address Z, this office.

FOR SALE.

A fine four-year-old stallion, standard and registered, foaled May 3, 1889; by Anteco, 2183; dam by Echo 482; second dam by McCracken's Black Hawk 767, etc. Is 16 hands high, black or seal brown, and a fine looker. Has never been trained but shows plenty of natural speed. Has shown a mile as a three-year-old in 2:44. For particulars address

FOR SALE.

Illustrious 4178.

The best-bred son of the great Happy Medium, sire of Nancy Hanks, 2:34; Riley Medium, 2:11 1/2, and eighty with records of 2:30 or better. Dam Abdalietta (the dam of Mediator, 2:25 1/2; Fannockbury, 2:28 1/2), by Cassius M. Clay 22; second dam Laura Crockett, by Al-mout 33; third dam Sally Fee, by Alexander's Abdallah 15; fourth dam Kate Crockett (the dam of Lulu, 2:24 1/2), by Imp. Hoodon.

ILLUSTRIOUS was foaled in 1885; dark bay; 15 1/4 hands high; weight, 1,000 pounds. He is the most fashionably bred stallion in California to-day. Has trotted miles in 2:33 with very little work. He is sound and all right, and will surely trot much better than 2:30 this season if trained. I will sell this fine stallion for less than he should earn in the stud in one season. Cash or bankable paper only.

Training The Trotting Horse.

BY HARLES MARVIN.

This great practical horse book is a handsome, three hundred page octavo, bound in cloth, elegantly printed, superbly illustrated, and explains in every detail the remarkable success of CHARLES MARVIN and the whole plans and methods pursued at Pain Alto as to breaking, training, shoeing, gaiting, driving, keeping, racing and breeding trotters.

Read what J. C. Sibley, the owner of St. Bel, says of this book: "In this work Marvin has let out all the mysteries of the craft, and it is so simple and plain that any breeder, owner, trainer or rider who has any relish for his business can take a colt as a yearling and develop to the highest and fullest extent that colt's capacity as a trotter. The work impressed me so strongly that I have ordered twenty copies, and shall place one in the hands of every rubber on our farm."

REP BALL

ITS OBJECT is to prevent disease, to regulate the bowels and urine; it strengthens the kidneys, prevents scouring, colic and leg-swellings; loosens the hide, fattens stock, promotes the appetite, cures coughs, destroys worms and bots, and produces a fine, glossy coat. To the stall-fed horse it has the beneficial effects and results of grazing without the softening effects of a season of grass with loss of time and money. For milk cows it increases and enriches their milk.

HIS LAST CHRISTMAS DAY.

How It Was Spent With Fred Archer, the "Demon" English Jockey.

[Written for the BREEDER AND SPORTSMAN.]

Now that the enterprising local patron of the turf, W. O' E. Macdonough, has shown the height of pluck and speculative enterprise in the racing world by the purchase of the mighty Ormonde, the following story concerning the lad that rode him to victory in the English Derby of 1885, that giant among jockeys, Fred Archer, the English crack, will probably prove interesting.

The somewhat tall, slender, yet stooping figure of Archer was well known to turfites all over the world. His keen and determined features, with his front teeth gleaming from beneath his peculiarly prominent upper lip, denoted more particularly his determination of character. But Ormonde was perhaps the greatest horse that Archer ever threw his leg over. Some think him to be the greatest horse ever foaled. When he arrives in California, with all his wonderful associations, none will be more powerful than the one which recalls the fact, that the most celebrated jockey that ever lived was his pilot in the race for the "blue riband" of the English turf.

It is Tuesday of Christmas week, 1885. The scene is the Victoria Club, Wellington street, Strand, London. Outside in the busy thoroughfares of that modern Babylon the snow is drifting in large white flakes through the murky December atmosphere, rendering the streets almost impassable with slush and sleet which the immense traffic, the most enormous and continual in the world, and larger if anything during Christmas time than at any other period of the year, quickly churns up into greasy and close-adhering mud. The unfortunate passengers and wayfarers hurry through the duties of their multifarious occupations, and those who are lucky enough to have them to go to are thinking of their snug homes decorated with holly and ivy for the festive season, the blazing and cheerful fire, the wife and children with their words of welcome, and the comfortable little dinner slippers and hot grog to wind up the evening by their "ain fireside."

Inside the club, however, all is lively, bright and jolly; it is crowded with horsemen and speculators of every description, including my uncle Harry Wheeler and self, who after a fluctuating year's bookmaking in the English ring had been fortunate enough to wind up at Manchester with enough and a little over to provide a luxurious "winter's keep" in addition to the capital we started in with in the preceding February. Every conceivable pattern of ulster, with hattons as large as cheeseplates, and immense "macintoshes" were hanging on the pegs in the cloak room, while the entrance hall was simply stacked up with portmanteaus, dressing bags, umbrellas, sticks, whips, gun cases, all of which indicated that a large number of the "boys" were taking a journey into the country to eat their Christmas dinner.

As we enter the big hall of the club, warmed by four gigantic crackling fires, loud greetings from our "brethren of the ring" assail us on every side, many a hearty shout of "A Merry Christmas!" "A Happy New Year when it comes," etc., etc., is heard, and innumerable hand-shakings are pressed upon us, making our fingers tingle again, for there are very few more popular men who haul the odds than Uncle Harry, and I think, with becoming modesty, if any of that quality had been left in me by a turf career, which calls for anything but a "retiring" disposition, I myself was not altogether an object of aversion with the jovial and genial crowd which thronged the hospitable walls of the great sporting club.

"Come and eat Christmas goose with me, Harry," sang out Alec Harris, "and bring the 'nevvv' along with you." "No! no!" cried Alf Saville, "I've already got an extra big plum pudding made for 'em both," and I verily believe we could have accepted a hundred invitations had there been a possibility of being in so many places at once. "Hollo! Fred, how are you?" cheerily roared my uncle as he shook the hands of a tall, thin, determined-looking and very neatly dressed man about thirty years of age. "A right jolly, lucky Christmas and a bright, successful New Year to you," and I quietly followed suit with my hand and wishes, both grasps and greetings being returned with equal warmth. No one in the world whoever looked once upon that sleekly yet steel-built frame, that firm and positive mouth, and those dark, fearless eyes, sparkling with discreet intelligence, still with a tinge of melancholy, that seemed to strangely foreshadow the untimely and terrible end of the owner, could possibly forget them while life lasted? Yes, there he stood his face wreathed in smiles, the cynosure of all eyes and the recipient of passing seasonable greetings, from every man, old and young, in the room, the "demon prince of jockeys," that world-wide celebrity, the daring, successful, famous and brilliant winner of a thousand races, Fred Archer.

"Come over here into this corner," said he in his quiet style, addressing us both, and we walked together. "Now where are you going to spend your Christmas day? Have you forgotten your promise, Harry, to bring Jim down and eat your dinner at Newmarket with our little family party?"

"Well, Fred, old man, you're very kind; we've so many hospitable invitations we don't know which to take," echoed we. "That settles it," said Fred, "you have got to come down to my place, and don't you forget it. I shall expect you both on Thursday evening by the 5 o'clock express, which will bring you in time for our Christmas eve dance."

"Well, many thanks, Fred, we'll be on the job," said Uncle Harry, "and now come along and have lunch with us at Romano's." The three of us then made the best of our way from the club amidst a chorus of "good-byes" and were whirled in Fred's brougham to the restaurant, where, after a recherche repast, we parted with my uncle and then I drove around with Archer while he purchased stacks of Christmas presents for his pretty wife and innumerable friends, until we had the carriage loaded inside and outside with packages of every size and description. Never shall I forget with what eager delight Fred lavished his money on the various useful and ornamental trinkets for the woman he loved best on earth. Who could have dreamt that ere another Christmas day came round that both she and he would be lying 'neath the cold, cold sod.

"Well, good-bye old man," said Fred, as we finished our shopping tour, "mind and be on deck with your uncle on Thursday," and he was driven away to catch the evening Newmarket express.

Thursday morning opened bitter cold, but bright and clear, and as the hands of the big clock at the Liverpool street station pointed to a quarter to twelve, a "four wheeler" deposited Uncle and me on the pavement among a perfect rush from the civil and obsequious porters. In a few moments we were comfortably ensconced in a first-class carriage and were speeding away across the snow-covered country whiling away the three or four hours' journey with ecarte, interspersed with frequent visits to our well-filled luncheon basket. As we steamed into the commodious railway station at Newmarket there was our host on hand to meet us, and after the usual welcome greetings had passed we were soon bowling away behind a pair of fast pacers in Fred's tandem, on the way to his beautifully furnished mansion on "the High."

I need not dwell on the heartiness of our reception at the house, the lively dance and the hospitable supper we partook of, but when the various local visitors had taken leave and dispersed to their various homes, the women folk had been "kissed" good night Fred and both of us having donned our slippers, sat until midnight in front of the glowing fire; "Nunkey" and I with hot steaming whiskey toddies before us, Fred with hot port wine, and chatted over the victories and defeats of the past year.

"Now, boys," quoth Fred, as he got up to light our 'go to bed' candles, "you've got to 'show a leg' in the morning at 5 o'clock, and I've got a couple of useful colts for you to mount and go out with me and see the horses exercising, so you'll not have any too much sleep, good-night old boys and a merry Christmas to you both."

"The same to you, and many of 'em," we re-echoed, and turning into our inviting bedrooms in each of which crackled a roaring fire, we were soon in the "land of nod."

Bright, cold and clear was the dawning of Fred Archer's last Christmas Day. A tap at my door with "Five o'clock, sir," from the lips of the pretty maid servant outside, woke me from my slumbers, and leaping out of my comfortable bed, though I must confess not without a shiver, for the cold was intense, and notwithstanding the warm fire of the previous night, in my room, there was ice upon the water in my washing jug, I completed my toilet as a matter of course in about the "quickest time on record," and guided by the loud and cheery tones of my uncle, found that worthy and Archer in the kitchen, where a trim little housemaid was pouring out three good-sized glasses of cherry brandy.

"Last, as usual," shouted Harry, and after toasting each other a "right jovial Christmas" with hearty grips of the hand, we jumped into our covert coats, muffled up our throats, and in a minute or two were mounted on three sturdy hacks and riding out on the Newmarket High Street towards the classic heath, now covered as far as the eye could see with the pure white driven snow.

Cheerily and merrily rang out the church bells o'er the wintry landscape as we cantered up the road, where long strings of horses, beautifully clothed in their winter blankets, each mounted by a neatly dressed, diminutive stable lad, were taking walking exercise. Every one of them of course touched his cap and uttered the stereotyped Christmas wishes to Fred, the "pride of Newmarket," the man who occupied the position which was the goal of their ambitions, that of the "unapproachable crack jockey of the world," and by whose "derring deeds" every one of these natty little lads spoke of with "hated breath" and probably knew the history of better than the hero of them did himself. Who has ever been for a canter over Newmarket heath on a bitter cold, fresh, snowy winter's morning, with a wind blowing fit to pierce your marrow bones? I tell you, you want to be moving all the time if you want to keep your blood in circulation, and this is what we did. Arrived on the heath, we soon came across numerous strings, all taking walking exercise in the snow, and met such well-known trainers as Bloss, Joe Cannon, brother to Tom, Enoch, Jewitt and others, with whom we exchanged the compliments of the season. And here Fred Archer's never-erring and wonderful memory was manifested. No matter at what distance he could descrie, either with eyes or race glasses, whose horses were in various parts of the heath, he knew the name and ability of nearly every lad who had a leg on the two or three hundred horses out on that Christmas morn, and, as a matter of course, every head-lad and trainer. He kept both of us thoroughly interested as we passed each lot of horses by such remarks as: "There goes Martagon; that lad who is up will make a good rider one day; look at his seat, and I know he has a pair of good hands. I've had my eye on that boy some time," etc.

Well, sir, we got back from our early morning ride, with such an appetite for breakfast, and after that attended morning service at the parish church, and what a sight it was to see the number of owners, trainers, jockeys and stable lads all paying devout attention to the minister and his teachings. Many people who are avowed enemies of racing and anything appertaining to the turf without knowing anything at all about it would be surprised to find if they would only make inquiries from the rector of Newmarket or any other place where training stables are situated that the most regular, steady and certainly the most charitable church-goers are those connected with the racing interest, and whose faces are to be seen on the race-courses at every principal meeting. But so it is—the most intolerant religious bigots are generally the most ignorant of the details concerning their pet aversion.

But to resume, the remainder of the day was spent in fun, feasting and jollity, and among all the guests assembled at Fred Archer's hospitable mansion none was more blithe and gay than our genial host, who took part in all the games of "kiss in the ring," "trencher," "forfeits," took an occasional hand at the "five shilling nap" with which my uncle and one or two of the older spirits were amusing themselves, and made himself generally popular and agreeable. No wonder, then, when we again retired to rest we voted that we had spent one of the jolliest "Christmas days" in our lives, nor can I ever forget as we stood on the platform of the railway on the following morning for our return journey our host's kindly words: "Glad you've enjoyed yourselves, boys. Be sure and come again next Christmas. Good-bye. I wish you both a very happy New Year, prosperity and good luck. We'll meet at Lincoln, if not sooner." And thus we parted with the prince of jockeys standing, as it were, on the threshold of the year of 1886, that year which was to bring him such a series of bitter disasters and misfortunes, ending with his unexpected and untimely death.

Many a time and oft during that year did I see, meet and console with poor Fred, many a hundred pounds did we pay out over his mounts, and my voice shouted at all the London Suburban meetings, where the cockneys bucked the "demon" jockey and would have done so even if he had been riding a donkey. "I'll lay against Archer! Come on, who'll back Archer's mount?" Then do I remember that fateful and foggy afternoon in London, on the 8th of November, 1886, when crossing over Waterloo bridge towards the Victoria Club I heard the crowd of newshoys yelling down the Strand "Suicide of Fred Archer!" "Evening Standard!" "Special dishon!" "Dreadful death of a jockey!" etc., etc. I rushed over to the club only to find that the telegraphic news was too true. Poor Fred had shot himself in a fit of delirium while suffering the fever brought on by overtraining and work. I knew then that the poor fellow had spent his "last Christmas Day."

Our Tennessee Letter.

[Special Correspondence of the BREEDER AND SPORTSMAN.]

NASHVILLE, TENN., Jan. 19.—Less than a month has passed since I wrote you advocating an inauguration of dash racing to succeed the present style of three in five heats. I am satisfied that sixty per cent. of the breeders who have been enterprising enough to campaign the produce of their farm for the past few seasons are advocates of dash racing entirely, and will gladly welcome the day when they go to the races to trot in dash races instead of from three to six, seven and eight heats. The result of the recent Kentucky sales and that of the Case sale in New York is conclusive proof that the trotting turf must land just where the running turf is before the trotting business will be profitable enough to maintain high prices. When trotting races are dashes instead of long-drawn heats, sometimes lasting through two and three afternoons, there will be more race goers, and then more owners of trotting stock. There won't be the high entrance to pay, there will be five races each day, and an owner will not find his horse standing in his box six days out of every seven, for then he can be out two or three times a week trying to win a dollar. The running turf was never more prosperous than now, and they don't go heats any longer, save occasionally some association gives a heat race or two as an innovation. The wise men of the running turf saw years ago that the heat system must be dropped if the running turf was going to keep step with the advance of the times. There were too many horses and not enough races, as is the case at the present time on the trotting turf. Shrewd trotting horsemen to-day realize that a change to dash racing is absolutely necessary if the harness brigade is going to keep up with the times and be self-sustaining to the breeder, those who race them and the association that gives the money for the races. The recent sales show that we must have a change. The associations that are hanging up the money for 1893 know that a change must be had. The programmes for the principal meetings of the year show the popular feeling towards dash racing. C. W. Williams, the shrewdest man in the business, advertises his stake races "two in three," and I am informed that his purse programme will be almost entirely dashes. The Independence man is the best man in the business, and he has been setting the pace and all others have been followers. Of the regulation tracks of the country none approach Cumberland Park in liberality and in far-sightedness. Cumberland Park this year has all of its stakes two in three and the purses will be dashes. And Buffalo, "the daddy of the Grand Circuit," will have dashes every day during the two weeks meeting at "Pa" Haulin's town; Ft. Wayne, Ind., and Saint Joseph, Mo., both members of the Western Southern Circuit, will have races two in three dashes.

All this goes to show that the trotting horse and the runner are fast getting on the same plane, and that they will have the same tasks before them. Then will the trotters bring better prices than to-day, and, too, why not bring better prices than the thoroughbred? He can race as often, will not wear out so quick as the runner, and when he does give up the turf through a bad leg or something of the sort he will be worth something, while an old, broken-down runner is worth nothing. Of course it will be mighty hard for some good, saintly old souls to see their beloved trotter made a tool for the gamblers (as they don't bet on trotting races now). The old fogey won't enjoy going to the races then (although he gets a free badge), because there will be three men there to the one that he sees nowadays buying pool-tickets. It will be sad, indeed, Mr. Editor, when the trotting turf loses the patronage of some of these free-pass "bored" and we find men at the gates with their dollar to pay admission. But when we commence to have dash racing exclusively there will be a market for harness horses that can trot, and then the old fogies can either sell their horses to better men or drive around the country doing missionary work and organizing Humane Societies to prevent such cruel treatment as trotting a horse in three dash races in one week. The trotting-horse business has not yet reached the zenith of high prices and fast time. When it gets to be profitable to go to racing with a good string of trotters then the harness horse will be worth more money, then the old knights of the sulky won't go wandering off after a string of runners to train. There is no denying the fact that the trotting-horse business is dull on this side of the Rocky Mountains, but it is to see better days, and they won't be long in coming. The dash system will do the work, and then the trotter will go on for ages as the runner, and as each generation passes away the business will grow better.

But little news can be written from this side the present week. The recent sales are the most absorbing subjects in trotting horse circles. The Lexington sale was a bad failure. There were no buyers there. There were lots of Kentuckians there, but they were selling, hack-capping and by-bidding as only Kentuckians can do. The combination sales at Lexington have not been for some time what they should be. Many a horse that is knocked down to a supposed buyer finds his way direct back to the farm, but he is on hand for the next sale, and is "priced" and "re-priced" until he finally changes hands. The people in and about Lexington seem to have an idea that the trotting turf still looks to Kentucky for all that are able to win when the time comes to go racing. There is no need to say there are some pretty shrewd horsemen that don't call Kentucky home, and some of these won't go against such a game as you have to tackle when you step into the ring there with a bid. And it is equally as tough if you go there with a good lot of horses to sell. There are men there who are a credit to the horse business, but they cannot buy every horse sold. The Bowdman Brothers belong to the latter class, and had it not been that these enterprising breeders were liberal bidders and actual buyers at the last sale, the grand average would have been much smaller than it now appears.

The crack three-year-old Czar, 2:12½, by Russia, 2:29½, will very likely be a member of Gil Curry's string next year. Curry's string for 1893 will include no less than ten with records from 2:09½ to 2:20. His horses are now at Cumberland Park. It is by no means certain that he will train the Melrose Farm's horses, and in case he does he will have twelve with records in the teens. He will train four head for Mr. L. A. Ragsdale, of Clarksville. It seems that the report that Mr. Ragsdale would retire from the turf owing to recent religious professions was somewhat premature and unfounded. Reflection will surely be a good horse in Curry's hands, and there is no doubt as to the ability of the pacers Lee H., 2:14½, and Nathalie Wilkes, 2:17½, to go their miles in 2:10.

Tennessee now has two good sons of that good racehorse and sire, Director, 2:17. Sam N. Warren, of Spring Hill, bought while in Lexington last week the brown horse DeWayne, by Director, dam Lottie Prall, 2:23½, by Mambrino Patchen; grandam Puss Prall, the dam of the performers Lady Stout, Black Diamond and Lottie Prall. This horse is a splendid individual, and looks a racehorse all over. He has shown 2:26 in his work, and will likely be a new 2:20 performer for his sire about the first time he turns around for the word.

The other son of Director mentioned in the above is the bay horse Erector, 2:25, dam by Mambrino Gift, 2:20. This is the horse purchased by W. C. Jones, of Columbia, from Mr. Salisbury, and for which it is said Mr. Salisbury still holds Jones' note. When Jones started his little kite at Columbia he commenced his "Jonesing" early in the beginning, and he kept it up at a pretty stiff clip until the final crash. If it is true that he eueched Mr. Salisbury out of Erector, I can say that he got a mighty good horse, and one that will trot very fast when he gets into the right hands, and I presume that will be the coming season, as I hear he is on the market for a trainer.

The Hermitage Stud sent a consignment of twenty-two head to the Woodard & Shanklin sale at Lexington. A colt by Bow Bells, out of Rosy Morn, by Alcantara, brought $2,500, which was the biggest-priced horse among the lot. The others went very cheap. The Bow Bells colts all show a lot of speed, and he is certain to make a great sire, as well as a much faster horse than his present record indicates. In 1893 there will be a rivalry between Bow Bells, Bellflower and Bell Bird for the fastest record of the Beautiful Balls tribe. The two first-named can easily beat 2:15, and should the three-year-old only shade 2:20 the old mare will then be away off in the lead as the queen of all broodmares.

There are quite a number of important changes among the trainers for the coming season. John Dickerson, one of the best drivers we see on the big tracks, will be second man to Doble the coming season, and will not have a public stable, as has been his usual custom. Frank Starr, a pupil of Doble, will train for Messrs. Chas. & Franklin Ridgely at Spring field, Ill., and in his stable will be found the good gray horse Conductor, for which his present owners paid $35,000. W. P. Maloney, trainer last year for the Murphy Stock Farm, Chicago, will this year train for S. A. Browne's Kalamazoo Farm, and will have all of the horses on the farm, save Belle Vara, who has already joined Doble's string. Report has it that George Starr, "Gentlemanly George," as he is familiarly called by his many friends, will train a public stable at Grand Rapids, Mich. Scot McCoy will train a public stable at Boston, he having severed his connection with J. Malcolm Forbes last fall. John C. Curry is now at the Jewett Farm training a strong string, while F. C. McVey, who handled the Jewett horses last year, is also at the same stand, and he will train one division of that farm's string of campaigners. Gil Curry will likely train a public stable here, while gay old George Fuller will spend another year at the Hermitage Stud. Dave Raybould will be at Memphis, Tenn.; M. E. McHenry at Freeport, Ill.; Sam Fuller at Sedalia, Mo.; L. O. Turner at St. Joe, Mo.; C. A. Thompson at Independence, Ia., and A. T. Miller, Michigan's pioneer reinsman, at Bay City. Ed Geers will be out with the Village Farm string; Marvin with the Prospect Hill Farm; J. B. Chandler with Gould & Miller's Nebraska record-breakers; Cope Stinson with the Stony Ford horses and the Canada cracks; Ed Bithers with Krenlin and the other Allen Farm horses; George Saunders with A. H. Moore's highly-bought string; Harvey Ernst with the Penn Valley Stud; A. Hutchins with a public stable, and Gen. John Turner will come down the line with all the good things imaginable, but none of them will be on top only for the exclusive benefit of the "General." Many others of the best known trainers will be seen with new strings under their charge in 1893, while there are so many who trot on the smaller circuits that one cannot keep up with all of them.

KENNESAW.

Eastern Sporting Gossip.

[From a Resident Correspondent.]

NEW YORK, January 14.—Such arctic weather as residents of Manhattan have seen this week would have made you San Franciscans wince had you experienced it. For a brief space on Wednesday morning last the mercury was below zero, the coldest New Yorkers have had for seven years, and the suffering from exposure among the poorer classes was very great. But for upper tennor the cold snap is in the nature of one glorious winter picnic. Muffled in furs and with gorgeous sleighs fitted with foot warmers and other appliances of comfort, they glide over the frozen roads to the music of tinkling bells, or steel-shod, skim over the ice-bound lakes in the park and annexed districts.

Some of the styles in furs and sleighs this winter would surprise even the Russians that they are copied after could they see them. The last ten days has seen the longest spell of good sleighing that New Yorkers have been favored with for many years, and those who have been able to have utilized their opportunities to the full. All our best known road riders are seen out daily in every style of sleigh, cutter and box sled, and a bystander any afternoon these days can note the Bonners, Vanderbilts, Lawrences, Kips, Works, Kanes, Potters, Belmonts and all our notabilities from sporting, social and political life. The carnival is a great one and looks like lasting longer.

But one jovial heart in our midst, enclosed in the well-known frame of Street Commissioner "Tom" Brennan, has been greatly perturbed by this sleighing carnival, although the tall, popular Commissioner likes a good horse as well as anyone, and better yet a ride behind one; his duty as a city official has placed him at the horns of a very awkward dilemma. With the snow on Fifth Avenue good enough for sleighing, there has been great pressure brought to bear on "Tom" Brennan to leave that great thoroughfare in condition for the runners. A less wealthy but more numerous contingent of taxpayers have strongly got after the commissioner to remove the snow which covers the crossings to the discomfort of foot passengers; so the jovial Commissioner wishes the snow had never come. He is praying that Providence, by a pouring rain, will keep him out of his trouble and clear the streets.

Standing on Fifth Avenue one morning recently at 2 A. M., "Tom" Brennan was musing over the situation when a stranger, who stopped also, commented on the approach of another snow storm, the flakes of which were beginning to fall. Not knowing Brennan, the stranger said cheerfully: "More snow, I see. How nice for sleighing. Wish it would snow for a week." But Brennan sadly answered: "You don't know me, I see, young man. If you were in my shoes you would like to see it rain for a week." Tableau.

So what with grand sleighing, skating, ice-boating and tobogganing residents of Gotham and vicinity are having a fuller enjoyment of winter sports just now than for years past. At Orange, New Jersey, the Essex County Hunt Club has had its toboggan slides fully occupied nights as well as days. So too at Pelham, where the County Club has held high carnival on the swift slide, where as the Chinaman described it you go like "hellee." On the Hudson and Shrewsbury rivers the iceboats have been outstripping the railroad trains in speed and King Winter's reign here for the rich is essentially a merry one. For the poor, however, one cannot say as much. How they live would make many a kind heart ache in sympathy.

The Huron case, in which Edward Corrigan sues the Coney Island Jockey Club for second money, won by his colt in the Futurity of 1891, came up for fresh argument day before yesterday. But after the same ground was gone over as was the case when last argued in court, the decision was renewed against Corrigan on grounds which the learned Judge Fork had been previously given by a fellow solon of the bench. Therefore, the case stands just as it was before, leaving Corrigan in the same position. He says, however, that he is not content with the Coney Island Jockey Club yet, and proposes to ventilate his grievances still further in the courts. For a persistent opponent Corrigan is a shining exponent of the "never say die" order.

Later entries to the big handicaps for the Brooklyn, Suburban and Metropolitan which closed last week show even smaller totals to the two older events than anticipated. Only the English mails bring an additional entry or two of Col. North's horses, said to have been entered as per cable, the smallest Suburban entry on record, 37, will have to be chronicled. In the Brooklyn a smaller total yet, 31, is still more surprising, considering the value of each race, $25,000, and when it is considered that the Metropolitan Handicap at Morris Park, to which only $10,000 is added, the surprise in the turf world is accentuated more than ever.

Nearly double tie combined Brooklyn and Suburban entry is represented in Morris Park's big event, the Metropolitan having received no less than 61 nominations. Of course the shorter distance and smaller entrance fee are some of the reasons for this discrimination of owners and hands in favor of the New York Jockey Club's star event.

Another singular fact about these three great handicaps is that not a three-year-old is entered in either the Brooklyn or Suburban!

In the Metropolitan several, probably half a dozen, are engaged, but it looks as if owners have concluded that three-year-old stakes are better game to fly at than big all-aged events, so the tradition that no three-year-old has ever won one of these big spring handicaps is not to be exploded this year. Lamplighter virtually broke the tradition last year, for although he was beaten two heads for the Suburban by Montana and Major Domo, he was going two strides to their one at the end, and was by long odds the best horse in the race. Had he ever could have won in his year had he not been inopportunately scratched.

The California horse Wildwood, then, is the only handicap entry of note from your coast, but if he proves as good as his sire, a noted handicap winner at Jerome Park in the seventies, Wildwood will make some of our cracks weary before they have him beaten. His debut here after his good form on the Slope will be eagerly awaited.

Santa Anita's first foal of the year, out of Los Angeles, by Emperor of Norfolk, only beat by one day Charles Reed's Fairview Farm in Tennessee, where one of his best mares dropped a foal on the 6th. These early-born youngsters at Santa Anita and Fairview will have a start over some of their younger antagonists, and their future will be noted with interest.

Hackney breeding is looming up among our prominent horse fanciers with more prominence every day. Yesterday the American Hackney Horse Society held a meeting in this city at the office of Dr. W. Seward Webb, and re-elected officers for the ensuing year. The selections were: A. J. Cassatt, of Philadelphia, President; Henry Fairfax, of Virginia, and John A. Logan, of Youngstown, Ohio, Vice-President, and William Seward Webb, Secretary and Treasurer. The American Hackney Horse Society is in a most prosperous condition.

NEW YORK, January 21.—The long spell of sleighing that New Yorkers have been favored with this month still holds good, and, judged by the existing low temperature, will be prolonged indefinitely. So also ice-boating, skating, tobogganing and other winter sports on our vicinity parks, lakes and rivers, where the ring of steel and the sounds of merry revelry are heard far into the night. The Hudson river is frozen up tighter now than it has been for a decade past. At Uyak, only twenty-eight miles up, the three-mile stretch of Tappan Zee bay is a solid mass of ice from shore to shore, and hundreds of skaters have been making the best of their opportunities.

Ice trotting is projected at that point and Tarrytown, also, if the weather holds favorable, and, altogether, our present carnival of winter sports is a noteworthy one. While it must make you dwellers of the Golden State congratulate yourselves at your summer skies and milder winds, still some of you would, as I heard occasionally when I lived in Frisco, like to enjoy an old-fashioned sleigh ride again, I am sure. The amount of snow that covers Manhattan and our annexed districts looks deep enough to never melt away. It mantles everything out-doors with its white coverlet, and purifies the air to a noticeable degree. If anything can keep out the mooted visit of Asiatic cholera to our midst this spring and summer, it will have been the present lengthened embargo of ice and snow, in reality blessings in disguise.

Turning from the sports of winter to those laid out for warmer days, the most important bit of news in the turf world is the additional entries received from England a few days ago to the recently closed great gates of the Coney Island and New York Jockey Clubs. Full well has Col. Thomas Ochiltree, agent abroad of the two Jockey Clubs named, fulfilled his mission. With an energy and enterprise worthy of the greatest praise Col. Ochiltree, like the horse Tom Ochiltree named after him, has received great results from his mission. When English breeders can be induced to enter largely in American produce stakes it is proof that the turf on this side of the water is attracting world-wide attention. Certainly the outlook for the future in this respect will depend largely on how Col. North's English horses, soon to be sent over here, acquit themselves, but still American turfmen are greatly enthused at the prospect.

To go back to the identity of these additional stake entries from England, the 49 nominations of mares sent over by Agent Ochiltree to the Coney Island Futurity of 1895 and the New York Matron stakes of the same year are from some of the best known breeders in England. Such names as Capt. Champton, Col. J. T. North, E. Chaloner, A. Greville, J. F. Bucklehurst, Capt. A. E. Whitaker and others are in the list, nominating mares bred to such sires as Minting, St. Simon, Galopin, Wisdom, Peter, Barcaldine, St. Gatien, Highland Chief, Galliard, etc. These additions run the Futurity entry of 1895 up to nearly 1100, and this renewal of that stake two years hence will no doubt prove the most valuable in its history, worth close to $100,000. To secure such a prize as this would mark the limit of more than one turfman's ambition.

But it is in the other portion of Col. Ochiltree's hatch of entries that the general public will be most interested. The nominations made by him of Col. North's horses in the Suburban, Metropolitan and other great handicaps alter the situation of affairs in the races named, although only six horses represent the new blood engaged. The four horses of the Nitrate King entered in the Suburban for instance may develop one able to give the Dwyer, Lorillard and Marcus Daly cracks an argument. If half the reports as to El Diablo are true, this member of Col. North's string will, if fit and well, create a sensation on our turf. By that great racehorse Robert the Devil, out of Tantrum, Col. North's crack has beaten some good horses in England during the past season, notably Sir Hugo and Orme.

The addition of El Diablo, Idd esleigh, High Commissioner and Miss Simon to the Suburban totals bring the entries for that race up to forty-one altogether. For the Sheephead Bay Handicap the three named are High Commissioner, Iddlesleigh and Rough and Ready. The last named is a six-year-old, brown horse by Quicklime—Rufford Maid; High Commissioner is also a six-year-old by Lowland Chief—Consolation, while Iddlesleigh is an aged chestnut gelding by Uncas—Mosque; Miss Simon, as her name indicates, is a four-year-old by St. Simon—Josyan.

Metropolitan Handicap totals for Morris Park's great event are brought up to sixty-six by the North entries. These are High Commissioner, Iddlesleigh, Reyhard Reavy, Miss Simon, Arturo, a five-year-old horse by Petrarch—Belle Agnes.

Sir Frederick Roberts, a five-year-old, by Wisdom—Candahar, is also in the Toboghan Slide Handicap with four others. The New York Jockey Club Handicap and All Breeze Stakes at Westchester also have entries from this string, except El Diablo, who is only in the Suburban. Entries at the autumn meetings of both of these clubs have also been made by Col. Ochiltree for Col. North.

The latter's entries for the Futurity of 1895 are the mares St. Olave and Sultana, both served by the Irish good sire Barcaldine, who died two weeks ago; Burgundy, served by Galopin; Brose, served by Wisdom; Thuringian Queen, served by Marion; Ben-My-Chree, served by Saraband, and Early Morn, served by Highland Chief. These mares are among the best in the Nitrate King's stud.

The stimulus that these English nominations has already given our racing stakes will be bound to make itself felt. The turfmen will look for the appearance of these English maidens with great interest and Col. Thomas P. Ochiltree, who will manage Col. North's horses on this side of the water, will be warmly received when he sets foot on his native shores again with his equine charges.

When Ochiltree used to write, with myself and others, in contributing to the columns of the New York Sportsman, the late Chas. J. Foster, then editor of that journal, and he used to have some great "run ins" together, mainly of a friendly character, however. When Ochiltree's copy would come in "Privateer" would put on his glasses, and after exploding a few sulphurous phrases by way of a commencement, would begin: "What's this? What's this? Why bless (?) my soul if it isn't that red-headed Texan again. Let me see! Let me see! I must cut out the lies in it." And then amid general mirth "Ranger's" manuscript would be turned in to the printers.

If Messrs. North and Ochiltree have a fair amount of success this year with the former's horses, there is no doubt that the venture will be an opening wedge for others to follow up from England and the Continent. There is little doubt that foreign-bred horses will fare much better in the matter of quick acclimatization than did our horses who went from here.

The officers of the United States Horse and Cattle Show Society are in favor of enlarging their scope of operations in this city. The Polo grounds in the upper part of the island is about to be leased to the U. S. Hand C. S. S., and yesterday Messrs. Jay and Hyde, of the association, had a conference to that end with the baseball people who now control the property. The arrangements were not concluded, however, at that meeting, but are expected to be later. In case they fall through the U. S. H. and C. S. S. has secured from the Manhattan Athletic Club, of this city, an option on Manhattan field. The latter, however, is not so commodious as the Polo grounds.

William Corbitt's San Mateo-bred trotters brought good prices this week under Auctioneer Kellogg's handling. The two days' sale showed by head bring $105,510, an average of $1,529. This is a grand showing in favor of this market, and after the large sums recently paid for trotters at auction, speaks volumes in favor of the present boom in harness performers. This, however, only applies to the best, for last week at a sale of fairly well-bred stock here some young and sound horses went for $40 and $50. First-class stock will sell well here, but poor horses are, it seems, a drug in the market.

THE GLEANER.

Pleasant News From Pleasanton.

[Special Correspondence of the BREEDER AND SPORTSMAN.]

PLEASANTON, CAL., Jan. 27.—I see it announced again that "Mr. Salisbury is ready to match Directum against Arion." I do not think there is any authority for such an announcement. Mr. Salisbury is not given to idle bluff and bluster. Mr. Forbes would not match Arion against any horse. Mr. Salisbury knows this, and therefore to offer to match a horse when no match can be made is not business, and we all know Mr. Salisbury is strictly business. What Mr. Salisbury does say is that he will meet all comers with Directum in his classes this year, and if Arion is one of them he will meet him. Mr. Salisbury thinks that if the little black fellow does well this winter he will take a lot of beating from any stallion, young or old.

It is quite likely that the old mare Clara will have another sprig of laurel placed in her crown by her great grandson Directum before the season of '93 is over. Mr. Salisbury is very sweet on San Pedro for the 2:20 and lower classes. He has all the speed required, and in his pacing races has shown plenty of staying capacity, as all his heats were won in the last eighth.

Charley C., the new acquisition at the Pleasanton Farm, is one of the most impressive horses to look at, and as he has shown that he is as good as he looks, we may expect to see him at the front with the best of them. He is by Brown Jug, the son of Nutwood.

The gray mate to Flying Jib, which Capt. Griffiths drove to the half in 1:02½, is to be sampled by Mr. Salisbury. He is a son of Peacock, the gray son of Whipple's Hambletonian. If this fellow has any head on him he may make the dust fly in the green classes. If he should turn out another great one Salisbury will be in danger of being barred east of the Rockies. There was Cricket, 2:10; the next year Direct, 2:0½, and the next Flying Jib, 2:05½, and now if he springs a white speed-ghost on them, they will bar him, sure. It looks now as though the Pleasanton lot would be greater than ever the coming season.

It is said at Lodi that Keating is going East with his string. Our Dick will be good in any company. He looks better than ever he did. Ottinger, the grand son of Nephew, is a greatly-improved horse. He has grown and spread out and has lost his case-knife feel of last season. Keating has a racy-looking pacing daughter of Dexter Prince from a daughter of Kentucky Hunter; second dam by Cal. Belmont. She has as speedy a conformation as one could desire, and Keating says she has more speed than Our Dick. He has also secure: Aster, 2:16, and, if nothing happens in the way of accidents, the son of Dexter Prince will show what old Clara's blood in that line can do. I expect to see him beat 2:10 in a race.

These two strings, with those in Hickok's and Goldsmith's hands, will advertise California breeding farms more than ever. Hickok expects Hulda and Azote to be hot stuff in any company. He is to have Avena, the three-year-old daughter of Palo Alto, a race horse with few equals and no superior. I do not know what Mr. H. thinks of her, but when he pronounces her right and fit I look for her to heat any three-year-old she meets. She is pure-gaited, level-headed and as game and stout as her sire.

The cold blood advocates may say what they please, but the trotters with hot blood can carry the brush farther than the cold ones. Directum showed that with Kentucky Union. The latter has some of the best blood of American Star, but she lacks the stout do-or-die blood of Cal. Belmont and Chloroform back of that, which Directum has. At Nashville she had as much speed as he had, but she could not carry it so far as he could. In the first heat she brushed with him to the three-quarter pole, and then her cold blood gave it up. In each of the two other heats the cold blood had enough of it at the half.

Speaking of the chances of Directum in the lighting classes in which he must go the coming season, George Starr says that he had as much speed last season as any stallion out, and that he has one advantage over them all, and that is that in a head and head drive for the wire they may make mistakes and that Directum never will. He thinks that is likely to give him the verdict. Taking everything into consideration, it now looks as though the little fellow may come back to us the champion race stallion of the world.

The breeding season of 1893 is now at hand, and the question for all is the cross calculated to produce the best results. The past teaches us a great lesson. In the early trotting family Messenger blood had been added to Messenger blood till horses, like Abdallah, had little else. When bred to mares of like blood no great results were realized. When a complete outcross was made upon the Bellfounder stock, Hambletonian 15 was produced. The greatest of this horse produce came from an outcross with American Star mares. The Clay family are the product of an outcross upon the Arab.

Mambrino Patchen, the founder of a pre-eminent broodmare family, was the result of a complete outcross; so was the Woodford Mambrino family. George Wilkes was made famous by the Mambrino Patchen and other outcrosses which he made in Kentucky. The outcross of the blood of Belmont and Harold upon the Pilot Jr. mares produced Maud S., Nutwood, Lord Russell, Alcantara, Aleyone and Guy Wilkes, and illustrate the great results of breeding out. In California the Moor outcrosses has put coin in many pockets and produced other great results. Some time since you published the names and breeding of six mares which had each produced three in the 2:20 list. The list was of great interest to all intelligent breeders, I am sure, as in all our trotting history they are the only mares that have produced three 2:20 performers. You called attention to the fact that none of them had a drop of Hambletonian blood in their veins. Many may conclude that Hambletonian mares are less preferred than those of other families. To me it is a lesson in outbreeding. Having none of the Hambletonian blood, when bred to stallions full of it the greatest results were realized. We have piled up Hambletonian crosses till further breeding in that direction promises to produce inferior instead of superior horses. We have four good opportunities to outcross Hambletonian and Mambrino mares in California, but there are some chances, and people should avail themselves of them as far as possible. I do not think they will be sorry.

John Green, of Dublin, is not sorry that he made an outcross of Stenwinder to Director, and got Directum. That is the way to get that kind. H. L.

Stallion Service Fees.

EDITOR BREEDER AND SPORTSMAN:—Much has been said of late about the high price of stallion service fees. In the light of the sales that are taking place it would seem that $500 was as large a sum as a man could afford to pay, and that he was making quite a gamble at that figure. If a man has a mare that has cost him $5,000, or has raised one that is worth that sum, and he breeds and pays $500 service fee, he has got to get $1,500 for the colt at weaning time to keep even with interest and feed. He will not on an average get more than two colts in three years; any one can figure it out. On the other hand, the owner of the horse has perhaps thirty mares of his own and does not want many mares from the public; he puts up the price to $1,000, and he gets five or ten outside mares. Or he puts up the bars against anyone getting any of the blood unless he buys it of him. The public can take their choice, and in nine cases out of ten they will breed and pay the high fee in preference to buying a colt, because, first, they think their mare is just a little better than any one that the owner of the horse ever owned; second, when a man looks at a colt that another man has raised, he can see all of his failings and faults as well, while when he breeds he expects to get a perfect colt, and when the colt is dropped, unless it is remarkably deficient, he will persuade himself and try hard to persuade his friends that it is just as he would have it if he had controlled the making. But to get back to the service fee, the supply and demand must regulate it; when the fee is above what people will pay, the horse will stand idle. But the best are generally the cheapest. I will give an instance that has come under my knowledge, and I am one of the actors. I had by what many call good luck bred a very good mare, i. e. I had bred to what I thought was the best (Nutwood 600), though the owners of horse farms as a rule were all making a dead set against the horse, and his book was filled generally by owners of one or two mares. The other party in question had a good mare also. I looked over the list of stallions; this was seven years ago, and selected the highest-priced stallion then standing at public service, $150. The other party selected one at $40. I got a filly foal, he did the same, but there was much chaffing about the merits of the two. I liked my colt well enough to breed back, though the horse, having taken a low record and proved himself a race horse, had raised his fee to $250. My next foal was a colt, so was the other party's. Well, we both kept on in our separate paths till we had reared five each—I three fillies and two colts, he three colts and two fillies. He had paid out $200 service fee all told. I had paid out about $10 each cartage of the mare, which he had saved having bred to a horse that stood in his town. In the course of the seven years I have sold three of mine, halter-broken only, at $3,600, and have two well-bred ones left, and he has not been able to sell any at a price that would make him even on cost of fee and feed. Of course a rich man may pay $1,000 fees, and in turn he can afford to breed to the $40 horse, but the poor man cannot afford to breed to either.

The horse for the poor man to breed to is the well-bred one, and by that I mean that his pedigree must be composed of branches of great families, and they must be the branches that have produced speed—extreme speed—in the greatest numbers, and that the sons and daughters have shown that they are breeding on in speed and in extreme speed, and don't forget that they should have elegant heads. These narrow-headed sires, with small, mean-looking eyes stuck in on the sides of the head, should be knifed. There should be a law that would make elegant geldings of them. The breeding of horses is quite a scientific business. It is an art, a profession perfectly easy for the man whose purse will warrant him in going out and paying $5,000 for a mare and then breeding her to a horse that has a list of trotters below 2:20 and several below 2:15, but the man of moderate income who has his $100,000 yet to get well skirmish around for a lower fee, and he must find a well-bred one. Now comes the hard work. Many men who have two or three mares to breed will start out and ask from six to ten men which is the best horse to breed to that is within their means, and the chances are nine to one that they will make a mistake whichever one they follow. Allow me to suggest a course. Get the Year Book and study it; take the great table, under their sires; make a note of every horse that has sired a respectable number of 2:30 horses; put them into families, then put the great families into groups or collateral branches; see how each horse has succeeded according to his age as a sire of 2:30 speed, and more particularly 2:20 and 2:11 speed; follow through each collateral branch and also note the sires and dams produced; then place the figures of one family against another and the collateral branches of one family against other branches of the same family. (And at the risk of comparisons being odious, let me mention one noted family, American Star, great in his broodmares (his daughters), but nowhere in his sons. I have heard a very noted horseman say he thought the Star cross was the greatest. But it is almost worthless, except through his daughters. The Pilot Jr. cross is another that runs the same way, not quite so pronounced.) Find a sire that has two or more crosses of the best families in the mal. line, running also to the best broodmare lines, and if he is a good individual he will do to breed to if you can wait for his development or that of your colt; and here let me say that we are advancing, not so fast in the reduction of time as in the multiplication of numbers, but every first-class sire will leave some son better than himself. So if you become thoroughly posted on the speed lines of the different branches of the great speed families you cannot go amiss in using an untried stallion, the son of a first-class sire out of a mare by another first-class sire. But get your proof of this from the Year Book. It is in my judgment preposterous to assume that the services of any stallion is worth $1,000 each, $50,000 a year earning capacity. The forty or forty-five colts that will drop will not, in an undeveloped state, make any money for the breeder who uses such a priced horse, taking into account the care, feeding and interest on the plant of broodmares and stock farm.

When it comes to the younger horses, that stand for $50 to $100, some of them will be found cheap and some dear. A horse is poor property that has not an earning capacity of $2,500 per season, and he cannot be reasonably expected to earn that and keep up his returned mares if he stands at $50. Therefore, when a horse stands at that figure he has to be in conjunction with another that earns more, or that by keeping two at that figure the expense will be less. There is no other business that people are so sensitive about as their horses, and no business that people differ so much on. It is the life of the business that this is so. There is hardly a man that is free from prejudice. Men are few that can look at what they have done and go about correcting their mistakes. They will persist that the horse they own is the best son of his sire, and will insist that had he an equal chance he would have been up to any of them, while all intelligent men can see that he is short-bred on his dam's side and has bred back to something that has given him a bad head, and he transmits that one quality with the same certainty that the wild tuc hog does his long snout and razor back.

Several good horses have reduced their fees and others have raised them. I don't like much to breed to a horse whose owner don't think as much of him as he did last year. I rather like the man who has had something happen to make him like his horse more than ever. Another point is that the less the fee the poorer the class of mares that will come to his embrace; weed out the poor stallions and the poor broodmares by using the knife and breeding to jacks. Good mares will stand good service fees. PRO. PUBLICO.

Reforms That Would Be Profitable.

EDITOR BREEDER AND SPORTSMAN:—The time is fast approaching for the formulation of the spring programme of races given under the auspices of the Pacific Coast Blood Horse Association, and I believe suggestions are in order, in view of the fact that at least seventeen days of racing will be had. Therefore I offer the following to the gentlemen composing that organization for the "good of the order":

Do not cater to the owners of sprinters. No one cares to see these short races, and there is more crookedness in the ranks of the "short horse" people than among the "short card" men. The association was formed for the purpose of improving the breed of horses in this country. At least that is what I have always supposed. Short-bred skates that can barely last four furlongs at top speed ran in three out of every five races at the last meeting, and that jobbery of many kinds went on right along in these events few doubt that have either eyes or ears. Bookmakers leased horses, according to report, and ran them to suit themselves. Further, I have heard that other horses which were not leased ran to lose in the interest of some book or books, the owner of the "stiffened" animals getting half the amount taken in by the pencilers on that particular animal. I do not like to believe this. Square turfmen would certainly be placed at a great disadvantage in such a case, for, if they would not be a party to fraud, the schemers would instruct their jockeys to run the horse or horses they were afraid of to the extreme outside, jab them against a fence or form a "pocket" and not allow the "dangerous horse" to get out until the wire had been passed. To obviate all this the Blood Horse Association can easily get up a programme that will leave the "cooanubiators" in the cold. Merely have no race for horses three years of age and over of less than seven-eighths of a mile. Then the public will be better pleased and the man with a stable of "skyrockets" relegated to the backwoods, where he would be forced to live in retirement, never again plundering the pockets of the dear public.

Have a stake race every other day at least during a meeting, with not less than $750 added. Inaugurate stakes with liberal conditions. Have, for instance, the Railway Stakes, mile and a quarter, for horses of all ages, weight for age, $50 entrance, $5 to accompany entry, the balance on starting, with $1,500 or $2,000 added by the various street and steam railway companies doing business in this city. Have an Hotel Handicap, mile and an eighth, for three-year-olds and upward, $50 entrance, $1,500 or $2,000 added by the proprietors of the leading hotels of San Francisco, who certainly make lots of money during the progress of a race meeting and will contribute the necessary amount. Then the Shipping Stakes could be inaugurated and a goodly sum collected from firms of ship-owners and those closely identified with the vast shipping interests of this city. The Merchants' Stakes could also be made a rich event, as could the Brewers' and Electric Light Handicaps. Name stakes after liberal capitalists, and let the gentlemen for whom the stake was named donate so much every year. All this is feasible and reasonable, and if there was a rich stake to be run for every day the attendance could be made almost double what it was at the last successful meeting, where the stake events were few and far between.

Have a competent handicapper that is not afraid to put weight on the crackerjacks. Let it be known who the official handicapper is, so that horsemen can interview the gentleman and argue the whys and wherefores with him, if necessary. Everything in connection with a race meeting should be conducted in a manner open and above board, and little or nothing should be kept from the race-going public.

As it is generally considered that bookmakers are responsible for two-thirds of all the frauds perpetrated on the race tracks of America, and associations rely too much for financial success on the support of the layers of odds, do away with bookmaking. It stands to reason that the pencilers must have several shades the best of the public or they could not afford to pay racing associations $100 or more per day for the privileges they enjoy, to say nothing of the large amounts paid to expert ticket and sheet-writers, to jewelers for diamonds and to owners of high-class restaurants for meals. Let the association put in pari-mutuel machines, or totalizators, having $1 and $5 tickets, hire their own help and charge 3 per cent. commission. Have also auction pools for the heavier bettors. It is estimated that at the last meeting each of the twelve bookmakers took in on an average about $1,000 per race, or $5,000 each day apiece, a total of $60,000 for the twelve. If this estimate was correct, and the same amount were bet in the mutual box, the association's commission would amount to $1,800 per day, exclusive of the sum paid them by the pool-sellers, which would surely amount to $200. Here is $2,000 for a starter, with the bar, programme and other privileges to be heard from. That the general public would be better satisfied to make their own odds (instead of being forced to take what cinch bookmakers offered) is well understood.

Have patrol judges stationed at every eighth-pole on the track, which will be connected at the judges' stand by an electric wire, for signalling purposes, and let them report to the presiding judge any crooked work they can see going on. Let the judges in the stand merely watch the finish and place the first three horses. Allow no one in the judges' stand except the presiding judge and his associates from the time the races begin until they end, and have all protests put in writing. Keep the riff-raff away from the saddling paddock, and have the horses for the second race come into the paddock when the saddling bell rings for the first race, and so on. In this way less rascality would be indulged in, for were horses given a pail of water in the stable they would have a chance to recover and sweat it out all right ere their race came off. Also let each jockey immediately on returning to the wire after a race remove his own saddle, surcingle, etc., and walk with it to the weighing-room, so that no one can hand him a lead weight. And last, but not least, the association should own its own track, grand stands, club-houses and stables, and it certainly has enough wealthy men on its membership roll to subscribe liberally were they asked. No organization ranks very high that does not own its own track and grounds. I have made these few suggestions thinking that probably the matters mentioned were never considered by the leading racing association of the Pacific Coast, and it is my firm belief that the sooner the members think over these propositions the better it will be for the racing interests of this part of the world.

Yours truly,

W. R. D.

Mountain View, Cal., Jan. 30, 1893.

Louisville Turf Notes.

The season of 1893 promises to be a memorable one, not only in the history of the Louisvilles Jockey Club, but of the West in general. The princely stakes offered by the Western clubs have attracted the turfmen of the East, of the far West, and indeed of all sections of the country. The result will be a revival of the sectional contests of fifteen years ago, when from the East came the Dwyers and Lorillards, and from California the Haggins and Baldwin to battle for Kentucky's classic events. There were no princely trophies in those days, but the turf was clean and pure, and the battles were fought from drum-tap to wire. There was a sentiment or glamour then that does not obtain now—because men no longer race for fame, but for money. But the sport should be none the less exciting and grand.

Washington Park will, of course, have a few of the Eastern cracks that will race nowhere else in the West, but none of its contests, with all their bewildering thousands of added money, will furnish a greater race than the Kentucky Handicap of '93 promises to be. There is not a race horse of consequence in the West, with but one or two exceptions, that is not entered in it. Not a one of its fifty-four entries that is not a first-class animal, while fully a score of them come under the head of the sensational. Here is a list of less than one-half of them, from which some idea of their class may be obtained:

Ida Pickwick,
Helen Nichols,
King Lee,
Wadsworth,
Poet's son,
Aloha,
Ignite,
Tulla Blackburn,
Semper Fidele,
Protection,
Hugh Penny,
Old Pepper.

Miss Dixie,
Queenie Trowbridge,
Gasson,
The Reaper,
Philora,
Vallera,
Shadow,
Rudolph,
Palisade,
Semper Rex,
Santa Anna,
Galindo.

With such a magnificent array as this, at least a dozen ought to be brought to the post by the handicapper, and when they do line up in front of the red flag of Mr. Ferguson on the 19th of May next there's going to be a record smashed in the subsequent few moments.

But the Kentucky Handicap is not the only race that has filled well. Each of the other five events shows an average increase over last year of about fifty. In other words, there has been an aggregate increase of from 145 entries in 1892 to 405 in 1893. These, with the Derby, Clark and Oaks, will make a total entry of 664 in nine stakes. The two-year-old events—the Hurstbourne, the Alexander and Runnymede—have filled better than at any time in the history of the club. The Hurstbourne so far has 91 entries against 49 last year; the Alexander 68, against 35 last year, and the Runnymede 81, while in '92 it had but 28. The Merchants' Handicap has jumped from 18 to 43, and the Deibelc Stakes from 15 to 64. This is as good a showing proportionately as made by any club in the West, and much better than many.

All the prominent turfmen of the West, several from the East, and Baldwin from California are among the nominators. Lucky Baldwin has entered ten, among them being Santa Anna, Galindo, Queen Bess and a number of promising two-year-olds. Scoggan Bros. have put in no less than thirty, a large number being youngsters. R. L. Rose, the Eastern turfman, has entered nineteen two-year-olds, a number of them being purchased from the Pepper sale recently. Other prominent nominators are the Avondale Stables with eighteen, including Ida Pickwick; McCafferty & Wishard, fifteen, including Helen Nichols, Aloha and Hugh Penny; Ema Stables, nineteen, with Tulla Blackburn, Rudolph and Palisade; R. T. Holloway, eight, including Wadsworth and Semper Fidele; Pasture Stable (Nick Finzer), sixteen, including King Lee and Philora; Jas. E. Pepper, nineteen, with Old Pepper and Miss Dixie; Eugene Leigh, with twelve; O. O. West Jr., with eleven, and many others.

The best of McCafferty's two-year-old fillies are Queen Mab, by Okema—Murt, and Belle Swift, by Iroquois—Toilet. His most promising two-year-old colts are Finance, a chestnut gelding by Faustus, out of Talla Bena, and Bee Line, a bay gelding by Panique, out of Ida B. His best three-year-olds are Helen Nichols and Hugh Penny, while Aloha is his reliance as a handicap horse. Among his platers, Queenie Trowbridge and Nero will be found to be the bread-winners.

One of the new turfmen in the West this season is E. F. McLean, of Cincinnati. He starts out with an even dozen under Trainer Barney Seelbrede. They are all two-year-olds but one—an unarméd four-year-old. They are entered in nearly the two-year-old stakes at Memphis, Nashville, Louisville and Chicago. Their names and breeding are as follows: Lulu McLean, h f, 2, by Bishop—Dublin Belle; Santa Maria, b f, 2, by Bishop—Amerique; Tremona, b f, 2, by Tremont—Feron; Patrol, b f, 2, by Khartoum—Patricia; Midnight, ch f, 2, by imp. The Jacobite—Olivier; Glide, ch f, 2, by Fonso—Saraband; Patagonia, ch f, 2, by Fond du Lac—Vanitas; Castelar, h c, 2, by Leonatus—Vassar; Jamhoree, h g, 2, by Glenelg—Linnet; Master Fred, ch c, 2, by Macduff—Silken Ban.

King Lee has for stable companions this year some very promising two-year-olds—all by that famous old campaigner from California, Volante. They include Volantress, a chestnut filly, out of Lizette; Volaticus, bay colt, out of Alice West and Volt, chestnut colt, out of Cora Lee. As for King Lee himself, he was never in better condition than at present. There is not a hair turned on him, not a wind-puff or other blemish, and he is a glutton for both work and oats.

Lexington's stakes filled very poorly this spring, which is due in part at least to the conditions, a $15 forfeit system taking the part of the cash plan. The Scoggan Bros., for instance, refused to enter at Lexington solely on this account.

McCafferty is pretty sure to start Helen Nichols in the Kentucky Oaks. He has declared everything else out of the race. J. M. Young believes he has one good enough to make McCafferty's filly stretch her neck. At any rate he will make an effort.—Louisville Evening Post.

Santa Anita Thoroughbreds Going East.

The Maltese cross will be seen on the leading Eastern tracks this season, as it has for years, notwithstanding the reports published in the Eastern papers that the Santa Anita string would not go East in 1893. The millionaire owner of Santa Anita has no idea of retiring from the turf just yet. He did not have his usual luck in 1892, but the abominable weather encountered when the horses first reached Chicago had considerable to do with this. E. J. Baldwin has decided upon a new plan this year.

It will be remembered when he used to capture all the rich stakes at the big Washington Park meetings that he invariably ran his horses at some of the big Southern meetings, so that they were in the pink of condition when they reached Chicago. This method will again be tried this season. Santa Anita will also have two strings this year, and both will meet at Chicago for the greatest racing carnival ever held in America. Dow Williams, who has been connected with the Santa Anita stables for years, will have one string, while Emanuel Harding, a well-known colored trainer just arrived from the East, will have a second division.

The horses have been divided up as follows: Dow Williams' string—Santa Anna, 5, by Grinstead—Clara D.; Galindo, 4, by Gano—Freda; Lady Bess, 3, by Emperor of Norfolk; El Dorado, 3, by Rutherford—Ophir; El Reno, 3, by Emperor Norfolk—Experiment; bay colt, 3, by Rutherford—Rosebud, bay colt, 2, by Verano—Belinda; bay colt, 2, by Cheviot—Aloha; bay filly, 2, by Emperor of Norfolk—Savannah; bay filly, 2, by Emperor of Norfolk—Famosa; chestnut filly, 2, by Cheviot—Viente, and bay colt, 2, by Rutherford—Glória. Emanuel Morris, one of the coming jockeys of America, will ride for this string. As at present outlined this string will leave Los Angeles county in the middle of April for Louisville, Latonia and Chicago.

Emanuel Harding will take his string to St. Louis, Denver and Chicago. The horses composing his string are: Santiago, 6 years, by Grinstead—Clara D.; Amigo, 6, by Prince Charlie—Mission Belle; Alano, 3, by Emperor of Norfolk—Paola; chestnut colt, 3, by Verano—Josie C.; bay colt, 3, by Volante—Blossom; San Francisco, 3, by Rutherford—Jennie B.; bay colt, 2, by Emperor of Norfolk—Clara D.; bay colt, 2, by Cheviot—Janova; bay filly, 2, by Cheviot—Atlanta; bay filly, 2, by Volante—Silita, and bay colt, 2, by Emperor of Norfolk—Mollie McCarbiv's Last. Jockey H. Taylor has been secured to ride for Harding's string.

It will be noticed that the Chicago public will have a chance to see the progeny of two American Derby winners in one string. Volante and Emperor of Norfolk have both won the classic event, and both will in all probability have a representative start this year for the $60,000. The Cheviot and Emperor of Norfolk colts at Santa Anita are reported to be a slashing and good-looking lot of youngsters. The get of Volante, one of the greatest racehorses that California has produced, will make their debut this year.—Chronicle.

CONSIDERABLE interest is manifested in the produce of Salvador, the great thoroughbred son of the dead Prince Charlie. The first of Salvador's get are now weanlings, fourteen in all, of which ten are chestnuts with blaze faces and four white legs, which would indicate that Prince Charlie's son stamps his own individuality on his get. The pick of Salvador's weanlings is pronounced to be a chestnut colt out of Chimera, by imp. Mortemer, who is the image of his sire in markings. He is said to show a wonderful turn of speed in the paddock. The next best liked is another that has the color and markings of Salvador himself, this being out of Lou Lanier (dam of Katrine, Kildeer, King Arthur, etc.) by Lever. Others of Salvador's weanlings are a dark gray filly with the same white about her as her sire, out of old Lizzie Lucas, dam of Cyclops, Chimera, Cambyse, etc., by imp. Australian; a brown colt, with a little white on his hind legs and a star on his face, out of Vandalite, dam of Heimdel, Housatonic, etc., by Vandal; a bay filly with black points out of Miss Woodford, by imp. Billet; a chestnut colt out of Aurelia, by Algerine; a chestnut filly out of Ethel, dam of Comanche, by imp. King Ban, and a dark brown colt from Electra, by imp. Eclipse.

GALINDO, the gray Gano—Freda colt in the Baldwin string, of whom so much was expected last season, is said to be wintering well and filling out into a slashing fine fellow. We understand that in private Galindo did faster work than any horse ever raised at Santa Anita, with the possible exception of Santiago. A number of Emperor of Norfolk, Cheviot, Verano, Gano and Volante colts go East from Baldwin's place this season, and it will be interesting to note the work of these youngsters during the coming season. Amigo, by imp. Prince Charlie—Mission Belle, for some time past thought to be of no account for racing purposes, it will be observed is going along with the string, and reports from Los Angeles county are to the effect that he will be "in the hunt" this year, after all, and make some of the crackerjacks stretch their necks. Santa Anna will do in the handicaps, and if Santiago rounds to the black jacket, red Maltese cross will be seen in front many times during the season of 1893.

GLENMARKIE, the sire of the Melbourne Cup winner Glenloth, was (says a Sidney writer) imported from England in August, 1879, by his then owner, a Mr. Spooner, who considered that in bringing out such a well-bred and handsome stallion he was doing good business. The horse stood at a farm near Fern Tree Gully for a long time, and served many mares about the district. It was remarkable that he got a lot of weeds and nothing up to the form of a decent hack. He did much better when shifted to a different part of the country, and the man who imported him, like many others, had the bad luck to lose a lot of money and the horse as well. Now it turns out that he has sired a Melbourne Cup winner. Glenmarkie is over twenty years old. He was bred in Kent, and performed in England, winning among other races the Drayton High Weight at Goodwood, and the Bibny Club Sweepstakes at Stockbridge. Glenmarkie served a season at the stud before leaving England, but his early seasons in Victoria were certainly failures, although a splendidly-bred one, and handsome to look at to boot.

ODE to the Guttenberg horse:

Patient creature, as you skate
Round and round the billtop,
You must wonder out of late
If you ever will stop!
Skating round upon the ice
Surely cannot be a vice;
Why then are you punished so,
You no doubt would like to know;
I will tell you, noble horse,
To improve your breed, of course.
—Turf, Field and Farm.

THE famous English stallion Barcaldine is dead, and by his loss the turf is deprived of one of the best producing sires of the decade. He was foaled in 1878, by Solon, out of Ballyroe. He was bred in Ireland, but at the time of his death was the property of the Countess of Stamford and Warrington. He was a good racehorse and a valuable sire.

THERE will be a great boom in the breeding interests of California within the next two years, as well as in the racing. Marcus Daly is expected to have his horses here next winter, and in his wake will doubtless follow a large number of Eastern racing stables. Once our brethren from across the Rockies visit this State and see its many advantages no sane person can doubt that they will not only race and winter their horses in this land of the glorious climate, but will settle here and go into the business of breeding thoroughbreds. As racing is now conducted the two-year-old division is greatly favored in the programmes of race meetings, and it is an acknowledged fact that our two-year-olds are as large and strong as most of the Eastern three-year-olds and practically have most of the two-year-old stake races at their mercy. El Rio Rey, Gano, Verano, Emperor of Norfolk, Bonita, Sir Walter, Yo Tambien, King of Norfolk and Alta speak volumes for the ability of our youngsters, and their victories are not likely to be forgotten very soon.

MILLARD SANDERS arrived from the East last Saturday and is making preparations to start East about the 15th with Sidney. He will return to California in about four weeks.

Legislative Work.

At this season of the year, while the Legislatures are convening in many of the leading States of the Union, there seems to be more attention paid to the introduction and passage of bills relating to the "horse question" than ever before. The great newspapers have had such flaring headlines as: "Racing at Hawthorne in the Snow!" "Cold Day for Sprinters at Rohy!" "Jockeys Killed by Horses Slipping at North Bergen!" "A Jockey's Beard is Hung with Icicles;" and the attention of the people is thus called to the scenes that are enacted at the race tracks in the East and West. The condition of the poor horses and the evidences of acts of cruelty are made subjects for long articles that do not express one-half enough. The bookmakers and the managers of these equine battle grounds should be stopped immediately, and the Legislatures that will pass laws forbidding such work will receive the highest praise of every true lover of man's noblest friend in the United States. This is said to be an enlightened age, and such exhibitions of cruelty as are seen on the frozen tracks of the East and West would make a Sioux Indian feel like plunging into the depths of the forest never to look upon the face of a white man again. The savage on the great prairies, the Arah on the desert or the Cossack on the steppes of Russia respect their horses more than the "civilized" people who consider horses "racing machines" and look upon them as unworthy of filling any other requirement. It is a pity that they cannot degenerate and be as humane as the savage tribes.

The Legislature of this State will have bills to discuss in regard to the racing problem, but none of them will relate to winter racing except as to limiting the time. Bills will be presented and passed upon relating to veterinary practice in California and the appointment of a State Board of Veterinarians with duties that will, if properly carried out, add much to the safety and health of our citizens, as well as eradicate infectious and contagious diseases. The presence of diseased meats in our markets every day the impurity of the milk and the spread of contagious diseases among cattle and horses are subjects of vital importance to every one, and it is hoped that any measures having such an object may be passed.

Laws are being enacted there making fraudulent practices on the turf and issuance of fraudulent pedigrees punishable as misdemeanors, by fine and imprisonment. Looking over the good work that is being done, the reader who remembers the startling head lines, even though he has no interest in the "live stock question," will at once be convinced that the representative men of the nation think the question of enough importance to pass laws to remedy all defects and protect the interests of this industry, which sooner or later is destined to make our glorious section of country the greatest mart for fine horses and cattle in the world.

Racing in the Coast Metropolis.

On the days the Blood Horse Association had the two and four-mile races the attendance was more than three times what it usually was. This should satisfy the members of the organization that the people desire to see racing at the longer distances, and not the "dog" sprints. Therefore we trust that when the programme for the spring meeting is issued it will contain ten events of over a mile to one under that distance, instead of having ten sprints to one sure-enough horse race. If the change suggested is not made the breeding of horses in this State for racing purposes will amount to little, for the reason that the short-hred sprinter will have a better chance to win money at California meetings than the thoroughbreds that come from long-distance families, who do not get fairly going at their best until three-quarters of a mile or more have been traversed. If the sprinters are going to be catered to, the object of the association, which is stated as follows, will be entirely lost sight of: "The object being to encourage breeding of the highest type of the thoroughbred horse and the improvement of racing on the Pacific Coast." This is the sole purpose of the organization, as stated in its printed by-laws, rules and regulations. How far the Blood Horse Association went in the work of improving racing at its last meeting, when it gave, out of the five events on each day's card, four sprinting affairs and one race of a mile or over, we cannot say, but in our opinion the improvement in the actual racing was not very marked. The pedigrees of most of the contestants in the sprints were woefully short, when indeed there was any pedigree at all. In fact, two of the heaviest winners at the meeting, Joe Cotton and Jack the Ripper, were of the "by Little from Nothing" family. This is not encouraging to breeders of thoroughbreds, certainly, and undoubtedly they have said to themselves, many times over: "What is the use of rearing horses that can run over a mile when the racing here is done for the most part by the sprinters? I wish I possessed a few skyrockets." The argument could doubtless be made that there was a scarcity of race horses in the State. But if there had been no races for three-year-olds and over of less than a mile you would have seen hosts of well-bred horses that were running with the "dogs" at the last meeting entered in the various events, and a large number that were forced to keep in the stable because the distances were too short for them would have come out to race, instead of remaining idle.

It is also time something was heard of the inauguration of several brand-new stake races. There was a great scarcity of these at the fall-winter meeting, and certain it is that three persons will go out to see a "race for blood" to one that goes to see nothing but over-night affairs. Give us a lot of rich all-aged handicaps at a mile and an eighth, mile and a quarter, mile and a half, where the entries close several months in advance, as they do in the Suburban, Brooklyn and Metropolitan Handicaps, where the press of the country discuss the chances of the various horses and an interest is credited from one end of the continent to the other. If these handicaps were gotten up a lot of America's most prominent turfmen would doubtless send representatives from their great stables to race in San Francisco. Marcus Daly, the Copper King, will, we understand, send out a lot of his best horses to run at next fall's Blood Horse meeting, and this will be but the entering wedge if rich and liberal stake races are inaugurated. As a correspondent writes us, also inaugurate the Railway, Hotel, Brewers' and Shipping Stakes, and name several after some of our more liberal capitalists that will donate a sum each year toward a certain stake.

Abolish the forfeit system by making the conditions in your stakes read: "$5 to accompany nominations, $45 additional two days before the stake is run for," or something like that. The Louisville Jockey Club tried this plan, and the result is their stake entries have increased about three-fold. There are several objections to the old method of three and four payments, the principal ones being that an owner has to keep a set of hooks in order to see when payments are due in stakes, and may overlook a lot and be scratched out of the events, losing everything he had paid in, when the tact was his horse was in excellent shape and he fully intended starting him. Another is that when the race was won the owner of the successful animal can seldom get one-fifth the amount due him in the shape of forfeits, and association secretaries do not concern themselves greatly over the collection of forfeits.

Last, but not least, we want to see the Blood Horse Association own its own track and grounds, and until it does there will not be a feeling of security over racing interests in this city and the accommodations will not be worthy of such a wealthy organization.

Valuable Lessons Taught by Experience.

The lessons that are being taught breeders at auction sales in California and the Eastern States will prove of incalculable value. The day for selling the produce of a standard horse out of a non-standard mare for anything over one hundred dollars has passed. Buyers realize the fact that there is a standard, and in adhering to that standard they will come nearer getting full value for their investments than by securing the non-standard, unsalable ones. The value of registering trotters and the great dependence placed upon the authenticity of pedigrees is realized to a greater extent and by a larger portion of people to-day than ever before. The owner of a stock farm who uses good judgment in breeding and pays particular attention to the development and racing of his young trotters, thereby building a reputation for his stallion and broodmares, will succeed, and by offering money as an inducement for owners of broodmares (which are bred to the stallion) to develop and train the produce, success will surely follow. The man who keeps a broodmare on his farm for six or seven years and has never seen one of her produce (no matter what she has been bred to) ever amount to anything as a trotter had better trade her for an empty stall. It will pay him better. If a stallion is kept five years on a farm and her three-year-olds and four-year-olds do not show any inclination to trot fast, a change is needed, and a better-bred one ought to take his place. He must be a horse that is not only bred better, but his relations on the maternal and paternal side are demonstrating their worth as money-winners and sires and dams of early and extreme speed. Any stallion whose progeny has to be jogged very carefully until they reach the fifth year of existence before being developed for speed is an expensive and worthless "luxury," and the quicker the owner sells him the longer he will keep the Sheriff's attachment from his gates. This is a progressive period, and the old style of waiting patiently until horses "get age" has been displaced by the new one. We do not believe in working yearlings or two-year-olds hard. The families of horses that are most fashionable to-day do not need it. The youngest representatives seem to be the most "precocious," and know no other gait but the fast one. The men who attend auction sales are on the lookout for this class of horses, and the stallion that has fast two-year-olds and three-year-olds is the most fashionable. Gameness and purity of action these little ones must inherit to fight out hard-contested races, and these characteristics are noticeable in nearly all of the progeny of our most eagerly-sought-after stallions.

Every man who attends an auction wants a standard animal, and if that colt or filly is bred right he will bring a fair price. The man who buys a non-standard broodmare that is old and never produced a trotters or one that ever was noted for anything except that he was "foaled" is away behind the times.

The low prices realized at the sales to-day will not always prevail. Money is scarce, and the large number of good, bad and indifferent trotters and pacers that have been thrown on the market during the past two months has had a depressing effect, but it will not last. The stallions standing for public service will be bred to better mares that have raced and mares with pedigrees, and the future of the trotting horse industry will be brighter than ever, for every buyer will know just what he is getting. In the past there was too much groping in the dark, caused by carelessness on the part of horse owners, and a total disregard of the value of registration. The trotting horsemen are beginning to see that in following the footsteps of the owners of thoroughbreds they will be better able to get full value for their stock than if they send them to the auction block without a pedigree, or, what is worse, a great big "said to be."

The Dash System.

The opinion is becoming universal among horsemen that the dash system will prove one of the best ever adopted by the trotting horse associations. Every turf journal in the United States endorses it, and with such an aid success will surely follow its adoption. In the last number of Dunton's Spirit of the Turf the following article appears; it is but a sample of the many that are written in our exchanges:

The defeat last fall of the pacers Flying Jib and Mascot, by Guy, a horse that was eventually their inferior in speed, created a good deal of critical comment regarding the tactics of "laying up" the first two heats pursued by the driver of Guy. It was admitted on all hands that had Guy been driven for every heat it would not have been possible for him to have beaten his competitors, and it was therefore a self-evident proposition that the race had not gone to the best horse among the starters. Immediately following this exposition of facts was any amount of argument as to the duties of judges in forcing drivers to do their best in the way of winning every heat trotted or paced, and a large amount of virulent criticism against drivers who took advantage of the opportunity to lay up heats was also indulged in. Now, the remedy for the evils which result from laying up heats in trotting and pacing races is a very simple and perfectly feasible one. It consists simply in moving the distance flag fifty yards nearer the wire than it is at present placed. This does away at one stroke with laying up heats, because in order to beat the flag a horse must be driven from wire to wire. But a still better way of overcoming the evils which follow inevitably in the train of laying up heats, is to abolish heat races altogether. The dash system is the race of the future, especially at the larger meetings. Here is how R. M. Anderson, of Lexington, Ky., a practical driver whose experience extends over a quarter of a century, views the dash system. "In a dash race every driver who wants to win will try to be in his place when the word is given, for he well knows that if he is beaten for the dash the race is over. Again every dash is a new race, and the public is ever clamoring for something new. By adopting the dash system you remove a good deal of temptation from the driver. Often a driver who feels he has the fastest horse is tempted by a few pieces of silver proffered by an unscrupulous bookmaker to 'just lay up a heat if your horse goes badly,' and not infrequently the silver bait is tendered to the owner of the horse and accepted, and the driver is instructed how to drive, or rather, how not to drive. This can be done in a dash race only by sacrificing all chances to win the purse or stake, and by adopting the dash system you destroy what I consider the greatest hane of the trotting turf to-day, the system of heat betting. The system of trotting mile heats best three in five is the only thing left of all that pertain to the trotting fifty years ago. There has been a change in every department of the business, and it does indeed seem that we were realizing that the world moves."

ALBERT SHERMAN LATHAM, only son of Dr. H. G. Latham, died at his home in Oakland last Wednesday morning. He was twenty-six years of age and leaves a wife and two children. Deceased was a very fine looking young man, and his pleasant face, courteous manners and gentlemanly ways endeared him to everyone he met. He was an upright citizen, a dutiful son, a loving husband and kind father, and his loss will be deeply felt by all. We extend our sympathies to his bereaved family in this, their hour of sorrow.

The Stockton Records.

The District Board of Appeals will meet shortly for the purpose of taking action on the Stockton records, and in order to have a large attendance of witnesses the meeting will be held in Stockton. It is likely that the officials of the Stockton Association will petition for the investigation, as they are the proper people to bring the matter before the Board.

Uncle John Williams.

The other evening, at the Palace Hotel, a number of horsemen gathered to talk over the events of the past. One gentleman spoke of the deaths of famous horses and another spoke of the death of the old California driver, John Williams or "Uncle John," as he was familiarly called, and many were the jokes told of his dry wit. Last year he had for a superintendent the son of a well-known horse-owner, and Uncle John felt it a duty to pay little or no attention to the orders of the youth. At the Sacramento State Fair one of the directors, noticing the youngster taking an active interest in the betting ring, spoke to Uncle John about it, and added: "What do you think of that boy? Isn't he smart?" The old man squinted his eye over to where the boy had disappeared in the crowd, then turned around, as if in disgust, and drawled out: "Yaas, he's purty smart, but he needs an overdraw check pow'ful bad."

When at the Breeders' meeting Uncle John was taken out of the sulky because some one complained of his driving, and a youthful "knight" was ordered to take his place. John had a small head, and while the young man was trying to get the cap John wore to fit his big head, he looked up at the judges, who were getting impatient, and exclaimed: "Judge, this cap is too small for me." Quick as thought Uncle John added: "Judges, it'll be big enough for that kid before he gets past the distance flag!"

Uncle John used to tell a story about "luck." He said he knew a man once who had lost all the money he had on the races, excepting a twenty-dollar piece. Seeing a very old man getting into a sulky, he turned around to a man standing near the rail and said: "Thar's a purty old codger to ride in a sulky." The man addressed, replied: "Yes, he is, and it would not surprise me if he fell out of that sulky before he gets around to the wire." The man with the twenty hands it over to me and says, "John Williams, I am going to bet this man this ere twenty dollars that old man does not fall out of the sulky before he gets around ter the wire." The bystander covered the twenty, I held the stakes, the hell rang, and off went the horses. Just after they got past the distance flag the old man's line broke, he yanked his horse into the fence and then fell out of the sulky, while my unfortunate friend touched me on the shoulder and said, mournfully: "John Williams, give this stranger the money. I might have known that darned old white-headed fool was bound to break his neck to make me lose my last twenty." After borrowing enough to get drunk on, my friend was led home to his wife, a strong believer in had luck.

Announcement of the Executors of the G. Valensin Estate.

PLEASANTON, Cal., Jan. 16.

TO THE PUBLIC.—It was our original intention to close out the entire horse property of the Valensin estate at one grand sale, to be conducted by the Pacific Sales, but, on mature consideration, we have decided on a different course, which is explained below, and the reasons therefore also given.

The estate needs money for immediate use, and a large amount of its assets being represented by the great horse Sidney, we feel that present needs require his sale, although convinced that one year hence, from the great showing we propose making with his produce the coming season, he would certainly realize a much larger figure than now.

As a matter of course, the estate will be a loser and the purchaser a gainer by this fact, but the action seems unavoidable, and we feel assured that we can add much more to the value of the youngsters on hand than we will lose by the present sale of their great sire.

The facts concerning Mr. Valensin's plans last season are quite generally known by that portion of the public that is interested in horse matters. He had great hopes of making a showing with a lot of his youngsters in the East far ahead of the faintest conceptions of those who were not perfectly familiar with the wonderful powers of Sidney, and with this in view shipped seven of them to Terre Haute. With Fron Fron, the champion yearling, he implicitly believed he would be able to out all two-year-old records, and expected her to go in 2:10 or better.

Fausta, the then champion yearling pacer, he was confident could easily beat all records for her age.

The yearling colt Oddfellow had, before being shipped, trotted a quarter in 0:35, and promised to be an unheard-of phenomenon. Sidonia, at the time she was shown an eighth in 0:17, Faustissima (sister of Faustino and Fausta), at the same age was showing quarters in 0:40, while Sans Souci could just try. Red Sid (yearling record 2:50) was also showing fast; in fact all were phenomenally fast. They were well engaged in stakes, and Mr. Valensin not only expected to beat all records for the ages and make a showing unheard of and beyond all conception, but he intended also to give a team of yearlings a pole record better than 2:30.

The misfortune which followed the enterprise is well known. Every one of the colts took dangerously sick at Terre Haute, and from time to time the life of each was about despaired of. He removed them as soon as possible to Cleveland, where they slowly recovered, and, just about the time they were fit to have their training resumed, Mr. Valensin himself took sick and died. The colts were immediately turned out, and still remain in Cleveland.

Partly to avoid the risk and expense of transporting them back to California, partly because they are all well-known, partly because we have enough others to keep one trainer busy developing them, but principally because the estate needs money, we have decided on selling them, with Sidney, at Cleveland, February 25th, although strongly against the showing of Mr. Miller Sanders, who is certain that with Fron Fron he can beat 2:10 in her three-year-old form, that Fausta can easily beat all records for her age, that Oddfellow can be made to trot in 2:12 or better in his two-year-old form, that Sans Souci can go as fast as anything of her age that was ever foaled, and that all of them will accomplish feats quite unparalleled. He says: "Fron Fron is the greatest trotter I ever drove, and Guy cannot outspeed her."

We have engaged Mr. Sanders for the coming year. He believes, and we are confident that he is right, that he will make a showing with the youngsters at present on the farm unheard-of in the history of the trotting turf. It is, therefore, our determination to make the effort.

It is not a business policy in state fully what we are sure can be accomplished, but we are willing to go on regardless to the effect that we will make a showing of most sensational character with the youngsters by Sidney, and we confidently expect that his list of 250 performers will be doubted in 1893. Meantime the mares now in foal to him will have had their produce, and there will be this year's crop to be benefited by the records of those that are in training.

Next fall Tattersalls will sell the entire lot in one grand sale, and we shall expect to show more young extreme speed than has ever before been offered at any sale in the world.

We shall sell absolutely nothing at private sale, and the public may rest assured that all will be disposed of next fall to the highest bidder.

Respectfully,
W. E. GREENE,
H. H. FITCHER,

Executors estate of G. Valensin, deceased.

J. L. McCORD, of Sacramento, has quite a string of trotters at work and will no doubt come out with a few "Shylocks" and "Mary Lou's" this fall.

The Breedere' Soliloquy.

Records—or no records:—that is the question:—
Whether 'tis better to have a mark
Made upon Stockton's guildery course
Or to claim a record that was never made,
And by this claim end it. To trot—to pace—
No more; but sue the officials for our coin,
And thus to bring our trials of speed
Before the court—'tis a consummation
Devoutly to be wished. To attach—to sue—
To sue! for that we can never gain;—ah! there's the rub;
For in that court what tales may then be told
Of timers and judges that from the ranks were called
To deliberate o'er our rights,—Where's the respect
That such a recital may gain for us,
For who would bear the whips and scars of time,
The rich man's wrongs, the poor man's walling,
The woes of breeders; the law's delay
And lack of its fulfillment; the spurs of office
That everyone from the registrar takes
When he himself a quietus makes
With a telegram. Who would dare say
That he's not right, for his work has been endorsed
By that great body of intelligent men
Who came from a country from whose bourne
No record breaker returns. It puzzles us all,
And makes us rather take our trotters home
And sell our bikes and boots to pay our bills.
Thus that ruling does make fools of us all,
And thus the best of our spring-time resolutions
Are sickled o'er with the pale shadow of doubt;
And our stallions, valued for their numbers
In the charmed circle, are now made worthless,
And have lost the credit of even being sires.

San Francisco, February 1, 1893.

W. L.

Goodwin's Official Guide.

EDITOR BREEDER AND SPORTSMAN:—We take pleasure in informing you that after many weeks of assiduous work we shall be prepared during the first week of February to place before the public our "Annual" Official Turf Guide for 1892.

We are quite safe in saying that this work will prove to be the largest and most voluminous of its kind ever issued in this or any other country.

Between its covers there will be no less than 1,600 pages of racing matter, which we have endeavored to make absolutely invaluable to every horse owner, breeder and turfite.

This number is an increase of 350 pages over the "Annual" of 1891.

The index comprises the names of 6,200 thoroughbreds, the majority with their full pedigrees and owners. The represent the number of horses which took part in the 10,000 races that were run in the United States and Canada, the latter furnishing 235 of this number.

To those pages to which we have invariably devoted many interesting miscellaneous items, we have added still another feature which we have every reason to believe will further enhance the value of our "Annual." This is the full reports of all thoroughbred sales that have been held by Tattersall during the year just expired. These alone take up 37 pages.

The every week-day method of racing, year in and year out, now in vogue, has naturally brought with it to us a vast amount of additional labor and many hundreds of dollars extra expense. It is but natural and proper, therefore, that in order to reimburse ourselves that we make a slight advance of 50 cents per volume over the price of the 1891 Annual. This we are compelled to do, and the present work, therefore, will be published at $3.14 in cloth; $4.17 in half morocco and $5.17 in half calf. (The odd cents are for postage.)

Respectfully,
GOODWIN BROS.

"It is a remarkable fact," said a prominent racing man of this city the other day, "that nearly all of the most successful racing points in England, France and America are removed from the leading cities a considerable distance. Sandown Park, in England, is twenty-eight miles from London, Newmarket over sixty and Doncaster fully eighty miles. Longchamps, the leading French course, is perhaps eight miles from the center of Paris. In our own country Monmouth Park is forty miles from New York, Coney Island about ten, while Saratoga is 120 miles away. The race course at Memphis is six miles from the center of the city, Haulmo six from St Paul, Latonia six from Cincinnati and Washington Park seven from Chicago. People going to the races at these places like to make "a day of it," take a fine outing, get away from the city, and excellent restaurants are to be found at all first-class tracks. It is all nonsense, therefore, to say of San Francisco, 'They will not cross the bay,' or 'They will not go so far.' Our people will go out of the city eight, ten or even twenty miles if, when the race course is reached after a pleasant ride, excellent accommodations are found and a good programme of races arranged. People are mistaken when they think the Blood Horse Association is wedded to the old Bay District track, with its dreary prospect and comparatively poor accommodations. Even if the organization had enough money to purchase at once the necessary tract of land for the building of a first-class track, grand stands, etc., it would be hard to find a tract of land on this peninsula sheltered from the winds and fogs that blow off bay and ocean within twenty miles of San Francisco. However, if it was along the line of railroad people could reach the place in forty minutes from Third and Townsend streets, and it would be better to go that distance than to build on a cold and dreary, unsheltered spot nearer the city. Over the Fruitvale (back of Oakland), however, there is a tract of eighty acres that can be purchased at a reasonable figure, and it is not only a beautiful spot but the climate is unapproached in America, which is saying a good deal. Some day (not a far distant one) there will be a race course near this city that will be a credit to the metropolis of the Pacific Coast, and I hope to have a hand in planning it."

The legal controversy between Thomas Williams and R. P. Ashe, involving the ownership of the mare Geraldine and several colts, promises to reach a hearing in the very near future. Judge Hunt rendered a decision last Wednesday overruling Williams' demurrer to the defendant's answer, and denying his motion to strike out Ashe's counter claim of damages because of Williams' alleged unlawful seizure of the property in controversy. Mr. Williams was allowed to file in which to file his answer to the counter claim.

TURF AND TRACK.

The Sulky.

THE famous filly Kentucky Union, 2:13 $\frac{1}{2}$, is wintering at the Seadalia, Mo., track.

SEND in your stallion advertisements. The season for standing commenced on the first of the month.

A NINE-MONTHS-OLD filly by Waldstein, dam by The Moor, was sold for $500 last week in Rohnerville, Humboldt Co.

FRANK COVEY, Superintendent at Palo Alto, will arrive in this city from New York about the fifteenth of this month.

A $10,000 stake for four-year-old stallions will be offered this year by the Narragansett Park Association of Providence.

THIS time last year there were several new-comers to the 2:30 list; the cold weather and the early rains this year have dampened the enthusiasm of the trotting horse-owners, it seems.

CTPID, 2:18, and Aptos Wilkes are now at A. Spreckles Stock Farm, Aptos. A number of fine mares will be bred to them this year. Aptos Wilkes is a brother to Hulda, 2:14 $\frac{1}{2}$, the pet of Orrin A. Hickok's string.

T. C. SNIDER, of Sacramento, will be seen on the Montana circuit this fall with a string of good trotters and pacers. He is well liked in the lively mountain cities and always does his best to make every heat a race.

HENRY PIERCE has used exceedingly good judgment in the selection of mares for his stock farm, and in a few years will have a string of trotters and pacers on the track that will make the Santa Rosa stock farm famous.

MR. BONNER's covered track on his farm at Tarrytown, N. Y., is completed, and he drives Maud S. regularly over it. She is as limber as an acrobat, and trots with all the ease and freedom of her record-breaking days.

THEY have begun to class the trotters in Australia. The free-for-all trot, two miles, at the Canterbury Park (N. S. W.) meeting in November was won in 5:14 $\frac{1}{2}$ by Violetta Jr. The other races were for 2:57 and 2:50 horses.

MONROE Salisbury is still on the lookout for good trotters and pacers to bring East this summer. He believes he will have a few "sensational performers" in his string, even if he has only one State to make selections from.

THE intelligent horse knows more and is capable of a more extended education than he generally gets credit for. One-half of his possible acquirements are apt to lie undeveloped through lack of knowledge or appreciation on the part of the owner.

At the annual meeting of the Vaca Valley Driving Association the following officers were elected: Directors J. M. Bassford Jr., W. H. Hill, J. R. Stadfeldt, O. Garlish, G. W. Davis; president, J. M. Bassford Jr.; secretary, J. A. Webster.

THE stables around the race tracks are beginning to fill with candidates for 2:30 honors. Plowing and seeding on our farms ended last week, and the farmers are anxiously watching the way the best of their colts are moving and wonder if some of them will not become famous in 1893.

THE directors of the Northwestern Breeders' Association will offer purses and stakes for this year's meeting in Chicago that will aggregate $100,000. The smallest purse will be $1,500 and the largest $5,000. Special heat and dash races will relieve the sameness in conditions of regular events.

BILLY THORNHILL is credited with another in the 2:30 list, Bomba, 2:29 $\frac{1}{2}$. We understand that this handsome Wilkes stallion has entirely recovered from his lameness, and will be given an opportunity this fall of making a record of 2:15. If he stands his work this spring he will surely accomplish the feat.

MEMO's brother, George V., made a very good season in the stud last year in the East; if his progeny is as handsome and promising as Memo's, he ought to suit. Many people believe Memo will have more remarkably fast performers to his credit than any son of Sidney that ever stood in California up to this time.

WM. DONATHAN has quite a string of thoroughbreds, trotters and pacers at the San Jose track. "Billy" is hound to be in the swim and if he brings such green ones to the front as Monowai and the pacer Hazel H., 2:18 $\frac{1}{2}$, this year, he will be able to carry away a goodly portion of the stakes and purses.

THE man who waits until his colts are four or five years old before beginning their education should, to be consistent, wait until his children are twenty-one years old before teaching them their letters. The days for such practices are "way-back" already, and soon the mist of a murky past will envelop them.

T. J. DRAIS owns a very handsome mare called Blanchard that is in foal to Guy Wilkes, 2:15 $\frac{1}{2}$; the produce ought to be very valuable. Blanchard is by Onward, out of Blanche by Mambrino Patchen 55; second dam Lady Blanche (dam of Alcyon, 2:15), by Privateer 258; third dam Jennie Lind, by Abdallah 15.

THE $25,000 necessary to purchase a half interest in the Lexington Fair Grounds has been raised by the Kentucky Trotting Horse Breeders' Association, and work will be begun on the proposed $50,000 improvements before April 1. The track will be widened, a new grand stand and stables will be erected, and the trotting races there next fall will be held under auspices that will insure their being a greater success than ever.

ORRIN HICKOK now has his string at Bay District track. The stalls he selected are the sunny ones at the south end of the grounds, and seventeen horses are now being worked by this great reinsman. James Kenny, the well known groom in charge of Hulda and Adonis, the mare is looking as fine as the proverbial silk; Adonis has been fired and killed, and Kenny is of the opinion that any pacer in the country will have to go the best it knows how to give him dust in 1893.

WM. FIELDWICK is taking up his trotters and beginning to jog them; he has a fast colt by Redwood, 2:27, that ought to bring him some money; he did not "stand up to his work" well last spring, consequently he has had a good, long rest. Everyone hopes Billy will have a second Beauiry Mc in this one, this year.

ARRANGEMENTS are being made for a couple of trotting races and a running race at the Salinas race track May Day. A good amount has already been subscribed for purses, and it is understood that the whole amount of the gate receipts and entrance money will be added, making the purses well worth contesting for.—Salinas Journal.

THE colts and fillies on the Agnew Stock Farm, Santa Clara county, never looked stronger or better at this time of the year than they do at present. Harry Agnew says the young Dawns suit him, and, as most of them are out of a very superior class of broodmares, it would not surprise us to hear of quite a number entering the list this year.

THE Secretary of State has received notice from Consul-General Wallace at Melbourne that the prohibition of the importation of horses from California into New South Wales and South America is still in force, and that local official action has been taken on the request of the United States Government that the prohibition be removed.

THERE is a three-year-old by Eclectic (brother to Arion, 2:10 $\frac{1}{2}$) at Sacramento, belonging to L. Todhunter, that will be the first one to lead the three year olds down the homestretch and under the wire this fall. Every other owner of an Eclectic colt or filly believes he has a record breaker, because the speed, stamina and intelligence shown warrants that belief.

A MAN went to hire a horse of a livery stable proprietor, who was very particular about his stock, and always extorted a promise from his customers not to drive fast as a condition of letting. "You can have the horse," he said, "if you agree not to drive him fast." "Well, said the man, "I want him to go to a funeral, and I am hound to keep up with the procession if it kills the horse."

DEXTER PRINCE DAN MCCARTY started for New York City last Saturday to attend his lawsuit against his former partner in the Altwood Stock Farm enterprise, of Westchester county, N. Y. He expects to be back in California in three weeks. Dan did not bring his white hat with him, as he has great respect for the little round halls of snow tossed by the small boys at such a shining mark, even if it does adorn his head. He says "the boys will expect to see that hat but I cannot oblige them this time of the year."

IT is said in a Latin proverb that "one man is a wolf to another." Now, this is too often the case in respect to trotting-horse men. It is next to impossible for some of them to recognize the good that is in their neighbors' horses. They can see only defects and hemishes. Generally speaking, stallion owners, of the cross-roads and country-stable kind, stand ready to discover and tell of the shortcomings of the best horse in their locality, and that he cannot compare with their own prancing, dancing, noisy nondescript, who is unfit to get any fixed type for business or pleasure.

THE Grand Duke Constantine of Russia has had a couple of the bicycle-wheeled sulkies that have proved such a factor in the making of fast time on the American race tracks shipped to him, and this week one will be sent to the Czar of All the Russias. When the Prince of Wales follows their example there will be a rush for this sort of vehicle, and they will probably replace the monstrosities in the way of dog-carts and cooking carts that the young swells are in the habit of driving through the park hitched to high-stepping but painfully slow-stepping cobs and hackneys.

MEMBERS of the National Trotting Association have been badly worked up by an article sent from Lexington to the Cincinnati Enquirer a month ago in which the Board of Review of that body was unmercifully scored. To-night (January 24th) Major P. P. Johnston, President of the National Association, gave out a letter from the correspondent in which he says that Dr. M. S. Sale, the owner of Temple Bar, who was expelled by the Cleveland Association year before last, furnished him with the alleged facts. As Sale already had a suit for damages pending against the National Association, this statement, it is believed by horsemen here, will destroy his case altogether.—Inter Ocean.

RICHARD's Elector has quite a large representation of colts and fillies in Stanislaus county out of dams of unknown breeding—ordinary work animals—that, with no work at all, can show a 2:40 gait on the road. Visitors who have been to Grayson and Westley, two little towns adjacent to the farm, say that for large, handsome-looking, perfectly-formed, easily-handled fast trotters, the Electors surpass any class of horses ever seen there. Like Robert McGregor, Red Wilkes and Electioneer, Elector so strongly imparts his individuality to his progeny, that they can be picked out of a hand of other stock in an instant. It is a pity he never was bred to standard mares previous to last year.

How important it is to make a visit to the stables before retiring, and yet how few farmers make this a habit. Many a time the owner of stock will, on his late round, notice some symptoms of disease that have escaped the attention of the feeder earlier in the evening at feeding time. Many a case of possibly fatal trouble may be rescued in time by seeing the state of the animal before retiring. Cases of colic very often come on after the evening feed, and if attended to immediately will generally respond satisfactorily to the medicine used. When animals are not looked after before retiring it is possible that sickness, which could be immediately treated successfully, may have proved fatal by morning.

THE American Trotting Association had 733 members in 1892, located in thirty-four States and Territories, Canada and British America. These members held 913 meetings during the year, with an aggregate of 2987 days of trotting and pacing races, the first meeting commenced in January, the last ending on December 31st. At these meetings $2,259,030 was offered in stakes and purses for trotting and pacing horses. During the year $21,038.16 was collected and paid to members for unpaid entrance and other claims; $11,412.95 money recovered and redistributed; 1705 persons and 1930 horses were suspended for non-payment of entrance money due members, and 1009 persons and 1066 horses reinstated on the books of the Association.

CHIMES, 2:30 $\frac{1}{2}$ as an eight-year-old, is the greatest sire in the country. His two, three and four-year-olds have records in the 2:20 list, which is more than can be said of any other stallion of the same age. They are all race records and are as follows: Princess Royal, 2:20; Midnight Chimes, 2:16 $\frac{1}{2}$; and Merry Chimes, 2:14 $\frac{1}{2}$. When Mr. Hamlin bought the young son of Electioneer, Senator Stanford said he had the best horse in the country.

CAPT. B. E. HARRIS has quite a number of promising colts and fillies at his large stables opposite the Bay District Track. He has one in particular that looks as if she would earn a record in a hard fought race; she is a beautiful bay in color, good sized and well proportioned; her sire is Dawn, 2:18 $\frac{1}{2}$, dam Freena Froman, by Adventurer (son of Venture, 2:27 $\frac{1}{2}$). The mare has a filly by Sweetwood (son of Dawn) by her side that will be a perfect match for her pretty sister some day. The Captain has Marvel, 2:24 $\frac{1}{2}$, and a number of colts and fillies by Fordstan (formerly Stanford) that will be seen on the circuit this fall, where the judges cannot overlook them.

A HORSEMAN writes as follows: "I have used the following receipt for removing bloody warts from mules and horses and pronounce it very valuable, easy of application and cheap: Take a quart bottle of common coal oil, put in the stopper a goose quill or turkey tail feather so as to let the oil squirt through it, throw a teaspoonful of the oil on the wart about three times per day and in two or three weeks the wart will have disappeared entirely. Have never known this remedy to fail. I now own and work a valuable mule that I bought six years ago for $40 less than her value because of a large and bleeding wart on her leg. I cured her in two weeks and worked her all the while."

THE great sale of stock from the Asylum stock farm will be the largest attended of any on this Coast. The stallions, broodmares, colts and fillies are choice individuals and as it is a closing-out sale every animal will go that is offered. Daughters of Guy Wilkes, Dawn, Pancoast, Sidney, Eclectic, Rupee, Tilton Almont, Soudan, Stamboul, Woodnut, Admiral, Fallis, Grandissin o. Steinyway, Tom Benton, Sable Wilkes, Elmo, Abhottsford and all the best stallions, out of mares that noted for speed and being choicely bred are catalogued. Great preparations are being made for the sale which will take place at the Bay District track. Every animal old enough to be worked and that is not too heavy in foal will be shown in harness. There are some very fast two-year-olds among the lot. The sale will take place on the second and third of March.

A BILL of considerable importance to those interested in harness racing was introduced in the Illinois House January 23d by Representative McGee. It has for its announced object the protection of breeders and the prevention of false entries in trotting and pacing races, and require that every owner of a stallion shall file a statement giving its name, age, record and pedigree, and post such description in conspicuous places in the locality. Any one publishing false pedigrees, or refusing to publish at all, shall forfeit all fees connected with his business, and any person so deceived may recover damages within the amounts of $50 and $500. The bill further renders it unlawful for any horse to be entered under an assumed name or out of its proper class, violation of this clause to be punishable by a fine ranging between $100 and $1,000.

DRIVERS of considerable talent are frequently weak enough to decry the merits of their fellows. They are ever on the alert, with weight-cushion ready, to drive the horse of some dissatisfied owner whose regular employe has failed to win a heat. Dan Mace often made such men hide their heads by invariably refusing to get behind the horse of a brother driver, except at his urgent request. He had little patience with an owner who wanted to change drivers in every race or meeting after meeting. As the breeding season is at hand and training time approaches, it would be well for all to cultivate a spirit of cordiality and a desire to help one another, thereby in the end bringing about the best results. The Kentucky breeders perceive that good fellowship advances the interest of one and all. They welcome strangers and introduce them from farm to farm, so that the commonwealth of local breeders is benefited.

RAYMOND, in the Horse World, on the change in the standard, says: The subject of a change in the standard is again attracting the attention of turf writers, and the opinions on the subject seem to be as diversified as when the same subject was discussed a year ago. That some change will be made in the standard some time in the future is probably true, but the number of breeders who have not yet reached the stage where they can produce 2:30 trotters with certainty, is so great that a great cry will go up against any change at present, and indeed, in one sense, a change would seem like a hardship to breeders who have recently made purchases of stock with the intention of breeding up to and in the present standard. The body of men who will finally decide the question is composed of our leading breeders, men who have the best interests of the trotter at heart and who may be depended on to do nothing rash, or take any action until the question has been fully discussed. Under these circumstances it is hardly probable that any change in the standard will be made for another year at least.

AFTER Mr. Kellogg sold number 45, by request of Mr. Corbitt, he postponed the sale till the next day, much to the disappointment of many who came to see Rupee and his family sold, for they were on the first day's list, says the Horseman. All day long the connoisseurs and critics paid court to Rupee in his corner stall. Mr. Shaw, of Washington Heights, a merchant prince of this city and one of the oldest metropolitan fanciers, and who at one time owned Confederate Chief, escorted us to Rupee's stall and said: "There, old George lives again in enlarged and improved form." On examining Rupee we, too, were most favorably impressed, for he is a horse that to our mind fills the scale of points to overflowing. He has size, power and finish, with that firmness of muscle, solidity of bone and cordiness of tendon so desirable in a sire and a performer. His breeding in the maternal line pleases the sticklers for great broodmares in a pedigree. When his get, little more than weanlings, were sold, one of them out of a non-producing dam for $1,600 to Mr. Pierce, they showed such trotting action and speed that Rupee became a keen subject of competition. It settled down to a friendly duel between Thomas Greenwood, of the New York Driving Club, who bid up to $8,500, and Walter R. Willets, master of Waverly Lawn Farm, Roslyn, Long Island, who raised the bid to $9,000, and so secured one of the greatest prizes in the shape of a promising sire that ever fell under an auctioneer's hammer.

The Saddle.

THE filly Readina, which was ruled off at New Orleans last week, having passed into the hands of W. O. Scully, has been reinstated.

CHARLES KERR, of Bakersfield, owner of Antrim Stock Farm, has been confined to the house for several days from the effects of a severe cold.

IF HON. L. J. ROSE comes back on the turf with a fine string of thoroughbreds, as it is reported he will, Californian lovers of racing will be pleased.

SCOGAN BROS. have bought from W. F. Schulte, proprietor of the Argyle Stud, the four-year-old brown colt Tenny Jr., by Idaho, out of Dolly Cant.

STARTER PETTINGILL has signed a contract to start the horses at the Spring and Fall meeting of the Cumberland Jockey Club of Nashville, Tenn.

ETHEL FORTUNE, by Conner—Della Walker, therefore half-sister to Oregon Eclipse and Hercules, won a five-furlong race at East St. Louis on the 26th of January, beating a field of seven.

SIMEON G. REED, of Portland, Or., we understand, intends buying a large ranch in the San Gabriel valley, close to Rosemeade, and will go into breeding on a larger scale than he at first proposed.

MATT BYRNES says Montana and Tammany will be prepared for the Suburban Handicap, Garrison will ride one and Midgeley the other. Sir Francis is to be trained for the American Derby.

THE race horse All Black, owned by Dan Honig, died at Gloucester on Wednesday. Honig recently lost Wilson Taylor. He considered All Black the best horse in his string and recently refused $10,000 for him.

IF Col. S. D. Bruce were to leave every horse out of his stud-book that did not trace to Oriental origin, as "St. George" says he should, a great number of America's most celebrated horses would be left out in the cold.

ROSEBUD, the daughter of St. Paul and Neyella, comes by her speed honestly, as her sire is from the very fast Alarm and Longfellow families, and her dam, Neyella, held the five-furlong record (1:00½) for several years.

JOCKEY EMANUEL MORRIS, who has been at Santa Anita for the past two months, will soon return to his home in Virginia, where he will stand trial for killing a man. The jockey says he can prove it was done in self-defense.

TYPESETTER, the good-looking horse that won at Bay District track this winter, is down in the Stud Book as by Hock-Hocking, dam by Ben Wade. In the programmes he was put down as by Hock Hocking, dam unknown.

EFFIE C., the dam of Rex, is to be sent to McGrathiana to be bred to Strathmore, as the foal will be a brother or a sister in blood to Strathmeath. She now has a yearling by Ban Chief that is a very good-looking sort of a colt.

DO NOT forget that the sale of thoroughbreds from Maltese Villa Farm takes place next Saturday at Oakland race track, beginning at 1 P. M. A choicely-bred lot of twelve will be disposed of, including stallions, broodmares, yearlings, two-year-olds and horses in training.

SINFAX is taking kindly to his work, which is being done at San Jose along with the American Derby colt, Monowal. The fastest either one has been sent a mile as yet is 2:00. Sinfax, if he is not sold, will in all probability be taken East and entered in the overnight handicaps.

BOOKMAKER PHIL ARCHIBALD has purchased of W. L. Whitmore, Mayview, Wash., the fast two-year-old colts Swiftsure and Ichi Ban, both by Coloma (son of Joe Hooker and Callie Smart and brother to Tormentor). Swiftsure's dam is Laura D., by Glen Dudley, while Ichi Ban is from Sally Duffy, by Patsy Duffy.

ANDY CLAYTON, who rode so effectively for the Bashford Manor stable, last year, winning the Kentucky Derby, at Louisville, on Azra, and riding a splendid race, has been engaged to ride for the Fleischman stable, this year. His younger brother, Alonzo Clayton, will ride for the Bashford Manor stable, and he is a first-class, light weight jockey.

KING THOMAS, the $35,000 "counterfeit," brother to Ban Fox and King Fox, we understand will be bred to most of the choice thoroughbred mares on San Simeon ranch this year. We trust he will make a better sire than a performer, for if he does not his progeny will not set the world on fire with their brilliant performances.

REPORTS from San Jose are to the effect that Billy Donah's Atossa is doing well in her work. If breeding or looks count for anything the daughter of Dunlop and Catherine Wheel should prove one of the greatest race mares in the country, for she combines substance with "quality." Atossa looks as if no journey would be too long for her. It is, however, to be regretted that the filly was foaled to Australian time.

OLD JIN, the mule which General John A. Logan rode during the war, died at Newport, Arkansas, recently. She had been owned by J. W. Parish, a farmer living near Newport, since 1865, and was known to everybody as Old Jin. The letters U S were branded on her in three places. Old Jin was thought to be about forty years old, and was as gray as a mouse.

THE following is taken from a late Australian exchange: "The well-known jockey, J. Gardiner, has entered into an engagement with one of the Dwyer Brothers, the great American sportsmen, and he leaves for the land of the Stars and Stripes by the next mail steamer. The details of the contract are a retainer of £300 (not dollars) per annum, £2 for every losing mount, and 10 per cent. of the stake for winning mounts."

BILLY McCORMICK, we understand, has in training at "The Arcade," Rancho del Paso, two royally-bred, high-priced imported fillies in Orchis, hf, three years, by Bend Or, dam Lizzy Agnes, by Macaroni, and Oran, ch f, three years, by Bend Or, dam Strathfeet, by Scottish Chief. Orchis is a sister in blood to the mighty Ormonde, being by the same sire and out of a sister to Lilly Agnes, dam of Ormonde. She cost $5,100 at auction. Oran brought $2,400 at the same sale.

TAYLOR & CALDWELL have made arrangements whereby their highly-bred English horse Oddfellow, by Barcaldine—Geheimness, will be taken to Kentucky by Colonel Jack Chinn to become a stud-mate of Leonatus. Oddfellow was a good race horse himself in England, and in point of breeding is faultless. Barcaldine, his sire, was one of the greatest horses of the last twenty years, and was never beaten. He died January 8th. Geheimness also was one of the fleetest racers of her day, and a great stake winner. It is quite possible that fame as a sire like that of Leamington, Phaeton and Prince Charlie may await this richly-bred young horse.

S. G. REED, the Oregon steamboat millionaire who has recently made some large investments at Pasadena, was in the city yesterday morning, accompanied by John Mackay, superintendent of J. B. Haggins's great Rancho del Paso at Sacramento. Mr. Reed recently purchased a place for a breeding farm near Savannah station, about twelve miles south of this city. Mr. Reed has been, in the past few years, quite a heavy purchaser at Mr. Haggins's sales of thoroughbreds, and it is quite likely that Mr. Mackay has been down here to locate the stables, foaling stalls and other outbuildings for Mr. Reed. The English stallion, Martenhurst, imported about four months ago, will be brought here as soon as the buildings are completed.—Los Angeles Herald.

OVERLAND PARK is to have some races. The Executive Committee met this week and made more definite arrangements. They are to make their best effort to bring good horses to Denver. It was decided to give six races a day, the purses to run from $300 to $500 for each race, aggregating about $2,400 a day to be given away in purses alone, exclusive of added money. Trotting and running will be alternated throughout the meeting, which will occur May 30th to June 10th. Secretary Rhoades left this week for the East, where he goes to make arrangements for getting a number of Eastern horsemen to send their runners and trotters here. He will also make an effort to get some of the more famous trotters to go against time on the Overland track.—Denver Field and Farm.

A SHEEPSHEAD BAY correspondent writes as follows: "Nothing new down here. Albert Cooper takes his string out every day on the green grass track, but it is white grass now. Jacob Pincus says it is too cold for the boys out there. I agree with him. I had a letter from Matt Byrnes yesterday. He and his family are at San Jose, where he will remain five weeks. He will visit all the big ranches before he returns. Matt is very anxious about the Salvador—Frenzi foal, which is expected daily. Mr. J. R. Keene visits the Sheephead track every Sunday, and then drives over to see his Lakeland division. Dr. Sheppard is convalescing. He sat up yesterday for the first time. K. K. Alcock, the well known trainer, leaves for Chicago next week, where he will open a public training stable. It is probable that Ed Corrigan will give him a few horses to begin with."

E. F. FALLON, of Hollister, is in town this week. He reports that most of his horses are looking well, and two of his two-year-olds (fillies) will be seen on California tracks this season and make it warm for the youngsters of the Golden State. These fillies should prove high class racers if breeding counts. Easter Lass is a chestnut by Judge McKinstry (son of Grinstead and Katy Pease), dam Talluda, by Enquirer; second dam Tallulah (dam of Bribery, Miss Ford's dam; Bonnie Meade, the dam of Reporter; Bettina, Tally Ho, Termagant and Barbary), by Planet, etc. Mollie Rogers is a bay filly, by Judge McKinstry, dam Ursula, by Duke of Montrose; second dam Sododot (dam of So-So), by Longfellow, etc. Others owned by Mr. Fallon are: Hathaway, four years, by Ironclad—Skipaway, by Wildidle; Manhattan, three years, by Birdcatcher—Ursula; Abbie F., five years, by Judge McKinstry—Lottie L., by Wildidle; Crescent Monarch, two years, by Birdcatcher—Lottie L., and Dashaway, two years, by Judge McKinstry—Skipaway, by Wildidle, all untried in public except Hathaway.

IT is reported that the Duke of Beaufort is to send over a string of horses, and that he will actually have a starter for the American Derby, the great race to be run in Chicago next July. As the Duke of Beaufort has been a failure as the proprietor of a great stable in England, it looks hardly probable that he will win much fame or fortune here. The horses he is announced to send over have been of little account in England, and there is no reason why they should succeed here, unless he should decide to race them at the Guttenberg or East St. Louis track. But the mere fact that a real live Duke is going to race in this country the coming season has already created a decided sensation at the Anglomaniac clubs in New York and at the swell clubs in Chicago, and there is a great demand among the feather-brained young members for English turf guides so that they may be able to find out all about what "Juke's" horses have done in "Dear Old England." These young men will be good game for the bookmakers this summer, as they will deem it a pleasure and a privilege to lose their allowances in backing the horses of a real live Duke. The Duke of Beaufort is a thorough gentleman, a sportsman through and through, and the "chappie" may like to know that for years he held the position of Master of the Horse to her Majesty the Queen.

A LOS ANGELES HERALD reporter met Matthew Byrnes, Marcus Daly's head trainer, at the Figueroa Hotel, where he is staying with his family, which comprises his wife and two children. When asked how he liked this neck of woods Mr. Byrnes said: "It is a paradise, sir, more especially for children. My boy and girl are out of doors from morning till night, and it is about all you can do to get them to come into the house and get their meals." "You live in New York, I presume," said the reporter. "No, sir, at Eatoutown, N. J., a short distance from Long Branch, but I am afraid these lovely winters of yours will spoil my little folks for next winter when the snow begins to fly about our Jersey home." "What do you think of our country here, as a horse-producing section?" "I know of no country that has any license to surpass it," replied Mr. Byrnes. "You produce excellent grass, good corn and oats, and have plenty of good water. Added to that, your mild climate enables a horse to grow all the year, while at the East his growth is almost entirely suspended during the winter months." "I suppose you are looking forward to the weights in the Brooklyn and Suburban with anxiety?" said the scribe. "Yes, a little. It is most probable that Longstreet will get the top weight in both cases, with Lamplighter next in say, and our colt Tammany third." "How did he retire last fall, Mr. Byrnes," asked the reporter. "Sound as a rock, sir; not a pimple on his legs. If he was anything like what he was last year, it will take a horse to beat him." Mr. Byrnes will remain in Los Angeles about six weeks longer.

IMP. FLIRT (dam of Flambeau), has a brown Racine colt very much like his sire. Fairy Rose has a very neat bay filly, with both hind legs white and a star in forehead, by Flambeau. She goes to imp. Cyrus this season. Imp. Amalia has a very fine chestnut filly by Flambeau, in appearance the finest foal she has yet thrown. Fannie Lewis has a chestnut colt with white hind legs and white face, by Flood, that, however, bears a marked resemblance to Flambeau. Imp. Cutaway has a chestnut colt by Geoffrey that on looks will not set the world on fire. Imp. Ceres has a neat chestnut filly by Peel. Imp. Goula has a bay filly, with high hind foot and face white, by Flambeau. Imp. Getaway has a very nice-looking brown filly by imp. Cyrus. Imp. Mutiny has a chestnut filly, with white streak on face, by Peel. Shannon Rose has a chestnut colt by Flambeau. A good judge of thoroughbreds says Flirt's foal is far and away the best-looker in the lot at Palo Alto, but Fairy Rose's is very promising.

WE find in the Chicago Times of January 21st the following: "Back from the Coast—Col. B. W. Woodruff and Starter Rowe, who officiated respectively as Presiding Judge and Starter at the Blood Horse Meeting, and, as far as it went, at the meeting of the California Jockey Club, arrived from the Coast yesterday, and the first question they were asked was, 'Where is Clint?' Clint—that is, Clinton C. Riley, who was Col. Woodruff's associate in the stand, was not with the party, although he had left San Francisco on the same train with the Colonel and Rowe, and the absence of himself and ulster when the train arrived caused considerable anxiety. 'Clint shook us at Ogden, Utah,' said Rowe, to one of the eager questioners. 'I don't know whether he had got tired of our society or not, but he shook us. As the train approached Ogden he was seized with a burning desire to visit Salt Lake City. I believe he went there to look over the Mormon yearlings. The crop, I understand, is quite large.' Col. Woodruff is looking stronger than he has looked for ten years, and he and Rowe say that they have brought back with them pleasant recollections of the climate and the treatment they received in California. * * * California, they say, affords an ideal climate for winter racing, and San Francisco is one of the two points in this country where the game can be profitably conducted in winter months without hardship to the horses, the jockeys and the patrons."

ENTRIES for the race meetings to be held in the far East have shown a decided falling off in numbers, and the managers of the clubs are more than a trifle worried about the outlook. That the very best of the horses in the older classes will be here is sure, but their number is limited, and they will not go to fill satisfactorily the programme of a race meeting. All sorts of horses are needed for that, and it looks as if the supply of horses would be short during the coming season, says the New York Times. The only exception to this condition of affairs is the Saratoga Association, which, outside of the management of the racing trust, commonly known as the Board of Control, has adopted modern ideas and modern methods, and supplied the sort of races and the conditions that the owners of racers like to have. The entries to the stakes of this progressive association, which, fortunately for its finances, is not covered by the pall which the traditions and the idiosyncrasy of the late Mr. Withers threw over racing in the East, are the greatest in number ever made since racing was begun at the Springs. Conditions which will bring out such a list of entries as were secured, in spite of the fact that the association was looked upon by the self-satisfied lot of old fogies that constitute the Board of Control as a competitor beneath notice, because it is practically an "out-lawed" association, reflects great credit upon the designer of the stakes, Samuel Whitehead, who saw what the horsemen wanted, furnished it to them, and got their entries in spite of the prestige of the Board of Control tracks.

CHRIS SMITH, the much-talked-of "plunger" of the Western turf, has begun to recover some of his losses and has been so lucky in his betting of late at the Hawthorne track at Chicago, where they make a book on the races run at Guttenberg and Gloucester, that he has been barred from the track. "Joe" Ullman, who makes the foreign book at Hawthorne, has refused to allow him to bet there any more, and he charges that Smith is in collusion with a lot of telegraph operators in New York, who send him word what horses are to win in the various races, after the managers of the track have settled the matter among themselves. Then these operators, so Ullman charges, send him false reports as to the odds that are being laid at the track against the horses, and he marks up odds that enable Smith to back the horses to run into a place for as good if not better odds than are laid against them to win at the track. As a result of this alleged combination Smith has been able to "heat" the Hawthorne book daily for large sums of money. That sort of thing is not pleasing to Ullman, and he has accordingly ordered his men to refuse all bets that Smith offers to make with them. As a result of this order Smith has transferred his person to the track at Rohy, and there he is now daily engaged in "beating the foreign book" at that track. Smith says he is a long ways from being broke now, and that he can pay every cent he owes and have a good amount left to carry on his betting operations with.

AFTER a race at Hawthorne, the other day, Jockey Downing was ruled off for pulling Speedwest, and all bets on the race declared off, says the Daily Spirit. There is provoking inconsistency on Western tracks in connection with declaring bets off. In some cases, no matter how flagrant the fraud may be, all bets are allowed to stand, while in other races, with exactly the same fraudulent features attaching to them, bets are declared off. If one practice is right the other is certainly wrong, and no wonder the betting public here and there are disgruntled at times, in view of conflicting and incongruous decisions. At San Francisco some weeks ago they came near mobbing the judges for not declaring bets off after a fraudulent race, decided so by the judges. In races of this kind why make fish of one and fowl of another, and this, too, on the same track. The other day the Board of Racing Stewards issued the following edict: "Any owner or trainer surreptitiously using any injection or drug before a race to increase or decrease the speed of horse will be punished upon conviction thereof." The point about the order is this, as I was informed by the stewards: While speed promoters, like that referred to above, are used probably on every race course in the country, and intrinsically may not be objectionable, it is the peculiar practices connected with the same that brought it under official ban. It is positively asserted that in certain cases when a horse is intended to win the fluid is administered, while in other cases, when a losing game is contemplated, the speed promoter is not brought into play. So the powers that he decided not to allow its use at all if it could be prevented, and hence the order quoted above.

STAMBOUL AND THE STOCKTON RECORDS.—There was great interest in the whole of the trotting world when Kremlin and Stamboul were contending for the stallion championship. That overshadowed all other competitions when Time was the main factor in the contest. It was nearer an "actual race" than the trials of Nancy Hanks, inasmuch as the two horses were so nearly matched that the smallest fraction of a second, of which a majority of timers took cognizance, marked the difference. From 2:08½ to 2:07½ the decrease went by, one-quarter of a second at a time, and though the grounds on which the contests were held were twenty-five hundred miles apart, the Eastern figures were posted on the Western bulletin boards the day of the performance, and the Occidental numerals appeared in hundreds of Oriental daily papers the following morning. At the time the duello was in progress there was not a suspicion of unfairness. Two such prominent actors brought assurance that nothing but legitimate means would be taken to gain the honors of victory; knights of such high renown were far above trickery of any description.

The warmest partisans of each would have disdained an advantage which the other did not possess—actuated by the same spirit which animated the black Roderick when he threw down his shield in the memorable contest so graphically portrayed in the Lady of the Lake—the only desire an honest victory; if defeated, ready to accept the gaulge of battle as decisive and give due honor to the victor.

There were rejoicings all over California when the "Native Son" gained the decisive game in the long rubber. That it was fairly won no one here had the least doubt, and therefore when it was whispered that Eastern people were investigating the genuineness of the record, it was the general impression that the defeat was not accepted in that spirit which was ready to grant that Kremlin had won 2:07½ in accordance with the rules. There followed a strong feeling of dissatisfaction against those who were cavilling and quibbling over the justice of our claim, and until I learned the cause of their disbelief I shared in that feeling. The season before Palo Alto, Snool, Arion, Frou-Frou and Fausta had gained "world's records" over the same track and under the same management, and without eliciting a murmur of disapproval. In that year, 1891, I paid two visits to Stockton, and everything was conducted under the rules which then governed, and there was no suspicion, on my part, that like strictness was not observed.

Under the more severe code adopted by the American Trotting Registry Association at its annual convention in April, 1892, it might be that some minor infringement, some lapse in the technicalities, that would endanger the records made would be discovered, but that would be all, and that scarcely accounted for the activity and persistence displayed in the investigation. Before starting on the Eastern trip I learned that the 2:07½ of Stamboul had been denied and also that affidavits had been offered which would clearly prove that 2:07½ was not made, and that money was demanded for these affidavits. The full conspiracy, however, was not discovered until the question came before the executive committee of the A. T. R. A. and a subsequent visit to the rooms of Mr. Cross. There I saw a letter which had been sent to Mr. Cross, threatening him that if the demands therein were not complied with before the sale of Stamboul an expose would follow which would effectually put an end to his claim to the stallion record. There could not be a clearer case of attempted blackmail, and when Mr. Cross paid no attention to the nefarious demand the owner of Kremlin became the objective point for the conspirators. It is not at all surprising that he was misled. One of the party claimed to have been one of the judges, and he charged that many seconds were subtracted from the true time, that the driver was not "weighed in or out" that his bodily weight was far short of one hundred and fifty pounds, and that he, apparently the arch conspirator, refused to sign the stand book on account of the fraudulent practices which prevailed. There was other testimony to the same effect, and therefore it is only natural that Mr. Allen came to the conclusion that an attempt had been made to defraud, that a flagrant infraction of the rules had been successfully carried out, and that in justice to himself an exhaustive examination should be made. In that conclusion fair-minded men will concur, and in place of condemning Mr. Allen for the course he pursued—as many critics have done—agree with him that from his point of view an investigation was necessary. I have no desire to review the testimony presented in the case of Stamboul further than to state that in every material point it was fully proved that the rules had been complied with, and that the blackmailing charges were without foundation.

The 2:17½ hump has been fully exposed in previous numbers of the BREEDER AND SPORTSMAN, that exposition having been grounded on what had come to my knowledge before going to Chicago. Subsequent evidence substantiated that, that of Frank Covey being so emphatic that his testimony alone was sufficient to establish the truthfulness of the time. It was on one of the intensely cold days which prevailed that Mr. Covey appeared before the Board, the delay of a couple of hours in getting the horse train away from Chicago admitting his personal appearance before the committee. There were points which he could not cover, among them whether Walter Mahen weighed in and out and the weight carried.

A telegram from Mr. Mahen settled that. In reply to the question: "Did you weigh in and out? What was your bodily weight and what dead weights did you carry?" came "Yes, I weighed one hundred and forty-one pounds; carried ten pounds dead weight."

That the trotting was done after 10 A. M., that the weight was in accordance with the rules, that 2:07½ was the official and true time, in my opinion, was proved beyond a shadow of doubt, and that opinion was shared by all with whom I conversed on the subject. That some of the minor rules were not observed was equally clear, and as the duty of the committee was to enforce the rules, which the convention adopted, without the power to amend or abrogate these rules in any particular, the performance had to be thrown out.

Stamboul does not lose an iota of credit. Although debarred from holding the championship he cannot be denied the merit of the wonderful flights of speed he exhibited on the Stockton track during the past season; but his dethronement marks a series of hardships on others. Had it been otherwise in that the contest for the stallion crown was being fought under such exciting conditions it is not likely that any of the other performances would have been called in question, and if credited no harm could have followed. As in the case of Stamboul, all the major requirements were followed, and in the whole series of events there was only one in which it was claimed that too fast time had been given. In fact the contention was in another direction and complaints made that the judges and timers were too strict, the former by a close adherence to the rules regarding breaking, the timers by giving slower marks than the watches of "outsiders" indicated. But before learning the history of the last trial of Stamboul it will be proper to notice another feature. In the interview with John Crow, who drove the teasers, published some weeks ago, he claimed that Stamboul ran fast when he broke for about twenty yards, and when he caught his trot went faster than at any other portion of the mile. His testimony completely upset the charge that the mile was made in 2:17½. In that he said that there was no question of the half mile being made in 1:02½, and therefore 1:15 for the last half was ridiculously absurd. The conspirators, however, covered this point by testifying that he made a "bad break," losing a good deal, and then the accepted statement that the track was slippery and a heavy rain falling accounted for the discrepancy between the "first" half and the "last" half.

Mr. Covey's testimony effectually settled that controversy. In place of the track being slippery his evidence proved that at no time during the "record meeting" had the track been as fast as it was on the morning when Stamboul trotted. As to the rain, there was a sprinkle when Stamboul finished the mile; soon after there was quite a shower. The announcement of the time was followed by cheers for "Stamboul, 2:07½, in the rain," and the burrahs were repeated with greater vigor, which may have been inspired by the copious libations over the success of the California horse. It was enough to awaken enthusiasm, and whether the goblets were filled with champagne or Bartlett water, it would have been a "cold-blooded" Californian who did not join in the ovation. Unfortunately, however, there is so strong a partisanship in connection with horses, so great a jealousy of rival clans that praise of the opposite faction is regarded as a slur on their favorites. Cheers for Stamboul unquestionably rankled in the hearts of a few who fancied other strains, and while that feeling is certainly objectionable, nothing nearly so bad as entering into a conspiracy to extort money in the manner that was attempted. So despicable, so utterly indefensible from any point of view, that I am grieved to admit that there are men in California who are so guilty as established by their own admissions.

Apart from the Stamboul case, there are far more important issues than that which has raised the great excitement. Probably the greatest breach of the rules was in not following that which prevailed for two purses or stakes, one of which had to be decided on each day of the meeting. To copy it in full—"A regular meeting is hereby construed to mean a meeting advertised in at least one newspaper not less than one week before the commencement of said meeting, and at which meeting no less than two regular events (purse or stake) one of which must take place on each day, to which entrance fee is paid or subscription made." So far as I know all the other conditions were complied with, and it may be that even this requirement was fulfilled on some of the days of the meeting. In that case the animals which participated on these days would secure the records made.

There is a point in connection with the trotting at Stockton which is well worthy of serious consideration, that being when the records fall, should a bar follow? I am well aware that the answer will be, of course, and in all probability there will not be a dissenting voice when the question is first propounded. I will not take either side at present, though without going into a close inspection of "rules and precedents" a good deal can be said on both sides of the question. From an equitable standpoint there should not be a bar, as with these records thrown out nothing has been gained. Somewhat analogous to the case when for instance the horse starts to beat a specified time and fails. The rule of the A. T. R. A. is: "No performance against time will be accepted unless the animal starts to equal or beat a specified time and accomplishes the feat." Outside of that then there is neither a record nor bar. But the A. T. R. A. has nothing to do with bars, records being the only time performances under its supervision, and in the case under consideration the rules of the National Trotting Association will govern. Section 1 Rule 43 reads: "A record can be made only in a public race, etc." Rule 42 "Any contest for purse, premium, stake or wager, or involving admission fees, on any course and in the presence of judges appointed in accordance with Rule 24 shall constitute a public race."

This would appear to be conclusive that a record or bar must result when horses participate in a public race, and as "admission fees" were charged that clause apparently decides the status. Then the query will arise, were all the rules of the N. T. A. observed or that portion of them which is imperative to constitute a regular race?

Without going into the questions bearing upon this issue it seems to me that it will be within the scope of the Board of Appeals for the Pacific District to institute an investigation which will settle this contention. If irregularities appear, or rather if the rules of the N. T. A. as well as those of the A. T. R. A. have been violated, neither record or bar should stand. The District Board has, at least, the power to investigate and report to the Board of Review, and on that report the higher tribunal return a verdict. The investigation may disclose the fact that all of these races can merely be classed as public trials, and that time made in these trials will not impose a burden which has no compensative return.

The matter is certainly of enough importance to warrant such action on the part of the Pacific Board, and it also appears to me that the San Joaquin association should make the application for an investigation in order to place before the public the whole of the facts in connection with the record meeting.

MANETTE AND HER DAM.—With the exception of a few sentences written for The Horseman, I have not penned a line in relation to the pedigree of Manette since it was brought before the executive committee of the American Trotting Registry Association. Furthermore, I did not intend to give further publicity to my views until the question was settled, but inasmuch as Clark's Horse Review has published an editorial in relation to the postponement of the case, and to correct false impressions which my silence might give cause, I will as briefly as possible give the reasons for soliciting a postponement. When the affidavits of Messrs. Allen and French were published the discrepancy between them and the date of foaling of Manon, given by J. W. Knox with other testimony, showed conclusively that Addie could not have been the dam of a chestnut colt foaled "early in 1878," as Mr. French, who kept the mares, Addie and Emblem, the season of 1878, testified, and therefore he had not got the "mares mixed," as was claimed nearly thirteen years after the mares had left Mr. French's possession. These affidavits were subscribed and sworn to before Notaries Public, that of Mr. Allen being dated February 29, 1892, Mr. French's March 8th of the same year. Both swore that Manette was foaled August 7, 1878, without qualification of any kind.

On August 16, 1892, there appeared before the Board of Censors C. W. Allen, J. W. Knox, W. L. French, John Hanan, Lafayette Robinson, Capt. Walter Cook, Mrs. J. W. Knox and Miss L. H. French. A copy of their testimony I received November 9, 1892, and I was surprised, I might say astonished. Twenty-nine foolscap paper type-written pages—a great deal of irrelevant matter, the main feature a total eclipse of memory regarding dates. For instance, the fixing of the dates of the foaling of Manette was claimed to have been obtained from the Palo Alto catalogue or the registry of Manette.

Until after my arrival in Chicago I was not aware that this voluminous testimony had been offered and accepted without the formality of an oath, and the proceedings thereafter were without that indispensable safeguard when, it might be, that large monetary interests were at stake. I did not at first realize the importance of legal methods being pursued; in fact, did not fully understand the necessity for applying strict rules of evidence until I commenced to note the heads of my argument. A consultation with a lawyer confirmed me in the belief that to hazard Governor Stanford's interests by accepting the situation as it stood would be such a neglect of my duty, that the only excuse would be incapacity so gross that the stigma of incredible stupidity would be a fitting denouement, the brand of idiocy the proper label for a person who submitted to the introduction and acceptance of evidence that would not be tolerated in a justice's court with a dollar or two at stake.

It must be borne in mind that I have no fault to find with the court which was trying this case. Gentlemen whom I respect, several of them I have known intimately for years, those of later acquaintance secure in the esteem of the country. Men of prominence, acknowledged position, honored and respected by thousands, there could not be a more satisfactory tribunal to me—were they empowered to administer the legal oaths, throw out testimony that would be discarded by a court of law, and punish infractions as severely as the penal code of the State would justify.

There is no lack of courtesy to the Executive Committee of the A. T. R. A. in objecting to the methods pursued in its investigations, and when these investigations may result in changing values to a large amount. In this case the palpable intention was to give the testimony commercial value. Here is the letter written by J. W. Knox to Mr. Forbes:

FASHION STUO FARM,
TRENTON, N. Y., Mar. 22, 1892, J

J. MALCOLM FORBES, ESQ.

DEAR SIR:—Your telegram received. Sunday is really the only day I can call myself to go to your city to see you, but if not convenient next Sunday to see me, you can name a day that you will meet me in Boston, as I want to talk the matter over with you, as I have now at my own expense obtained all the evidence that proves to me that Arion is not bred as I have always believed up to February 26th, when I was put in possession of facts now substantiated by affidavits unimpeachable that Manette is not out of Addie. You can wire me what time you wish to see me. Yours respectfully,
J. W. KNOX.

This is an exact transcript of the original letter, and it is so worded that no one can doubt the intention, and should there be doubts Mr. Allen's admission that he refused to give the Horse Review the evidence for publication on the ground that it was Knox's property settles it beyond cavil. What property could there be in a corrected pedigree unless an illegitimate use was intended? Especially when that correction was claimed to rectify a wrong pedigree given by the man who now claimed a property right in the lately-acquired knowledge. That knowledge valued so lightly that for nearly thirteen years it was kept in the dark. Then claimed that it was owing to the great celebrity acquired by Arion, a son of Manette, said the informer—to use his own words—"But since Arion has shown great speed I thought it but right that breeders should know the families it came through." Arion had shown great speed in September, 1891, he kept on through October, and the culmination Nov. 10th, 1891, of 2:10½, elicited no response. But in January, 1892, he sold for $125,000 to Mr. Forbes. Afterwards his yearling brother sold for $25,000, and on the 29th of February, three months and nineteen days after Arion had shown his most wonderful burst of speed, the story was recited. To further show the monetary force behind these resolutions, Mr. Knox writes Mr. Forbes: "I have now at my own expense obtained all the evidence, etc."—and here it will be proper to ask who should have incurred the expense of correcting his own error?—there comes the extra expense of bringing eight witnesses from New Jersey, Northern Michigan and Wisconsin. Their story could just as well have been told through the turf papers, with just as much weight as the unsworn statements before the Board of Censors, though the lapses of memory and explanations of former sworn testimony would have been brought into clearer prominence by the criticisms evolved.

To show how little importance can be attached to a part of the evidence presented to the Board of Censors on the 16th of last August, the following question and answer on the first page of the copy sent me is given.

"Q. Mr. Knox, when did you get your first intimation that the pedigree of Arion was not correct?"

A. It was brought out by Mr. Simpson and first appeared in the San Francisco papers. In the mean time I had written to Mr. Forbes on the subject."

The affidavit of Mr. Allen is dated Feb'y. 29th, Knox's letter to Mr. Forbes March 22nd, and the first time I heard of the charge was April 6th, and the first article I wrote in relation thereto was published June 18th in the BREEDER AND SPORTSMAN—verb sap.

There are few, I imagine, who will agree with me in the necessity for perfecting the machinery of the association so that when questions, involving large pecuniary interests, arise, that there shall be the power to administer oaths, and to punish when the truth is violated. It is due the gentlemen who compose the Executive Committee, and the Board of Censors, that their time shall not be wasted by listening to a mass of testimony, irrelevant and perhaps untruthful, and rendering judgments upon that testimony which will not carry conviction to the parties interested and the "general public." To give their verdicts proper weight, when there are strong temptations to prevaricate on the part of witnesses, it will be absolutely essential to adopt rules which are recognized to be the only safeguards when property is at stake. It may be that there is no way of securing sufficient power to effect that purpose, and in that case it cannot be expected that people will submit to an adjudication which will jeopardize large amounts, and that without a chance of adequate protection.

In the case of Manette, I am so well satisfied that she is a daughter of Addie that if a thorough legal investigation could be obtained, with power to secure all the evidence which a court of law could gather, that I would venture every dollar I possess on the result of the inquiry.

The Review appears to consider that granting a postponement was exceedingly magnanimous on the part of the Executive Committee. The first hearing was on August 16th. I received a copy of the evidence November 9th.

JOSEPH CAIRN SIMPSON.

The Palo Alto Sale.

A large crowd of people assembled at the salesyard last Wednesday, the occasion being the sale of the broodmares from Palo Alto. The animals were in excellent condition, but the bidding was very slow, and the lucky purchasers will have no reason to regret attending the sale.

Silver Bow Stock Farm.

The two stallions that are at the head of this stock farm represent two great and extremely fashionable families, McGregor and Onward. The greatest son of Robert McGregor is here, Silver Bow. He is great in every sense of the word, as a well-bred horse, as a race horse, as a money-winner, as an individual and as a sire.

Brooklyn Handicap Weights.

The weights of the Brooklyn Handicap, 1 1/2 miles, which is run on the opening day of the meeting of the Brooklyn Jockey Club, are announced as follows:

Table with 2 columns: Name and Weight. Includes Longstreet (127), Lamplighter (125), Banquet (123), Kingston (122), Major Domo (122), Victory (116), La Tosen (116), Yorkville Belle (116), Locohatchee (116), Judge Morrow (116), Raedland (116), Strathmeath (116), Mars (114), Parvenu (114), Demuth (112), Russell (112), Diablo (112), Paetolus (110), Leonawell (110), Lowlander (110), Two Bits (110), Terrier (108), Fidelity (108), Cassius (108), Tulla Blackburn (108), Charade (105), Candelebra (105), Wildwood (105), Alonzo (105), Reclare (103), Pickpocket (103), Rudolph (100), Illume (95), Long Beach (90).

HOOF-BEATS.

Who will buy Sidney and how much will his next owner be asked to pay for the remarkable sire of early speed?

GRANDISSIMO, 2:23 1/2, was unintentionally omitted from the list of horses published in another column that will be seen on the California circuit this fall.

HANGER JONES, we understand, will train Phil Archibald's crack three-year-old Coloma colts, Swiftsure and Ichli Ban. The former won most of the two-year-old stakes in Oregon last year.

JUDGE JERE R. MORTON, of Lexington, Ky., has purchased of Sayer & Graves, of the Elmwood Farm $1,000 the yearling filly, by imported King Gallop, dam Lizzie Lee, by Ten Broeck.

SINCE our forms containing the "Turf and Track" pages went to press R. Porter Ashe's sale of thoroughbreds has been postponed to Saturday, February 11. Remember that it takes place at Oakland race track.

REGAL WILKES will be named in the Champion Stallion Stake at New York and the 2:12 stake at Boston. Should he improve on last year's form the son of Guy Wilkes and Margaret should be in the front rank at the finish.

T. C. BARNES, of Lexington, Ky., is paying a business visit to California. Mr. Barnes represents the Pepper Distilling Co., which manufactures the justly celebrated "Old Pepper" brand of whisky. Mr. Barnes is a great admirer of California horses, and is a good judge besides.

DR. C. E. FARNUM, of this city, last Wednesday sold to W. F. Millicek, of Helena, Mont., the two-year-old colt Chevy Hook, by Cheviot, out of Eda, by Hock-Hocking, for $2,750. The youngster is entered in many of the rich two-year-old events at the East, and in this city, and is a slashing, fine-looking chestnut colt with plenty of substance.

HUGH KIRKENDALL, of Helena, Mont., has purchased all the gallopers (eight in number) in the Hundley & Preuit racing stable. In the lot are Clara Porter, a phenomenally fast three-year-old by Red Boy, dam Yogo, and her sister, a year younger. In the Kirkendall string this season will be those sterling performers, Nevada and Montana, and the promising fillies, Dot and Miss Nelson. The latter is by Three Cheers.

LOS ANGELES will have a spring meeting commencing March 20th and lasting ten days. The programme will be out in a few days, and there will be two stake races each day and two or three over-night purses. The distances in the stake events will generally be over a mile, while the sprinters are well provided for in the over-night affairs.

JOCKEY VIGNES, who arrived in New Orleans the other day and who rode in the spring Blood Horse meeting, has signed to ride for the Aetna Stable this season. By the way, the Hawkins & Johnson (Aetna) string will be a pretty strong one. It is said the pick of the youngsters is the appropriately named Danton, a half brother to Jacobin and Robespierre.

MONROE SALISBURY visited the Nutwood Stock Farm last Wednesday and selected the following horses to take through the Eastern circuits: Maud C., 2:19, by California Nutwood, dam Zolo, by Steinway; second dam Fanny Malone (grandam of Chas. Derby, 2:20, and Steiner, 2:29 1/2), by Niagara Zeta Carter, a three-year-old, by Director, 2:17, dam Lida W. 2:18 1/2, by Nutwood 600; Thursday, a three-year-old pacer by Noonday, dam Ingar, by Director, 2:17, second dam Annie Titus, by Echo, third dam Tiffany mare.

A Great Young Stallion.

Boodle, 2:21 1/2, is advertised in this issue, and the descriptive article in our New Year number has made his pedigree and history familiar to all our readers. The names of Goldsmith Maid, Lady Thorne, Jay Gould, Ethan Allen recall the past with a vividness that cannot be forgotten.

Asylum Stock Farm Sale.

The talk among horsemen is the coming closing-out sale of the Asylum Farm trotting stock. The game stallion Almonition, 2:24 1/2, Sid Fleet, 2:26 1/2, Sidana's colt by Simmocolon, 2:15 1/2, Pansy, Veronice, a Kucpe filly out of Freda, by Fred Arnold, Bessie Pancoast, by Pancoast, Bilies by Dawn, Oaknut, 2:24 1/2, Alhona, Sidney, Eclectic, Stamboul, Director Jr., and in fact representatives of the leading families in California. There is a colt by Sidney out of Pansy, by C. M. Clay Jr. 2:2, a Dawn colt out of a Rustic mare and a Soudan colt out of a Sportsman mare, that are fit to put at the head of any stock farm. See advertisement.

Highland Stock Farm.

This world-renowned home of the mighty Red Wilkes is offered for sale, and as it is right in the heart of the blue-grass region, Messrs. France & Son have had this farm fitted up in a manner second to no other. The paddocks, barns, race track and improvements are unequalled, and the natural advantages which this farm possesses for the uses for which it has been designated, make it a perfect "equine home."

Requiescat in Pace.

EDITOR BREEDER AND SPORTSMAN:—In looking over the long list of horses whose records on the kite track have been thrown out by the American Trotting Register Association, it seems to me that the owners of these trotters and pacers should have studied the law adopted at the last session, and inquired of the officials in charge of the Stockton track regarding the manner in which the trials against the watch were to be made.

"So soon were we done for, What on earth were we begun for."

MOHAWK.

The Wonderful Diablo.

This speedy three-year-old son of Chas. Derby that made such a sensation on the turf last year will make the season of 1893 at that equine paradise, Pleasanton. He demonstrates his race horse qualities in his races; he is one of the best-bred horses in America; he is strongly constituted, perfect in form, kind in disposition and has as pure trotting action as any horse on the turf, and will get a low record at that gait.

James Madison.

This magnificently-formed stallion, with a trotting record of 2:17 1/2, will make the season of 1893 at the Oakland Trotting Park. James Madison is considered not only the finest looking son of Anteo (whose fee is $1,000), but he is also the fastest. His gait is perfect, while in conformation he cannot be excelled.

The fame of the horses imported from England and France by that great judge of horses, Theodore Skillman, of Petaluma, extends from the Atlantic to the Pacific and from Canada to Mexico. He is going out of the business and will sell his fine lot of prize-winning horses and broodmares at auction in this city on the 23d of this month. See advertisement.

Sidney, 2:19 3-4.

The great stallion Sidney, considered by many as the greatest sire of early and extreme speed that was ever foaled, will be sold at auction by the Tattersalls-Fasig Company in their great sale at Cleveland, O., which commences February 27. We ask readers of this paper to kindly consider his merits, which we shall in our humble way try to present in a more lengthy article later on. Meanwhile we will not disguise the object of offering a prize to the one who may guess the nearest to the price he will bring when sold. Our motive is simply to get a fresh list of live addresses for the purpose of sending out catalogues, and we hope, therefore, that everyone interested in the American trotting horse, no matter how prominent his position may be, will favor us with his estimate. We have decided on offering two prizes, the first of which shall be a pneumatic-tire sulky of the make preferred by the fortunate guesser. The second prize will be an elegant gentleman's road-driving whip.

San Jose Records Not Thrown Out.

SAN JOSE, February 1.—The records made on the San Jose track stand good despite the action of the American Register Association, for they have been accepted by the National Trotting Association, the only recognized authority.

Upon the publication of the report that San Jose, Stockton and other records were thrown out, George H. Brazg, secretary of the Santa Clara Valley Agricultural Association, wrote to the National Trotting Association, headquarters at Hartford, Conn., showing that all the rules had been complied with, and to-day received a letter from Secretary M. M. Morse in reply, which will be read with pleasure by the many horsemen interested.

In the letter it says: "This office fully appreciates the position and will stand by its members, first, last and all the time, so long as they observe the rules which they have made for their own government. We have no control over the American Trotting Register Association. They stand to us in the same relation as one who took upon himself or themselves to print a book and make a set of arbitrary rules as to what horses or whose records shall be admitted to it. We suppose they have that right."

"We have accepted and placed all the records you have sent us on our own books, which were the standard long before the Register Association was thought of, and shall maintain them unless our proper complaint made, our Board or Appeals shall decide that they were not made in accordance with our rules. It would not be in good taste for this office to criticize their rules and regulations. If it were not so, we think some of them might be shown to be not only inconvenient, but absurd."

A Card From Manager Fasig.

NEW YORK CITY, Jan. 26.—I have just returned from California, and humbly make the following explanation:

The curl of the executors of the Valensin estate, in another column explains matters as regards Sidney, Fron Fron, Fausta and other, and I have only to say to our patrons that the decision of the executors and the order of the court authorizing the carrying out of the purposes were not secured until too late to properly advertise in the country and in Europe and sell at the time originally announced.

In conclusion, I will say that I secured consignments of some of the very best stock on the Pacific Coast, a number with very fast records and many the get of the great sire, Dexter France. Further mention of which I will give in later issues of your paper. Yours, WILLIAM B. FASIG, Manager Trotting Department Tattersalls Co. in America.

ROD.

Queen of the Hills.

[BY CHARLES WESLEY KYLE.]

Hail spirit of true poesy, divine!
The whirling reel, the floating gossamer line!
Upon the mountain lake or foaming stream,
Where golden kisses of the sunlight gleam;
With graceful stroke, the tempting lure to fling,
Fleeking the waters with their coloring,
Are subjects fit for breathings of thy grace,
For Beauty there reveals her charming face.

The violets of the hillside are her eyes,
Which to the azure heavens send replies,
While o'er her cheeks the warm rose-blushes steal,
And trailing vine and nodding fern reveal
The sweet enchantment of her presence rare.
For naught of earth can with this queen compare.
For every charm and grace to her are lent,
By reason of her sweet environment.

A cord of silver is the foaming stream,
Which winds from mountain top with flashing gleam.
Lacing the vestment of her bosom pure,
Holding the grass and moss and fern secure,
Singing the while, a cadence soft and low,
Down to the sea from regal crest of snow.
Kissing the royal redwoods as they rest—
A boutonniere upon her lovely breast.

Report of Commander J. J. Brice, U. S. Navy.

WASHINGTON, D. C., November 15, 1892.

Honorable Marshall McDonald, U. S. Fish Commissioner,
Washington, D. C.

SIR:—I have the honor to submit herewith a report of investigations and operations on the Pacific Coast in reference to the establishment of stations for the propagation of salmon.

The salmon which formerly inhabited the Pacific Coast waters in countless millions extending from Alaska to Monterey, are becoming each year more reduced in numbers in the yearly run, and the question resolves itself into one of almost final extinction or prompt and active measures for their protection and propagation. The importance of speedily furnishing a supply equal to the demand by artificial means is emphasized in the value of the fish industry on that coast amounting to something like seven million dollars yearly. The seal fisheries became a national question, and the most prominent subjects before the people, verging on war, yet its actual commercial value is not so great as the fish industry on the Pacific, which is gradually slipping away from us through depletion by indifference and improvident destruction. The ruin has continued without interruption until some of the streams, formerly alive with fish, are now nearly exhausted and becoming as destitute of salmon as the Hudson and the other Eastern rivers which were, in early times, abundantly stocked with many species of salmonidae. This destruction took place before artificial propagation was practiced, an excuse for that day and time; but it also serves as a warning in the present, with our knowledge of artificial means to protect and guard the Pacific Coast streams from the same misfortune.

To formulate a plan to restore the salmon in their original numbers to the various streams on that coast and offset the yearly catch by artificial propagation, has been the duty of the U. S. Fish Commission.

The urgent necessity for speedy action is manifest in the fact that there are many obstacles in the way of the rehabilitation of a river once depleted of its fish, aside from the great increase in the labor and the expense of transporting young fry from remote localities. It was therefore proposed by the U. S. Fish Commission to establish hatcheries on military or Government reservations, and other desirable localities for the production of salmon and its species, so arranged as to benefit all the streams on the Pacific.

As an experimental effort and the commencement of the system, a hatchery was established at Fort Gaston, Humboldt County, Cal. This is the central hatchery, and has auxiliary sub-hatcheries on the neighboring streams which empty directly into the ocean. These auxiliary hatcheries are used for taking the spawn and depositing the young fry on or near the spawning grounds, and are kept open only during the spawning and hatching season, which would be about four months of the year. Besides the auxiliary station at Redwood River, it is proposed to connect with the Gaston Station two others on the Mad and Eel Rivers. There are other streams near by which could be utilized in the same way, all emptying into the sea. In addition to stocking the waters of the Pacific with salmon and other indigenous fish, the central hatchery at Gaston is provided with ponds used for hatching and propagating Eastern and foreign fish, such as land-locked salmon, Eastern and German trout. Breeding ponds are in use filled with the two last-mentioned fish, from which many will be distributed in the streams and waters throughout the country. Other localities have been examined and suitable places inspected for hatcheries, those on the Colville reservation near the head of the Columbia River and another at Lake Cenr d'Alene being particularly favorable. Military or Government reservations were selected for several reasons, prominent among them being the assured protection of the young fish. For convenience it is also desirable that the hatcheries should be located near the heads of the streams in the vicinity of the spawning grounds where fish are most likely to be found ripe and ready for stripping of their eggs. While the system need not be confined to Government reservations, such localities are preferable where facilities for the work meet with the requirements. The streams should be stocked from the several varieties of that coast, preferably the indigenous or the kind of salmon which visit the particular stream. Great danger attends the introduction in any stream of fish not belonging to the waters, a stronger and more rapacious strauge fish is sure to destroy the weaker native occupants of the stream, and give in return for the destruction probably an inferior salmon and less prolific.

The waters in Humboldt County, California, are also free from vagrant and predatory fish, consequently the young can be placed in the stream at an early age without molestation except from the trout which infest all these waters. The yearling trout is the voracious enemy of the young salmon and being small himself is capable of pursuing the little fish into shoal water, their haven of refuge from danger. The destruction of salmon fry by these active young cormorants is very great. Therefore it is not policy to stock the same stream with both salmon and trout; since there is no comparison in their commercial value, there should be no question as to which should receive the attention and protection of the fish commission. The Fort Gaston Station is on the Trinity River, a tributary to the Klamath, at which place the fish appear early in the winter months, and again in the spring to spawn. When the salmon enters the river and commences his long journey to the spawning grounds it is truly the effort of his life resulting in many cases in death from accident or exhaustion. During this time he eats nothing, a wise provision of nature, otherwise the spawn, which is the most attractive food for fish, would be consumed by the multitudes which infest the streams during the spawning season. The salmon enters the river in good condition, well fortified with fat, upon which they maintain their strength combined with the constant supply of nutriment from the destruction of the oil-bearing tissues which envelope the ovary and the outside membrane covering, the latter holding the eggs and oily essence surrounding them. Disintegration of the ovary adjuncts and spermatoc parts, begin shortly after the fish enter the river in both male and female, but the supply is not as great in the former because the burden and exertion is less.

The conjunction of natural causes in assisting the salmon in all his movements and in the manner of depositing the eggs is as interesting as it is beautiful. In the operation of spawning, from my own observation, the salmon on arriving at the place selected, remains quiet until recovered from the effects of the long journey from the sea, and for this purpose they select a pool where there is protection and concealment, under driftwood or an overhanging bough. In pairs, male and female, they build their nests generally in the swift water on the ripple above or below the pool the male guarding it with great jealousy by fighting away all intruders. The pool serves as a place of concealment during the day, spawning and making their nest at night or early in the morning, continuing its operations during the daytime if it is overcast and dark. The act of spawning by the female may go on at intervals for a week before all the eggs are deposited. The construction of the nest is commenced by digging an elongated hole, extending up and down the stream, and located in the swift water above or below the pool, the fish using the nose and fins in making the excavation, throwing out the sand and gravel in volumes in their effort. The stones and gravel are carried just below the excavation by the current, forming a nest covering a space sometimes more than six feet in diameter, the small particles of sand and dirt being carried far down the stream. It seems strange that a collection of stones and pebbles should form a fish nest, and it becomes a matter of speculation as to the manner of secreting the eggs under a mass of stones. Yet nature has made it very simple, and secured its results in a matter of fact way. The eggs are deposited in the hole by the female and impregnated by the male—during the fertilization, which takes from half an hour to fifty minutes, the eggs cling together in a mass and to the bottom of the stream, at the end of which time they commence to separate, and the gentle current sweeping down through the trough-like hole carries the egg out of the excavation as it becomes detached from the mass and on to the nest of stones below, where it tumbles from one stone to another until the egg drops into one of the crevices, eventually finding its way to the bottom of the pile or nest, and there lies securely hidden away well protected from predatory fish and is finally hatched. It takes from forty to sixty days for the eggs to hatch, the time depending upon the temperature of the water. After hatching the fish remain in the nest about twenty days, until the umbilical sac is exhausted, having, at this time but one instinct, to hide and burrow deeper into the nest. After the substance of the sac is consumed the little fish approach the surface to snap at passing particles of food, and in so doing is washed away from the nest and finally makes its way to the shoal water near the shore, gradually dropping down stream until the fall freshets come and carry it into the larger streams, and eventually into the ocean.

Salmon make their nests and spawn differently under different circumstances. If prevented from reaching their spawning ground, by late freshets, or other obstacles, they will spawn in the river or deposit their eggs in the muddy bottom of a pool if there are no gravel beds available. In both instances most of the eggs are lost. By artificial hatching as much as ninety-five per cent. of the eggs are hatched; and in depositing the young fry in the streams it has been the custom at Gaston to place them in the streams near the spawning grounds five or six weeks after hatching. Young salmon fed abundantly in the ponds for four or five months before they are put in the streams, acquire different habits, and are inclined to linger in the fresh water the year round, having become too strong to be carried out by the fall and winter freshets against their inclination. The salmon is very much the victim of circumstances, and in his movements is governed more or less by freshets and the temperature of the water. From the latter he is most naturally controlled in seeking more genial surroundings. The early stage of a little salmon's existence is made up of continuous alarms to avoid danger and the commencement of his life is spent in hiding and darting about until he gains sufficient strength and activity to venture abroad for food trusting to speed for safety.

The method of taking salmon for spawn at Fort Gaston consists in running a wire fence diagonally across the stream near the upper end of which is inserted a "v"-shaped trap made of the same wire stretched over a wooden frame, the pointed end of the trap is placed up stream and the wire fence extends to the shores from each corner of the lower end. In the lower face of the trap is a hole large enough for the salmon to enter, with converging steel rods eighteen inches long extending inwardly from around the opening; these are pressed apart as the salmon enters and spring back into place when he is secure inside. The traps are located below the spawning ground and convenient to the hatchery.

The Fort Gaston station was the experimental attempt in the commencement of a systematic plan to stock yearly the streams on the Pacific with salmon, and in view of the satisfactory results given by this station a continuation of the same is recommended by extending the system and establishing hatcheries with four auxiliary stations each in the following localities: One on the Chilcat River in Alaska, or in its vicinity; one on Puget Sound; one on the Colville Reservation, Columbia River, and one on Eel River, California. It is also recommended to increase the Gaston station with three auxiliary hatcheries and connect with the McCoud station four auxiliary stations.

The following is an estimate of the cost of establishing and maintaining the above proposed stations:

|--------------------------------------------------------------------------------|---------|
| Four central hatcheries, buildings and apparatus at $2,000..... | $8,000 |
| Twenty auxiliary hatcheries at $300 each..... | 6,000 |
| Five superintendents at $1,200 per year each..... | 6,000 |
| Six laborers at $40 per month each for twelve months..... | 2,880 |
| Twenty-four laborers at $40 per month each for four months..... | 3,840 |
| Yearly expense of each central hatchery, including its auxiliary stations..... | 1,500 |
| Total expense of five stations not including the McCoud station..... | 7,500 |

With this small outlay of public money each important salmon stream on the Pacific could be stocked with young fish artificially hatched far exceeding in numbers the yearly catch or market demand.

As the farmer recognizes the necessity of replenishing his stock every year, in like manner the same prudent forethought is required in regard to the occupants of the streams, and the expenditures for this purpose, in the plan suggested, are insignificant when compared to the millions of dollars represented in the result.

For the further protection of the fish on that coast it is suggested that one of the rivers, the Klamath for instance, and its tributaries, be held by the Government as a fish preserve, prohibiting seining or taking salmon in any way for commercial purposes. A great national nursery would thereby be established from which not only the Pacific Coast would be benefited, but the whole country. The land extending some distance from the mouth of the Klamath River, is, I believe, a Government reservation requiring no special legislation to close the stream to outside enterprise.

Authorities give the salmon (genera oncorhynchus) on the Pacific as representing five species. The King Salmon, or Quinnet, or Chinook Salmon. It has an average weight of twenty-two pounds; there sixteen rays on the anal fin to distinguish it. The Blue Back Salmon, weighing from five to eight pounds, and has fourteen rays on its anal fin. The Dog Salmon, with an average weight of twelve pounds, also has fourteen anal rays. The Silver Salmon, weighing from three to eight pounds, with thirteen rays on the anal fin to distinguish it. In the fall the male Dog Salmon is red and his jaws are much disorted. This is also true of the large variety of Humped Back Salmon, which is small, weighing up to six pounds and has fifteen anal rays. Among the offshoots belonging to the salmonidae (salmon family) is the steel head, which, from good authority, is the salmon trout, the same species as the rainbow trout in the streams. In point of fact the steel-head and rainbow trout were originally one and the same fish, so far as at present known from their construction, the difference in size being due to their habits and the extensive surroundings of the former. In construction, except its size, the steel-head is a trout, in habits a salmon. The rainbow trout may become a salmon trout and a steel head when its habits are anadromous, which could occur through accident, such as an unusual freshet in which the rainbow trout is washed into the estuaries of the rivers and the sea. The rich food and boundless territory off the mouths of rivers account for his increase in size and strength. This growth is noticed in the salmon as being comparatively insignificant while remaining in fresh water, but rapid upon its first visit to the sea. Fish food is most plentiful in the ocean near the estuaries of the rivers, as the influence of the fresh water stream is felt many miles at sea, causing an abundant growth of marine vegetation or vast pastures, attracting the smaller fish and crustaceans upon which the salmon feed, returning yearly to their native rivers to spawn. Very respectfully, Somewhat Fishy.

A small hoy living on the banks of Eagle creek, very fond of fishing with trot lines, the other morning went out to run his line, says a Neel, O., correspondent of the Cincinnati Enquirer. Finding one end of it broken loose from its place, he got in his boat and crossed to the other side of the creek to find the other end of his line.

Taking hold of it and giving it a little pull he thought he had a huge fish. He called for help to save it and a man came to help him, and when they got to it they found a large animal about eight feet and a half long, with sixteen legs and four eyes. He had caught himself on the hooks, and had eleven large hooks fastened in his body. After a long and severe struggle they got the animal ashore.

He seems to be a very quiet animal, and will be easily tamed. They now have him tied with a rope, and with a slow, steady pull he will crawl out on the bank and lay for a short time, and then go back into the water.

He has a head somewhat like a horse, neck like a dog, short, thick legs and a short tail. He is of a dark brown color with short, fine hair. He has six toes on his front and hind feet, with only four on the rest of his feet. He measures five feet four inches around the body behind the front legs, and tapers gradually back, and measures two feet ten inches in front of the hind legs. His nostrils are much larger than those of a horse, and he makes a noise like a duck, only a great deal louder.

The Fish Question.

"Everybody now knows that our brook trout are nothing more than the young salmon which run from the sea into fresh water during the winter months to spawn. The parent fish are caught in seines as they come in from the sea and those that escape and get to their spawning beds are caught when they attempt to return to the sea later in the spring.

"In April the fishing with rod and line begins and tens of thousands of the little fish of the previous spring's spawning are caught by so-called fishermen. If undisturbed the young fish when two years old will start down to this water and collect in considerable numbers at the mouth of the river, waiting for its opening to get out to sea. They are then caught in large numbers at the mouth of the river in seines to be used as bait for outside fishing.

"How then with this deadly war upon them can the race survive? It is impossible. The fish are caught coming in to spawn, caught going out to sea, caught when two inches long by the summer pot fishermen, and just as they get to the edge of salt water in the natural course of their evolution they again encounter and are entrapped in the deadly seine.

"There is but one way to save them, and that is to prohibit under severe penalty any seining or trapping of fish in Russian river or its tributaries for five years, and to prohibit under severe penalty the taking of any trout less than five inches long with a hook and line. All fish less than five inches length should be returned to the stream. The taking of these small fish is just as destructive as the seining of the large fish, if not more so, and both should be prohibited for a term of years under rigid penalties."—Santa Rosa Democrat.

To the above the Times makes the following comments: "While not in favor of such stringent measures as the above regarding the taking of salmon in Eel river, many of our citizens believe that a new law should be passed regulating fishing on that stream, the object of which should be to prohibit the taking of salmon by seine or trap above a certain point in order to give the fish an opportunity to get by the fishing grounds during Saturday and Sunday, which they cannot do under the present system, as fishing is carried on for longer distance above the mouth of the river than the fish can travel during Saturday and Sunday, and virtually the fish receive no protection whatever. Were the limit of seining placed at a reasonable distance above the mouth of the river the fish would have ample time to make the run past that point during the hours in which fishing is prohibited, and go on unmolested to the spawning grounds. This is the opinion of a gentleman who is well posted in the matter, and he says it is the only way to protect the fish in that stream. The idea of returning to the streams of trout under five inches in length is a good one and if a law was passed to that effect it would prove beneficial to the streams of this country if strictly enforced." To what the Times says we endorse as we are positive as to the correctness of its remarks. Something should be done and done soon to protect the salmon or Eel river will be "fished out," and a great source of revenue cut off from our people.

We are glad to note the interest taken by the daily press on this important question, for however we may differ as to details of enforcement of the law, the fact that it is becoming recognized more and more every day that some definite and pronounced action should be taken, is most encouraging.

Capt. C. Phillips-Wolley has just presented to the Provincial museum a remarkable fish taken by him in Sooke harbor, says the Victoria Colonist, which measures 4 feet 3 inches from nose to tail, with a girth of 28 inches. The fish is shaped like a spring salmon, but has a dorsal fin like a perch, barbed. The back of the fish when it was taken was the color of new copper, the belly silvery white.

The fish is believed to belong to the family scienoides, to which the celebrated Paris Rei, or "royal fish," belongs. Of this fish, Yorrell says, it was in great request among epicures in the time of the Romans, the fishermen of Rome being in the habit of presenting the head (considered the finest part) to the three local magistrates.

Paulus Jorius relates a curious history of the head of one of these fish, presented as usual to the conservators in the reign of Pope Sixtus X; given by them to the Pope's nephew; by him to one of the cardinals; from whom it passed as a noble donation to his banker, to whom he was deeply indebted; and from the banker to his courtesan. It was followed with keen scent through all its migrations by a parasite, whose industry was rewarded at length by his being allowed to partake of the feast.

This story forms the underplot of Beaumont & Fletcher's "Woman Hater," where as a condition of his becoming a sharer in the exquisite morsel, the parasite was compelled to marry the lady.

Although closely allied to this fish of history, the stranger from Sooke is believed to be a new variety, and a new description and sketch will be forwarded at once by Mr. Ashdown Green to Professor Jordan, the great American ichthyologist for identification. The Sooke Indians had never seen a similar fish.

The Sportsman's Heritage.

A love of poetry is in perfect accord with the character of him who finds his greatest pleasure when in contact with nature as presented by mountain, field and steam. The true sportsman is he who can and does understand the varied expressions of nature. To such a one nature presents wells of inexhaustible recourses from which may be drawn, at will, delights of the most elevated and ennobling character.

True poetry is best found in nature, or rather it is the more subtle voicings of nature's highest expressions of grace and beauty. Adding the ease and grace of motion to nature's highest forms of animated beauty and we have a typical pantomime of poetry.

The flight of the swallow, the pigeon, or the humming bird; the dashing speed, or grace in repose, of the deer, the mountain sheep, or the antelope, are expressions of the beauty of poetry which furnish to the admiring eye and understanding heart pleasures scarce approached by aught to be met with in any other of nature's forms.

Music is the soul of poetry, and when the symphonists of the woodland, the sensitive and touching melody of song is added to the beauty of form and grace of motion, the trinity of these potentialities form one of the truest types of poetry yet evolved from the great realm of causation. The low, sweet murmur of the broken and winding brook; the more silent expression of the gliding stream, or the rolling sweep of the majestic river,

"Rivers that murmur, white-lipped falls that roar, Records divine, His wonders revealing more and more."

are nature's true voicings of poetry. It is seen in the colorings of the forest leaves, in the waving of the grass, in the blooming of the flowers, in the paintings of cloud and sky. It is heard in the music of the breeze when it creeps gently through the grass or becomes more resonant as it touches the keys of the grand organ of the pines or echoes through their stately sun-flecked aisles and dies away in low murmurings amid the rocky moss-painted chambers of the glen.

The occupation, the pastime of the sportsman is of such a nature as to tone the system to that high key where all these, and countless thousands of other presentations of poetry, may best be received, understood and appreciated.

The eye must be educated, so must the ear, likewise the heart and the brain. For such a one nature's expressions of poetry are as countless as the leaves of the forest or the sands upon the sea shore.

If some of our wealthy men desire a grand and lasting monument, one which will stand the test of time for ages to come and call down upon their memories the heartfelt plaudits of the succeeding generations, let them seek out, purchase and preserve from despoliation some one of the several marketable groves of the Sequoia gigantea, yet to be found in this State. It would be an act which the people of future ages would appreciate, as well as of those who now desire the protection of these grand trees.

Moon, Maiden and Man.

ANASTASSA.
Ah! Robair, see the moon!
That great, round moon!
But yet how pale it seems.
And wan!
And how it rolls and rolls and rolls!
ROBAIR.
True, true, my own!
Of all high rollers that I know
The moon's the highest
Yes, pale and wan and rolling high.
Oh, moon,
Were I in just the shape you are to-night
I think I'd be a little pale myself.
And wan?
Mayhap.
And would I roll?
Well, you know me!
ANASTASSA.
Robair!
ROBAIR.
Anastasia—love!
ANASTASSA.
And you would be the moon—
The inconstant moon?
The moon that rolls and rolls and rolls
So far from me?
ROBAIR.
Not on your life, my own!
The moon is rolling high to-night,
But I remember when
'Twas walking on its uppers, so to speak.
While I was doing up the town
In shape most elegant!
For I was heeled, my love—
Well heeled!
And this then most unhappy moon
Was traveling on its lone last quarter!
Whereas to-night—
Such tricks doth fortune play—
As was the moon not long ago
So now am I!
And as was I that joyous time
So is the moon to-night.
Say, moon,
You're in it up to your neck, old man!
Salute!
ANASTASSA.
And does the moon, Robair,
Feel good with looks so pale?
And with that wan, wan face?
And does it like to roll?
ROBAIR.
My own!
I see you haven't sized the fair moon up
Just right.
Nor just exactly got
On to its curves.
Ask your conundrums of the wind that whispereth
To the man that's in the moon,
And howeth ever through his whiskers,
For I
Will have to give them up!
But if you ask me why the moon is pale and wan,
And rolls along
As if it owned the town,
I think I know enough about the snap
To give it dead away.
The moon is pale, the moon is wan,
And rolls and rolls and rolls
Because it cannot help itself, my soul!
Anastasia—love—
The moon is full to-night!

The Late Field Trials.

It is one of the easiest and most natural of moods to be pleased and good-humored when everything comes one's way and it is only a test of temper and stability, when everything, so to speak, becomes twisted and out of shape generally, that it behooves one to guard well their tempers and comments. It is to be regretted that the trainers, for the time spent, prior to the trials in Kern County, were handicapped by reason of a scarcity of birds on which to work their dogs. That such was the case there can be no doubt, notwithstanding the fact that there were an abundance of birds, in certain sections, at the time of the trials.

Again it is no discredit to the trainers that a natural condition had to be overcome. The trainers have enough to contend with, aside from being charged with the results of a condition over which they cannot possibly have any control. The trials were, in most of the heats unsatisfactory, but not from any condition changeable to the trainers, as such.

It will be remembered that dogs handled by owners did little or no better, in most cases, than those handled by the regular trainers and in this matter each of the owners handling their own dogs were men who are experts at the business. There was no fault to be found with their work and we much doubt, that, on the whole, no one could have done better work than that put forth by the handlers from opening to finish. It is one thing for the owner to place his dog, it matters not how well bred he may be, in the hands of a trainer, but it is quite another thing for many scions of the nobility, to evince by actual work the worth of their breeding. Frequently the "blue bloods" have or at least evince no higher quality than that of pedigree.

There were some "royal duffers" at the late trials, two of which were run for an hour or more for the sole reason of finding out which of the two was the "ranker" in their work. Men are very apt to look about for a reason on which to hang an objection. When the owners refuse to see that which is patent to every one else—that the dogs are absolutely worthless—they are apt to turn in and abuse the handlers for the failure of the dogs to do good work. Now this is all wrong and we trust that some understanding may be arrived at between the owners and handlers that will put a stop to much unpleasantness in this matter.

We are personally acquainted with all the regular handlers on this Coast and we are free to say that we regard them to a man as faithful workers, but it must be remembered that it is not every dog that has sufficient natural capacity to become a good field trial dog no matter what may be his training.

Do not be too hard in your judgment of the trainers when birds are scarce for them to work upon and much ill feeling will be avoided.

Luck In Field Trials.

The element of luck which finds prominence in certain trials is most annoying to the true sportsman. Instance, a number of the heats run during the recent trials held by the Pacific Coast Field Trials Club at Bakersfield. A brace of dogs would be put down and coming onto a small bevy of birds they would be flushed, each little "blue flash" settling in thick cover some distance away and frequently hundreds of yards apart. Then another brace would be cast off and away the dogs would range each, perchance, quartering and working their respective grounds equally well, one by reason of luck finds a single and secures a point. This it seemed to us was about as clear and pointed a definition or rather an illustration of luck as could be given. In two or more of the heats run off these conditions were most pronounced. Under such conditions it becomes a close matter for the judges to determine the absolute merits of the dogs and more especially when time is the essence of the contest, as it needs must be when running off stakes so large as those presented at the recent trials. There can be no doubt but that in full tests many of the heats run at the recent trials would have been reversed.

Names Claimed.

Echo Cocker Kennels, Stockton, Cal., A. C. Davenport proprietor, claims the name COUNT BUDD for black cocker spaniel dog puppy whelped October 19, 1892, by Giffier E. (Giffer) Lady; Lady by Champion Black Pete, A. K. C. S. E. 4910—Miss Nance, A. K. C. S. B. 17,063.

Mr. James Mortimer has been selected as manager of the World's Fair bench show. It is eminently fitting and proper that such an arrangement be made, for there is no man in the land whose qualifications may be honestly said to approach Mr. Mortimer's in this line. His selection as manager insures perfect arrangement in this behalf. There is much depending on the position, and the fact that its duties he fully and faithfully discharged; any lapse in this department would very materially mar the success of the undertaking. We congratulate the kennel interests of the country on the selection of Mr. Mortimer to this important position.

Now that the coursing business has developed the "affidavit craze" the certainty of all things uncertain will surely be established and—then overthrown! It is to be regretted that such a course should have been deemed necessary. Generally speaking all such exparte evidence serves but to confuse and at best is most unsatisfactory. It does seem strange that an ordinarily intelligent and honest man cannot be found whenever and wherever desired to judge at the coursing meetings of this country. Societies would do well to make no more mistakes or coursing will become a subject of derision and contempt among all honorable men.

Everybody to their liking, as the boy said when he took few puffs from grandfather's pipe; but really we did enjoy the rides which we took from Bakersfield to the separate grounds on which the field trials were held. We had the most companionable of souls in our "rig," and whoever heard of a spin of ten or more miles in an open buggy through a country where the finely-cultivated fields and vineyards stretched far away on either hand, with the cosy white farm dwellings dotting the landscape here and there not being enjoyable? Certainly, no good, cheerful liver ever did. Our liver is all right, hence we enjoyed these drives.

We glean the following from the New York Herald: Colonel Jacob Ruppert has further strengthened his formidable string of St. Bernards, which, under the name of the Dutchess Kennels, have proved so powerful at all the leading bench shows. His most recent purchase is the crack rough-coated hith Hepsy, who had such a brilliant career in England before coming to this country. Colonel Ruppert purchased her from Mr. E. B. Sears, of Melrose, Mass., the late owner of the invincible Sir Bedivere.

One more of the leading events of the year in the sportsman's world of the Pacific Coast has been written and the joys and pleasures which cling about it have been stored away for future reference and instruction. There is much to remember of a most pleasurable nature and nothing to regret save that every lover of the dog and gun could not be present to enjoy it.

It would appear reasonable in field trials work that where a brace of dogs are running and one of them point and the competing dog is ordered to back, that so long as the point is held that the competing dog cannot be permitted to secure credits by ranging farther or in making a cast to come in behind the one that has pointed.

Mr. A. Russell Crowell has severed his connection with the Pacific Field Sports and become a near neighbor to Joaquin Miller on the heights back of Oakland, where he has established a kennel and a poultry farm, to which he will devote his attention.

The following is from the Savannah News:

He had a young pointer so very keen in nose and so very bright that it is a wonder heaven hadn't endowed him with human speech.

But he understood everything that was said to him, although his master did not always understand the dog, from which it may naturally be inferred the dog was the cleverer of the two.

Well, the owner started to hunt partridges with him and he would get the scent at surprising distances, and whenever he and his master went shooting they were pretty sure to bring home some game.

Partridge hunting seemed to be the greatest pleasure that the dog had ever known, and his master's mind ran on the subject continuously. Whenever anyone would speak of partridges he would get up and wag his tail and show plainly that he understood what was said.

One day his master drove to a neighboring town where the dog had never been before, and in accordance with his usual custom, he took the dog with him. They were going down the main street, the dog trotting along in front, when all of a sudden he came to a dead point right in the middle of the road. It was clear that there could not well be a covey of partridges in the heart of a thriving, busy town, so the dog's owner was overcome with surprise.

He hitched his horse to a post, and going to the wonderful beast gave him the word to "go on." He advanced steadily and slowly across the street and charged in front of a drygoods shop, and then the reason of it became apparent, for the sign above the doorway read: "J. C. Partridge, drygoods and notions." The dog could read and was a partridge hunter with a vengeance.

One of the comrades who heard the story said he knew it was true, for he had heard of that dog, and his name was Ananias.

Napa Notes.

NAPA, Feb. 3, 1893.—Mr. Chas. Scott, the new lessee of the race track and fair grounds, has moved onto the grounds and has commenced many minor but necessary improvements to enhance the comfort and further the general interests of the horsemen. Mr. Thos. Bowhill, the well-known veterinary surgeon who owns a stock farm in Sonoma county, will soon send out a string of his thoroughbreds to be trained at the Napa track. It is also reported that as soon as the weather settles Mr. Hatch's trainer, Mr. Berryman, will move a string of a dozen or more from the Green Oaks Ranch to the track. Blonde Wilkes, 234, by Guy Wilkes, dam by Arthurton, the property of Gardner Bros., will also be quartered at the track, where he will make a limited season and be prepared for the fall campaign. This little chap will bear watching; he has lots of speed, and soon as he learns to go without the hobbles great things are expected.

During the week we availed ourselves of the opportunity to visit the beautiful home of the genial, whole-souled John McCord. About a mile south of Napa on an elevated plateau overlooking Napa river and the beautiful green alfalfa pastures is the residence of our host, and a little way back are numerous barns, sheds and rows of well-built box-stalls which contain the colts, while the broodmares have large sheds and paddocks to roam in. There are rows of large eucalyptus trees in front of the stalls, which must make it delightfully pleasant for the horses as well as the men during the summer.

Mr. Howard Franklin, who has charge of the stock, showed us all the colts and mares, and it must be said with candor that it is hard to find a finer-looking or better kept lot of stock on any stock farm in California. They are all in the pink of condition. Mr. Franklin volunteered to move some of the colts, so we went onto the avenue, a smooth stretch of yellow clay running from the barn to the county road, nearly a half-mile in length, and kept smooth as a race course.

The first one brought out was a handsome chestnut filly, two years old, by George Washington, 220, dam Lucy, by Gen. McClelland 143. She got down to work and the saddle pony had to stretch himself to keep up. Then came the two-year-old brown filly by Silas Skinner, 217, out of Lady Sargent, by "Onion Sabe" son of Whipple's Hambletonian, second dam by "Budd Doble" son of Geo. M. Patchen Jr. 31. Trot is the filly's natural gait and she exhibits the same do-or-die appearance of her sire when she is trying to beat the saddle horse down the stretch. Next came a black, close built, stocky, resolute looking filly, three years old, by Director, 217, out of "Tricks," daughter of "Katy Tricks" (dam of Conde, 220, Empress, 224, etc.) and the gait she can show beside a saddle horse is simply astonishing. I asked Mr. McCord how he was so fortunate as to raise three such natural trotters. He replied that he had been told that to have a great trotter it was essential to have a great mare. So when he concluded to raise a few colts, he secured what he considered the best mares; Katy Tricks, Lady Sargent, and Lucy greater road mares were not known in San Francisco; they were fast and no road too long for them; he secured them and bred them to sires like Director, Silas Skinner and Geo. Washington, the gamest and truest in the land, and the result is already apparent. Theo Franklin brought out Mamie W., by Corbit, out of Arthurton 355, dam by A. W. Richmond. She is a beautiful four-year-old and should make a great race mare. Last spring early she could trot quarters in 37 seconds and miles in 2:40.

Another grand filly is Almadonna, two-year-old, by Alcona 730, dam Minto, by Milton Medlum. Among the wealthies are such choice ones as a filly by Azmoor 220 (sire of Rowena two-year-old 217), dam Urenta, by Kentucky Prince, (sire of Guy 210, etc.); second dam by Hambletonian 10, etc. A filly by Director, 217, dam Elma, 221, by Elmo 891. Mr. McCord has in all about twenty head of different ages, among them several good ones by Mountain Boy, 227 1/2. It is his intention to sell them all to the highest bidder, without reserve, March 8, 1893, at the combination sale at Napa, as he has other business that requires his time and attention. It looks like a pity to see such a prospective establishment broke up. NAPA.

Mr. Shults, the millionaire haker of Brooklyn, buys horses for the fun of the thing, and because he enjoys the pleasure of bidding on them. Mr. Shults bought a lot of the Case horses last week. He always buys at every sale in the East, "so as to keep things lively in the business." He is much like the man who followed the lion-tamer all over Europe, knowing that someday the lion would kill and eat the tamer. Mr. Shults thinks that some day when he has the buying fever on he may accidentally buy a well-bred horse that can trot. Then, if such a day comes, he will abandon the game, and every breeder in America is praying that the day when Mr. Shults shall make such a mistake is far away.

A few weeks ago we noted the defalcation and flight of Milo Tomlinson, of Crawfordsville, Ind. A special conveying the sad news of his tragic ending has just been received. It is as follows: "The sensation occasioned by the flight of Milo Tomlinson, the well known and wealthy horseman, two weeks since, and the subsequent revelations of the frauds and forgeries he had perpetrated, is not to be compared to the shock which is felt at his home. On the late evening train a broken hearted father was at the station to receive and forgive his erring son, but instead he embraced a form of clay, from which life was barely extinct. Tomlinson had dealt in racing stocks, principally winners, and had unlimited credit, but last fall he met reverses which bore terribly upon his mind. Two weeks ago he fled with several thousand dollars, having defrauded innumerable creditors and forged his father's name to several large notes. The father paid the notes to save his son, and, last week, hearing that Milo was sick in Missouri, telegraphed him to come home. The unfortunate man came as far as Covington, and being too ill to continue his journey, his brother-in-law, William McCamrock, went to Covington this afternoon to bring him home. He found Tomlinson quite sick in both body and mind. They hoarded the train for Crawfordsville at 5:30 P. M., and as they approached familiar scenes Milo grew the more moody. At the ninety foot trestle, a mile west of the station, he started for the door, presumably to throw himself off, but the conductor interfered. When the brakeman shouted out "Crawfordsville" McCamrock arose, and so did Tomlinson. But while the former reached for his overcoat the latter drew a revolver and placing it against his forehead, a bullet penetrated his brain. He fell into the aisle and died instantly. Then the greatest confusion reigned in the car. A moment later the train drew up to the station and the body was carried out to the expectant father. It was an awful scene, and it is thought the old gentleman can not survive the shock."—Western Horseman.

DR. KNAPP, owner of the Oneck Stable of racers, has decided to have his colt, G. W. Johnson, the brother to Huron, and for which he paid $30,000, trained only for his stake engagements in the West, where he is heavily engaged in all of the best events. His other three-year-old, Sir Walter, will be retained for his engagements in this section of the country, where he is so well engaged that if he is as good as he was last year, and as lucky, he can win something like $100,000.

"Whoever cuts the solid part of the tail of any horse in the operation known as 'docking,' or by any other operation performed for the purpose of shortening the tail, and whoever shall cause the same to be done or assist in doing such cutting, unless the same is proved to be a benefit to the horse, shall be punished by imprisonment in the county jail not exceeding one year or by a fine of not less than $25 nor more than $200." This is the text of a bill now before the Illinois Legislature.

GREEN B. MORRIS, now of Gravesend, is quoted as saying to the editor of the Live Stock Record, published at Lexington, Ky., that the Board of Control dictation at the race tracks in the vicinity of New York will not last more than three years longer, if it continues for that length of time, and that the managers of the tracks, as well as the horse owners, are tired of the management of the trust, for that is what the Board of Control is in effect, if not in name.

The assertion that the Hackney with a long journey and a moderate load will outdo the trotting-bred horse will be accepted by but very few. The average Hackney has but very little speed for either a long or short distance, unless vertical action is counted, as some of the most popular Hackneys seem to step very quickly and very high, but finally place their feet almost the same spot from which they were taken. On one occasion a horseman remarked of a very showy Hackney that he evidently puts his feet down a little back of the point from which he took them up. That certainly would give progress, but decidedly in the wrong direction. If any of the Hackney enthusiasts wish to test the point of relative speed by a match against the trotters, they can undoubtedly be accommodated for as long or as short a distance as they wish, and either just for fun or for as large stakes as are desired.—Wallace's Monthly.

DESCRIPTION. BOODLE, fa color, is a seal brown; stands 16 hands and weighs 1,100 pounds. He has splendid limbs, a kind disposition, and is, in fact, a perfect horse in every respect. He is only seven years of age, and has not been bred to many mares, yet all of his progeny show that they are destined to be great performers. BOODLE was ever banded for speed until very late last year, and many who saw him get his record believe he will trot below 2:20 this year. TERMS, $100 FOR THE SEASON, with the usual return privilege. Excellent care taken of mares, but no responsibility assumed for accidents or escapes. C. A. STOCKTON & CO., Owners.

To Lease. STANDARD TROTTING STALLION

Sired by one of the Greatest and Most Fashionably-Bred Sires, and of Excellent Breeding on the Dam's Side.

This Stallion is a handsome individual of splendid conformation, good size, has shown great speed, and is capable of trotting in 2:20. Will be leased for the season to responsible parties on contract for a specified amount, or to be bred on shares to a limited number of mares. An excellent opportunity for some one having well-bred mares and who will be willing to stand a horse in payment for the privilege of breeding to his own mares. The horse will be stood this year at a low service fee.

For the name of horse and further particulars address P. O. Box 2300. Care of BREEDER AND SPORTSMAN, 313 Bush street, San Francisco, Cal.

Answers to Correspondents.

Answers for this department must be accompanied by name and address of the sender, not necessarily for publication, but as proof of good faith. Write the questions distinctly, on one side of the paper only. Positively no questions will be answered by mail or telegraph.

Questioner, City.—Give breeding of Black Prince, sire of Naomi, dam of Queen Bess. Answer—Black Prince is by Henry, he is son of Henry, that ran against American Eclipse. We do not at present know his dam.

Subscriber, Rancho del Prado.—Some time ago I wrote you for information as to whether a mare having produced a male colt and then bred to a horse, if her horse colt the following season would resemble to jockey. Answer—Read our issue of January 25, 1893.

J. W. Linden.—Kindly inform me through the columns of the BREEDER AND SPORTSMAN where the horse Abbotstord (sire of C. W. S., etc.) is at present? Answer—The horse you refer to is not C. W. S.'s sire. You mean Abbotstord Jr., 2:28 1/4, by Abbotstord 707, dam by American Boy. Abbotstord 707 is now in Kentucky.

L. H. B., Lakeport, Lake County, Cal.—Kindly give me pedigree of Black Ralph and also Milton Medium. Answer—Black Ralph 10,687 was by Dave Hill 837, dam untraced. Milton Medium 4,782, 2:25 1/2, is by Happy Medium 400, dam Fan (dam of Hattie, 2:25 1/4), by Hambletonian 1727; second dam by Henry Ducro.

L. A. D., Geneva, Ill.—Please give the name of the owner of Anteo Jr., 2:26 1/4. Do you know whether his dam is Lady Signal, dam of Signal Wilkes, formerly owned at Chico, Cal. (by Guy Wilkes—Lady Signal, by Signal)? Answer—J. C. Smith, Antioch, Cal., No. There are two Lady Signals, and Anteo Jr.'s dam and Signal Wilkes' dam are not the same.

J. T. Veal, Chico, Cal., writes us: "One day during the last fair in Chico, about August 30th, a young man brought a running horse, saying his name was Mozart, and promised to call for him next day. I still have the horse and have never from the owner, J. D. Sprout suggested that you might give me some information as to the owner. The horse is in good order. Answer—We know of but one running horse in the State of this name, and he is now owned by R. Porter Ashe and advertised to be sold at Oakland next week.

A. W. B., Dayton, Nevada.—What is the breeding of the stallion Midnight? What is his record? Who bred him, and owns him at the present time? We have been told that this horse was raised in this county by Henry Mather, that he got a very low record and sold for a large amount of money. Henry Mather had a horse by that name. What I want to know is, was this Mather stallion Midnight the one, if any, that got a very low record? Answer—No stallion named Midnight has a very low record. The one with a record of 2:18 1/2 was a black gelding. We know nothing of this stallion.

W. G., Wailuku, Maui, H. I.—1. Kindly give the number of 230 performers got by the horse Patchen Vernon, by George M. Patchen Jr., 2:27, out of Lady Vernon, 2:20 1/2. Please give the correct breeding of Deiance. This horse was brought here by the manager of the Haiku Sugar Co., some time in 1877 or 1878. He was bought by Mr. S. T. Alexander of a man by the name of Merchant, of Petaluma, Sonoma county, California, and it was claimed he was by Hambletonian and out of a Patchen mare and had a record of 2:26. As to the truth of this we leave it to your good paper, the BREEDER AND SPORTSMAN. Answer—1. One only, Allan Roy, gray gelding, foaled in the sixties, by Chieftain 721, dam not traced. He had a pacing record of 2:17 1/4 and a trotting record of 2:24, the latter mark being made at San Francisco on December 11, 1875.

Subscriber, Stockton, Cal.—1. At the record meeting held here on the 3d of November E. W. bet C. D. that Stamboul would trot in 2:08 1/4 or better, judges and timers in the stand. The horse got the word "go" from the judges and the three-quarter pole, struck his foot, was pulled to a standstill, and was walked to the wire, but did not pass under it until the driver was told he could do so and that it was not a "go." No time was hung out and no time was announced by the judges. Is there any money lost or won or is it a draw? He did not start again on that day. 2. Has a timer any right under the rules to bet on time if he is timing in a race? Answer—1. Since it was called "no go" by the officials we should say the bet was a draw, since you cannot lose when there is no chance to win. 2. We do not know of any rule preventing timers betting against time, but as it gives dishonest men an opportunity to get an advantage there should be a rule prohibiting men in such capacity from betting.

W. B. C., Walla Walla, Wash.—1. Since writing you for the standard of Lady Signal and that of Signal 3227, I clipped from Mr. Corbitt's descriptive list, published by you, the following: "Signal, by Del Sur, 2:24 (three in the list); second dam Lady Signal, 2:35 1/2 (dam of Anteo Jr., 2:26 1/4), by Signal 3227." Does not this make her eligible to the standard broodmare list? 2. Is Bedouin, son of Stan, eligible for registration? His dam is said to be Gertrude, by the Moor; second dam Kate Tabor, by the Moor. Mr. Rose is quoted as having given this as the true breeding of this stallion, and that Mr. Wallace declined to register him in the standard list. As many breeders besides myself are remotely situated from the home of the above-mentioned animals and have representatives growing up, we are anxious to know whether we are breeding from the short end or the head. Answer—1. Lady Signal is made standard and eligible to registration under Rule 5 of the trotting standard, which reads: "Any mare that has produced a trotter with a record of 2:30." 2. The horse is not standard-bred. Kate Tabor was by Mambrino Messenger, and is granddam of Don Thomas, 2:20, and Grand Moor, sire of Abbot, 2:28. Kate Tabor was the dam of Gertrude, by the Moor, and she was in turn the dam of Bedouin, yearling record 3:04.

Question, Merced, Cal.—Can I register the horse by name Blue Cloud, sired by Black Diamond, first dam Alice, he by Hill's Black Hawk, Blue Cloud's first dam by Sol Messer's Blue Bull; second dam by Pruden's Blue Bull; third dam by Flying Cloud (he by Hill's Black Hawk)? Is the above pedigree correct? Also give the breeding of Dexter Prince, his age, the number he has in the 2500 list, their names and registration? His dam is said to be Gertrude, by the Moor; second dam Kate Tabor, by the Moor. Mr. Rose is quoted as having given this as the true breeding of this stallion, and that Mr. Wallace declined to register him in the standard list. As many breeders besides myself are remotely situated from the home of the above-mentioned animals and have representatives growing up, we are anxious to know whether we are breeding from the short end or the head. Answer—1. Lady Signal is made standard and eligible to registration under Rule 5 of the trotting standard, which reads: "Any mare that has produced a trotter with a record of 2:30." 2. The horse is not standard-bred. Kate Tabor was by Mambrino Messenger, and is granddam of Don Thomas, 2:20, and Grand Moor, sire of Abbot, 2:28. Kate Tabor was the dam of Gertrude, by the Moor, and she was in turn the dam of Bedouin, yearling record 3:04.

2:17 1/4; Dexter Thorne, 2:25; Erin, 2:29 1/4; Fitzsimmons, 2:20; James L., 2:28 1/4; Jessie, 2:22; Cherokee Prince, p. 2:22 1/4; Irene, p. 2:25; Lucille, 2:26; Parthea, 2:27 1/4; Royal Prince, 2:24 1/4; Senator L., 2:29. The latter's dam is Lady Bayswater, by Bayswater, thoroughbred.

H. H. W., Guerneville.—Please give the pedigree of Harry Peyton, belonging to Sauborn, of Santa Rosa, also his record as a two-year-old and his age. Answer—By Shannon, dam Miss Peyton, by imp. Glenary. He won the California Annual Stakes here as a two-year-old in 1:48 1/4, and is eleven years old.

VETERINARY.

Conducted by Wm. F. Egan, M.R.C.V.S., F. E. V.M.S.

Subscribers to this paper can have advice through this column in all cases of sick or injured horses or cattle by sending an explicit description of the case. Applicants will send their name and address, that they may be identified. Questions requiring answers by mail should be accompanied by two dollars and addressed to Wm. F. Egan, M.R.C.V.S., 117 Golden Gate Ave., San Francisco.

C. M., Oakland.—I have a horse that always has a sore right on top of the backbone under the saddle. I get it pretty well healed up sometimes, but two or three days' work makes it bad again. What can I do to prevent this? Answer—Get a pad made for the saddle so that it cannot get down to the back-bone?

T. K., Bridge, Idaho.—I have a colt 2 past that had had the thrush, and to all appearances is now about cured, but the hoof does not look well. It has grown long, narrow-edged and contracted and does not grow straight from the coronet down to the toe but curves inwardly. Please answer an old subscriber to your valuable paper what you think of it and oblige. Answer—The description of the hoof shows that there has been an inflammation at some time around the "coronet" (top of hoof). It is possible that this may have been caused by a bad thrush, but would indicate "laminitis" or some other disease that would cause inflammation of the "coronary band." Please answer the following questions: Is your colt lame at present? Is there any hard enlargement, like low ringbone, around the top of the hoof? Compare this with the top of the other hoof. Is there a good, large, sound frog now to the affected foot, or a small, contracted, diseased frog? Apply Stockholm tar daily to the frog until next communication.

W. M. C., Honolulu, H. I.—I have a young filly, two and one-half years old. She had a bad fall about six months ago. She pulled back and fell down and hurt her head. The blood flowed from her left ear very freely or about half an hour. I should judge she lost two gallons of blood before it stopped. I turned her out for six months, and now she carries her head to one side and when you lead her out of the stall she is continually shaking it. What can be done for her, if anything? Please answer through your valuable paper and oblige a subscriber. Answer—There is probably pressure on some of the nerves, caused by an exudation from fractured bone. The only treatment we can recommend is that which will tend to cause absorption of this exudation, which is now becoming ossified. Blister the head (not ear) around the back of the ear with biniodide of mercury one dram, simple ointment one ounce, well mixed together. Give one dram of potassium iodide morning and evening in bran mash for about three weeks. A second blister may be applied when the irritation of the first has gone.

THE GREAT

HIGHLAND STOCK FARM Near Lexington, Ky., The Home of The Mighty Red Wilkes

SIX HUNDRED AND SEVENTY (670) acres of unsurpassed Blue Grass soil, all in grass, two hundred and fifty (250) acres being beautiful, open woodland. About twenty (20) large stock barns of 200 box stalls. Numerous paddocks with roomy boxes. Various cottages and other houses for employees. Coachman's quarters, vehicle and harness apartments, veterinary and farrier's office and shop, and numerous other buildings required in this extensive business. The main residence is an imposing two-story brick of twelve rooms. Another with eight rooms with conservatory and billiard hall; both of recent build, supplied with all modern conveniences of water works, gas lights and electric bells, which latter also connect outbuildings with the office. Telephone connection with Lexington. Only four miles to center of the city by turnpike and Louisville Southern Railroad. Station on margin of farm. Numerous daily trains. Pure limestone water to every enclosure by three force pumps and also by windmill. Living springs, pools and a number of large cisterns at the dwelling and barns. The best private track in the State. Farm enclosed and subdivided by the best fencing. The entire place is high table land, affording good drainage, insuring good health to stock and early and more nutritious grasses, in which two particulars Highland has always excelled.

Will have ready in a short time a detailed printed description of this great establishment, and later on will supplement this by a lithographed diagram of the entire place in its subdivisions and photographic views from different perspectives, all of which will be mailed to you on demand.

With great reluctance Messrs. France & Son agree to part with Highland, so delightful a home and a business too, which the public is aware has proven such a signal success, but the health of the former will not permit him to continue longer in the business. The price is made to insure an immediate sale.

Red Wilkes
:: Dictator

DICTATUS

Will make the Season of 1893, commencing February 1st and ending June 1st, at

BELMONT STOCK FARM,

BELMONT, SAN MATEO COUNTY, CAL.

SERVICE FEE FOR THE SEASON..... $150

(Will be allowed to serve fifteen approved outside mares.)

DAMS OF 2:30 PERFORMERS WILL BE TAKEN AT $100.

DICTATUS was foaled in 1890. He was sired by the great RED WILKES 1749, (sire of 88 in the list); dam, Miss LOLLIE, by DICTATOR 133 (sire of JAY-EYE-SEE, 2:10, DIRECTOR, 2:17, and 41 others in the list, besides the dam of NANCY HANKS, 2:04, etc.); second dam, Gold Pen (dam of Felina, 2:29), and grandam of Hill Boy (p). 2:20, by Mambrino Abdallah 2201 (son of Mambrino Patchen 58); third dam by Harold 413 (sire of Maud S., 2:03, and 41 others in the list and grandsire of Kremlin, 2:07); fourth dam, Emily Chester, by Mambrino Patchen 58; fifth dam Patsey (dam of Midway), by Snowstorm (sire of Jim Irving, 2:23). He is in color a chestnut, with star in forehead, one hind pastern white. In conformation he is perfect, being about 15.2 hands in height, very short back, strong over the coupling, heavy quarters, large, well-muscled gaskins and arms, limbs straight, cannon bones short, hocks and joints clean and hony, and feet of the finest kind. His neck, head and body denote an iron constitution. His shoulders are sloping, and, taking him all in all, a more perfect representative of the great Wilkes-Dictator cross does not exist to-day. His breeding speaks for itself. He traces four times to Hambletonian 10 through his greatest sires—GEO. WILKES, DICTATOR, HAROLD and ABDAL-LAH 15. He traces to Mambrino Patchen twice and three times to Mambrino Chief. His blood-lines are unequalled by any stallion on this Coast.

The best of care taken of mares, but no liability assumed for accidents or escapes. Service fee must be paid before mares leave the farm.

For Sale.

Stallion Ringwood, The Famous Son of Sidney.

Ringwood is a dark bay; black points; 15 1/2 hands, and resembles Sidney in formation more than any of his sons. He is a pure-gaited trotter, and has shown remarkable speed from a colt. With but little work, he showed trials of speed in 2:19, as a four-year-old, and would have received a record of 2:18 or better but for an accident at the Napa track, and was drawn from his engagements, and never has been put in race since. Ringwood is six years old, and as a sire of speed, form and color, is equal to his noted sire, Sidney. Several of his colts have been sold at high prices, and have gone East. He is a sure foal-getter and of fine disposition, and a lady can handle or drive him. Ringwood is highly bred on the dam's side. Alma was by Bushaway (thoroughbred), he by Williamson's Belmont, he by American Boy; second dam Fanny Coh, a noted roadmare brought from Canada to California. Alma is a noted producer of speed.

ALSO FOR SALE

Tippoo Tib,

Gelding record, 2:26. Can trot in 2:29 or better; will show quarters in 0:32; 15 1/2 high; light bay; a great road horse; single or double, and perfectly sound. Ringwood or Tippoo Tib can be put in training and win their price in one season. For further particulars, address

STANDARD STALLION

FRED DRAKE 4834, (Race Record, 2:26 1/2).

By Joe Gavin 564 (sire of six in the list), he by Messenger Duroc 106 (sire of 20 in the list), first dam, Minnie Drake (dam of 2 in the list), by Louis Napoleon 207 (sire of 16 in the list). Fred Drake 4844, 2:28 1/2, is a spleen did individual; stands about 16 hands high, and weighs over 1,100 lbs., is of excellent disposition. His record is no mark of his speed as he can trot in 2:30 or better with training next season. Reason for selling is that owner is engaged in other business and has not the time to devote to the horse. Will be sold at a reasonable price. For particulars address

DIABLO 11,404,

Record, 2:14 3/4 as a Three-Year-Old,

Will Make the Season of 1893, commencing February 10 and ending June 15, at Race Track Pleasanton.

SEWICE FEE (With usual return privilege), payable at end of season..... $100

DIABLO was foaled 1889, is a handsome chestnut in color, stands 15 1/2 hands and in conformation, disposition and action is absolutely perfect. He is a pure trotter and will get a mark close to 2:20 at that gait this fall. His record, 2:14 3/4, was made in his second race on the turf and is no mark of his speed as a pacer. His breeding entitles him to be considered one of the most fashionably-bred stallions in America. He is by Chas. Derby, record 2:20 in sixth heat, brother to Steliner, 2:29 1/2, by Steliner; dam Bertha, sister to Bayard Wilkes (record 2:15 in a sixth heat), by Alcantara, record 2:27; second dam Barcelona (dam of Alcantara, sire of Victor B., 2:29 1/2), by Bayard 53 (record 2:24, sire of Kitty Bayard, 2:12 1/2 on half mile track and 15 others in list); third dam Blandina, dam of six producing sires, including Swigert and King Rene, by Mambrino Chief 11; fourth dam Burch Mare (dam of Rosalind, 2:21 1/4, and Donald, 2:27), by Parker's Brown Pilot, sire of Sopronia, grandam of Nancy Hanks, 2:34. Chas. Derby, by Steliner, dam Katy G., dam of two in list, by Electioneer; second dam Fanny Milner, grandam of Mand C., 2:19, by Niagara (sire of Fairmont, 2:22 1/2), third dam Fanny Wickham, the great twenty-mile trotter, by Imp. Herald, out of a daughter of Imp. Trustee, etc. The great broodmares Katy G., Abbess, Alma Maier, Green Mountain Maid, Barcelona, Blandina, Burch Mare, Lady Waltemire and Fanny G., great grandam of Palo Alto, 2:38 1/4, appear in this pedigree, besides such sires as Electioneer, Steliner, Alcantara, Geo. Wilkes, Pilot Jr., Mambrino Patchou, Hamiltonian 10 and Mambrino Chief 11, and the strongest thoroughbred families known. Address

MURRAY & RICHARDS, Owners. PLEASANTON, CAL. Excellent care taken of mares. Pasturage $5 per month.

IMMENSE EARNING CAPACITY

—OF THIS—

GREAT HORSE!

At the time of the death of Mr. Valensin, Sidney was under a three years' contract with W. C. France, by the conditions of which the latter gentleman was to pay $20,000 per year with a contingent additional payment of $5,000 per year. This contract, by its conditions, terminated on the death of Mr. Valensin; but that astute breeder, W. C. France, promptly offered the Executors to renew it under the same conditions, thus showing the immense earning capacity of this great sire.

Consignment from the ESTATE JAS. P. KERR:

MEMO 15,907.

TRIAL 2:20 1-4.

FULL BROTHER TO FROU-FROU, 2:25 1-4.

Not only is MEMO full brother to Frou-Frou, the champion yearling trotter in the world, but he is also one of the very best-bred young stallions in service, having three crosses of Rysdyk's Hambletonian, one of Harry Clay, sire of Green Mountain Maid (dam of Electioneer, etc.), and Long Island Black Hawk. Through Flaxtail he traces to Canadian Pilot (sire of Pilot Jr. 12), through Bull Pup, sire of Rowdy Boy, 2:13 1/4, and two others. Sidney, Memo's sire, is universally known and recognized as the best young sire in the world as a producer of extreme speed at an early age. The average speed of his progeny is lower than that of any of the get of the twelve leading stallions of America.

MEMO trotted in public in his two-year-old form: was close to Grandee in a race on the Bay District track, the second heat of which was made in 2:31 1/2, the first in 2:32. He exhibited phenomenal speed when three years old, for on the Oakland track he was timed a mile in 2:20 3/4, and frequently trotted quarters in from 32 1/2 to 34 seconds.

He is sixteen hands high, and of powerful built throughout. His color is a glossy black, with both forefeet white. His disposition is all that could be desired, and his action is superb. He is a sure foal-getter, and has yearlings and two-year-old colts that show phenomenal bursts of speed and are splendid individuals.

Training The Trotting Horse.

BY CHARLES MARVIN.

This great practical horse book is a handsome, three hundred page octavo, bound in cloth, elegantly printed, superbly illustrated, and explains in every detail the remarkable success of CHARLES MARVIN and the whole plans and methods pursued at Palo Alto as to breaking, training, shoeing, gaiting, driving, keeping, racing and breeding trotters.

Read what J. C. Shibley, the owner of St. Bel, says of this book: "In this work Marvin has let out all the mysteries of the craft, and it is so simple and plain that any breeder, owner, trainer or rubber who has any relish for his business can take a colt as a yearling and develop to the highest and fullest extent that colt's capacity as a trotter. The work impressed me so strongly that I have ordered twenty copies, and shall place one in the hands of every rubber on our farm."

REP BALL

ITS OBJECT is to prevent disease, to regulate the bowels and urine; it strengthens the kidneys, prevents scouring, colic and leg swelling; loosens the hide, fattens stock, promotes the appetite, cures coughs, destroys worms and bots, and produces a fine, glossy coat. To the stall-fed horse it has the beneficial effects and results of grazing without the softening effects of a season of grass with loss of time and money. For much cows it increases and enriches their milk.

Especially adapted to hard breeders, but indispensable to every stock man. Saves time, annoy-ance, "opening" and practically insures. Cost of instrument saved every time it is used. Thoroughly tested last season in hundreds of cases. Every one satisfactory. With this instrument two or more mares can be impregnated with one service of horse, thereby saving his vitality.

Cambridge City, Ind., October 21, 1892.—This is to certify that I have used Dr. Canaday's Impregnator with great success on mares which no stallion could have got in foal. I consider it a great help for valuable stallions, as well as for owners of mares.—Chas. Kohlbeier.

H. S. Covault, V. S., Hagarstown, Indiana, says: I impregnated a nine-year-old mare that had been bred every year for five years and never was with foal until now. I transferred the semen from another mare and the horse has not touched her.

ELECTIONEER'S SONS AS SIRES.

What Anteeo, Richards' Elector and Eros Have Contributed to Swell the 2:30 List— Three Distinct Maternal Lines are Represented by Them.

"Whether coupled with thoroughbred mares, pacing mares or those of no breeding whatever, his progeny all have the same trotting instinct, the low to the ground, easy, frictionless gait that has come to be called the "Golden Gait." Consider that the family he founded have their speed at the trot as a natural inheritance and not as the result of the use of heavy shoes, toe weights or hobbles, and question whether he was truly a marvellous sire. Electioneer is the greatest to those who knew him best. His dynasty was to a great extent of his own creation, but few mares of approved trotting fashion or merit having been bred to him. He made such blood fashionable, but few contributed a fair share to swell his fame. Give a man the proper tools and he can make a locomotive, or give a man helpers enough he can subjugate a nation; but it is not a distinctive glory when without tools or helpers one has done so? Electioneer did much unaided, but when assisted by the blood of Beautiful Bells or that of the mighty George Wilkes or the great Nutwood his every work was a piece of perfect mechanism. You admit him to have been a great horse, but how great do you think he would have really been had he stood in Kentucky and had the help of the daughters of George Wilkes, Nutwood, Mambrino Patchen, Pilot Jr., Dictator, Belmont and other great sires? Great as he is to-day, we are not among those who think his like will not again be seen. The blood of the sons and daughters, mingled with the blood of Nutwood or George Wilkes, will, in accordance with the laws of progression, produce a greater than he. A stock of prejudice is a poor thing to take to the horse market, and the best breeders and students are possessed of enough shrewdness to see that it is only in the commingling of the greatest that permanent success is assured. In the opinion of the writer Electioneer has imparted to his descendants qualities which will enrich the blood of all our present great trotting families, and he who mingles it with the best discretion will be the proud owner of the great record-breakers of the future."

This was written in the preface of the Miller & Sibley catalogue, and is a fitting introduction to this article on Electioneer's three greatest living sons—Anteeo, Elector and Eros. The fame of Electioneer as a sire is world wide; he was foaled in 1868, and the first eight years of his life were spent on the Stony Ford Stock Farm, New York. He was purchased by Leland Stanford and placed on the Palo Alto Stock Farm, California, in 1877. His first foals here came in 1878. Electioneer, when brought on the farm, was not esteemed as highly as Mohawk Chief, and only seven mares out of the large number on the farm dropped foals by this son of Green Mountain Maid the next year. Several outside breeders sent mares to him, but the produce was not considered of great value until Fred Crocker in 1880 lowered the two-year-old mark to 2:25. The attention of Senator Stanford was at once turned to his young trotters, and the marvelous speed shown by the very youngest of them caused him to take a greater interest in their development. The story of the progressive strides toward the goal of this breeder's ambition, and the satisfactory demonstration of his theory in breeding and developing forms an important part in the great history of the trotting horse of America.

Electioneer died in 1890, leaving a roll of honor to his credit that was never equalled by any living sire up to that time, for he had sixty-one trotters and one pacer, and six sires of eight and the dams of five. The year after his death is memorable from the fact that 100 were placed to the credit of the horse, and seventeen of his sons sired forty-six and thirteen of his daughters had thirteen in the charmed circle. The great record-breakers, Sunol, Arion and Palo Alto, then retired to winter quarters wearing crowns. At the beginning of the spring of 1892 a serious distemper affected nearly all the horses at Palo Alto, and the work of developing the stock had to cease until the epidemic was conquered. Notwithstanding this great setback, thirty-two trotters were added to the great list, and his sons and daughters have also swelled it, for twenty-six of the former sired 115 and twenty-seven dams of twenty-nine, and one grandam of one, and three daughters of sons have produced three in the list.

In the following table the names, dates of foaling (when known) and number of trotters and pacers to the credit of each of his sons that are sires:

*In California. †Dead.

There are only eight Electioneer sires in California that have their names in the above list, viz., Albert W., at Rancho del Paso; Richard's Elector at Grayson; Gaviola at Santa Marguerita; Junio at Fresno; Woolsey at Chino Stock Farm and Eros at La Siesta, while Palo Alto has the other two, Azmoor and Whips. The deaths among these sires are Bell Boy, St. Bel, Palo Alto, Elector (Morrow's), Elect and Stanford. The balance are at the head of the leading stock farms in America, and their gifted progeny will increase every year and become more and more prominent on our leading tracks.

The daughters of Electioneer are coming into prominence as the dams of performers, twenty-six having representatives in the 2:30 list at the beginning of 1893, but these are worthy of a separate article. A large number of them are now in the harems of the leading breeding farms, and the owners esteem them more highly than the representatives of any sire.

In reviewing the above table of sires it will be noticed that nineteen out of the twenty-six have records. Three, Anteeo, Antevolo and Eros, are out of one mare, Columbine; St. Bel, Bell Boy and Chimes are out of Beautiful Bells; Sphinx and Egotist are out of Sprite; Palo Alto, Ansel, Azmoor, Elect and Whips have thoroughbred dams; Eros and Gaviola are out of Mohawk mares. The only representative of the St. Clair family is the sire of more trotters than any other (Richards' Elector). He never was bred to but one standard mare. Some one claims that Anteeo is the greatest sire of the two, but considering the breeding of the two and the class of mares and opportunities each horse had in the stud, Elector leads him. Anteeo was bred, owned, developed and raced by one of the greatest practical and theoretical horsemen in America, Jos. Cairn Simpson; his dam is one of the best broodmares in California; he stood for service at a price and in a section of the country where the attention of owners of the best mares were attracted to him. His appearance, breeding, color, gameness and trotting action were incomparable with any other sire of his time. He was sold by Mr. Simpson to a syndicate of horse-owners at Santa Rosa, right in the center of a district where the best mares in the State were. His roll of honor shows that they were good, for, out of the twelve he was bred to, ten are by standard and registered stallions as follows:

One of the sons, Anteeo, Jr., 2:26, is the sire of Hailstorm, 2:30, the first grandson to the credit of Electioneer to enter the list. Two daughters of Anteeo are the dams of Anteeo Wilkes, 2:30, and the fastest four-year-old pacer, W. Wood, 2:07. There is no doubt that the chances are more than favorable for the sons of Columbine founding great families, as they have everything in their favor; but how different is the breeding and history of that other leading sire known as Richard's Elector! His dam was the bay mare Gilberta, by Fred Low, a son of St. Clair, 16,675, out of Lady Gilbert, dam untraced. The St. Clair family was one that first started Leland Stanford into the breeding and raising of fast horses. Around his old home in Sacramento he, with Mr. E. H. Miller (lately deceased) often discussed the merits of this great family, and when Occident, the erratic trotter, came out and trotted quarters in thirty-two seconds and miles in 2:20, his faith in the great family seemed to be based on something tangible. When he founded the Palo Alto Stock farm he bought the best representatives of this speedy and game family procurable. He got some culls among them, it is true, but as broodmares he found they imparted great speed and gameness to their produce and thus contributed no small share toward building the reputation of this farm. Richards' Elector is the only one from these mares that seems to be making any headway as a sire. As a foal he was considered so delicate that he was offered to any one who would take him away from the farm. He was sold to a butcher in the village and then to some one else, and finally was heard of at Stockton. No one would breed to him. He was a fast trotter, but his breeding did not suit; finally, L. A. Richards, a prominent farmer near Grayson, purchased the horse at a low figure and bred him to the ordinary work mares on the farm and to any matrons that the neighbors might send. His first colts appeared in 1885. Flora M., 2:16, and Nettie C., 2:28, were foaled in that year; for two years he got very few foals; and Morning Glory, 2:27, is the only six-year-old in his list; of the balance, eleven are five, four and three-year-olds, and a perusal of the following will show that only three standard trotting sires appear—Duke McClellan 9080, John Nelson 187 and Steinway 1808. There are eight other trotters on the farm out of mares of unknown breeding that have trotted in their work in 2:30. The gelding J. R., that was ruled off the turf last fall, trotted miles in 2:14 1/4, and every one of those named below can lower their records.

In appearance these are all a large, well-formed, heavy-muscled type of horses that will become distinct in itself. Their trotting instinct is very strong, and no pacers are to be found among them. Their dispositions are of the kindest, and if they had the opportunities or were owned by a horse breeder who took delight in training the youngsters from their yearling form upwards the place this, the greatest son of Electioneer as a sire in California, would have taken would have been a creditable one. This horse which sires fast trotters out of mares of unknown breeding is one that will do wonders when his blood is mingled with that of representatives of other well-known trotting families. Last year he was bred to a number of well-bred mares, and every owner of these matrons is looking forward with pleasure to the progeny.

Eros, 2:29 1/2 in fifth heat, was foaled in 1879 also; he is out of Sontag Mohawk (dam of Sally Benton, 2:17, dam of Starlight 2:23 1/4), Sport, 2:22 1/2; Colma, 2:25 1/4; Conductor, 2:25 1/4; Norhawk, 2:20 1/4; Sonoma, 2:28, and Eros, 2:29 1/2, by Mohawk Chief, son of Hambletonian 10; second dam Sontag Nellie, by Toronto Sontag 307; third dam Nellie Gray, five-mile record 13:45. Eros, like Elector, traces to a mare that was noted for her gameness and powers of endurance. Gilberta, the dam of Elector, could pull a wagon all day and run from dawn till dusk keeping up with trotters; her dam, Lady Gilbert, was one of the toughest and speediest roadmares ever seen in Sacramento. Nellie Gray, the great grandam of Eros, must have been a remarkable mare, for although, like Lady Gilbert, her pedigree is untraced, there never can be any doubting her natural right to be placed beside the untraced dams of the greatest performers seen on our tracks, and to which many a horseman would like to trace his trotters on the maternal side. Eros was not bred for years at Palo Alto. Although he is only thirteen years old, his oldest colts were foaled in 1885, and four of these entered the 2:30 list; he produced only five that year. He has nine in the 2:30 list now, viz:

It has been the policy of the owners of this handsome horse to sell his yearlings in the Eastern sales rings, and the prices obtained for these natural trotters averaged as well as those of any son of Electioneer ever sold there. The Eros youngsters are finely formed, strong-limbed, pure-gaited and very game. There was a collection of them destroyed by fire last fall which for appearance and promise was hard to excel anywhere. Eros transmits his characteristics of form, color and trotting instinct to his progeny so strongly that they can be selected from any number of others of every breed whenever placed.

The above showing of what these Electioneers are doing proves conclusively that they transmit speed. The owners of all sons of Electioneer declare that wherever they have seen the progeny worked this prediction is verified. The performances of Little Albert, Lot Slocum, Palo Alto, and in fact all of the stock that were campaigned, proves that the odium of softness, so long cast upon them by jealous rivals, is unfounded. And now if it is to be the policy of the farm management to eschew all trials against the watch and send, under the best drivers and trainers procurable, the strings of youngsters by the sons of Electioneer on the circuits, not only in this State, but to those in Montana, Oregon, Washington and the great East and West, where thousands of dollars are given in purses and stakes, the fame of the Electioneers as racehorses will overshadow many that are now believed to be the brightest of all the game families in America. The day for the ending of the tin-cup records is here, and in a few years the great ultimatum of the trotting horse business will be proclaimed and the earning capacity of the trotting horse will be the measure by which all trotters and pacers must be judged. On this basis the sons and daughters of Electioneer will stand as prominently as those by any other sire. Give them an opportunity; place them in the hands of the best men, enter them in all the great events, and the material that is in them will prove its great worth.

Sidney Should Stay in California.

EDITOR BREEDER AND SPORTSMAN:—Sidney is soon to be sold in the East, and it is to try to induce his purchase by California interests and his location in this State that I would now like to say a few words in the matter of his sale. California has acquired an enviable reputation as the breeding place of great horses, and the get of her historic sires have with bewildering rapidity captured successive world's records, until nearly all have, at different times, been held within her borders. For these great honors she has been greatly indebted to such peerless sires as Electioneer, Director and Sidney, Sultan, Nutwood, Stamboul, Anteeo, Arion, Regal Wilkes, Faustino and the like have been sold abroad and are now in the service of our rivals. Palo Alto is dead. For great sires which have won national reputations and upon which we must depend for the maintenance of our honor at home and our glory abroad, we have but Guy Wilkes, Sable Wilkes and Sidney, not forgetting Dexter Prince and Steinway. From this select list can we spare Sidney? Every one of you, my readers, who raise even one horse a year, are financially interested in this matter. Our reputation as breeders of the most excellent and speedy trotters, is of inestimable value to every breeder in the State. Remember the "good old times" when "bred in Kentucky" was a pedigree sufficient to sell any horse for a goodly sum, and remember, too, that while a longer quotation from "Wallace's Peerage" is now required, the sentiment which deferred to the birthplace of excellence still lives. And now that the mantle of Kentucky's greatness has fallen so gracefully upon the fair form of our beloved State, the magic words "bred in California" will be a priceless addition to a tabulation otherwise faultless in its statement of successive crosses of the great sires of the sunny slopes of the Pacific. This reputation, so splendidly established, should not be lightly lost. Our natural resources are many, our soil, climate and grasses are unsurpassed. But we cannot stand the constant drain of our greatest sires. Our breeding interest is a giant, but its western vigor is not invulnerable. Some one of our many wealthy breeders who have already collected great studs of choice mares should secure him at any price. I have personally known nearly all of his produce and without exception, they were speedy from infancy. "Early and extreme speed" is emblazoned upon the Sidney banner. Mr. Henry Pierce should own Sidney. Mated with such mares as he has recently purchased, the harvest of records would commence immediately. No years of life are wasted in waiting for growth and maturity, for trying and culling. The Sidneys trot as yearlings as the world now knows, and would have known with emphasis had his late lamented owner lived another year. Or Mr. William Corbett should secure him to outclass his Wilkes fillies. No farm in America owns two such sires as Guy and Sable Wilkes; and Sidney to the list and the triumvirate would be without parallel in the breeding history. At Palo Alto he would be a worthy successor of the greatest horse of his time, Electioneer; mated with daughters of this horse, the ideal trotter would be a realized fact, and from this union I hope to see the greatest of modern trotters spring. If our large breeders neglect this opportunity of their lines, let a number of our small breeders form a syndicate. In purchasing Sidney no risk is run except that of death, and that confronts us all in every relation. He is in his prime, and without a flaw, with his whole mature life before him, ready to battle against the whole world for our breeding supremacy. Don't let Sidney go, we need him to maintain our reputation at home, to spread our glory abroad. He is demanded alike by our financial interests and our State pride, and the profound respect and great love which we here his late owner finds its tenderest expression in the possession and ownership of his great horse. PETER J. SUTELDS.

THE Spirit of the Times thinks that it would be a good plan for the American Trotting Register Association to make its rules so plain that an interpreter would not be necessary, and win up its remarks by stating that such a wise father should certainly know his own child, or in other words it thinks that the meeting of the Executive Committee should not be necessary to decide whether a record made against time is valid or not.

A Letter From Vermont.

[Special Correspondence of the BREEDER AND SPORTSMAN.]

HARTFORD, VT., Jan. 27.—Thinking that some items from Vermont might interest those of your readers that once lived in the State, and some of the readers that have not, we send you this. Vermont, or her people, seems very prosperous, from the fact that they have so much money in the saving banks, and so much invested in Western securities, and are owing so little. Many believe that the Western securities may not all turn out good, and that it would have been better and safer to have kept the money at home and developed the resources of the State. The prices of farms are lower than they have been for fifty years. Farms that sold quickly at five and six thousand dollars twenty years ago, go now at $1,000 and $1,500. It is the time to buy when what is wanted is low, and the time to sell when it is high. But for all that it is so, there is double the purchasers when anything is high than when it is low. The great depression in the price of farms is caused by the low price of produce and the high price of labor.

The price of labor is double what it was fifty years ago, and it is caused largely by the reckless waste of it by the rich in their extravagance; they employ it for their own pleasure, regardless as to the cost or profit. The poor cannot do so. When wool brought fifty cents a pound it paid to farm it in Vermont. The hills of the back farms then were well-stocked with sheep; but now, with wool worth but twenty cents a pound, the business is a failure. The sheep have been sent to the market and the farms many of them abandoned that once supported large families. The hills of Vermont is where the merino or fine-wooled sheep do the best. A few years ago they tried to get up some excitement so as to boom the business, by having the fine-wooled flocks registered in the Vermont Register, and the most of them were; but many of them, and their descendants, have been sent to the markets for mutton, and if the price of wool stays where it is, it looks as though the most of them will have to go the same way.

In speaking of the registering of stock, there is much of it done, too many worthless, inferior animals registered, and if it is kept up there will be no end to the number of volumes of the Register. Breeders should have their stock eligible to be registered, but it is time enough to have it registered when it has proved meritorious. Many horses have been registered at quite an expense that have been since gelded, and there are many more that should be. Some of the books that are published, the publishers of them, to make it pay, play on the vanity and feelings of some by telling them how nice their picture will look in the book with a sketch of their remarkable life, and too often it is that they have the weakness to be bled two or three hundred dollars to see themselves in print. Now the ones that have made a mark don't have to pay for this.

Once the farmer in Vermont sold a large part of his crops—that is, his hay and corn. Now everything raised is fed out on the farm, and much more with it. There are many thousands of bushels of corn and oats brought into the State, and car-loads of feed. It would be an interesting fact to know the exact amount. Some think it hard to tell where the money comes from that is paid for it; the land must be growing richer. This can be seen by many of the farms keeping double the stock that they did. What the farmer has to sell that pays best is eggs and butter. Eggs brings 25 cents per dozen and butter 25 cents per pound—some claim to get much more. On account of a short crop of potatoes they bring $1 per bushel. The year before they were worth but 25 cents per bushel. Hay is worth $15 a ton. There is a surplus of cattle and horses, and the price is low. The first of the season good beef was worth but $4 per cwt.; fresh pork, $6.50 per cwt. Cows have been and are low, worth on an average from $20 to $25. Many of the high-bred Jerseys bring fancy prices. Large numbers of cows are taken West from Vermont each year.

Now is the time for those that have left the State, and are thinking of returning, to come and buy them a home. The low prices cannot continue long. It is believed the prices of farms will be double in a few years.

Something now will be told in regard to the horses of Vermont; what they are and have been. The Green Mountains run through the State north and south, dividing it about half and half, the mountains at first greatly cut off the intercourse of the inhabitants of the two sections. Mountains have prevented the intercourse of people more than rivers. The western part of the State borders on New York, and it caused the people to do much of their trading and marketing in New York. This caused their horses to be very much like the horses of New York. The first horse of note—and to make a lasting impression on the horses on the west side of the Green Mountains—was the thoroughbred horse and racer Bishop Hambletonian 1097, son of Imp. Messenger. He was bred on Long Island and foaled in 1804; was a bay, 15 1/2 hands high, stout made and weighed about 1,100 pounds. He had quite a reputation as a runner. Was taken to Granville, N. Y., in 1819, and died there about 1834. Granville is but just across the line from Vermont, and the horse made several of his seasons in Vermont. He was quite a fast trotter, and he was very prepotent in transmitting speed. Several of his sons were kept and bred from, so that the Hambletonian blood was the principal blood for a while on the west side of the mountain.

The next horse of note to be used there was Black Hawk 5. He was bred in Durham, N. Y., and foaled 1833, taken to Bradford in 1844 and died there in December 1856. He was a jet black in color, about fifteen hands high and weighed in common flesh 725 pounds. He was considered a very fast trotter in his day, but it is doubtful if he could trot much better than 2:50; he was very handsome and stylish, showed high breeding and finish. These characteristics he transmitted with his speed in a very marked degree. He stood at the head in his day as a trotting sire. Black Hawk's sire was Paddy or Young Traveller, by Old Traveller, a very fine English horse from Connecticut. It was from his grandsire, Old Traveller, Black Hawk took his color, style, finish and thoroughbred looks. His dam was a large, rather coarse, rooky mare, quite fast, was mixed gaited, black with a white strip in the face; her sire was Old Traveller, dam a black Narragansett mare from Rhode Island; Young Traveller's dam was part Canadian. The breeding of Black Hawk shows he had a right to his fine looks and speed and the power to transmit them. The next horse was Columbus who was taken from Canada about 1842 and to Orwell, Vermont, in 1854. He was a chestnut with Dexter's mark, about fifteen hands high and weighed 1,000 pounds, was a converted pacer and was quite fast. This stock did not incline to be free, easy, pleasant drivers, but it had speed. The next cross was the Ethan Allen, and the Daniel Lambert. There has been several of Hambletonian 10's sons and grandsons used, too. It can be seen that the horses on the west side of the mountain had a good foundation or start at first for speed, and the crosses since have been very favorable for it.

But few of the Hambletonians, Black Hawks and Colum-buses were taken over the mountains to the eastern side. This was on account of the little intercourse between the people of the two sections. There was a few and they made something of a mark. About 1835 a Hambletonian mare was taken from the west side of the mountains to Woodstock. She foaled a colt by the Walker horse that was kept for stock called the Ransom horse, and he sired many trotters. In 1837 another Hambletonian mare taken over the mountain from Poultney to Pamfred, and she brought a colt in 1843 by the Hackett horse, son of Wier's Gifford Morgan. The colt was kept for stock and was named Flying Morgan and he was the sire of Ethan Allen 43. Ethan took his color, marks, shape and style of going from the Hambletonian mare; that was the dam of Flying Morgan. In the fall of 1852, James Densmore, of Hartland, traded a wagon for a six-year-old mare in Middletown, of her breeder, L. B. Adams. The mare was sired by the Andrus Hambletonian, by the Judson, son of Bishop Hambletonian. The mare cost Mr. Densmore about $40 (horses were very low that fall on account of a very short hay crop). He took the mare over the mountains to Hartford, the next year bred her to a son of Hall's Green Mountain, and she soon passed into the hands of A. M. Billings, of Claremont, N. M. This was the celebrated trotting mare Princess, 2:30, and dam of Happy Medium 400, the sire of Nancy Hanks, 2:04. A writer in January number of Wallace's Monthly, in giving a sketch of Princess' life, says she was bred by Mr. Galloway, of Orange City, N. Y., and died the property of Mr. Gage, of Chicago. Princess died the property of Robert Bonner, and Mr. Galloway was the breeder of her son Happy Medium.

The season of 1851, a son of Black Hawk was taken on the east side of the mountain and kept part of the time at Bethel, and he sired that season Draco Prince, 2:24 1/2, his dam was a bay with Dexter's marks and called Captain Lightfoot. The State's fairs have brought the people and the horses of the two sections together.

The first breed of horses to become popular on the east side of the Green Mountains in Vermont was the Morgans, the founder of the breed. The Justin Morgan was bred at West Springfield, Mass., foaled 1789, and was taken to Randolph, Vt. the fall of 1791. In breeding he was nearly thoroughbred; was a bright bay without marks, 14 1/2 hands high, and weighed in common flesh 850 pounds; was a very smooth, handsome-made, pony-shape horse, very muscular and compact. He proved one of the most remarkable prepotent sires that has been. Died at Chester, Vt. 1819. What made the Morgans so popular was that they were such fine saddle horses and were free pleasant drivers and lasters and workers, too. They were not bred to any extent on the west side of the mountains, but on the east side they were the popular horse as late as 1860. Their size was against them, as they did not average in height fifteen hands and in weight more than 950 pounds. Had they been two or three sizes larger they could not have lost their popularity, as no better driving horses ever stood on iron. When the call was for larger and faster horses than the Morgans the Morrills seemed to be what was wanted as they had size and showed quite fast.

The compact bodies and broad breasts of the Morgans with their short stride prevented them from having speed for a mile. It was their will and desire to get far on an all day's drive or several of them, and would outlast those having more speed for a mile.

Old Morrill, the founder of the Morrill family, was bred at Walden, Vt., and foaled there in 1843. It is understood that his sire the Jennison colt (as he was but two when he sired Old Morrill) was a grandson of Old Bulrush Morgan, son of the "Justin Morgan." Old Morrill when three years old was taken to Danville, Vt., and he died there the fall of 1862. He was black with a little white, sixteen hands high and weighed at times over 1,300 pounds; ears were long, and mane and tail light. He was coarse and homely, awkward in his movements, inclined to stumble. Was a very powerful horse to draw, and could show quite a burst of speed, but he lacked the breeding to carry his speed. He was a cold-blooded horse, could trot a mile in about 2:50, but could not three or four heats. Quite a number of his sons could trot in 2:40 and a few a little better. He has one in the 2:30 list, Mountain Maid 2:27 1/2. It is merely through his son Young Morrill, 2:31, that the Morrills have any standing in the 2:30 list. The popularity of the Morrills did not last long as it was found they were not lasters, could not carry their speed to the finish.

The blood mostly bred from now in both sections of Vermont is the Hambletonian blood through Hambletonian 10, and the Lambert blood through Daniel Lambert 102.

The town of Hartford, on the east side of the mountain, has rather taken the lead in breeding the trotter. The horse Casius M. Clay 54 was taken to Hartford in 1860 and was kept there as long as he lived (died 1878). He proved a very prepotent sire, a large number of his get trotted better than 2:30, and three are in the 2:30 list. His daughters proved remarkable broodmares in giving speed to their produce. The blood of this horse has proved a good foundation to build upon. About 1875 J. C. Parker, a large manufacturer at Quechel village, Hartford, commenced breeding horses on a small scale, but he has kept adding each year, and now he is one of the largest horse breeders, if not the largest, on the east side of the mountain. The horse Kent 5560 was kept at Hartford the seasons of 1875 and 1876. He was then sold and taken to Wyoming Territory. This stock proving so well at Hartford, it caused Mr. Parker and three others to send an agent about 1882 to Wyoming to buy the horse, which he did, and he has been left on Mr. Parker's farm ever since. He is one of the few remaining sons of the Old Hero of Chester, dam Lady Griswold by Flying Morgan. Kent is own brother to Alley that has three of her produce in the 2:30 list—Wilton, 2:19, one, and the sire of Moquette, with a record of 2:10 as a four-year-old. Kent has proved a strong, prepotent sire in transmitting speed. Three of his get entered the 2:30 list the past season. Though coming twenty-five, he is as strong and vigorous as ever. The most of his mares the past season are safe in foal. Mr. Parker was at first discouraged in the business, and it was on account of the bad habits of his help. Soon after hiring them he would find that they drank, used profane language, and would abuse his horses. He said if he could not get any other help he would go out of the business, but he persevered and procured help of good habits, and that could be depended upon, and hence his success in the business, as he has bred several of the 2:30 ones, and there will be many more credited to him. The foreman for the last four years has been B. S. Walker. It is remarkable how much more successful some trainers are in developing speed than others. Some of Mr. Parker's horses were considered failures as to having speed, but by Mr. Walker's patience and careful handling they have showed fast. Quechel Lambert 2267, by Daniel Lambert, 10th, dam by Cassius M. Clay 54, Mr. Parker bred, and by his breeding expected great things of him, but he was so nervous his trainer could not do anything with him. Mr. Walker the past season placed a record of 2:36 to his credit. Ruhens, by Kent, dam by Cassius M. Clay, was so had gaited they could not get him to pace in four minutes, and Mr. Parker expected to geld him and put him into the team, as he is a very large horse. Mr. Walker got a pacing record on him the past season of 2:31. He is sure to enter the 2:30 list, having accidents.

When a person has a capacity to do anything, they soon want to do business for themselves, and it is so with Mr. Walker as he expects to leave Mr. Parker soon and set up a training stable at Santa Rosa, California. If he does any success attend him there as it has here. There are quite a number more of good horses owned at Hartford or have been kept there. Westmore, 2:24, Freestone, 2:25½, Stampede, by Stamboul, 2:07½, Supreme, by Superior, 2:17½. There has been kept, too, one or two sons of Volunteer, and one of William H. Allen, 2:23½, and there is now a very promising son of Young Jim, by George Wilkes. If there is anything in blood and breeding we must expect quite an increase in the speed of the horses at Hartford in a few years.

The Billings Park is in Hartford and was open three years ago. It contains the only kite-shape track in the northeast. It was named after the late lamented Frederick Billings, who contributed very liberally towards the cost of it. Mr. Billings made a large fortune in California and he returned to Vermont, his native State, and spent his last days. His farm at Woodstock, called the Billings farm, is now run by the trustees of the estate, the same as it was before his death. There is as fine a herd of Jerseys on it as there is in the State, and some of them will be shown at the World's Fair. There is, too, the finest flock of Southdowns in the State.

Excepting the bear, all the large game in Vermont disappeared years ago. It is seen that the bear still multiplies on the mountains, as quite a number are killed each year. About twenty-five years ago some deer were brought into the State and turned loose into the mountains. A law was passed imposing a fine of $100 to kill one. They have increased so they are quite plentiful in some sections of the State. It is claimed they hurt or harass the sheep. It is said where the deer is found the panther will be too. It was supposed the panther was extinct in Vermont, but a few years ago the largest one ever killed in the State, was shot in Barnard. It weighed 182 pounds after it had hled largely. It was believed it would have weighed 190 pounds before it was killed. Its skin was set up and it is in the capitol at Montpelier. Vermont has very stringent laws for the protection and increase of its game and the propagation of fish.

OCCASIONAL.

Eastern Sporting Gossip.

[From our Resident Correspondent].

NEW YORK, January 28.—With the long spell of cold weather now lasting for nearly a month past, looking about to break, the metropolis is in the midst of a January thaw, so sudden as to make some of the main thoroughfares lakes of mud. While in the parks and annexed districts sleighing and skating still goes on, a few more days like the last two with the temperature at forty degrees will change all that back to first principles of road and river. But the late reign of ice, snow and Arctic temperature has been such a pleasant innovation in many ways, except to the poor, as to leave behind it many happy remembrances.

Tuesday's and Wednesday's sales of the Palo Alto bred trotters under Auctioneer Kellogg's management showed disappointingly low figures. Ariel Lathrop had the horses in good shape after their long trip across the continent, but while buyers seemed present in force, bidders were scarce in remunerative amounts, some of these animals going for about what it had cost to ship them from California here; that there has been a glut of horses on this market of late there is no doubt. But for all that it seems strange that this well-bred consignment from Palo Alto should go heging as it did. The lot averaged about as many hundreds as it was expected to realize thousands.

Now that the American Trotting Register Association has, through Registrar Steiner, officially thrown out all records made at Stockton October 13 to November 23, Stamboul, 2:07½, must be relegated to the now former record, although it will doubtless constitute a bar for trotting purposes. Therefore Kremlin with 2:07½ must be regarded as the stallion king until some horse in the coming season may lower that mark. The coming contests for supremacy, however, is apt to be a hot one and some other than Kremlin or Stamboul is just as likely to wear the crown as not.

The week's midwinter meeting here of the Board of Stewards of the Grand Circuit tracks has developed more than passing matter of interest. The various trotting centres all had delegates at the sessions held in the Murray Hill Hotel. Among the trotting managers present were William Edwards, of Cleveland, C. J. Hamlin and E. J. Hanley, of Buffalo, G. W. Archer and A. Collins, of Rochester, Gov. Bulkeley and B. Loomis, of Hartford, E. C. Robinson, of Springfield, and T. B. Levatt and J. Wenderoth, of Philadelphia.

Among other important business transacted was the admission of the New York and Detroit Driving Clubs as members. The next five years schedule of dates was arranged to affect each track in the circuit. The Buffalo meeting was lengthened to two weeks and President Hamlin announced that he and his associates would offer extra purses for 2:11, 2:12 and 2:15 trotters; for 2:10, 2:12, 2:13 and 2:15 pacers; and for the three and four-year-olds each an innovation on Grand Circuit tracks. Most of the other tracks will also schedule these new classes.

The circuit dates were also selected as follows: Pittsburg will open the fall, July 10th, and close on the 14th; from that the smoky city the harness horses will move to Detroit which meeting will last July 17th to 21st; Cleveland opens July 24th and holds a five day's meeting and then Buffalo falls in line August 1st to the 12th. Three days later Rochester takes up the ball and keeps it rolling to the 18th of August, when the horses cut across country to Springfield for the meeting there, August 22d to 25th. At Hartford the meeting will be held from August 29th to September 1st, and then on to our Driving Park here from September 5th to 8th. The Quaker

City will hold the wind-up from September 12th to 15th and Philadelphia's lovers of trotting will no doubt turn out in force to honor the occasion. Our neighbors of the City of Brotherly Love have always shown a fondness for trotting, and the wonder is that racing does not seem to be as popular with them.

Judged by the signs at the legislative halls of the two States of New York and New Jersey, there will be strong attempts made both at Albany and Trenton toward racetrack legislation this spring. The advocates of a pool bill for New Jersey and of an extension of the Ives Pool Bill in this State are already working hard, and, judged by the feeling about the proposed measures, they are likely to be adopted, especially the proposed racing law in Jersey. The new Governor of the State is said to be in favor of a pool bill, and the fact that owner Thompson, of the Gloucester race track, was a prominent factor in his election, looks as if these hopes of law in our sister State are well founded.

The only tracks that raced in New Jersey last year were Guttenberg, Monmouth Park and Gloucester. The first and last raced on sufferance through the favor of the local as against the State law, while grand old Monmouth raced under pressure, the hooknakers at that meeting being annoyed and molested by petty arrests, etc. But the Clifton, Linden and Elizabeth race courses remained closed, and it goes without saying that the managers of each of the three courses named do not view with equanimity, their grass-grown and gate-closed courses while the other courses race, law or no law.

A long law, however, generally has a "kink" in it somewhere, and the kink in the Jersey race track law looks to have come at last. The old blue laws of the State under which the existing crusade of the present embargo has taken root, are as much in force now as they were nearly thirty years ago, when your great horse Norfolk at Paterson defeated Tipperary, Eagle, Kentucky and six others in the first Derby race ever run in America. But their enforcement at this present juncture has lost the State from three to four millions of dollars in the diversion of that amount of money into other racing channels. This the thick-headed Jersey men have at last seen, and will, no doubt, remedy matters at Trenton in the next few weeks.

With the lifting of the racing embargo in Jersey, the Clifton, Linden and Elizabeth tracks will open again. Manager George Engeman, of the Clifton track, was at Guttenberg yesterday, in conference with the managers of that track, and there is little doubt that Clifton will open its gates long before March 1st. Then the Guttenberg and Clifton tracks will race three days each a week alternately until April 15th, when the Elizabeth and Linden tracks will open for a month's racing, two weeks at each place. The fact that Guttenberg's starter, J. F. Caldwell, the premier official of the red flag in the country, has all but agreed to go to St. Louis on April 15th is an additional straw showing which way the Jersey racing wind is going to blow.

But as to the mooted changes in the New York State racing situation, they do not look so probable as those across the Hudson. The amendment to the Ives Pool Bill, giving our empire State racing associations more time for legal hetting, is likely to be of sheer mention for the reason that the aforesaid associations are not anxious for such an amendment to pass. Their thirty days each is all they want on a basis of last year's financial returns, which fell off considerably from previous years, and as lengthening of the State season to make it begin earlier than May 15th and last longer than October 15th, would only mean a place for dates of some new associations, or curtail the time at Linden and Elizabeth, at which track several Board of Control men are interested, the amendment is likely to die a natural death.

But as to the outlook of the coming season it is a great one promising the most interesting in our turf annals. The World's Fair meeting at Chicago will no doubt attract many horses from here as well as your State and all immediate euters, and that as well as the great meetings here promise great things in the way of sport. Col. North's English horses are slated to leave England on the 8th of next month, but there seems a probability that the crack of the stable, El Diahlo, will remain behind.

I hear that the $30,000 two-year-old G. W. Johnson, now owned by the Oneck Stable of this city, will be prepared for Chicago's $60,000 Derby. The youngster has been fired and hlisted but has come out of the ordeal well, and stranger things have happened than that this brother to Huron should win the big prize.

THE GLEANER.

What Director Has Done.

EDITOR BREEDER AND SPORTSMAN:—In your Turf and Track, issue of January 21st, there is an item about McKinney and winding up with "so that McKinney is the champion of California by long odds." Well, I for one doubt it. Mr. McKinney may be great in the fifth heat, but when Directum or Little Albert is in condition McKinney or no other California horse would ever get a chance to trot a fifth heat unless they did it alone after the race was finished. I saw these two horses raced all summer and fall and although I saw Directum step to the half at Lexington in a race in 1:03 (and over a step up grade at that) I never yet saw him excited so that I thought he could have been driven faster; and as for Little Albert well his last race at Nashville with four heats inside of 2:12 with the second, third and fourth in 2:10½, 2:11½ and 2:10½ is all the eements I need to pass. In another California paper I see Sidney compared with other California sires in regard to their winnings and the earning capacity of their get; now comparisons are odious and when one compares they should have all be fair in order not to lay themselves open for an attack. This was done in above case when the writer took Sidney and his get and gave their total winning for years and then only gave in comparison—Director and Guy Wilkes for 1892. I have not kept trace of Guy Wilkes and his get. No doubt Mr. Corbett has and I will guarantee that he (the horse) and they are able to take care of themselves in this respect, but as for Director the following figures will make the best of them count pretty closely to even compare, say nothing more.

|----------------------------------------------------------|--------------|
| Director while on the turf won in stakes and purses..... | $25,075 |
| Director's get 1888 won in stakes and purses..... | 2,998.45 |
| Director's get 1889 won in stakes and purses..... | 2,510.50 |
| Director's get 1890, won in stakes and purses..... | 17,963.83 |
| Director's get 1891 won in stakes and purses..... | 26,593 |
| Director's get 1892 won in stakes and purses..... | 29,590 |
| Total..... | $111,725.75 |

I do not wish to say anything about any sire, but whenever any body tackles old Director and don't tell the facts and truth about him and his get I will be after them pretty quick with the simple facts and figures.

Tacoma Notes.

[Special Correspondence of the BREEDER AND SPORTSMAN.]

TACOMA, Feb. 2, 1893.—Trotting horse industry is beginning to boom here now. We have some choice-bred stallions. Hall Brothers recently brought two from Boston; one is named Potato. He is sired by Shenango, and if looks and actions, backed up by good breeding, counts, this fellow is in the front rank.

J. W. Anderson owns a gray horse, Tye, that is smooth-gaited and fast; he is by Connaught, by Wedgewood.

N. Harrison's horse Soudan Patchen, son of Soudan, 2:27½, and Patchen Mollie, dam of Commodore Nutwood, has grown to be a beautiful horse; his hook is full for this season. Barring accidents this horse will be in the 2:30 list this fall. Terry Chambers has him in charge.

Roht. Breeze is driving Lady Mack, 2:23½. James Brockway is driving Bishop Hero, 2:27, and mate, Black Jack, 2:27½.

Colin Maekintosh has placed a beautiful span of mares in Mr. Chambers' stable, both sorrels, one by California Nutwood and one by Eugeneer, by Electioneer. In same stable are two fillies that are bred in good lines. One is a brown by Caliph, son of Sultan; her dam is by Volunteer 55. The other, a bay by Bland, by Auditor, by Hambletonian 10; her dam is by Ingram, by Volunteer 55.

Some of our rich horse owners here are going to give a meeting this spring, hoping that other wealthy horse owners here will come forward and help to put the meeting on a good, solid, business basis.

D. Elliott Kelly Retracts.

LEXINGTON, Ky., January 11, 1893.

EDITOR LIVE STOCK RECORD:—DEAR SIR:—I dislike to recall a publication that has already been fully characterized by the turf journals of the country and dropped; but, as its authorship was not known, I send you the enclosed correspondence. Publish it or not, as you deem best.

Very respectfully,

P. P. JOHNSTON.

LEXINGTON, Ky., January 11, 1893.—Mr. D. E. Kelly—Dear Sir:—Having been informed by you that the statements published in the Cincinnati Enquirer on Saturday, December 25, 1892, reflecting on the Board of Review of the National Trotting Association were made to you for publication by Dr. M. S. Sale, the owner of the horse Temple Bar, and, as I am aware that you prepared a further article setting forth that fact, which article you informed me you had sent for publication to the Cincinnati Enquirer, and later, that for reasons unknown to you that paper had failed to publish it, I therefore now ask you to favor me with a statement giving your authority for the article of the 25th ult., and such other facts in connection with it, as may seem to you pertinent, for publication with this note in other newspapers.

The wrong done is of a most wanton and unprovoked character, and the willful perpetrators must be brought before the public to meet the responsibility they have incurred.

Yours, &c.,

P. P. JOHNSTON.

LEXINGTON, Ky., January 19.—Major P. P. Johnston, President N. T. A., Lexington, Ky.—Dear Sir:—I am in receipt of your favor of a recent date requesting me to give you my authority for the article regarding the National Association which appeared in the Enquirer, for publication in the various turf papers. Dr. M. S. Sale, the owner of the horse Temple Bar, was my authority, and later, that for reasons unknown to you that paper had failed to publish it, I therefore now ask you to favor me with a statement giving your authority for the article of the 25th ult., and such other facts in connection with it, as may seem to you pertinent, for publication with this note in other newspapers.

From subsequent investigation and talks with several well-known horsemen who saw the race in which Temple Bar was disgraced, and with the persons personally acquainted with the members of the Board of Review, I am of the opinion that Dr. Sale was malicious in his statements, and that they were entirely unwarranted. Dr. Sale's behavior places him in a very unenviable light before the public, as he appears in the role of a traducer. As for the part I have played in the matter, it was simply as a news gatherer, and finding that I have made a serious mistake, I take this means to correct it as far as possible.

Very truly,

D. ELLIOTT KELLY.

The Approaching Sale in Napa.

In our columns is an advertisement of the great combination sale to be held at Napa, March 8. The few animals listed in the notice only give an idea of the class to be sold. The Coombs Bros.' entire stock will be disposed of, as Hon. Frank Coombs is Consul to Japan and Nathan, his brother, the horseman of the family, have concluded to relinquish all their work in this direction. Nathan Coombs, like his father, is a thorough horseman, and to the bringing out of Lilly Stanley, 2:17½ (one of the gamest trotters ever seen in California), and the mating of her to Director, 2:17, must all credit be given to him. Monroe Salisbury said at the time that, as she was the fastest race mare ever bred to the horse, he had every reason to believe that he would show the people of East what a two-minute horse is like and he was not wrong in the prophecy. Besides the old mare it has been decided to offer that handsome stallion, "The Dane," and several Director fillies. Everyone regrets to hear that the Coombs Bros. are going out of the trotting horse business, but it would not surprise us to see Nathan Coombs have a stable of thoroughbreds next spring.

Owners of good mares and men who are starting in the business of breeding will do well to not be too hasty in honking all their mares before this sale takes place for the stallions offered will be sold at low prices.

There is a list of them in the advertisement that belong to trotting families and are already recognized as sires of early and extreme speed; they have color, style, size, disposition and breeding to commend them. There never will be such a choice lot offered at public auction again. Therefore small breeders should not allow this opportunity to pass.

Great Drivers.

Driver of Kremlin, 2:07½, says: "Mr. Sears, Dear Sir: I think the Lindsey Humane bit far superior to any bit ever invented, and think it a duty and a pleasure to recommend it to my friends and the public. Yours truly, "EDWIN D. BITHER."

THE BEST RECORDS.—During the season of 1892 the following star trotting records were made:

|-------------------------------------------------|-------------------|
| Nancy Hank, best mile in harness..... | 2:04 |
| Stamboul, best stallion record..... | 2:07½ |
| Moquette, best four-year-old record..... | 2:10 |
| Ally, best four-year-old record..... | 2:10 |
| Martha Wilkes, best heat in a race..... | 2:08½ |
| Martha Wilkes, best three heats..... | 2:12, 2:16, 2:08½ |
| Sillean, best two-year-old heat in race..... | 2:12½ |
| Directum, best three-year-old heat in race..... | 2:11½ |
| Belle Vara, fastest first heat..... | 2:11 |
| Martha Wilkes, fastest second heat..... | 2:10 |
| Martha Wilkes, fastest third heat..... | 2:10 |
| Little Albert, fastest fourth heat..... | 2:10 |
| Nightingale, fastest two miles..... | 2:10 |

THE NEXT STATE FAIR.

It Will Open on the Fourth Day of September
Hon. John Boggs Elected President.

The State Board of Agriculture met at the Secretary's office in this city yesterday. There were present Directors Boggs, Chase, Green, DeLong, Hancock, Shippee and President Cox.

The annual report to the Governor for 1892 was read, adopted, and ordered to print.

After attending to matters of minor detail relating to the business of the year just closed, the old Board adjourned, and the new Board proceeded to organize.

The same members constitute the new Board, with the exception that J. W. Wilson of this city succeeds Christopher Green, and J. H. Flickinger succeeds Jesse D. Carr. Mr. Flickinger telegraphed the Board that he had received his commission too late to attend the meeting.

Mr. Green introduced his successor and thanked the Directors for their kind treatment of him during his past sixteen years' incumbency, and bespoke for his successor like consideration. Mr. Green recited his connection with the State Agricultural Society from its earliest organization, and asserted his kind and loyal feeling to the institution. He also referred in fitting terms to the great good it had done in building up California. He spoke feelingly, and said that in retiring from the directorate it was almost like leaving his family. While his successor would, no doubt, fill the position with at least equal ability, his own long and friendly connection with the members of the Board made his leaving sad in the extreme. But he could forever be counted upon as the thirteenth member of the Board, and a firm friend of the society.

Mr. Green's remarks called forth feeling responses from every member present. Director Boggs spoke of the efficiency of Mr. Green, of his long association with the society, and said that with his retirement the board lost a most effective worker.

President Cox called Mr. Chase to the chair and made extended remarks upon Mr. Green's retirement. He spoke of his usefulness, experience and executive ability, which qualities he characterized to be of the highest order, and in the severing of his association with the board he, as a fellow-member, felt the loss most keenly. He very much regretted that a man of Mr. Green's usefulness should have been retired.

Mr. Shippee spoke in like strain, as did Messrs. Hancock, Chase and others.

The next order of business being the election of officers, Director Cox nominated Hon. John Boggs, of Colusa, and Mr. Boggs was elected by acclamation.

In retiring from the chair, President Cox returned his thanks to the members of the board for their uniform courtesy and kind treatment of him while acting as their presiding officer. He said that his past, present and future thoughts were for the success of the State Agricultural Society, and he was fully satisfied with the position it had attained in the affairs of the State.

He bespoke for his successor the same consideration that had been accorded him, and assured them that their presiding officer for the current year would no doubt be able to give them as good an administration, if not a better one, than he had been able to do.

President Boggs, on taking the chair, thanked the members for the high honor conferred on him, and promised to exert himself in fulfilling the duties of the office to the end that he would give satisfaction to all.

G. W. Hancock was re-elected Superintendent of the Park, and Hon T. C. DeLong was elected Superintendent of the Pavilion.

The Board then set the day of the opening of the State Fair of 1893 for September 4th, to continue two weeks, with the usual nine days' exhibition at the Park.

The President was directed to name a committee of five to revise the premium list, and stated that he would name this and other committees in a short time.

After discussion of other matters preliminary to the exhibition of 1893, the Board adjourned to meet at the call of the chair.—Sacramento Record-Union.

A Valuable Document.

The report of Edwin F. Smith, Secretary of the State Agricultural Society, is published in full in the Sacramento Union. The following article, under the head of "Live Stock," is taken from it:

After a long-continued contest by the State Agricultural Society in behalf of improved breeds of live stock as a most important factor of financial resources, we are at last rewarded by noting its classification in reviews made by the great journals of the day, wherein they refer to the remunerative live stock sales of California-bred horses, and the promising outlook for this industry in the future.

Long and hard has our Society labored for this result; battling against ignorance, inexperience and prejudice, we have at last achieved distinction and notice in a financial way for the much-ridiculed horse and given this Society.

That the noble animal is part and parcel of California's renown cannot be further denied. The constant aid and encouragement given the breeding of horses by this Society has in a very great measure encouraged investment of a large amount of money in the industry, which is now making acceptable returns to the brave men who risked their time and money in the experiment of adding to California an additional resource.

We congratulate them upon their success, and say to them we still remain steadfast in you and your interest.

The great battles for supremacy waged under the auspices of this Society right here at home encouraged our breeders to go forth and meet the world with their products, and the result is that one of our great sires has, during the season just closed, achieved a world-wide reputation by having eight of his get obtain records of 2:15 or better, and only second in the list of money-winning sires in America.

As not this an accomplishment of untold benefit to the climate and soil of this richly endowed State?

Another mighty sire obtained the world's stallion record, so that we—California—the land so noted for its production of gold, of grain, of wine, of wool, of fruit, of timber, of hops, of everything, we might say, that is in any way connected with soil produce, have at this writing the fastest individual stallion of the world; the sire of the greatest number of extreme speed performers in the world; the sire (recently dead) that produced the greatest number of horses with trotting records of 2:30 or better; the largest thoroughbred stock farm in the world, and last, but not least, the highest-priced thoroughbred stallion in the world. Is not this fame? Is not this fortune enough for one young State, to have accomplished, and was not this society the founder of this great industry, and have we not the license to be proud of the part we have always taken in the encouragement of this interest?

Some may say after reading the above that this is but glory. Where does the money come from to warrant the continuance or justify the investment of capital in the breeding of live stock?

We can simply say sentiment is not a continual prompter to the investment of a capital. The shyness of this great power is proverbial; so if one but stops to reason, it must be admitted that returns for investment must certainly be available, otherwise the continual extension of this industry would not be going on.

When we state as a fact that this State annually sells the greatest number of thoroughbreds in the New York market that comes from any one breeding farm, amounting in the aggregate to $120,000, and that the sales of trotting stock aggregate $500,000 yearly in the same market, and that California sales here at home of improved-bred stock reaches $300,000 per annum, making an aggregate of nearly $1,000,000, can it longer be doubted that the interest in question is of some importance to California?

We most heartily indorse the attempt now being made before Congress by the leading breeders of cattle, to provide for the formation of a bureau of information and statistics in live stock. The object is to more fully appraise the producer of the character of the great meat markets of the world, and to more systematically regulate the supply and demand of meat products whereby the producer may be better informed of the condition of the markets from an official source before shipment of his stock. Without such information he is at the mercy, as is most generally the case, of a glutted market. He suffers and the industry suffers, as often "stock cattle" are run in and the range cattle reduced. Whereas, with proper information at hand, all this could be averted and encroachment on stock cattle prevented, selling only their product in such form as the market would warrant. This question is attracting much attention throughout the great cattle producing States of the Union and is looked upon with alarm; it may practically result in a beef famine in 1894 unless some action is taken to inform producers of the condition of affairs and check haphazard shipping of breeding cows and calves to glutted markets.

We think this can be accomplished through the agency of a National Bureau of Information and Statistics of Live Stock.

We ask that our Senators and Representatives in Congress take such steps as are in their power to aid in the information of this bureau.

The permanent establishment of the large abattoirs in California is a most progressive step for the meat-producing interests in California. The great lack of facilities for the working up of the entire carcass of slaughtered meats in large quantities has been a serious drawback to extension of the breeding of food meats. No attempts have been made to increase the supply above the ordinary demand for home consumption. With the ocean trade at our very doors, we have permitted cured meats to be shipped across the continent and sold to what should be our own customers. Under the new system just in process of organization, it is to be hoped that not only California but our Pacific Slope will see to its continuation, whereby a permanent market will be established for the sale of live stock raised on the slope. At these abattoirs every portion of the carcass will be utilized in some manner. The tanners get the hides, bones will be used for the manufacture of buttons, for refining and in the making of fertilizers, the hoofs and horns for the manufacture of combs, hairpins and other articles of trade. In fact, every portion of the slaughtered animal will be turned to commercial account.

Our importation of hams, bacon, lard and canned meats each year from the factories of the Western and Middle States is of such magnitude as to cause one not informed to doubt the figures. There was an average of six carloads of ten tons each per day for every day in the year 1892 brought from across the Rocky Mountains.

It will be said by the unprogressive people that we cannot feed stock in competition with the great corn-growing States that produce the bulk of meat for packing purposes; that in those States corn can be produced so cheaply as to enable the stock-raiser to grow meat at a much less cost than can we, and by reason of the character of feed necessary to make solid meats, so highly essential in packing, they have an advantage over us.

To this we will say that when it is found there are methods of properly handling an excessive quantity of meats, there will be no trouble in producing corn in abundance to give it quality. The reason we do not produce more corn is that for our present purpose we raise a much better forage.

Our alfalfa gives us a much cheaper and better fodder for producing growth for home consumption, and with this character of food for the breeding stock, and ample corn that will be forthcoming when necessary for fattening and stall feeding, we should make the production of food meats a prominent and paying business. California's advantages for this industry are superior, but the great number of available resources has caused this one to lie dormant. We have been contented in selling our wheat, wine, wood, horses and fruit, and buying such other commodities as we need from sister States. That we are able to produce all the necessities of life no one doubts, but lack of necessity to do so has rendered us neglectful in the full development, as yet, of our many advantages that lie in the cultivation of the soil.

This state of affairs is caused by lack of population, and an overundance of resources. The swine interest alone is one of great future, not only in this State, but in the United States, and we are disappointed to find a lack of increase in the production of this most prominent of meat products. Even in Europe a most pretentious falling off in the supply of pork was shown in 1892, as compared with the year previous. In England and Ireland alone there was shown to be a 25 per cent. decrease in the supply.

Prices corroborated this fact, the usual fall therein, common to the autumn months, failed to occur this year in either Europe or America, which fact indicates the supply was short of the demand. The great increase in the consumption of this prominent article of food is due in a great measure to the improved manner of curing and increased facilities for shipment, facts worthy of considering when calculating upon the future of this industry.

Hence, we say, new fields must be opened for the production of this product in quantities, and as California has all the natural advantages necessary, it is to be hoped an impetus will be given the pork interest here, and we are positive this will occur, providing increased facilities are given for the proper packing and curing of this great article of commerce. California, with her unequalled forage capacity, should be shipping meats instead of importing them.

The Live Stock Lien Bill.

The following bill was recently introduced in the California Assembly, and will be interesting to owners of live stock:

An Act to promote the business of breeding and propagating horses, cattle and other live stock; to enable owners to borrow money thereon without parting with the possession thereof, and to prevent fraudulent sales of incumbered live stock.

The people of the State of California represented in Senate and Assembly enact as follows:

SECTION 1. Pledges of live stock to secure the payment of money may be made as provided in this Act, and a lien therefor created upon the same that may exist independent of possession by the pledgee.

The term live stock as meant by this Act refers to and includes all horses and other animals, mules, cattle and sheep.

SEC. 2. Such pledges shall be designated live stock pledges, and may be substantially in the following form:

"I, [state time] after date, promise to pay to the order of [state name] [state name] dollars for value received, with interest from [state name] until [state name] at the rate of [state name] per cent. per annum, payable [state name] and if not so paid to compound at the same rate.

And to secure the same, I hereby pledge the following live stock now contained or now within the county of [state name] California, to-wit:

[Here give a description of the animals pledged, and, if desired, any facts that may better locate or identify the same.]

Which [state name] certify are owned by the undersigned, and free from incumbrance otherwise than stated herein. [Here mention all prior liens and incumbrances.]

(Signature) [state name]

(Residence) [state name]

ACKNOWLEDGMENT.

Every live stock lien, after having been duly acknowledged in the manner in which grants of real property are required by law to be acknowledged, shall be recorded in the office of the County Recorder of the county in which the pledge resides, or, if a corporation, in which it has its principal place of business, and also in the county in which the live stock pledged or any part thereof is situated at the time of the execution of the pledge. The fee of the County Recorder for recording the same shall be one dollar.

Every live stock pledge executed in conformity to the provisions of this Act, after having been duly acknowledged and recorded, shall be enforceable as simple contracts, and the same shall be deemed to be in the same manner and under the same conditions as a negotiable promissory note.

Other clauses relating to matters not in conflict with this Act or the laws of this State, and that impose no harsh conditions or unusual or unjust burdens upon the owner of the pledged live stock, may be included in the pledge.

SEC. 3. Until default shall have been made in the payment of the principal sum for which the security is given, the pledger and those holding title to the pledged property under him shall be entitled to the use and possession thereof so long as the pledger or those holding under him shall properly, reasonably and humanely care for the same, the pledgee or holder of the security to have the right in case the same be desired in lieu thereof, and the reasonable expenses incurred by the holder of the pledge in having the pledged property properly cared for shall be charged to the owner and shall become a part of the debt secured by the pledge and bear interest at the same rate until repaid.

SEC. 4. The live stock included in any live stock pledge may be sold, as in this Act provided, to satisfy the purpose of the pledge, as follows:

First. Any time after the expiration of thirty (30) days after default he made in the payment of the principal sum secured by the pledge, unless a longer time than thirty (30) days be specified in the pledge, and then after the expiration of the time so specified.

Second. Any time after the expiration of fifteen (15) days after judgment has been rendered in favor of the pledgee or holder of the security for the possession of the pledged stock because of the failure of the owner to properly, reasonably or humanely care for the same. But an order of sale may be made at any time during the pendency of an action for the possession of the pledged property when, in the discretion of the Court, it is proper that the same should be done to prevent great loss, damage or extraordinary expenses.

Third. Any time after the interest shall be due and remain unpaid where the note or pledge contains a provision to the effect that for non-payment of interest the whole debt becomes due, which shall in no case accrue in case the note or pledge provides for compounding the interest in case of non-payment.

SEC. 5. Upon a sale being made the holder of the pledge, or his duly authorized agent or local representative may, at the option of the pledged stock wherever it may be found, and may enter upon any premises for that purpose, and may proceed to sell the same by first giving fifteen days' notice thereof by an advertisement specifying time and place of sale, referring to the pledge and making mention of the kind of stock to be sold (in case of any of the animals having individual distinction, as mentioned in the pledge, the same must also be included), which advertisement must be published in a daily or weekly newspaper, published within the county, at least fifteen days prior to the sale. In case of a daily newspaper fifteen insertions shall be necessary and of a weekly two insertions. The pledgee may specify the newspaper in which case the notice must be published therein unless the same be no longer published.

SEC. 6. The sale may be had by the holder of the pledge, or by any one he may designate, and shall be at public auction to the highest bidder for cash. The sale may, likewise, be postponed by five publications in a daily or one in a weekly newspaper as often as may be deemed necessary by the person conducting the sale. The holder of the pledge and any one holding under him, or in his interest, may bid and purchase thereat. The animals shall be sold in the order the owner may in writing request, and only so many shall be sold as may be necessary to satisfy the debt, including expenses. The property must not be taken to an unreasonable or inaccessible place to be sold. A bill of sale delivered to the purchaser by the person conducting the sale of any animal sold shall vest in the purchaser all the right, title and interest the pledger had in the pledged live stock at the time of executing the pledge, free of all subsequent liens and incumbrances of every kind and character whatsoever.

SEC. 7. When bands or herds of horses, mules or cattle are pledged without any distinctive names or particular marks being given, and only a certain number is specified, the number may be selected at will from the entire lot of the pledger or his successors in interest.

SEC. 8. Pledged live stock shall not be removed from the county in which the pledge is recorded except for transient and temporary purposes, without the consent of the pledge-holder, and in case of an unauthorized removal except for transient or temporary purposes the pledge-holder shall be entitled to immediate possession thereof, as in case of failure to care for the pledged live stock, and may recover and may sell the same in the same manner, or may have the same kept at the expense of the owner, and the amount of such expense becomes a part of the debt secured.

SEC. 9. Pledges subsequent to the first pledge may be made subject to the prior lien of those of prior record.

SEC. 10. When the live stock of a horse-breeding farm or racing establishment is pledged, the vehicles, harness, traps, and other articles may be included in the pledge, and when the live stock of a dairyman are pledged the dairy implements and appurtenances may likewise be included in the pledge.

SEC. 11. Whenever a sale of any live stock of the kinds mentioned in this act is made the buyer may demand of the seller, and shall be entitled to, a bill or certificate of sale that sets forth the name of the seller, a true statement of all and every kind of incumbrance existing or claimed by anyone to exist thereon, or if none exist or are claimed thereon a true statement to that effect, and the same shall be a warranty thereof, according to its tenor, and in the event of any willful and material false representations being contained therein the seller shall be liable to the buyer to three times the amount of his damage, and the same, together with reasonable attorney's fees, may be recovered in a civil action thereon.

SEC. 12. Every person who knowingly or designedly in any bill or certificate of sale of any live stock makes any willfully false or fraudulent representations concerning either the ownership thereof, or imbrincations existing or claimed thereon, or who practices any fraud or deception in connection with intent to defraud, shall, if the purchase price equal or exceed one hundred dollars, be guilty of a felony, or if less than one hundred dollars, of a misdemeanor.

SEC. 13. This act shall take effect from and after its passage.

Montana's Good Bill.

[INTRODUCED BY J. B. LOSEE.]

An act entitled an act to create a lien for the service of stock horses and to protect agricultural and racing associations.

SECTION 1. That every owner or agent who may have the custody or control of any stallion, who shall charge a fee for the service of such stallion, shall, before advertising or offering such services to the public for any fee, reward or compensation, file with the Clerk of the County in which owner or owners or agents reside, or which such stallion shall be kept for service, a written statement giving the name, age, pedigree and record, if known, if not that the same is unknown, description, terms and conditions upon which such stallion will serve.

Upon filing such statement, the County Clerk shall issue a certificate or license to owner or owners or agents having custody and control of such stallion, that such statement has been filed in his office; the owner or owners or agents of such stallion shall then post a written or printed notice of a copy of the statement so filed with the County Clerk, in a conspicuous place in each locality in which said stallion shall be kept for service.

SEC. 2. Every owner or agent who shall proclaim or publish a false or fraudulent pedigree or record or statement of any kind regarding any stallion, or who shall neglect or refuse to comply with the provisions of Section 1 of this Act, shall forfeit all fees for the service of such stallion, and the person or persons who may have been deceived or defrauded by such false or fraudulent pedigree or record or statement, may sue and recover in any Court having jurisdiction, such damages as may be shown to have been sustained by reason of such false representation and fraud.

SEC. 3. Whenever the owner or agent of any stallion shall have complied with the foregoing provisions of this Act the services of such stallion shall become a lien on each mare served, together with a foal of such mare served from such service in an amount agreed upon between the parties at the time of service; or if no agreement was entered into by them, in such amount as specified as service fee of stallion or stallions in the statement of the owner or agent, filed with the County Clerk; provided, a notice of lien shall be filed within six months after such service; such lien shall terminate at the end of the year from the date of filing notice thereof, unless within that time an action shall be commenced for the enforcement thereof.

SEC. 4. It is hereby made unlawful for any person or persons knowingly to enter or cause to be entered for competition or to compete for any purse, prize, premium, stake or sweepstakes offered or given by any agricultural or other society, association or person or persons, in the State of Montana, any horse, mare, gelding, colt or filly under an assumed name or out of its class, where such prize, purse, premium, stake or sweepstakes is to be decided by a contest in trotting, running and pacing races.

SEC. 5. Be it further enacted; that any person or persons found guilty of a violation of Section 4 of this Act, shall, upon conviction thereof, be imprisoned in the State's prison for a period of not less than one year or more than three years, or imprisoned in the County jail of the county in which he is convicted for not less than six months or more than one year, and shall be fined in any sum not exceeding $1,000.

SEC. 6. This Act shall take effect from and after its approval, and all Acts or parts of Acts in conflict with the provisions of this Act are hereby repealed.

Notes From Napa.

[Special Correspondence of the BREEDER AND SPORTSMAN.]

NAPA, Feb. 9.—Several days ago we visited the stables of the Coombs Brothers. The love of horse comes to these gentlemen as a birthright. Nathan Coombs, one of California's earliest and most progressive pioneers, was one of the most successful breeders of thoroughbreds of his day, and he helped to stock California with the best racehorses at that time. Among the noted ones owned by Mr. Coombs were: Lodi, Billy Cheatham, Ashland and others. He was a liberal patron of the turf and helped to found and establish some of the principal race courses and racing organizations. As his sons grew up, true to the law of heredity, they sought to have a number of thoroughbreds racing in California and Oregon, but as the harness horse became popular in this State, Messrs. Nathan and Frank Coombs foresaw the future possibilities of the trotting-horse industry, and commenced breeding a few trotters, and their success is apparent. Among the first colts raised was the famous race mare Lilly Stanley, 2:17.4; her record is no measure of her speed; she trotted the middle half at Petaluma in a race in 1:45 when heavy with foal; the record is no better, and she was never driven for a record. Her six-year-old son, San Francisco Oct. 28, 1888, wherein she defeated six horses, winning the fourth, fifth and sixth heats in 2:09.4, 2:19.4, 2:21.4, prove her one of the best and gamest race mares in California up to that time. She should have had a mark of 2:12. We had to stop to admire her, as she was contentedly grazing in the lot; she has a marked individuality, and at all times shows the highest form of intelligence. Her grade as a broodmare is already established, for there is no doubt that her two-year-old colt by Director is phenomenally fast. Lilly Stanley is now heavy with foal to Guide, 2:16.4.

Running in the same lot is her famous old dam Dolly McMann, one of the hardest, most vital individuals for her age in any country; her limbs are as clean as a colt's, and if her pedigree could only be fully established it would be found to contain some choice blood lines. She was one of the best double-team mares ever brought to California and could trot in 2:35 double.

Comedy, a beautiful black filly, four years old, by Director, out of Dolly McMann, should make a great race mare. She is a perfect model; while she shows some of the stout, smooth configuration of her dam, she shows that she is a true Director. The Dame II, 3:04 five years old, son of Stamford, 2:07.4, out of Dolly McMann, is a grand young horse, fully sixteen hands high, and proportioned in every way; in color, style and looks he is more like his sire than any son I know of; he is exceptionally good in every particular, and will make a great sire; his first crop of colts are yearlings, and every one is the color and conformation of the sire, and trot is their natural trait. Mr. Coombs has the black mare Coloma, by Major Gray, sire of King Ors, 2:23.4, dam Fontana (dam of Silas Skinner, 2:17, Flora Belle, 2:24, Veronica, 2:29), by Almont 33; second dam Fanny Williams (dam of Bay Chieftain, 2:28.4), by Abdallah 15, etc. This is a superior mare in conformation, looks and pedigree; she cannot fall to be a great broodmare, as she came from sires and dams that all produce; her sire died young and sired but few colts, but they are trotters. Mr. Nathan Coombs, who has devoted his time and attention to the breeding and care of the stock, tells me that Coloma, when broken to harness, had considerable speed; she has never been trained, but put to breeding soon as broken. Coloma is full sister to San Diego, 2:36, which is no measure of his speed. He is sure to get a low mark this season. Mr. Bannerman, who has charge of the Coombs horses, led out a fine-looking yearling out of Dolly McMann, and by one of the grandest-bred sires in this country, Lord Olive, by Sable Wilkes, 2:18, dam Veronica, 2:29, by Alcona 730, second dam Fontana (dam of Silas Skinner, 2:17, Flora Belle, 2:24, Veronica, 2:29, San Diego, 2:36), by Almont 33; third dam Fanny Williams (dam of Bay Chieftain, 2:28), by Abdallah 15, etc. This is a well-balanced, good-looking colt and a natural trotter to water, and with his breeding great results may be expected. Mr. Coombs showed us a number of other well-bred fillies, among them a three-year-old by Mortimer, 2:27, son of Electioneer, dam by Mohawk Chief. This is a fine-looking, large filly. NAPA.

Figuring On the Big Handicaps.

[Written for the BREEDER AND SPORTSMAN.]

The entries to the Brooklyn Handicap of 1893 are not so liberal as in former years, but the quality is excellent, and as the amount of the entrance fee has been increased, there will doubtless be quite as many starters this season as in the past. The top weight horse is the aged, rejuvenated cripple, Longstreet, with 127 pounds, while the four-year-old Lamplighter has only two pounds less, Banquet, 123, Kingston and Major Domo with 122 each. Lamplighter, as a three-year-old, and with 117 pounds up, heat Kingston, an aged horse, one and one-eighth miles, three lengths, the latter carrying 122 pounds. With a year's age Lamplighter gets eight pounds put on him, and as he easily beat Kingston last season, should experience no trouble this in packing the 125 pounds allotted him and disposing of the old son of Spendthrift, who has not of late appeared to like a distance. Major Domo was beaten half a length for the Suburban last year with 115 pounds up, Lamplighter (104 pounds) being at his neck and gaining very fast. Judge Morrow won the Brooklyn Handicap of 1892 with 116 up, just what he is asked to carry in 1893, heating Pessara, 115 up, a head, Russell, 114, three lengths away. The latter was beaten off in the Suburban with 116 up, and gets in the Brooklyn this season at 112 pounds, Banquet took up 126 pounds and won the Manhattan Handicap, at Morris Park, one and one-quarter miles, in 2:07; Kildeer, 4, 105 up, second, and Montana (the Suburban winner), 119 pounds, third. This makes Banquet dangerous in the Brooklyn at 123 pounds, provided he is in form, though he was not at his best in 1892 until late in the season. Lamplighter also is in the same division, as is Judge Morrow, who won the Brooklyn in 2:08 3/4, the track being slow on that day. Strathmeath, who is in at 114, heat Banquet a mile and a quarter by a length last year at Brooklyn at even weights, 122 pounds. Lamplighter winning the race with 112 up by the same distance. Lamplighter also defeated the pair at Coney Island, carrying 115 pounds to Banquet's 124 and Strathmeath's 118. As a mare has never run first, second or third, let alone win this event, and are seldom good until about July, La Tosca and Yorkville Belle, at 116 pounds each, can hardly be considered as being fairly in the hunt. Mars was a fairly good colt last season, his best race being in the Stevens Stake, mile and five-eighths, which he won in 2:53 with 122 up from Kilkenny, who carried 117 pounds. Parvenu, at 114 pounds, appears to have an excellent chance, having won nine races in succession last season, most of them with good weight up and at a mile, in only fair company, however. Parvenu is by Uncas (son of Lexington and Coral, by Vandal), dam Necromancy, by imp. Stonehege, and therefore bred to "stay the route." Lastly, we must consider Wildwood, the best three-year-old in California in 1892, a strong bidder for first honors if he lands at Brooklyn in good shape and in time to become acclimated. This son of Wildwood won five races in succession last fall and during the early winter, conceding lumps of weight to every horse he met. He won twice in one day, defeating, among others, the good little filly Esperanza. In his last race but one Wildwood picked up 120 pounds and won in a romp by nearly two lengths from Happy Day and a good field in 1:55 1/4 for the mile and an eighth—this after he had been pocketed and forced to run around his field in the last quarter of a mile. Wildwood is certainly exceedingly dangerous in the Brooklyn Handicap at 105 pounds, provided he is ridden by a competent pilot. Our climate will, too, enable the four-year-old Wildside colt to be further advanced in his work than his rivals. Therefore, no accidents occurring, the Brooklyn Handicap race should be between Wildwood, Strathmeath, Lamplighter, Judge Morrow, Parvenu and Banquet, and we like them in the order named.

In the Suburban Handicap Longstreet, as in the Brooklyn, is given the highest weight, this time 130 pounds. Lamplighter and Tammany are asked to carry 127, Banquet 125 and Kingston 124 pounds. These are pretty stiff imposts when it is considered that such a wonderfully fast horse as the five-year-old Dr. Hashrouck is asked to carry but 116 and Strathmeath only 118. Dr. Hashrouck was confined last season mostly to the sprints, but did negotiate a mile at Morris Park carrying 126 pounds in 1:39 1/4; Nomad, three years, 104 pounds, second, and Kildeer, four years, 104 pounds, third. At Coney Island last year Dr. Hashrouck, four years, 107 pounds, defeated the Realization Stake winner of 1891, Potomac, four years, 107 pounds, at seven furlongs, doing the distance in 1:27 2/5, the track being quite slow. Such good ones as Correction, four years, 105 1/2 pounds; Tournament, Chesapeake and Reporter, 107 each, were behind Hashrouck on this occasion. He defeated Kingston at even weights (127 pounds) and was beaten a length by Lowlander in a mile and an eighth dash at Saratoga, giving the winner ten pounds and forcing him to run the distance in 1:53. Santa Anna, Badge and other good ones were in this most excellent race. Major Domo, six years, took up 116 pounds and ran a mile in 1:39 3/5 at Coney Island last season, winning easily by a length from the three-year-old Rex, who packed but 97 pounds. In the Suburban of 1893 Major Domo is asked to carry 115 pounds, the same weight he carried in the event last season, when Lamley made too much use of the horse at the start, and consequently had nothing left to finish on. Previous to this the brown horse had packed 120 pounds to victory in the Parkway Handicap at Brooklyn, mile and a sixteenth, running under the wire six lengths in front of Russell, four years, 117 pounds, in 1:47 flat. He also had won the Brookdale Handicap at Brooklyn, one and one-eighth miles, in 1:54, carrying 112 pounds; Russell, 117 pounds, second, and Longstreet, 125 pounds, third. This was won by a length and a half, ten lengths between second and third. If Major Domo could give Longstreet eleven and one-half lengths with thirteen pounds difference in weight in his favor, he should beat the old son of Longfellow by nearly twelve lengths in the Suburban of 1893, where the latter is giving him fourteen pounds. Longstreet did manage to defeat Judge Morrow and Raceland at even weights (126 pounds) and in the mud at Brooklyn for the St. James Hotel Stakes, mile and a quarter, but now he is asked to give Judge Morrow fourteen pounds, notwithstanding he beat the Judge but a length and a half. Lowlander, a five-year-old horse, is handicapped at 105 pounds, and as he on two occasions during 1892 (within three days) ran a mile and an eighth on a Saratoga regulation track in 1:53 with 106 pounds up, it will be seen that his chances in the Suburban Handicap are, at the weights, very rosy. He seems to like the route, too. Rey del Rey, brother to Emperor of Norfolk and El Rio Rey, has had a year's rest, and at 105 pounds should go well. Reclaire did little or nothing last year. Tammany and Lamplighter both showed ability to pack weight and go a long journey, but the Spendthrifts seem to train on the best, so that we shall look for Lamplighter to be the better horse of the pair. If the distance in the race was one and one-half miles, or even two miles, it would look like a good thing for Lamplighter, but as it is a little "short," some of the others may heat him out easily enough. On form and at the weights allotted it looks like a very close thing between Lowlander, Major Domo and Dr. Hashrouck, with Lamplighter and Strathmeath not far away. We fancy them in the order named.

In the Metropolitan Handicap, nine furlongs, Tammany and Lamplighter are loaded down with 134 pounds each, St. Florian 133. Wildwood is dangerous with but 112 pounds in the saddle, and if Wadsworth is himself again when this race is run it ought to be a pretty good thing for the Longfellow colt, who is put in the rich stake at 111 pounds. Charade, who beat the crack Tammany for the Tidal Stakes, one mile, at equal weights (122 pounds), and ran a dead heat with Strathmeath in a mile dash on another occasion, appears to like just this distance and the weights (104 pounds), but won his first race, one mile, at Brooklyn in 1892, carrying 122 pounds, defeating Mars, Patron, Actor, Coxswain and others at equal weights. The great Lady Violet is in at 103 pounds, but three-year-old fillies in the spring of the year are "mighty ornartin critters," so we will pass her. Sir Francis, the son of Miser and Thora, favorite for the American Derby, is certainly not at outs with the handicapper, getting in at 102 pounds, and our colt, Monowai, should be close to the front at the finish with his 95 pounds up. If Sir Francis starts we should certainly favor his chances, as the winner of the rich Matron Stakes showed that he could carry a good deal more weight and win, even as a two-year-old. But he will in all likelihood be sent for the $60,000 American Derby, as will Monowai, so that we rather like the chances of Wadsworth, Charade and Wildwood, with Lady Violet for a good thing if she comes to the post fit and well. St. Florian gave Lamplighter eight pounds and a heating at a mile and an eighth, so that, should this unfortunate horse get into form, the race should go to the Morris stable representative. However, we doubt very much if the great horse will ever be himself again.

The Togogan Slide Handicap, six furlongs, is likely to fall to the lot of some quick starter, so that Fairy (128 pounds), Russel (127), Vestibule (111) and Topgallant (102) should be the front row lot, with Dr. Hashrouck, even though he is asked to carry 138 pounds, "not far away." Fairy will be hard to defeat in this event, if she is in anything like her form of last fall, for the Argyle mare wound up last season by winning a six-furlong race from Rosa H., Aloha, Vestibule and others, carrying 131 pounds and giving away anywhere from 12 to 20 pounds to everything in the race. In her previous race she carried 137 pounds and heat a good field of ten, five furlongs, in 0:58 1/2, the best race ever run with such weights up, surely. Dr. Hashrouck carried 122 pounds when he made the record for five eighths of a mile, 0:57. Vestibule, in receipt of three pounds from Kingston, beat the wonderful old horse a length in a five-furlong dash at Coney Island, and afterward won a seven-furlong dash in the mud. Any horse that can beat Kingston any distance will, in the language of the tout, "hear watching." Russell was always a pretty good animal to get away. St. Florian has been a lame horse, but if he stands training Fairy, Dr. Hashrouck or any of those we have named will have a hard time giving the son of imp. St. Blaise and Feu Follet dust. The old gelding, Joe Cotton, at 111 pounds, though a fast horse, will find himself outclassed in the Togogan Slide Handicap.

Lamplighter, at 124 pounds, Lochatchee at 116, Nomad at 112, Wildwood at 105 and Centella at 100 pounds should make a very interesting fight in the Maturity Handicap, for four-year-olds, mile and an eighth, and the winner is hard to pick. On this way, as a matter of course, the people will not have it that any horse of his own age can give Wildwood nineteen pounds, so that we think the California colt has a very good chance to carry off the rich plum. However, good two-year-olds often make poor three-year-olds and mediocre horses time and again develop into high-class race horses, so that all our calculations may be set at naught. Time alone will tell. REZOT.

Danton Moultrie and Soudan.

There are few better-bred sons of Guy Wilkes in California than Danton Moultrie. His dam is a sister to two performers; he combines the blood of Steinway, Electioneer, Geo. Wilkes and Mamhrino Patchen. As an individual Danton Moultrie is one of the finest-looking and most promising young stallions in California, and he is owned by a gentleman who believes in developing his trotters. This stallion will have an opportunity of entering the charmed circle this fall. Soudan is well known in California; his oldest colts are only three years of age, and the only one that was ever trained got a race record last fall. Soudan is by a great sire out of one of the greatest of broodmares, Samuel Gamble who drove Lady Babcock three heats in 2:32, 2:31 and 2:28, last half of last mile in 1:10. Captain Cole and A. Hayward were the timers. When owners of broodmares are looking around they should breed to developed sires out of developed dams that have their produce earning records everywhere. The finest of pasture and the best of care taken of mares. The Moorland Stock Farm one is of the best-appointed in the State. See the advertisement.

Prize Winning Stock.

Next Thursday at the salesyard belonging to Messrs. Killip & Co., there will be sold at auction the finest collection of draught horses, broodmares, colts and fillies ever offered in California. They are all representatives of their distinctive families that have won prizes against all others wherever exhibited. No more perfectly built or better bred animals were ever shown and our farmers should form clubs and societies to purchase a few of these to improve their stock. The fame of Theodore Skillman as a judge of horses extends throughout America and Europe, and as one of the pioneers in the importing of horses to this country, he has gained the name of "never having made a mistake." He selected and brought this collection to this State.

TURF AND TRACK

The Sulky.

HOCK WILKES will make the season of 1893 at Geo. P. Bull's splendid stock farm near San Jose.

Doc, the famous trotting dog, was killed in a railroad wreck at New Brunswick, N. Y., January 24th.

IT WOULD NOT surprise us to see Andy McDowell and John Kelly go East with Mr. Salisbury's string of trotters this year.

LEVI W. RAY, a pupil of Dan Mace, and an old-time Eastern driver, died recently at Manchester, N. H., of heart disease.

JAMES DUSTIN is visiting the stock farms in Maine. It seems that he is not looking for a saloon business in New York after all.

DON'T get overloaded; sell when you have a fair offer, then you will not have to unload at some future time at a great sacrifice.

BONNIE MCGREGOR, 2:13½, by Robert McGregor, was sold in Lexington January 30th to Ben B. Kenney, of Lexington, for $1,700.

MESSRS. OTTINGER & KEATING are negotiating with P. J. Maloney, of Menlo Park, for the handsome stallion Menlo Falls, 2:27½.

SONS of Hambletonian have sired 1182 2:30 performers, and his daughters have produced eighty-two trotters and pacers in 2:30.

SEVENTEEN mares are book'd already to Boodle, 2:21½. This is a very encouraging beginning for this well-bred trotting stallion.

THE three Sideys which got records as two-year-olds are Fleet, 2:24; Sid Fleet, 2:26½, and Highland Lass, 2:27½; average, 2:25 4/7.

ESTATE, by Elector, out of the dam of Lord Byron, 2:19, has been sold by A. G. Danforth, Washington, Ill., to J. G. Voss, Indianapolis, Ind.

THE La Siesta Stock Farm horses will be seen on the circuit this fall. There are several Eros youngsters that will make low marks at the races.

BEN DUBOISE will go with Millard Saunders to the Valensiu Farm. Ben is a splendid trainer of colts, and is one of the most careful and painstaking of men.

L. A. RICHARDS, of Grayson, paid this office a visit last week. He says the Elector are fast trotters as soon as they are old enough to get away from the side of their dams.

JOHN KELLY is doing exceedingly well with the colts and fillies at Pleasanton. Everyone of them seems to be gaining a little muscle, losing extra flesh and acquiring more speed.

WM. MURRAY has secured a tract of thirty acres of excellent pasture land adjoining Pleasanton for the use of the broodmares to be sent to his fine young stallion Diabolo, 2:14½.

WHAT will Sidney bring? This is the query heard on every side among horsemen. He will never bring at an auction what he is worth as a sire; of this all breeders are positive.

THE principal topic discussed by horsemen is the approaching Asylum Farm auction sale. There never was such a collection of well-bred animals offered at public auction before in this State.

THE man who has good judgment and breeds trotters as though he expected to race every one of them will always make money, but the time has gone by to raise horses to fool somebody else with.

F. D. MEYERS has a very nice row of stalls erected near the Pleasanton track. He is soon to send East for a number of exceedingly well-bred young trotters and will have them in readiness for the fall races.

HENRY PIERCE arrived from the East last Saturday. His purchases will be mated with good stallions, and in a few years the fame of the produce will be as widely spread as the stock owned by Leland Stanford.

CHAS. BURNS, of Woodland, has a slashing fine colt by Alexander Button, 2:26½, out of a mare by a son of Almont, that will be heard of this fall on the circuit. He is like all the Buttons—a race horse of the first water.

F. L. WARNER, late of Hartford, but who trained for the Souther Farm, California, last year, will go back to California in charge of several of the recent purchases for the Santa Rosa Farm, including Vida Wilkes, 2:19½.—Daily Spirit.

IF ALCONA 730, Alconer, Caducas and Whippleton King are not disposed of at private sale before the 7th of March they will be sold in the highest bidder on that day at the great auction sale to be held at the Napa race track.

GEO. BLEL, "Shorty," is working a number of Asylum Farm colts and fillies at Petaluma, preparing them for the great sale which is to take place at the Bay District track March 2d and 3d. He has some great ones among them.

WHEN the Executive Committee of the American Trotting Register gets through cutting out the time records that do not conform with their views it will be time for the breeders to step up and say their piece, says the American Sportsman.

WITH a $12,500 Champion Stallion Stake in New York and a $10,000 event for stallions eligible to the 2:12 class in Boston the Eastern tracks should prove a very desirable stamping ground for the top sawyers in the stallion world in 1893.

THE following stables of trotters from California will be seen on the circuit in 1893. Pleasanton Stock Farm, trainers and drivers, J. Kelly and A. McDowell; Ottinger & Keating. Thomas Keating, trainer and driver; Orrin A. Hickok with his own horses and a number from Palo Alto; San Mateo Stock Farm horses, with John A. Goldsmith, trainer and driver. A number of Californians will also go to Montana and Colorado this year.

WHETHER you like pacers or not, the purest-bred trotting sires and dams are constantly getting them. There is one consolation, however, the trotting-bred pacer generally is fast, and a fast pacer is worth more money every time than a slow trotter.

BROWN JUG, the game son of Nutwood, is advertised to stand for the season of 1893 at Salinas. Every colt and filly by this horse seems endowed with speed and gameness. He will have some fast ones to his credit this fall or we will be greatly mistaken.

WORK on the race track at the Moorland Stock Farm has been delayed by the recent heavy rains. When it is ready to be worked upon, the young Soudans that will get their first lessons there will prove as fast as those by any stallion on this coast.

THE consignment to be sold next month by the Tattersall-Fasig Company at Cleveland, belonging to A. Spreckles and D. McCarty, consists of the following: Princess Alice, 2:16; Jessie, 2:22; Cleopatra (trial, 2:20½); Flora M., 2:16; Senator J., 2:29; Maggie, 2:20, and Chloe, 2:23½.

J. CORCORAN has quite a string of promising trotters and pacers at the Petaluma track preparing them for the races. The roads around Petaluma seem to be the training ground for all the trotters, as the course is too muddy; the stables there, however, are pretty nearly all taken.

A. McDOWELL was the recipient of a beautiful oil painting last month from Marcus Daly, of Montana. It is a life-like likeness of Yolo Maid, and is the work of that great artist, H. Cross. Mr. McDowell is very proud of it, and takes great pleasure in showing everyone the beautiful work of art.

ONE of the most familiar men seen at the San Jose race track was L. D. Downing, the popular marshal of the track. He was considered the best marshal ever seen on the Sacramento track and officiated there at the fair last fall. By a letter received from San Jose we learn that this gentleman died some weeks ago.

SIDNEY W. GILES, for many years the able and courteous Secretary of the Island Park Driving Association, at Albany, N. Y., has succeeded W. B. Fasig as Secretary of the Cleveland (O.) Driving Park Company. Mr. Giles is a worthy successor to Mr. Fasig, who is manager of the trotting department of the Tattersalls Company in America.

H. S. HOGBOOM will have ten horses of his stable shipped to San Francisco on the steamer Pomona to-morrow, including Sacramento Girl, 2:30; Josie M. (dam of Lucky B) two Waldstein yearlings, a Noonday filly, a four-year-old by Soudan and Remember Me. He will make his home in Woodland, Yolo Co., this summer.—Rohnerville Journal.

THIS is the way J. H. Schultz, of Parkville Farm, advertises his latest purchases: Regal Wilkes, 2:11½, $100 the season; Jay Wilkes, by Guy Wilkes, dam Sweetness, 2:21 (dam of Sidney, 2:19½), $50 the season; Pandect, by Pancoast, 2:21½, dam Reina Victoria, $50 the season; Baron Rose by Stamboul, 2:07½, dam Minnehaha (dam of Alcazar, 2:20½), $50 the season.

RECOMPENSE 16,850, by Antevolo, 2:19½, out of Lottie C. by Fred Arnold; second dam Rosaline (dam of Alpheus, 2:25) by Major Mono, is one of the finest-looking young stallions in San Joaquin County. He is owned by M. E. Warren, of Linden, and next fall will be given an opportunity of entering the charmed circle. There is no doubt he will do so if what he has already shown in the way of speed is any criterion.

JOHN GREEN, of Dublin, Alameda county, has a colt that is not only handsome, but is even speedier than his half-brother, Directum, 2:11½, was at his age. He is by Richards' Elector out of Stewardine (dam of Electra, 2:23½, and Directum, 2:11½), by Venture. This youngster in color is a dark seal-brown with tan muzzle and banks, and from what we have heard we judge that his fortunate owner has a record-breaker in him.

DIRECTUM, 2:11½, is sire of a filly out of a mare by Belle Alta, second dam by January's St. Lawrence, third dam by Duroc, a thoroughbred horse purchased in early days from an emigrant by Martin Murphy, of San Jose. This filly is a perfect little beauty, being a deep dark bay in color, and she shows that trotting is her gait. She was foaled June 24, 1892. John Green, of Dublin (owner of Directum), is the proud owner of this youngster. Directum was only bred to eight mares last year; this year he will be bred to about fifteen.

WHEN Director, 2:17, was bred to Lily Stanley, 2:17½, Monroe Salisbury remarked: "From this union I expect to see the two-minute trotter." His prophecy will be almost fulfilled if the two of her colts in training are not injured. Lily Stanley as a yearling could make a saddle horse stretch his neck to beat her trotting, and a gamer, better-gaited, stronger-limbed mare never wore iron than she. The owner of Director should secure her, for she was the fastest trotting mare ever bred to the horse, and we believe will prove to be the best. This mare will be sold at auction in Napa March 8th.

IF Cope Stinson, who ranks in the front as a horse trainer, brings his stable down the Grand Circuit this year, he will capture many fat purses. Cope is well known, and is at present living in Brantford, across the border, where he is handling a powerful stable for the coming season's campaign. Besides the string that has been tried, consisting of Geneva, 2:14, Tuscarora, 2:22½, Gov. Stanford, 2:22½, Vrosky, 2:24½, Saboy, 2:19½. These are a lot of youngsters that it would be hard to duplicate in America, with respect to breeding and individual excellence. This lot in training is in excellent condition physically, and among the number there will certainly be some stake winners.

JUSTICE WOOD had an interesting civil suit before him yesterday, in which testimony was brought out showing some of the inside workings of racehorse men. Sandy Smith, a jockey, sued Thomas Connell, owner of a filly that won several races during the last season, for $196. In his complaint Smith alleged that he was engaged by Connell to take care of his horse, being promised half the winnings. The $196 was part of a purse won at Salem. Connell claimed that at Vancouver Smith threw a race, and had in other ways betrayed his confidence. Smith, on the contrary, declared that Connell instructed him to hold the horse back if there was any money in it, for he was "out for the stuff," and cared nothing for the reputation of the horse. However, Smith says he refused to agree to this, but, nevertheless, the filly lost, Justice Wood will render a decision Monday.—Oregonian.

THERE is talk of a large combination auction sale being held about the fifteen of March in this city by Messrs. Killip & Co. There will be consignments from Moorland Stock Farm and T. C. Snider's farm and owners of other prominent young trotters. These spring sales should be largely attended by farmers, who must pick up standard-bred, finely-formed individuals and breed them to the choicest individuals procurable if they wish to make any money in the business.

THE stallioner who has business tact returns a mare to her owner in as good condition as she was when received. We know of a man who was in the habit of returning mares and colts that were poorly nourished and infested with vermin, with their feet in bad condition. This man received good pay for the care of animals left in his charge, but had not the business sense or good principle to carry out his part of the agreement. Although his stallion was well-bred and desirable, his patronage dwindled to nothing, solely because his owner was a short-sighted, mean fool.—Horseman.

EL MAHDI, 2:25½, the premier stallion at H. A. Moyer's Farm, Syracuse, N. Y., died January 28th of typhoid pneumonia, after an illness of thirty-six hours. El Mahdi was a chestnut stallion, foaled in 1885. Sired by Onward, 2:25½, dam Lady Bunker (dam of Guy Wilkes, 2:15½), William L., sire of Axtell, 2:12, etc.), he was well-bred enough to have made the great sire his owner predicted he would be. During the past season two of his get took creditable records—El Flora, 4 p. 2:18½, and Fulano, 3, 2:23½—and others trotted dangerously near the standard notch. Mr. Moyer has sustained a severe loss in the death of El Mahdi, but we believe he has pluck enough to give the breeders of his vicinity another stallion that will be a worthy successor to the dead son of Onward.

THE North Pacific Trotting Horse Breeders' Association met at the office of Baily & Wisdom in this city and elected the following officers for the ensuing year: President, Van B. DeLashmunt; vice-president, Jay Beach; secretary, J. W. Bailey; treasurer, William Kerron. A liberal and attractive programme was arranged and adopted, which provides for horses of all classes and ages. A report of the last year's meeting was received, which, considering that it was the first meeting held, was very satisfactory. The prospects of the coming year look very bright for the breeders of the light harness horse. The programme and place of meeting will be announced as soon as arrangements for a track can be made.—Portland Oregonian.

A PROMINENT Kentucky breeder writes that it now appears that the future demand for the trotting horse will require the following essential qualities: First, speed sufficient to warrant the belief that he will be able to win money in stake and purse races. Second, soundness, with style, high finish and a good individual at all points. Third, good pedigree and capable of producing a uniform high rate of speed, and a producer of fine, stylish roadsters as well. These qualities are now essential in a sire. The basis having been reached, holders of classes not wanted, of course, will relegate such to the rear and accept ordinary farm prices for them. The business thus placed on a sound basis, fixed values may be appreciated and stock in the future will be sold on its merits. It is to be regretted that many investors in the past looked alone to pedigree, without regard to the more essential qualities, and it should be a valuable lesson to beginners. It is the belief that on this basis the future of the trotting horse interest never looked brighter.

THE trotters belonging to the late Duke of Marlborough were sold in England January 9, by Messrs. Tattersalls, and brought the following prices: Sea Fern, bay mare, 1888, by Belmont, dam Water Lily, by Hero of Thorndale; Mr. Schaute, $1100. Puerlia, bay mare, 1888, by Shawmut, dam Pulcheria, by Harold; Mr. Harrison, $550. Bay filly, 1888, by King Rene, dam Laura, by Bristow; Mr. Harrison, $300. Copywright, bay mare, 1887, by Lord Russell, dam Novel, by Princeps; Mr. Milner, $550. Aruna, by mare, 1887, by Lord Russell, dam Alga, by Princeps; Mr. Crommelin, $380. Bay filly, 1892, by Guy Wilkes, dam Sea Fern, by Belmont; Mr. Schaute, $285. Dupee, 2:35, 1888, by Lord Russell, dam Alice West, by Almont; Sir H. Simpson, $1300. Handsome Boy, 2:30, 1886, by Ed Kimball, dam by Woodford; J. Higham, $925. Malta, 1886, by Standard Bearer, dam Laura Gould; Duke of Marlborough, $1,000. Total, $6,550; average, $716.

PIERCE BROS. are putting the best blood on their stock farm adjacent to Santa Rosa. Many thousands of dollars have been invested by them recently. Among the brood mares now at the farm are Bon Bon, cost $7,250; Biscara, by Dictator, cost $8,750; By-By, sister of the great Lockheart, cost $10,000. Among the colts are L. W. Russell, by Stamboul, cost $1,190; one by Albert W., dam Middleton Mare, dam of Flying Jib, cost $1,950; Rachel Welch, by Win. L., a full brother to Guy Wilkes, also sire of Axtell, who sold for $105,000, cost $2,000; Alto Villa, by Palo Alto, her dam Sultana by Sultan; the bay filly Hilda, by Albert W., cost $1,900, and others too numerous to mention by noted sires, such as Stamboul, 2:07½; William L.; Albert W., 2:20; Director, 2:17; Charlie Wilkes, 2:21½; Simmons, sire of Simmicolon, 2:13; and Nutwood, the greatest of sires; Memento, 2:17, dam Trix by Hambletonian 725, is entered for the BREEDER AND SPORTSMAN'S futurity stakes with Directress, by Director, dam Phaeola, the colt in direct line of Minnehaha and Beautiful Bells; and lastly the little pacer Directrix, by Director, put down by Salisbury, the noted horseman, as the coming wonder.—Democrat.

WILLIAM CORBITT, the proprietor of Chicago Farm, where Guy Wilkes reigns, passed through San Mateo last week en route to California. He expressed himself as well satisfied with the sale of the San Mateo horses in New York, which demonstrated that the market for first-class material is still safe and sound. A few years ago, while "doing" the California farms and ranches, we were impressed by the individual excellence, irrespective of breeding, that marked the San Mateo broodmares. Mr. Corbett has learned that his care in selecting only good individuals to breed from has paid. The glamour of a rich pedigree should never be accepted as covering up the sin of inferior individuality in broodmares or stallions. San Mateo has no trainer engaged, nor does Mr. Corbett contemplate engaging one now. The mainstays of the Corbett racing string are in John A. Goldsmith's stable at Washingtonville, N. Y., and new recruits will be sent that great reinsman from California in the spring. Mr. Corbett does not contemplate campaigning in California this year. He says that the conditions framed by the California associations are not encouraging to breeders who campaign horses of the first class. There is more money in sight east of the Rockies for stars of the first magnitude.—Horseman.

The Saddle.

T. H. STEVENS has sold the four-year-old gelding Warplot, by Hindoo, dam Morgan Girl, to the Orwell Stable for $500.

GLYCERINE, by imp. Glenelg, dam Mollie Able, by Lexington, died a few nights ago. She was the dam of Waiting and others.

ED CORRIGAN has engaged Luke Tully, who is known in the East as the owner of Ovid, Little Jake, etc., to train for him this year.

THREE CHEERS, William Murry's famous stallion, is looking exceedingly well—in fact, a gentleman down from Sacramento this week says the old horse looks like a four-year-old.

THE Redd Bros. sold a couple of thoroughbred fillies to Tom Shannon, of Lexington, Ky., last week, for $900. One was by Magnetizer, and the other by Egmont, out of a Gilroy mare.

STARTER JAMES CALDWELL has bought for Eugene Leigh the chestnut stallion Forester, from Chas. Reed, for $5,000. Leigh will send the horse to his farm, and breed him to several of his mares.

WAWERUS, by Alarm, dam Maggie B. B. (dam of Iroquois, Panique, Jaconet and Harold), by imp. Australian, is siring some good winners. Berndine has been in front very frequently at Roby of late.

J. M. JEFFCOCK, while at Lexington, told several gentlemen that his colt, by imp. King Galop, out of The Maid, was the best he ever owned, and he expects great things of him. He worked three furlongs in 0:36 with 122 pounds up without the least urging.

GEOFFREY, in the Murry string at Sacramento, is rapidly getting into shape. He had an abscess on his chest, and although it was lanced and drained, a small lump is left as a reminder. It will not, however, interfere with his racing this spring. Pricelle, the bay two-year-old son of imp. Cyrus and Precious, has developed into a slashing youngster, while the others in the string are doing well.

TWELVE horses left Oakland last Sunday for Los Angeles, where they will race. Dave Bridges sent Donna Lilla, Waif, Typesetter, Montalva and McGinnis' First; D. R. Dickey sent Pescador, Fin Slaughter and one other. Lottie Mills also went along. Nearly all the horses that were quartered at Oakland will go, and the Los Angeles meeting promises to be a grand success from every point of view.

MATT STORN, the well-known turfman, has added to his string the following well-bred two-year-olds: Chestnut filly by Warwick, dam Mischieff, by Thad Stevens, second dam the famous Katy Pease, by Planet; bay colt by imp. Cheviot, dam Arathusa, by Joe Hooker, second dam Priscilla, by Thad Stevens, third dam Eliza (dam of Monowai), by Norfolk, and brown colt by imp. Greenback, dam Priscilla, by Thad Stevens. All these youngsters are said to be very promising.

ROBERT SMITH, the well-known horseman, will this season have charge of the horses of Hugh Kirkendall, of Helena, Mont. In the stable are Nevada, Montana, X, Clara Porter, sister to Clara Porter, Dot, Miss Nelson and a brother to Assinahoine. In all likelihood this excellent string will be seen at the spring meeting of the Blood Horse Association, and later the horses will race at Washington Park, Chicago. Last season Mr. Kirkendall's horses raced only in Montana, and were very successful.

HANGER JONES has a very formidable little string in training at Agricultural Park, Sacramento, in Almont, Motto, Dr. Ross, Kingmaker (half-brother to Hotspur), Orizaha (by imp. Cyrus—imp. Lelia) and an Argyle filly. All are looking well, particularly Dr. Ross, son of imp. Cheviot and imp. Beauty, by The Drummer. Swiftsure and Ichi Ban are due to arrive from Washington. At last accounts Archibald's colts were snow-bound in Oregon.

ED GARDNER, the proprietor of the Avondale Stable, is said to have the best lot of two-year-olds he ever owned. The bay filly by Sir Modred, dam Preciosa, and the chestnut filly by Farandole, dam Ida K. (Miss Pickwick's dam), are thought at present to be the pick of the basket. Ida Pickwick has, by the bye, wintered extremely well and greatly benefited by the run out at grass she has had. She will be taken up next month and put in training for the season.

A LEXINGTON (Ky.) dispatch says: "Clifford, bay colt, three years, by Vandal, dam Duchess, that Eugene Leigh bought from Clifford Ross a few weeks ago for $4,000, was stolen from his owner's stable in this county last night, and no trace of him has yet been discovered. He is entered in the American Derby at Chicago and other great stakes through the West this year. This is the first race horse that has been stolen in Kentucky since the war." The following day the horse was recovered, safe and sound, at Paris, Ky.

FOUR detectives in the employment of the W. U. Telegraph Co. in New York succeeded in capturing the gang of "wiretappers" for whom a search has been going on for over two months. Six men were arrested, their headquarters being at the corner of Union Square and Fourteenth street. One of them, McGinnis by name, is said to be an old hand at the game, and to have taken $5,000 out of a Montreal pool-room last summer by similar methods. The amount of money made by the gang is put at $10,000.

W. R. REIS, of Contra Costa county, will send East shortly the brown two-year-old colt Augustus, by Sobrante, dam Orinda. St. Louis will be his first stopping place, and the youngster is also engaged in stakes at Washington Park, Chicago. Orinda was sent to Rancho del Paso this week to be bred to imp. Midlothian, sire of Sir Walter and Monowai. Orinda is by Monday, dam Lillie Reis, by Longfellow, that produced Eufaula, the dam of Oporto; Sunlit, dam of El Rayo, and Clytie, dam of Castro.

BEFORE going to Chicago it is expected that the North horses will stop at Sheephead Bay, and if they do well there will not go West until just prior to the Washington Park meeting. So far there has been nothing said about a jockey in connection with the string. Colonel North will want his first jockey, J. Woodhull, for the English contests, so that it is probable he will rely on such a man as this country affords, and with jockeys like William Hayward and Murphy and Bergen to suit English ideas, it is likely that the services of one of the three will be available.

MR. G. W. JORDAN of this place, sold his thoroughbred running stallion Sampson, sire of Nellie G. and several other voted running horses, to E. C. Parkham one day last week. Sampson is a remarkably well-bred horse, and is considered a very valuable animal, but what the selling price amounted to we were unable to learn.—Rohnerville (Cal.) Herald. Sampson is a brother to King Daniels, being by Joe Daniels, dam Queen Emma, by Woodburn.

ST. HIPPO, a New Zealand colt, is the great wonder as a three-year-old in the antipodes. In a race against aged horses he picked up 105 pounds and cantered in a winner in a two-mile race in 3:31. He is by St. Leger; dam Hippona, and, like Morello, was sold for a song as a yearling, sixty guineas. New Zealanders claim that St. Hippo is another Carline. That he is greater than Lamplighter is very doubtful. The latter's performance at one and one-half miles with 122 pounds up when he broke the record was a greater performance than that of St. Hippo for two miles.

A NEW element in the Metropolitan and the Suburban is the English horses sent here by Colonel North, the wealthy English turfite. These are El Diablo, High Commissioner, Idlesleigh, Rough and Ready, Arturo, Sir Frederick Roberts, Miss Simon, etc. They are not representative English horses—that is, they are not first-rate ones. El Diablo is the best. High Commissioner and Idlesleigh are good, fairish horses, about twenty-five pounds below first-class form. Rough and Ready is a sprinter, Arturo is an ordinary one, Sir Frederick Roberts is pretty bad and Miss Simon never won a race. The presence of these horses cannot stir up a national or international feeling. But for all that it is pleasant to have them here, and if they have any success it may encourage other English owners to visit us.

JOCKEY HAZLETT, having been reinstated by the Garfield Park authorities, has signed to ride this year for the St. Louis turfman, R. J. Lucas. In reference to Hazlett and other boys who, like him, have been at various times during the past year ruled off at Garfield Park and other local tracks, it should be said that if they were, at the time they were ruled off, guilty of any offense that deserves the punishment inflicted they should never have been reinstated. To rule a rider off for fraud and then reinstate him within a few months brings racing rules under contempt and deprives what should be the extreme of turf punishment of its terrors. No one should be ruled off lightly, but when an offender is ruled off for fraud it should be understood beyond question that he is ruled off for all time.—Chicago Inter Ocean.

FOR a delicate, leggy horse Democrat was a great success as a racer this fall and winter. He comes from the greatest of American racing families, the Levity, and is by Joe Hooker, of the great Madame Bosley family, so that he comes by his racing qualities honestly. Democrat has two crosses of imp. Eclipse close up—through the dam of Joe Hooker and through his second dam, Lottie Lee, who is by Derby, a son of imp. Eclipse; his (Democrat's) third dam was Ringlet (dam of Reckless and Restless), by Ringgold (sire of Peggy Ringgold, etc.); fourth dam Mildred (dam of Monarchist; Minx, the dam of Monitor and Mentor; Nora Wort, the dam of Renown, Force and Finality, and Stamps, dam of Katie Pearce, Bertha, Valleria, Louise, Billy Pinkerton and Preciosa), by imp. Glencoe; fifth dam Levity, by imp. Trustee, she the dam of Ruric, Sister to Ruric, Mildred, Brenna, Lightsome, Lever and Legatee. Blood will tell.

B. C. HOLLY's horses are looking fat and sleek at Hollywood Stock Farm, Florsden, and the string of twelve will be a formidable one this season, no accidents intervening. Especially well do the following look: El Rayo, imp. Paramatta, Green Hook (Mr. H.'s American Derby colt), Sidney, chestnut two-year-old colt by Reveille, dam Ninena, by Jim Brown, and chestnut two-year-old colt by Prince of Norfolk, dam Fusillade's Last, by John W. Norton. Green Hook is a giant colt (16.1 hands), and if nothing happens will not be in the last division when the rich American Derby has been run. Imp. Paramatta has been bred to Minnie Elkins and Cornie Buckingham, and these mares will be retired from the turf. The Holly string will have in it this season imp. Paramatta, Sympathetic's Last, Revolver, Happy Day, El Rayo, Sidney, Green Hook, the Reveille, Ninena and Prince of Norfolk—Fusillade's Last colts and Francesca, sister to Acclaim. W. Clancy will be one of the pilots of the Holly horses this season.

WHILE Matt Allen will have no such regiment of horses on his hands during the coming year as last, he will handle a few at any rate that should do a great deal better than pay their way, while it is likely that their number will be materially increased after a while, says the Daily Spirit. At present, he has only five in his charge. In Rey del Rey, Peter, by Jove and Colonel Fred he and Mr. F. C. McLewee are jointly interested, while Mendicant, whom "Doc" Street had in training last season, is the property of Messrs. E. Forbes & Co. Rey del Rey and Peter were let up all last year, the strength of the Ehret Stable enabling this, and the chances are that both horses will show up well after their long spell of idleness. By Jove and Colonel Fred are both maidens, and comparatively unknown quantities, but it is known that they showed form in private that made those in the best position to judge put a high valuation on them. The following are the horses in the stable: Rey del Rey, b h, 5, by Norfolk—Marion, by Malcolm; Peter, ch h, by Long Taw—Athlene; Colonel Fred, b c, 3, by imp. Muscovy—Rebound; By Jove b c, 3, by imp. Cyrus—Marcella; Mendicant, ch f, 3, by Miser—Seaweed.

CY. MULKEY, the new superintendent of Palo Alto's thoroughbred department, is a progressive man as well as one possessed of sound judgement, and we expect to see a larger percentage of race horses of high class come from the paddocks of this famous breeding establishment in the future. In the first place, we understand the old stallions, Flood and Shannon, that have not proved sires of very great calibre, and who have passed the prime of their lives considerably, will be retired from the stud or sold, and those wonderful race horses, Flambeau and Racine, and the good young sire, imp. Cyrus, will take their places. It is among the possibilities that a famous American race horse from grand producing families, now at the far East may be purchased for the Palo Alto stud at the end of his racing career. The "American" mares are being sent to imp. Cyrus, the imported mares to Flambeau and Racine, and to the work of mating Mr. Mulkey is giving considerable attention and study. While many of the most promising young flyers have been leased to Thomas H. Williams, there are still a number of good ones left, and Mr. Mulkey will in all likelihood be a familiar figure on California race tracks this season.

CHARLES A. BROWN, owner of Wildwood, is very well pleased with the weights allotted his good colt in the various rich handicaps at the far East. His horses will race some at the spring meeting, going over the mountains about the middle of April, which will give the flyers time to get acclimated. A recent addition to the string is a two-year-old colt by Prince of Norfolk—Eda, by Powhattan; second dam Haidee (sister to the Kentucky Derby winner, Joe Cotton), by King Alfonso. Folly is rounding into great form, and it will take a real clinker to beat this sister to Sixfax a mile and a half or over with 118 pounds or such a matter in the saddle.

MONTANA REGENT, son of Regent and Christine, one of the greatest horses in America six years ago, and who has not been seen on the race track since 1887, is entered in the Club Members' Handicap at the St. Louis spring meeting. He is hooked to meet such cracks as Ida Pickwick, Balgowan, Zaldivar, Aloha, Helen Nichols, King Lee, Wadsworth, Riley, Santa Anna and Ma Belle. The last time Montana Regent appeared in public was against Lucky B. and Solid Silver in the Louisville Cup of 1887. Montana Regent won easily by about a length from Lucky B., one of the best "Cup" horses we have ever seen, and Baldwin claimed a foul. Montana Regent, two or three lengths in front coming into the straight, did cross and take a position against the rails, but was far enough ahead not to interfere with Lucky B. The foul was not allowed.

BUTTE fifteen days, Anaconda twelve, or a total of twenty-seven days of racing, will be given at the summer meeting of these two places. The dates were arranged in Helena Tuesday at a meeting of secretaries and officers of the racing associations. D. P. O'Connor represented the Butte Association. The following dates have been decided upon: Dillon, July 5 to 8; Missoula, July 10 to 13; Anaconda, July 17 to 29; Butte, July 31 to August 16; Helena, August 19 to 26; Great Falls, August 29 to September 2. An important change this year and one that will be readily appreciated by horsemen is that they will not have to pay 10 per cent of the stake or purse to enter. Trotters and pacers will pay 5 per cent, to enter and 5 per cent. to start. Runners will pay 5 per cent. to start. Nominations for colt stakes close April 1st. The stake races for two and three-year-olds which were formerly confined to those bred and raised in Montana, will be extended so to embrace the product of the inter-mountain States. The association promises to be quite liberal this year, and will cater to the public taste. There will be very few races under three-quarters of a mile, while mile and upward races will be quite numerous. Marcus Daly will have a stable. A new candidate for turf honors this year will be Charles Armstrong, whose father, Noah Armstrong, is the owner of Spokane. It is said that the good old race mare Nevada will be seen again this season.—Butte Inter-Mountain, Feb. 2.

A NEW ORLEANS dispatch dated January 27th will be of interest to racing men: "The fourth race saw something of a repetition of the Post Odds episode that was attempted at the East St. Louis track, and the Brannon Bros. seem to have been connected with this case, as a Northwestern owner named E. McAbee, who has been running Larghetto and other horses, entered Marksman, chestnut horse, by Meteor—Fannie Campbell, in a five and one-half furlong race for nonwinners. As the horse was a late arrival and this was his first appearance the clerk at the scales looked up his antecedents and found no such horse in the stud book. He grew suspicious and reported the case to the Board of Control, and they found that McAbee had wired to the Brannons at Covington, Ky., and Columbus, O.: "Horse entered to-morrow; all O. K." A wire was sent to Payne, who runs the poolrooms at Columbus, and it was learned that the horse had been played there heavily. Similar reports were received from other points, but at the track there were very few bets. The horse was found to have been shipped from Nashville, where McAbee says that he bought him, and he admitted that the name was of recent invention. The animal has been worked at night, and he very closely resembles the description given of Post Odds. After the examination of the animal and the circumstances surrounding the race, the judges ruled McAbee and Allen A. Caven, his partner, off the track until they proved that the horse was not a ringer. All bets were declared off and a new book ordered without the presence of Marksman."

In last Sunday's Los Angeles Herald "Hidalgo" stated that the great race horse and sire, St. Simon, did not start at the age of three years, yet we find that he walked over for the Epsom Gold Cup, won the Ascot Gold Cup by twenty lengths from Tristan (Friday third), the Newcastle Gold Cup from Chislehurst and the Goodwood Cup by twenty lengths, beating Ossian and Friday. Fred Archer had a perfect right to believe St. Simon the greatest of all the many great horses he had ridden, for the horse made apes of such rare good ones as Tristan and Friday. And just how good St. Simon must have been can be judged from the fact that Tristan beat Shotover (winner of the Derby and Two Thousand) badly, carrying 132 pounds to her 126, also Wallenstein and City Arab. St. Simon beat Ossian twenty lengths, and he won the St. Leger of 1883, with Chislehurst in the place. Tristan won the Champion Stakes once and twice ran a dead heat for it, carrying 126 pounds each time. It took such horses as Rayon d'Or, Robert the Devil, Bend Or, Ormond and Bendigo to win this event in various years. The Ascot Gold Cup was won by some of England's best horses also, Isonomy, Robert the Devil, Doncaster and Apology having captured it. Tristan beat Iroquois for the Hardwicke Stakes at even weights (135 pounds) a length and a half when both were five years old, with the famous Tom Cannon on Iroquois and F. Webb on Tristan, so that if Iroquois is the best horse America ever turned out, as "Hidalgo" assumes, and St. Simon could beat Tristan twenty lengths, where do our horses get off? Peregrine beat Iroquois for the Two Thousand Guineas, yet was unable to win the Cambridgeshire with 106 pounds. Foxhall clearly proved his superiority as a race horse over any animal we ever sent to the land of John Bull to race, from two-year-old to aged horse. Foxhall beat Iroquois' conqueror, Tristan, in the Select Stakes, for three-year-olds, the son of King Alfonso carrying 127 pounds to Tristan's 122. In the Cambridgeshire Foxhall beat a field of thirty-one, and in this race he carried 126 pounds as a three-year-old to Tristan's 107, 91 on Lucy Glitters. Three-year-olds ran one-two-three in the event that year. Peter, a five-year-old, was fourth with 140 pounds up, Bend Or, four years, fifth, 134 up; Petronel, four years, sixth, with 126 pounds up. Scobell, Post Obit, Pomet (sire of Maori), Phillamon, Prestonpans and other good ones finished behind Foxhall, and this race proved the great merit of Mr. Keene's horse and gave America her very best sent-off horse.

FRANK COVEY, superintendent of the trotting department of the Palo Alto Stock Farm, arrived from the East on Wednesday morning. He reports the weather in the East to be severer than he has ever experienced. As the Board of Appeals meets to-day (Saturday) at Stockton, he is anxious to be present. During an acquaintance with him for over twenty-six years we have never heard his word questioned, and when obscure hangers-on about stables attempt to bring discredit upon such men as he and J. H. Thompson, superintendent of the Shippee trotters, they will find that they have made a mistake. That the timers and judges who certified to Stamboul's record at Stockton were working in the interest of the Hobart rate is absurd on its face, yet the story that has been spread by a certain set of individuals who would starve were it not for the trotting-horse industry will do much to injure our California horses in the East. This man Kearney should be made to prove his assertions, and if he has any facts to prove his charges, the Stockton Agricultural Association should bring suit against him at once and have him present them. Messrs. Covey, Thompson, Maheu and the judges in the stand should demand the reason why such stories were circulated and why their reputations for truth and veracity are besmirched by such an individual. We are glad to see that these gentlemen are anxious for the investigation.

In the report of Edwin F. Smith, Secretary of the State Agricultural Society, a portion of which is published in this journal, there is one paragraph that we fear will hardly be as true in the future as it has been in the past. It is this: "The sales of our trotting stock in the same (Eastern) market aggregate $500,000 yearly." The great founders of our trotting families, the sires that have made this great State the greatest of all others, have, with one or two exceptions, gone from the sunny slopes of this land by the sunset sea, and have left a void that is NOT BEING FILLED. Electioneer is dead, and only a few of his sons are left as sires on this coast. Gen. Benton, Nephew, A. W. Richmond, Blackbird, Whippleton, Tilton Almont, Palo Alto, Le Grande and others have also gone. Stamboul, Sultan, Director, Anteeo, Antevolo, Arion, Regal Wilkes, Rupee, Nutwood, Faustino, Thistle, Alcazar, Judge Salisbury, Incas, May Boy, Clay, Fallis, Auteros, Chimes, Del Sur, St. Just, Egotist, Norval, Abbotford, Arthurton, and many other sires whose names are familiar to every horse breeder on this coast, left here in the zenith of their glory, and few, if any, are left to fill their places. Sidney, the greatest sire of early and extreme speed, will leave this coast, it is feared, never to return, because of the short-sighted policy of the owners of our largest stock farms. Dexter Preece may also go, and Richards' Elector might follow. The outlook is not encouraging. The largest stock farms in this State that have sent their choicest to the Eastern markets and received the highest prices have sent their last consignments of money-making stock, because the produce of the BEST stallions and BEST broodmares are scattered among the BEST managed stock farms in the East. No one, it seems, is willing to bring any mares here that trace direct to Dictator, Cuyler, Mambrino Patchou, Harold, Happy Medium, Belmont, Red Wilkes, Nutwood, Almont, Mambrino Ahdallah, Mambrino Boy, Wilton, Simmons, Robert McGregor, Onward, Aleyone, Alcantara, King Rene, Woodford Mambrino, C. F. Clay, or the scores of famous representatives of the most fashionable breeding of the day—trotting sires whose progeny are now in demand. The narrow-minded breeders here have an idea that the short-bred performers without form or breeding will sell for high prices if they only get a tin-cup record. If they were to listen to the famous horsemen and trainers who have recently returned from the East they would change these opinions quickly. The time to improve the stock is near. There must be no more procrastination. The man who will secure the most fashionably-bred broodmares, colts and fillies and bring them to California now and cross them with the few remaining good ones we have that were not sent East because the cause neither demand for them was strong enough nor the price large enough, will, in a few years, reap a financial harvest. We know of two farms only that have already sown the seed for it—Oakwood Park Stock Farm and Santa Rosa Stock Farm. There is no doubting our ability to raise horses cheaper and better than in any other State in the Union, but we must sell to the Eastern market. We cannot, if we would, and would not if we could, dispose of our climate, but we must send stock away that will pay for their transportation. With the exception of the Corbitt sale, all other winter sales of late have been very unsatisfactory to the breeders. It is their own fault. The people of the East know just what to buy, and they buy just what they can sell. The fabulous prices paid for California horses in the past will never become fashionable again, unless we get fashionable blood. The demand for the get of great stallions like Electioneer, Director, Guy Wilkes or Sidney does not diminish every year, for the other representatives of these families are winning fame and money and increasing their value. Their sons may be great, but their progeny does not approach in value that of their grandsires. Many of them may prove greater than their sires, but it takes years of time, plenty of money and judicious breeding to make these young stallions become famous. The native mares that their sires "nicked" well with may not suit them, even if they are kept on the same stock farms; the same trainers and conditions may not be there for the development of the stock, and while the owners are waiting patiently for the youngsters to win low records and make their sires famous, the demand for that class of stock may diminish.

The benefit of having a renowned sire of early and extreme speed that is not too old—but right in his prime—to breed to well-bred mares, and whose produce by other mares are coming rapidly to the front, is the one to have on any farm. If Mr. Corbitt did not foresee the length of time and amount of money it would take to put large numbers in the list that were sired by Leo Wilkes, Rupee, Regal Wilkes or Jay Wilkes, does any one for a moment suppose he would part with them? So long as he has the mighty Guy Wilkes, and the wondrous Sahle Wilkes and sees their progeny entering the charmed circle in greater numbers every year, just so long will he retain these renowned sires. Time is too precious to lose in developing the progeny of the others, even though the stallions may have better breeding and lower records. His policy is similar to that followed by the owners of thoroughbreds in Kentucky and the most progressive breeders of trotters throughout the New England, Middle and Western States east of the Rocky Mountains. The value of a famous stallion and sire is appreciated by breeders everywhere but in this State (with few exceptions), it seems.

This is a plain business proposition, and if such a sire as Sidney leaves California, there will be many of our richest breeders who will regret it, just as they did when other stallions not near so famous were sold to other stock farm owners in the East. If these breeders can afford to pay such fabulous sums for our greatest sires and put their produce on the market, and get better prices for them now than Californians, why is it that our breeders are so lax in their judgment as to lose such tried stallions?

The Eastern breeders are more progressive and less prejudiced than our Californians. Everyone who has visited the leading farms there, as well as in this State, has no hesitancy in saying so. The narrow-minded breeders that believe their stallions are the only ones on earth, deserve very little sympathy from anyone. The bars of prejudice must be dropped, and in the broad field of justice and fair play every great family should be recognized, and if, by inviting the best representatives in the stock is improved, let there be no hesitancy in giving credit wherever due. Let breeders club together and purchase "representatives of the best blood," the most fashionable and the greatest speed-giving kind as an outcross, and infuse new life into the business. When there is a break in the great line of battle and an apparent weakness in any part, let some good representative step right in and strengthen it.

Early last year we predicted the lack of enterprise on the part of our breeders in selling their best and not patronizing the Eastern stock farms to get outcrosses for our grand trotting sires and broodmares in order that prices may be kept up; again we repeat this admonition and ask all breeders to carefully consider this important subject. It concerns the trotting horse industry of this coast, and unless something is done, the statement of Secretary Smith, in his report, will never be repeated.

Popular Stake Races.

There are two kinds of stakes that can be made self-sustaining in California, where the Blood Horse Association will not be forced to add anything unless it sees fit. We refer to a Stallion Produce Stake and a Mares' Produce Stake. At the next meeting of the association it is not unlikely that such stakes will be inaugurated, for one of the most prominent and active members of the organization has recently been figuring on just such events. They will be for two-year-olds, five furlongs, run first in the spring of 1896, $50 to nominate the stallion, $25 to start any of his sons or daughters. We have figured out that at least thirty stallions would be nominated, as follows: Imp. Mariner, imp. Paramator, imp. Suvarrow, imp. Ormonde, imp. Idalium, Emperor of Norfolk, The Hook, Gano, Verano, Plenty, Apache, imp. Reggy, St. Carlo, imp. Merriwa, imp. Chesterfield, Flambean, Racine, imp. Cyrus, imp. Midlothian, imp. Martenhurst, Wildile, Monday Final, Duke of Norfolk, Prince of Norfolk, Coloma, Three Cheers, imp. Brutus, Joe Hooker, El Rio Rey and Cyclone. If thirty stallions were nominated (and we think this a very low estimate) it would amount to $1,500, and if 100 paid in $10 (which should accompany the entry) and forty made all the payments ($25 in all) the stake would be worth $3,500 at the very least, and from that to $5,000—all this without the association adding a cent. In the Mares' Produce Stakes nearly every well-bred thoroughbred mare on the Pacific Coast would be nominated at say $15, with $25 additional when the foal started. It is no exaggeration to say that 200 mares would be nominated, which means $3,000, and if there were twenty starters and twenty more to make all the payments ($25) this stake would amount to $4,000.

Then we would like to see the association inaugurate the stakes mentioned in last week's issue. A circular could easily be addressed to the men the organization intended to reach—the leading street car, railway, brewery, hotel and shipping people—or the Secretary or a committee from the Blood Horse Association could wait on the gentleman and find out whether they were liberal and enterprising or not. Over-night events are well enough in their way, but that the stake events, "for blood" and money, draw the crowds and excite popular interest any fair-minded man will allow that has given the racing problem any study.

The Small Breeders' Opportunity.

While the large breeders of trotting horses throughout the United States are astounded at the low prices they are receiving for their stock in comparison with what they received a few years ago, the small breeders, if they have any progressive business ideas at all, should avail themselves of the opportunity and purchase the best-bred standard colts and fillies now, while they are being "sacrificed." For years the prices were inflated far beyond the actual worth of the stock offered, and no one knew this better than the extensive breeders, who profited by the demand, and were willing to furnish the supply whenever they "got their price." All that these rich breeders were looking for was a Robert Bonner or a Malcolm Forbes. The prices these enthusiastic gentlemen paid for trotters while helping to raise the values of the kings and queens of the turf also elevated the opinions of owners of all trotters, whether bred in the purple or not, until the horses they purchased for a few hundreds of dollars were valued at as many thousands. A number of great sales were held and great prices were received. The horses purchased at these sales failed to fulfill the expectations of their new owners, and were sold this winter for whatever they would bring. Most of these horses were tried in the balance and found wanting, and among the thousands sold, of course there must have been scores of excellent ones "sacrificed."

The small breeders who, as a general rule, make a specialty of closely scanning the turf journals and read the catalogues of the sales held in the East, were noted for their presence on the days of sale. They came from all parts of the United States and Canada to New York, Chicago and Lexington, and in the selection of colts and fillies to bring back to their farms it was noticed that they made very few, if any, mistakes.

These small breeders were a shrewd, observant class, and all the palaver of the auctioneer or the entreaties of the seller could not convince one of them to purchase an animal that was not physically nearly perfect. They could tell a spavin, sidebone, ringbone, broken knee, faulty back or loin, mean eye or bad forehead, as quickly as they could a bad shoulder or a curved back. They had no money to throw away on poor individuals fastened to a royal pedigree, and all the persuasive eloquence of the "touts" in the sales rings could not affect their eyesight on their judgment. These small breeders (there are many like them in California) may have been struggling for years to lift a mortgage on the farm. There has been no money in farming, and the raising of cattle and hogs has proven most unprofitable. The raising of heavy horses was overdone, and what to do to get out of the difficulty was the problem that confronted them at every turn. They had read the papers and were now convinced that there is and always will be a market for trotting horses. Looking at the subject in all its ramifications, they wisely concluded that there was no lottery in the business; by starting with the proper material and building up they would raise a horse that would become valuable. The next thing they thought of was to buy a well-bred filly, but after visiting the large stock farms and seeing and selecting the one they thought would suit, the price asked by the rich breeder completely drove all thoughts away of their ever getting even a poorly-bred one. They returned to their farms and struggled along, but not without hoping for an opportunity to purchase a trotting mare. The great winter sales just concluded in the East and in California were extensively advertised. This was their chance, and how well they took advantage of it will be ascertained by owners of stallions in years to come. They purchased the very choicest individuals at low prices. They may have also bought broodmares which they know would "nick" better with other families of trotters than to the ones to which they were heretofore bred; these mares may become famous because of this change, and the owners will realize a snug little fortune from the produce in a few years.

It cost no more to keep and train a good, well-bred trotter that is endowed with speed and will always sell for a good price, than it does to keep a mongrel horse sired by Untraced out of Unknown, which is unfit for either the plow or the road, and will sell for the price of a yearling calf at any sale. The small breeder has figured this out, and as the majority of our greatest campaigners have been bred by this class of men, the prospects are more than favorable for larger profits being made by the smaller breeder than ever before, because of the late sales where the few good ones were purchased by them and the poor ones by speculators.

The spring sales that are to take place in this State should not be neglected by the observant farmers, for the very choicest of well-bred animals are to be sold at these dispersal sales; and, as the best of sires and most famous of broodmares will be well represented, the opportunity for selecting the best at their own prices may never occur again. This depression in the market is only temporary, for in a few years the trotting-horse industry will be on a firmer basis than ever. Its foundation is being laid on merit, individuality and racehorse qualities. Some people may worry about the "bottom falling out of the market," but the men with limited means endowed with business foresight are, by this very depression, placed in a position to keep the "bottom" always strong, and the choicest representatives of the trotting horse of America will find their way into the remotest places in this State where a standard-bred trotter was heretofore looked upon as a rarity.

P. C. T. H. B. A. Meeting.

At the meeting of Directors of the Pacific Coast Trotting Horse Breeders Association held in their rooms, 313 Bush Street, on Monday evening last, the committee presented a programme for a spring meeting to be held the latter part of May which was adopted, and is advertised in this journal. There are many features which will commend it to every horseman on the Coast. The low entrance fee, three (3) per cent, to start the horse is an innovation that should meet with a hearty endorsement. Only a few purses are offered, the aim of the Association being to accommodate all owners who bring their horses to the track and give them an opportunity to trot and pace them in the races by giving over-night purses for this purpose.

Among the features to be introduced will be handicap races, the horses to be handicapped by hitching them to sulkies, carts and bikes. There is no question but this will be an interesting novelty, and will afford some exciting contests. The programme will probably consist of four or five dashes, and one 2 in 3 race for each day. The dash races should be very popular with horsemen, as it will enable them to start the same horse every day of the meeting, thus greatly increasing the earning capacity of the trotters or pacers brought to the track. The public will be given every opportunity for betting, as there will be auction pools and Paris mutuels sold on the grounds, as well as book-making. The introduction of these novelties is largely in the nature of an experiment to popularize harness races with the public by adopting the plan of the running meetings as far as practicable. The Association will give this style of racing a fair trial at the Spring meeting, and if it is well patronized, the Summer and Fall meetings of the Association, which will be held in August and October, will be conducted on the same plan. Every member of the Association (and those who are not in should join) who has a trotter or pacer that can be prepared for this meeting should not fail to be on hand and ready to start. It is hoped that by having large fields the interest will not be allowed to flag in any event. The Association has wisely made provisions for starting large fields of horses, as will be seen in the advertised conditions.

THE election of Hon. John Boggs, of Colusa, to the presidency of the State Agricultural Society will meet with the cordial approbation of every one in California. Mr. Boggs is well qualified to fill the position, and under his administration we have no hesitancy in claiming that the affairs of this live society will be conducted in a manner satisfactory to all, and that the good work being done by it will progress with greater effectiveness than ever.

FLAMBEAU is expected to prove a great sire of race horses as his sons and daughters resemble him greatly in conformation and markings.

Magnificent Merriwa.

This magnificent young Australian stallion will make the season of 1893, stopping each week at Oakland three days, San Jose two days, and Thos. Fisher's ranch at Coyote, Santa Clara county, the remaining two days. Merriwa is both a grand individual and a high-class racehorse, and besides comes from Australia's truly wonderful producing families—the Golds-brough-Yattendon. The stallion that will be seen at the places mentioned above is by Golds-brough (sire of upward of 220 winners in the colonies), a great racehorse himself, and a son of one of the best Australia has ever known, Fireworks. Golds-brough's dam was the Bee-swing of Australia, Sylvia, a mare that won the V. R. C. Oaks and Maiden Plate, and threw besides the great Golds-brough the famous Robin Hood, winner of the V. R. C. Derby and A. J. C. St. Leger. Golds-brough's grandam, Juliet, by Touchstone, is correctly termed the Pocahontas of Australia, she throwing the famous race horses and producers Charon, Chrysolite (dam of Robinson Crusoe, winner of A. J. C. Derby, A. J. C. Mares' Produce Stakes, Sires' Produce Stakes and A. J. C. Champagne Stakes), Raggpicker (winner of V. R. C. Sapling Stakes, A. J. C. Maiden Plate and Grandstand Stakes) and grandam of B. C. Holly's Paramatta. Fireworks' dam, Gaslight, was also a wonderful producing mare, as well as a great winner. Merriwa's dam, Habana, won the Marihymoug Plate (the Futurity of Australia). The grandam of Merriwa, Atholine, in fact threw two winners of this great stake race, two that ran second and two third. Atholine's breeding was something to enthuse over, she being by Blair Athol (Stockwell's greatest son, that was from the famous Blink Bonny, by Melbourne), dam Habana (winner of the One Thousand Guineas in England), by Irish Birdcatcher, her dam the famous mare, The Bridle, by The Saddler, and so on Merriwa's pedigree is traced through the greatest families in England to the nineteenth dam. The great producing dams and sires in Merriwa's pedigree should be almost a guarantee that he will sire horses that will make fame on track and in stud, and the advertisement of Agent Thomas G. Jones, in another column, should be read by all owners of thoroughbred mares on the Pacific Coast at once, for that Merriwa's book will soon be filled at the low price he is standing at ($60) is certain.

The Los Angeles Spring Meeting.

Los Angeles is to the front with a fine programme for a spring meeting to begin March 18th. Judging by the admirable programme arranged, it looks as if the metropolis of Southern California will have a grand meeting. The promoters have displayed more than ordinary enterprise in offering such handsome events. There are two one-thousand-dollar races and several others for good money. The stake events, with a good entry list, should all be worth $500 to the winner. A wise move is made by the Association in making the forfeits in all stake races so light. This is sure to prove popular with horse-owners. The big money offered for two-year-olds should command a splendid entry list. The Los Angeles track is a first-class one, and is safe and fast. The shrewd trainers are sure to pay Los Angeles a visit. A few good races will have a tendency to get their horses ready for a bruising race at the Blood Horse meeting. At all events, the strings that go south will have an advantage over those that stay at home. Programmes can be obtained on application at our office or from Ben Benjamin, sporting editor of the San Francisco Chronicle, who will give horsemen intending to go south all necessary information in regard to the meeting. See advertisement of the Association, and make your entries before February 21st. On this date the stake entries close.

The Sales to Come.

Messrs. Killip & Co. will hold two great sales of trotting stock in March on the second and third, the grand collection belonging to the Asylum Farm, will be disposed of. On the fifteenth a grand combination sale of young trotters, the property of D. J. Murphy, Capt. B. E. Harris and others will be sold. In our next issue we will give extended notices of these offerings. Every horseman should make arrangements to attend these sales.

Answers to Correspondents.

Answers for this department must be accompanied by the name and address of the sender, not necessarily for publication, but as proof of good faith. Write the questions distinctly, on one side of the paper only. Positively no questions will be answered by mail or telegraph.

To E. B. J., Napa.—See answer to Fritz, Sacramento

Inquirer.—Latourett's Bellfounder was by Tremper's Bellfounder, dam by Gen. Jackson.

Can anyone give the breeding of the horse known as O'Neil's St. Clair, who stood at Sacramento some years ago. Are any of his colts in the 2:30 list? F. F. M.

Linden, Jan. 31, 1893.—I noticed in your last issue a question whether as colt by Steve Whipple out of a Nephew mare made the season at Merced. He did, and belongs to me. E. C. ARCHER.

Fritz, Sacramento.—Will you kindly inform me through the columns of your paper what the record is and also the pedigree of a running mare called Dolly Varden. She used to be on the turf here about twelve years ago. Answer—See Chris. Green, of your city, Cal. He owned her, we understand, and can tell you all about her.

A. & C., Newbury Park.—Will you please publish the breeding of Pierce's Roalen, by Viek's Ethan Allen? Also the pedigree of Ootut, a horse imported by Ben Fish, of San Jose. Answer—We find no trace of Roalen. Ben Fish's Comet was by Young Black Hawk (son of Vermont Black Hawk), dam by Morgan Tail Ho.; second dam by Andrew Jackson 4.

A. S. H., San Francisco, Cal.—Give me the breeding and record of the stallion Erwin Davis, as I cannot find the exact pedigree elsewhere. Answer—Erwin Davis 5583 was by Skennard 225 (son of Broken-Legged Kentucky Hunter and Sikes mare), dam Lest Diamond, said to be by Hambletonian 2 (son of Bishop's Hambletonian and the Munson mare, said to be by Imp. Messenger).

Subscriber.—If the American Trotting Register Company refused, as they have done, to register Mand, the dam of the gelding Prince B., 2:24½, by the non-standard horse Brilliant, until Prince B. was first registered? (Is there any rule compelling this work?) How would you go about registering Prince B. if he was entire, or his dam, either under such ruling? Prince B. would not be eligible, but his dam would be under Rule 5. Now, if she could not be registered until Prince B. or his sire were, I do not understand the meaning of Rule 5. How is it? Answer—He can be registered as a gelding, but not as a stallion. See Rule 2.

THE four-year-old filly Miss Simon, by St. Simon, dam Josyan, that is among the string which Colonel J. T. North is sending out from England, cost $3,200 guineas as a yearling. She is, however, small, and has never realized the great expectations that were at one time formed of her. She was offered at the Newmarket December sales, but did not reach the reserve put on her.

THE GUN.

Poems of Gun and Rod.

Under the above title the Sportsman's Review of Chicago pays a high and deserved compliment to Ernest McGaffey, a lawyer by profession and a poet from choice and by nature, on his book of poems touching upon various phases of field sports. We append some of the lines quoted by the Review from his book. He says:

"Dear comrades of my happy out-door days
These halting rhymes, that from my heart I send
With midnight stars and flakes of dawning blend
With morning's gray and sunset's steady haze;
And up through marshy flats and wooded ways
Where tall oaks rise, and rustling rushes bend,
Passes the form of many an old-time friend
Who trod with me the field and forest maze
From dawn to dusk; I count them as they pass,
And leaps my blood again as one by one
The old days rise, while nature's throes strain
That lure men on 'mid sun and wind and rain,
Comes back to me o'er harps of tangled grass,
And sets me dreaming of the rod and gun."

"Over the Decoys" is a poem that will strike a sympathetic chord in the heart of every duck hunter:

"Tone lies the tawny marsh, and lily pods,
All crisped and wrinkled by the autumn sun,
Swim lazily along the shining reeds;
The strident reeds, that bar the passage-way,
Where wanders past the lost and wailing breeze
Over the gray, woad deserts of the dawn,
Striking the frets of intertwining stems
That rustle into weirdest music there.

"And maddily against the rising sun
The ever-restless waters ripple up,
Prying amid the rushes, and again,
Upon the roots of dwarfish willow stubs,
Lapping and lapping like a thirsty hound;
And in an open space beyond the reeds,
Hiding like corks the like rustling waves,
Decoys are seen, those fateful wooden lures
That draw the passing ducks from cloudy heights
Down, down and down, until the sportsman's aim
Sends consternation to their scattered ranks.

"And at the edges of the eat-tails tall,
Among the rushes and the spatter-dock,
A hunter waits, all watchful, in the 'hind,
Whose rough, artistic tracing seems to be,
With all its tangled drapery of reeds,
Wild rice and grass, and leaning willow-branch,
Like elfin work of nature and the winds.

"Mark! Far down the distant line of trees
A narrow dusky ribbon is revealed,
That nearer comes, and as it comes unfolds,
And shows in all their symmetry of form
A flock of ducks outlined upon the sky,
Curving and wheeling in the morning light.

"And as they near the hunter's ambuscade
They turn, they stoop, while he, with muscles set
And tense as steel, and eager-shining eyes,
Sits like a stone, his gun within his hands;
The winds are hushed. Ah! What a picture that—
The blue-bills settling to the still decoys."

"Daybreak on the Marsh" is another that will appeal to the same class of shooters:

"Far to the west the heavy timber stands
In purple bands,
And in the east the blossoming day expands
As through the clouds the sun-streaks break and fit,
While bit by bit
Creeps forth the earth to warm herself by morning's smouldering brands.

"Emancipated from the night's dark frown
Stand marshes brown,
And shrill autumnal gusts come sweeping down
Holding within their clutches captive leaves
From branching stems,
With red and russet blazoned smooth, reft from October's crown.

"And from the amber waters upward spring,
With dripping wing,
The waterfowl, in circle, waudering
In airy journeys swerving up on high,
As through the sky
They turn their course to northward, where polar breezes sting.

"And far and near, as onward still they go,
From covert low
White puffs of smoke, unfolding, faintly show
Where in his 'blind' the hidden sportsman lies,
With watchful eyes,
Sending his bright-flame signals up through dawn's dull-steeping glow."

"Old Grip" is a tribute to the faithful dog, who, if the hunter's wife did not object, would occupy the choicest rug in the coziest corner of the best room in the house:

"He dreams beside the chimney's base
There in his snug, accustomed place;
The kettle sings upon the crane
And on the window clinks the rain,
While bogies from the chimney fall
Throw shadow-shafts along the wall;
Yet reck he not of sight or sound—
Old Grip, the rabbit hound.

"How strong he is, from brawny hips
Up to his tawny, wrinkled lips;
From muzzle to the velvet flank,
From chest to barrel, neck to shank;
How graceful, and how lithe and fleet,
Why, when he runs, his nimble feet
Seem in their flight to skim the ground—
Old Grip, the rabbit hound.

"The faithfulness you seek from friends,
In hollow phrase begins and ends;
The love of woman that you crave
Breaks like the bubble on a wave;
The world, that grim old pedagogic,
Has taught me to respect a dog,
For faith and love can aye be found
In Grip, the rabbit hound."

In "Quail" the poet describes a scene that is familiar to most of the readers of this journal:

"Down near the timber, at a corn-field's edge,
Where airy thistle seeds
Sail back and forth where each air-current leads,
Close by the corner of a tangled edge,
A dog stands firm, half-hidden in the weeds,
And listens, yet no warning whistle needs.

"Around the hedge his master slowly walks,
And walking, tramps and stirs
In grassy covert, briars, weeds and hurs,
Brushing the grasses from his nose and whiskers;
Then sees the dog, steps to the matted furze,
An instant more, and up the berry whisks.

"Over the scrub, with buzzing wings it goes
And scatters in alflight;
Up to his shoulder, as he marks the flight,
The hunter instantly his shotgun throws,
And feathers slow are drifting, brown and white,
As ring the detonations, left and right."

"The Twelve-Tined Buck" is one of the gems of the collection, but it is too long to quote in full. A few verses will have to suffice:

"The mist rose out of the valley,
The mist climbed up from the lake,
And a muskrat's course in the water
Spread out in a glimmering wake.

"The red sun's edge came peeping
O'er the top of a far-off hill;
The winds lay furled in the floating clouds,
And the leaves and the grass were still.

"But over the pines and cedars
Re-echoed a distant horn;
And a hound's faint bay chimed with it
In the hush of the waking morn.

"And then from a balsam thicket
Came the sound of a sudden crash,
And a twelve-tined buck sprang out and stood
By the side of a quaking ash."

Hunters Frozen to Death.

F. W. Hall, who resides at Mehama, a small village of about 200 inhabitants, situated on the Santiam river some 30 miles east of Salem, came down to this city yesterday en route to San Francisco, says the Portland Telegram, taking the overland last evening. To a reporter Mr. Hall told the experience of three young men, who resided near Mahama, which resulted in two deaths, and the other has only one chance out of many to live.

The young men, G. A. Hoeye, H. S. Powell and Gus Haines, all live on farms on Fox prairie. About ten days ago they started out for Silver Creek falls on a deer shooting expedition. In the locality of the falls are several "stands" which have become famous among the hunters of the Upper Santiam and tributaries, as deer by the score come down from the mountains to the clear crystal stream which makes the falls. It was for this place the young men started. Near the falls lives an bachelor named Wolf, who hunts, fishes and picks blackberries for a livelihood, and occasionally makes a few bunches of shingles which he sells to the settlers. It was at Wolf's house, or hut, that the hunters first stopped, and after remaining over night they started out again next morning, laden with such provisions only as are needed on such expeditious, but as the expected to return to Wolf's place that night they left their blankets behind.

The ground was covered with snow to a depth of about twenty inches, though high on the mountain sides it was much deeper, and about noon, when a blinding snow storm set in, the three hunters were completely at a loss to know in which direction to travel homeward. After making repeated efforts to reach Wolf's place they gave up in despair, and commenced walking about in a circle and slapping their hands against their bodies in a vain endeavor to keep warm.

As the men did not return that night, Wolf became uneasy and decided to go out and hunt for them. Before going, however, he walked six miles to his nearest neighbor's and got another man to go with him. That afternoon they made a detour of the country near about, fearing to venture too far away from home owing to the heavy snow storm, which had not yet abated. On the second morning, however, the sky was clear, and the two men, with their faithful dogs, undertook the search again.

About noon, by the aid of the dogs, they came upon Hoeye and Powell, who told them that Haines had died during the previous night, while Powell's legs were so badly frozen that they were almost black. His hands and face were also badly frozen. Hoeye's hands and feet likewise were also frozen, but not so badly as Powell's, for the latter could not speak. Together the rescuers carried Powell down to Wolf's place, a distance of several miles, and then they returned for Hoeye, who was unable to walk. They did not reach the cabin till late that night, and then they found that Powell was dead. A doctor living about twelve miles away was sent for next morning, and on making an examination stated that amputation of Hoeye's feet and possibly his hands would be necessary. The suffering man was quieted by the use of opiates, and was then taken down to his home in Fox valley, where he should have been operated on yesterday. Haines' body was taken from the snow on the second day after the discovery of the men, and on the following day he and his comrade were buried.

The country about the headwaters of the Santiam is noted for the number of deaths from freezing which have occurred there. Silas Jones, a wealthy landowner, and also the proprietor of the Stayton flour mills, in company with a man named Redmond, went into the Upper Santiam country on a prospecting tour. They were well provisioned, both were hale, hearty, robust men, and, as the weather was especially good, they anticipated no trouble or danger of any kind. During their stay in the mountains they struck some favorable "leads," which they disliked to leave without satisfactory work being done. They tarried longer in the wild country than they had intended, and started toward the settlement, about twenty miles away, on foot. Snow had already begun to fall and the mountains were well encased with the flaky substance. Such a violent storm came up that the men became bewildered, lost their way and sank down to die. They were well provided with blankets, which served to protect them in a degree from the cold, which was intense, but Richmond was frozen almost to death when a party of searchers, who were alarmed at the prolonged absence of the men from home, discovered them. The frozen men were taken down to the settlement, but Redmond died on the way. Jones was taken to Salem, where his legs were both amputated, and for weeks he hovered between life and death, but finally he conquered the grim conqueror and is well and hearty to-day. This case is only one of many that have occurred in this wild, mountainous region.

The first shoot of the season at the traps takes place tomorrow under the auspices of the California Wing Shooting Club, it being this Club's first stated event for 1893. This Club was organized in 1872, and is the oldest wing shooting club on the Pacific Coast.

The San Francisco Gun Club held its annual meeting on the evening of February 2, 1893 at the Occidental Hotel. J. O. Cadman was elected President; F. D. Atherton, Vice-President; John K. Orr, Secretary and Treasurer.

The Country Club.

The first regular shoot of the Country Club, for the fourth season, will take place at its Club House, Oakland track, on Saturday, February 25, 1893. Members will take the 11, 12 or 1 o'clock Berkeley train.

All regular monthly shoots will take place on the fourth Saturday of each month. There will be seven shoots in all.

CLASS SHOOTING.

In order to give all members an equal chance for the prizes and sweepstakes, a new system of class shooting will be inaugurated. The members will be divided into four classes, consisting of a handicap for each class. Two prizes will be given in the first class, two in the second class, one in the third class, one in the fourth class, and a championship prize, to be shot for by the four first prize-winners in each class.

The uniform gauge of the gun shall be at 12, and the weight not to exceed eight pounds, as per Rule 1. Guns of 14 and 16-gauge shall stand at same distance as 12-gauge—10-gauge guns not allowed.

A member may choose any five scores made by him during the season. The first twelve birds shot at during a regular shoot only shall count, as per Rule 29.

In sweepstake shooting, any member wishing to enter in a higher class than the one he is rated in, may do so by paying the entrance fee of that class, his score counting the same in both classes.

Five medals will be given for the five highest scores made at the final shoot in August.

The club will shoot under the rules of the Country Club of San Francisco, adopted January, 1891.

CLASSES FOR 1893.

First class, 30 yards—Harry Babcock, E. L. Bosqui, Ed. Donohoe, R. A. Eddy, Thomas Ewing, W. S. Kittle, R. H. Sprague, F. W. Tallant, F. R. Webster, R. E. Wilson, R. B. Woodward, F. L. Wooster.

Second class, 28 yards—A. J. Bowie, George Crocker, C. P. Eells, D. B. Gillette Jr., J. D. Grant, J. D. Harvey, W. H. Howard, Andrew Jackson, Chas. Josselyn, W. C. Murdoch, Robt. Oxnard, E. F. Preston, J. D. Redding, Austin C. Tubbs, W. B. Tubbs, C. E. Worden.

Third class, 26 yards—F. D. Atherton, William Berg, W. B. Bourn, J. A. Donohue Jr., Peter J. Donohue, H. E. Hall, Alex. Hamilton, H. L. Hill, H. S. King, J. B. Lincoln, J. A. Robinson, Baron J. H. von Schroeder, F. W. Sharon, H. W. Woodward.

Fourth class, 24 yards—E. A. Bruguire, E. P. Danforth, Walter L. Dean, R. R. Grayson, W. S. McMurtry, J. J. Moore, D. T. Murphy, W. S. Newhall, Alfred S. Tubbs.

All other members wishing to shoot will be classed by the committee.

J. M. QUAY, Secretary.
A. C. TUBBS, R. H. SPRAGUE, F. R. WEBSTER, } Committee.

The regular annual meeting of the club takes place to-night at 8 o'clock.

The Emeric Bill.

It is to be hoped that some definite action may be arrived at by the present Legislature concerning the game and fish interests of the State. The Emeric Bill seems to have acted much as a red rag, when flaunted as a signal of combat on a number of our citizens.

It always appears very strange that so many people have nothing in this world to do but to object. They never propose anything, at least if they do it is in a very mild, quiet way, but let any measure be started by others and they can do more howling in a given space of time than anybody else in the world.

The State Sportsman's Association held a long drawn out discussion on last September at its meeting in the Palace Hotel. As a result of that discussion a motion was passed authorizing the chairman of that meeting to appoint a committee who should draft a bill which should embody the sense of the meeting as at that time expressed.

The President of the Association announced that he would appoint a committee later on. Has such a committee been appointed? If so, who are they and what have they done?

The Emeric Bill in the main is good. It has defects but they are insignificant when compared to its strong points.

We should like to see the open season for deer made short, very short, say thirty days or during the month of September.

The propagation of game birds can only be effectually encouraged by having a stringent law, not only affecting the particular bird sought to be propagated but upon hunting generally, for many a man with a gun has been known to call a quail a snipe and a turkey a buzzard in order to escape the law.

We say in all honesty to the sportsmen who are raising such a cloud of dust about the Emeric Bill, why on earth didn't you get up a better one and push it through and not wait until the last moment and kick only to the probable effect of getting nothing at all?

Doing nothing would seem to indicate a state of satisfaction with existing laws, but no, we will not charge any man who is in any sense interested in field sports, with being satisfied with the present deplorable state of affairs. But we will say, before you condemn the Emeric Bill as a whole, give us something better.

The Yosemite.

Should the Yosemite be ceded to the General Government? It would seem, in the light of the events of the past, that there can be but one answer to this question. The trust undertaken by the State has been shamefully abused, and the avowed changes to be wrought by the commission is of themselves enough to warrant the taking of the control from the State and passing it back to the General Government.

The system of management is inherently weak, not to say rotten. It is preposterous to suppose that positions thrown out as a political sop, to which no salary is attached, should be productive of good. The contrary may always be expected.

The very acts called "improvements" foreshadowed by the plans of the commission, are nothing short of ignorant or willful destruction of much of the more delicate charm of the Valley. Much that has already been done bears the undoubted footprints of personal avarice at the expense of the beauty of the Valley.

Let the General Government take charge of the Valley to the end that its natural beauty may remain undisturbed. Of course but little save shrubbery and trees may be destroyed, yet the changing of favorable camping spots in pastures inclosed by wire fences is an eye-sore, besides being a great disadvantage to the campers who spend days and weeks in the Valley. Let the custody of the Valley be handed over to the General Government; in no other way will it ever be properly protected.

The necessity of having some one responsible for the Shooting Park at Oakland track and for the purpose of encouraging sport at the trap by having matters so arranged that any day in the week those wishing to shoot may do so, has induced Clabrough, Colcher & Co. to secure the lease of the Shooting Park for the season. They will put the grounds in good condition at once and then turn them over to the various gun clubs to be used as usual free of charge. The main object is to encourage the development of all kinds of trap sports and to enlarge, as far as possible the shooting contingent of this city and vicinity. A new set of inanimate traps, electric pull, will be put in place at once and a shed erected for the accommodation of the sportsmen engaged in this growing interest. The interest in this line will, no doubt, be very much enhanced by this arrangement. Every body will be welcome to the grounds and arrangements for a pleasant shoot may be made at any time on short notice. This will, no doubt, be pleasing to a great many sportsmen who cannot get off from business to attend the regular club events, but who have an occasional half day at their disposal.

The action of the Country Club in introducing class shooting in all events of that body is founded on the true principle and will enhance the pleasure of the stated events of this club. Each man is pooled with his equals only. Should a fourth-class man desire to shoot against those of the third class he doubles his entrance and so on, every man at liberty to push beyond his class into that of all the higher ones, but one cannot pass from a higher to a lower except by action of the directors of the Club.

The membership of the various gun clubs will doubtless be somewhat increased over that of last year. The interest in trap shooting seems to be growing, and we shall be much surprised indeed if the sport of inanimate target shooting is not pushed into favor as never before.

THE KENNEL.

Dog owners are requested to send for publication the earliest possible notices of whelps, sales, names claimed, presentations and deaths, in their kennels, in all instances writing plainly names of sire and dam and of grandparents, colors, dates and breed.

FIXTURES. BENCH SHOWS.

Westminster Kennel Club's seventeenth annual bench show, New York, February 21, 22, 23 and 24. James Mortimer, Superintendent, Chesapeake Bay Dog Club's bench show, Baltimore, Md., February 28, March 1, 2 and 3.

New England Kennel Club's bench show, Boston, April 4, 5, 6 and 7. J. W. Newman, Secretary.

Pacific Kennel Club's bench show, San Francisco, May 3, 4, 5 and 6. Horace W. Orear, Secretary.

World's Columbian Exposition bench show, Chicago, June 13, 14, 15, 16 and 17. Entries close May 20. Address W. I. Buchanan, Chief Department of Agriculture, Chicago.

Hamilton Kennel Club's second annual bench show, Hamilton, Can., September 7, 8, 9 and 10. A. D. Stewart, Secretary.

FIELD TRIALS.

Northwestern Field Trial Club's second annual trials, Morris, Manitoba, September 4. Thos. Johnson, Secretary.

Dr. R. A. Ferguson's fox-terrier bitch Jessie whelped upon January 2d a grand litter of pups by Blemton Reefer. It was our pleasure to see these upon our recent visit to Bakersfield, and pronounce them the best-marked and as even a lot as has been produced in this State. Dr. Ferguson bred the winning puppies at the last Los Angeles Bench Show, and we expect to see some winners in this litter. The puppies are bred as follows:

The Great Scotchman's Pets.

The following bit of pleasantry is related of one of the world's great men and his dog:

Carlyle's Nero was "a most affectionate, lively little dog, though otherwise of small merit and little or no training." For ten years Nero and his master had a great deal of many walks together and "a good deal of traffic, poor little animal, so loving, so naive and true with what dim intellect he had." Once when Carlyle was away from home the following letter was sent him, in Nero's behalf, by Mrs. Carlyle:

Dear Master: I take the liberty in writing to you myself (my mistress being out of the way of writing to you, she says) to let you know that Columbine (the black cat) and I are quite well, and play about as usual. There was no dinner yesterday to speak of. I had for my share only a piece of biscuit that might have been round the world; and if Columbine got anything at all, I didn't see it. I made a grab at one of two small things on my mistress' plate; she called them "heralds of the morn," but my mistress said: "Don't you wish you may get it?" and boxed my ears. I wasn't taken to walk on account of it being wet. And nobody came but a man for burial rates and my mistress gave him a rowing because she wasn't going to be buried here at all. Columbine and I don't care where we are buried. * * * (Tuesday evening). My mistress brought my chain and said: "Come along with me while it shined, and I could finish after." But she kept me so long in the London library and other places that I had to miss the post. An old gentleman in the omnibus took such notice of me! He looked at me for a long time and then turned to my mistress and said: "Sharp, isn't he?" And then my mistress was so good as to say: "O, yes!" And then the old gentleman said again: "I knew it! Easy to see that?" And he put his hand in his pocket and took out a whole biscuit—a sweet one—and gave it to me in hits. I was quite sorry to part with him, he was such a good judge of dogs.

Pointers of 1892.

Although I have nothing sensational to chronicle in connection with pointers during the past year, yet I can safely say the breed has fully maintained its popularity, says E. C. Norrish in Kennel Gazette.

The entries in the Puppy Stakes at the various Field Trial meetings were quite up to the average, although the competitors which came to the scratch, for some reason or other, showed a slight falling off. This was observable at the Kennel Club trials near Ipswich, where the ground was exceptionally favorable for the purpose, the fields being of nice size, game plentiful, and scent good; in fact, it was the general opinion of those interested in the workings of the dogs that the Club has never had better ground at its disposal.

Derby led off with the first show of the year, Mr. Astbury's Back leading the Open Dog Class, while the bitches were saved from mediocrity by Mr. Arkwright's beautifully-formed Belle Chance.

At Liverpool, a fortnight later, Mr. Beck's Bnsy Ben and Captain Thomas' Meeth Nostrum were awarded premium honors. At Cruft's show, the following month, a stronger lot put in an appearance, Mr. Bryan's Molton Brake scoring over Devonshire Wagg and Don Exon in Large size Dogs, while in the corresponding class of bitches Molton Belle, Devonshire Cream and Gladys III took their prizes in the order named. Devonshire Nero headed the Small-size Dog Class, and Devonshire Lady and Devonshire Doll held a like position in that for Small-size bitches. At Bath, Saddleback had a walk-over in the Oballege Class, Mr. Bulled taking the principal prizes in the Open. The next Show of importance was that of Manchester, when Mr. Chapman's Blake-o'-the-Border was the only competitor in the Challenge Class, the same owner's recent purchase, Molton Brake, taking first and special in Open Dogs, followed by Devonshire John, whose kennel companions, Devonshire Cream, Devonshire Nero and Devonshire Junkes, were winners amongst the light weights.

Passing over some minor shows, I now come to that held by the Kennel Club at the Agricultural Hall, where, under Mr. Arkwright's adjudication, Saddleback won over Devonshire Nero, and Mr. Lloyd's Ima over Treacle in the Challenge Classes. The Open Classes were divided by sex only, and not by weight, a slight innovation which brought some growls from other quarters besides the dogs. Graphic Secundus, a promising youngster from my own kennel, was awarded 1st in the Open Dog and Novice Classes. His death from distemper a few weeks after was much regretted. Amongst the other competitors which favorably impressed the judge were Heather Graphic, Totnes Angus, Ightfield Orpbens, Weatherhill Bang, Molton Brake and Totnes Parody; and in bitches the four prizes went to Devonshire Cream, Aldin Rob II., Gladys III. and Molton Belle with Mr. H. P. Lonsdale's Field Trial winner Ightfield Duce, vhc and r, and Molton Barlow, Heather Bee, and Totnes Onyx making up a really very strong class.

Darlington as usual had a good show of pointers, Mr. Chapman's Heather Graphic and Heather Lill being at the head of their respective classes, and also taking the two specials. Edinburgh certainly gains in popularity every year, and is well supported by North-Country Pointer men. This, too, in spite of the fact of its taking place at a time when so many sportsmen are engaged on the stubbles. Mr. Chapman came out strongly in several classes, his Stanford Bang taking first over Mr. Shield's Beau-o'-the-Border, Mr. Johnson's Rene R., Le Donovan, &c. In Large-size Bitches Heather Bee was equal first with Mr. Raper's Rosa Sefton, a showy animal, not quite so good in bone and muscle as the former.

Small-size dogs also formed an attractive group, headed by Mr. Shield's smart Major-o'-the-Border, with Mr. Raper's Ranging Naso 2nd, Mr. Pollock's Forest Harbinger 3rd, and the stoutly-made Le Rector fourth.

Coming next to the Crystal Palace Company's Show, we found Mr. Arkwright taking the lead in open dogs with his handsome field-trial performer, Aldin Flnke, in superb condition. In the same ring we also recognized Mr. Richardson's Returns R and Ruin R, with Sanford Bang, Fordcombe Bang and Barton Ben, while in bitches were Sandford Quince, Grip II, and Sandford Holden.

Birmingham quite kept up the reputation of its display of pointers. Most of the winners, however, had been seen at other shows during the year. The cup for best of all classes again went to Saddleback, his son Sandford Graphic winning 1st in open dogs, with Busy Ben a good 2nd, and Naso of Strasburg 3rd. Bronte was alone in challenge bitches, and there was nothing new in the large size open class, where Heather Bee, looking extremely well, was 1st, with Devonshire Cream and Molton Belle equal 2nd and 3rd. A brace of fresh ones headed the small-size dogs, Mr. Chapman's Heather Bob (1st) is a wonderful eleven-months-old puppy, which I shall hope to meet again. Saddleback Secundus (2nd) is altogether larger; in fact, almost too big for the class. He, however, took 1st in the novice and, with his half sister, Sandford Quince, secured the prize for best brace in the open classes. Quail of Upton was awarded 1st in small bitches, and 1st in the field-trial bitch class, where Bertha of Drayton made a very good 2nd.

The Frost-Fish and Its Capture

W. C. M., writing to the Field from Dunedin, N. Z., says: New Zealand has been aptly termed the "Playground of the Pacific." With her temperate climate and wealth of animal and vegetable life, she affords a rich field to the sportsman as well as to the sightseer. Within the past ten years great strides have been made by the various acclimatization societies throughout the colony in the direction of introducing into the Britain of the south different varieties of game from the mother country, but the present paper relates only to the life and death of a humble sea fish.

The frost fish (Ammodyte) is a species of sand-eel, and is found on various parts of the eastern coast of the Middle Island of New Zealand. It is a snake-like creature, varying from 4ft. to 6ft. in length, but is only about 3in. wide and 3in. or 4in. thick. Its head and mouth are both small, while its eyes are large and prominent. The skin is smooth and burnished, shining with an almost metallic lustre. The frost-fish is excellent eating, and consequently is held in high regard by the gourmets of the Antipodes. Its flesh is white, rich and firm, while its tenderness is equalled by the delicacy of its flavor. Naturally the fish is eagerly sought after, and commands a high price, as the supply is irregular, and not at all equal to the demand. Not much is yet known of the manner and customs of the frost-fish, but the little that has been made manifest is decidedly peculiar. It is a deep-water fish, and yet, strange to say, has never yet been taken by the net, the rod, or the line. Even the all-gathering trawl has hitherto failed to bring to the surface of "the vast deep" the modest and retiring Ammodyte. How then is its capture effected? To all appearance the frost-fish is captured by the fishermen only when it commits suicide and immolates itself on the sandy beaches of the Pacific.

The facts are that on calm and frosty nights during the autumn and winter months, numbers of frost-fish came ashore alive through the surf on the beaches before referred to, and there wriggle on to the firmer sands above, to be devoured by the watchful sea birds, or picked up by the fortunate fisherman. No satisfactory reason has yet been assigned for this rash act, this apparent jeu de se. Numerous theories have been propounded to account for it. One is that the hapless fish is pursued by a shark or other enemy, and prefers uncertain life on land to certain death of sea. Another and a more plausible theory is that the fish distends its air bladder to enable it to reach the surface for air or food, and that the keen frosty air there prevents it from closing said bladder, and thus returning to its habitat under the waves. In this way the luckless brute gradually drifts into shallow water, and is dashed ashore by the surf, only to struggle on to dry land to meet its fate. I do not pin my faith to either theory; but, whatever be the explanation, the facts are as above narrated. As may be imagined, the capture of the frost-fish has nothing specially sportsmanlike about it. The element of action seems absent. But the noble sportsman who takes part in a frost-fishing expedition may find some good shooting among the flocks of seawolf which fly above and around the doing frost-fish as it is gradually washed high and dry. Indeed, it is as well to have a gun wherewith to kill or frighten the feathered fishermen, as they very quickly pick the eyes out of the fish, and indeed devour them altogether if given time enough. The long sandy beaches at Pwakiawanui (some twelve miles from Dunedin) are the favorite resort of the frost-fisher. The usual plan is to form a party of two or more, and camp out over night at the foot of the cliffs which overhang the beach. Here a huge fire is lighted, and a tent pitched close at hand. The night, of course, must be clear and calm, as well as frosty, otherwise the long Pacific rollers make the surf too high for the successful capture of the game.

On one occasion I arrived at the fishing ground (which rejoices in the euphonious name of Murdering Beach), to find a tidal wave flowing right up to the base of the cliffs, with a heavy swell rolling in from the open ocean. In these circumstances frost-fishing was out of the question, so that the party had perforce to lie around their fire in one of the caves all night and tramp back to town empty handed at daylight next morning.

The next expedition was more successful. A splendid frost-fish was duly caught and killed. Its head and tail were then tied together with strips of New Zealand flax (Phormium tenax), and the two amateur fishermen started off in triumph through the bush, with the noble fish suspended between them from a long stick. After walking some four or five miles through thick shrub, we were glad to call a halt at a settler's hut, where we stopped for a drink of the ubiquitous tea. The game was laid carefully down on a stump in the clearing beside the house, while its captors went inside for a yarn with the old bushman. After about an hour's conversation we emerged from the hut and went to resume our burden, when, to our horror, we found only the head and tail of the fish, together with a few bones. The sleek and satisfied look of two collie dogs which were visible close by told us plainly where our precious fish had gone, and we left for the nearest railway station, muttering "curses not loud but deep" against our long-winded acquaintance and his hungry curs.

Such are some of the humors of frost-fishing. The fishing itself is rather slow work. It consists merely in walking from end to end of the beach shortly before dawn (the untimely hour chosen by the Ammodyte for self-destruction), and keeping a sharp look-out in the surf for the silver streak which betokens the advent of the frost-fish. When a fish is seen struggling in the waves or on the sand, all that remains to be done is to catch hold of it and drag it up out of reach of the backwash (if it does not wriggle up its own motion), and there despatch it with a stick or knife. To those followers of Izaak Walton, whose piscatorial experiences are limited to the fiercer joys of angling for trout and salmon, the pursuit of the frost-fish as above described must seem both tame and unexciting. But it is not so in reality. The surroundings are all so different. The gloomy cliff looming black overhead, the smooth white sand stretching crisp and crackling underfoot, the phosphorescent gleam of the advancing and retiring surf, the clear Antipodean moonlight shining out at sea beneath the silent stars, the intense and solemn stillness all around, broken only by the recurrent booming of the more distant breakers—all these tend to cast the glamour of poetry over the otherwise prosaic sport of frost-fishing, and to transform a variety of "pot-hunting" into a true, though humble, branch of that most delightful of all outdoor occupations—"the contemplative man's recreation."

HOW TO BREED TROTTERS.—The following article was sent me by the author, Dudley Miller, and the position he takes is certainly sustained by logic which must be accepted as thoroughly sound. A plain statement of facts from which he draws conclusions which are justified by these facts. But while admitting the soundness of the logic presented by Mr. Miller I would not advise an exact following of the lines which have resulted in even so great a success as that which is shown by the table of genealogies of the eight fastest trotters. Those who are in a position to justify experimental essays may do great service by deviating from a course, although that route has proved to be the best that has been discovered. "Facts are stubborn things," and when established facts are taken for a guide and intelligently followed it is a safe proceeding. But without searching for fresh facts there is an end to improvement, excepting that improvement which results from chance. With this table of the progenitors of the eight fastest trotters for reference every candid person will freely admit that near thoroughbred crosses have been advantageous. Three of the eight have thoroughbred grandams, one a thoroughbred dam, while the remaining quartet trace to that source through several channels further removed, and so close that "strictly thoroughbred" will appear if the genealogy is carried one generation further.

Examples of closer relationship to racing blood are yet so rare that few new facts are established, though in the case of Rowena there is a good prospect that a three-quarters thoroughbred, without counting remote strains of that blood, may have a place among the very fastest, when she reaches the age at which the youngest of the champions gained the honor. With the exception of Sunol she has shown a great deal faster than the fastest of the others at the age of two years, and that is an augury—not an unfair presumption—that three years more will give her the place. There are such an array of facts to prove that the male line descending from Rysdyk's Hambletonian must be the choice, when the object is to breed the very fastest trotters, that it will be a bold experimenter who varies from that position. Only one of the eight, Stamboul, and he with a double cross, one so near that he is a grandson of that famous progenitor of fast trotters. Where shall we look for an outcross on the side of the sire? is a query that is far more troublesome to answer than when the dams are the topic for consideration. The "alien families" have been tried, and with the exception of that one instance when the descendant of Grand Bashaw proved a success, have failed to give a satisfactory answer, that is when membership in the very select is the touchstone.

This is a problem which millions of people are attempting to solve, and to which they are devoting millions of dollars and considerable thought. A chemist, in order to learn what a substance is, analyses it, that is he finds out the elements of which it is composed, and that is the first step for the breeder of trotters to take. The breeder must find out what union or combination of blood produces the kind of horse he wants. Wallace said if you want trotters, breed only from trotters. That sounds very plausible, and is a fair way to reason, when a breed is thoroughly established and cannot be improved by the use of other than trotting blood; but is that the case? The flying trot or trot at extreme speed is artificial, and has been brought to its present state of excellence by intelligent coupling of horses, and also by their accidental or hap-hazard breeding. The analysis of pedigrees of the 230 trotters indicates that many of them have been produced by parents that did not possess individually that which the union of their blood produced in the progeny, viz: trotters with extreme speed, or the trotter of to-day. Had we bred only from trotters to produce and improve our trotters, during the past fifty years, nine-tenths or perhaps more of the horses in the 230 list would not be there, as nearly all of these are the result of coupling with the thoroughbred runner, horses of varied and often unknown ancestry, that possessed a controlling influence in fixing on their offspring the trotting gait. To illustrate this more clearly, the tabulated pedigrees are here given to the fourth generation, of the fastest eight trotters ever bred, which includes all in the 20% list.

Table listing names of horses and their pedigrees, including names like Harold, Miss Russell, Vatican, Estill Eric, and Daughter of, with their respective sire and dam information.

From these tabulated pedigrees it will be seen that the fastest eight trotting records were all made by the descendants of Hambletonian 10, a horse having about 50 per cent. thoroughbred blood, and out of a daughter of a mare by the Norfolk trotter, imported Bellfounder. Five of the eight are the produce of Hambletonian's sons, Electioneer, Happy Medium, Harold and his daughter Fleetwing, and three are by his grandsons Lord Russell, Aleyone and Vatican.

The fastest, Nancy Hanks, 204, is not only a granddaughter, but is also out of a granddaughter of Hambletonian, and, like her sire, is about half thoroughbred.

Stamboul, 207 1/2, the second, is also an inbred Hambletonian, being sired by Sultan, a grandson of Delmonico, by Hambletonian, and her dam, Patchen Maid, is out of a mare by Hambletonian, sire Abdallah.

The third, Kremlin, 207 1/4, like the first and second, is also an inbred Hambletonian, his sire, Lord Russell, being by a son, and his dam, Eventide, is out of a daughter of Hambletonian. Besides these three, Belle Vara, 208 3/4, is an inbred Hambletonian, her sire, Vatican, is out of a daughter of Hambletonian, and her dam's sire, Estill Eric, is by Ericsson, a son of Hambletonian.

The fact that the fastest eight trotters are closely related to Hambletonian, being his direct descendants, and that four of the eight, including the three fastest, are inbred to him, aside from any other consideration, mark him as pre-eminent among trotting horse progenitors.

Five of these eight, Kremlin, 207 1/4; Sunol, 208 3/4; Maud S., 208 3/4; Palo Alto, 208 3/4, and Belle Vara, 208 3/4, unite with the blood of Hambletonian that of the remarkable four-mile thoroughbred race horse, Boston.

Three, Kremlin, Martha Wilkes and Belle Vara, inherit the blood of Mambrino Chief; three the blood of American Star, Belle Vara, Kremlin and Nancy Hanks; three the blood of Henry Clay, sunol, Palo Alto and Stamboul, and two, Kremlin and Maud S., the blood of Pilot Jr.

Nancy Hanks, 204, queen of trotters, has been shown by Mr. Marrett to inherit about fifty per cent. thoroughbred blood.

The percentage of thoroughbred blood in Stamboul I have not figured, but he gets it twice through Hambletonian, besides once through Abdallah 1, once through Mambrino Chief, and Patchen Maid, his granddam was by George M. Patchen, whose dam was by a thoroughbred horse.

Kremlin in addition to the thoroughbred blood he gets from Hambletonian and Mambrino Chief, was sired by Lord Russell, whose dam was out of a thoroughbred mare, and Kremlin's dam's sire was by the son of a thoroughbred horse, out of a daughter of a thoroughbred horse.

Martha Wilkes, 208 1/4, was by Aleyone, whose dam, Alma Mater, was more than three-quarters thoroughbred, as her sire was more than half and her dam pure thoroughbred, and all this is in addition to the hot blood she inherited from Hambletonian and Mambrino Chief.

Sunol, 208 3/4, is out of a mare whose dam is thoroughbred, which is also the case with Maud S., 208 3/4, and Belle Vara, 208 3/4, is out of Dame Winnie, a mare not only thoroughbred, but the dam of four in 2:30—Palo Alto, 208 3/4; Big Jim, 2:23 1/2; Gertrude Russell, 2:23 1/2; and Paola, 2:30.

I have simply stated facts as to the fastest eight trotting records and have given the blood lines inherited by the horses that made them.

By uniting and properly crossing the blood that has been thus pre-eminently successful we may breed trotters equally fast, and probably faster. DUDLEY MILLER.

Oswego, N. Y., January 16, 1933.

TROTTING-INSTINCT.—Some years ago the compound word, taken for the text of this article was sure to appear in a majority of essays on breeding trotters. Many times, perhaps, in a column of the weekly or page of the monthly in which the essay found a place, and among those who argued that near crosses of thoroughbred were awfully pernicious in the composition of fast trotters was held the argument above all others to sustain their side of the controversy. A few modifications of the phraseology to remove the tedium of iteration and reiteration, though that was the kernel of the nut, the nucleus of the surrounding envelopment of words, the mystic sign, the abracadabra of the science. And there was a good deal to justify the constant harping on this clap-trap catchword, if even there was a sort of vagueness, an ambiguity which was troublesome to explain, when a more exact definition was solicited. The boundary between reason and instinct is difficult to determine. That is in cases where there are doubts whether instinct or intelligence governs the actions. Pure instinct, akin to that which prompts incubation by heat of the body, is readily determined, and even that simple practice may have a foundation which intelligence has had a share in constructing. Trotting-instinct, however, can not be classed as a peculiar gift, as all breeds of horses possess that kind of action, with so few examples on the other side that it may be termed universal. But the adaptability to acquire fast-trotting action is, comparatively speaking, a rare qualification, and still rarer a combination of fast-trotting action and the faculty, or better to say the qualities which enable an animal to keep up a high rate of speed for the distance required by the conventionalities of trotting programmes. Whether the gift be called instinct or adaptability to readily acquire fast trotting action is of little consequence, and I am willing to concede that it is a valuable inheritance, and that the colt which has a natural tendency to trot fast has a great advantage over one which is not so highly gifted. But it does not follow that the pupil which shows the greatest readiness to acquire the rudiments of a trotting education will be at the head of the class when the course is completed. It may be that the colt which is deficient in trotting-instinct may surpass his favored competitor in intelligence, and is also endowed with—that may be termed—higher mechanical advantages, viz., a framework of better proportion for rapidity of movement and an increase of muscular power. No matter how strong the instinct to trot is implanted in the juvenile makeup there must be subsequent improvement, the result of an intelligent appreciation of the situation, to make the finished performer. Superior mental qualifications will surely give prominence over animals of inferior endowment, and though it may appear the height of absurdity to claim that there is a necessity for talent in a line of physical attributes, those who have given the subject proper study will agree with me that mind as well as muscle is an essential to acquire high rank in trotting circles. Various degrees of talent in the upper ranks of famous trotters, and in a few instances genius as fully displayed as that shown by an Ellsler, a Tagliani, a Celeste or Carmencita. "He does not run on his head," replied the Yorkshireman to the critic who found fault with the Roman nose and the coarse upper portion of the cranium of a celebrated racehorse. A truer answer would have been that a great racehorse may be deficient, from an esthetic view point, in beauty of physiognomy, and yet be benefited by a divergence from the artist's ideal. Great as is the necessity for brain force in the fast galloper who has to keep up a high rate of speed for distances when odice power must supplement muscular capacity, there is a more imperative demand for intelligence in the flying trotter. The requirements of the track are more rigid in this respect than those of the race course, and the educational methods of the harness division entail a higher degree of intelligence in the pupils to make the teachings effective. In some points alike and in some widely differing are the duties of the teachers of race horses and trotters. More arduous the task to bring the horse which has to run at the top of his flight, or nearly at the top, into the best condition to withstand the strain than when the slower pace governs the exercise, but there are numerous trials of skill in perfecting the action, in a great measure artificial, of the fast trotter. The best comparison which presents itself is that of the foot-racer and the terepsichorean artist. The problem which is before the trainer of the foot racer is to bring his charge into the state which will enable him to cover a certain space within the least time, and this is analogous to what the trainer of race horses has to accomplish. Far from being easily executed, and, to be successful, requires a deal of experience and a talent for the pursuit, which is not a universal endowment; in fact, it may be classed as a rare combination of qualities in order to reach a high degree of excellence in the profession. The teacher who has to perfect the movements of the dancer until the pupil will gain public approval, overcome faults, bring physical and mental qualities into harmonious equilibrium, lend grace and elasticity, celerity and suppleness, present a fascinating picture, by adding to natural inheritance the polish of art. It will surely be admitted that an active brain, ready to receive and retain instruction, will give the teacher less trouble than when there is a dullness of comprehension, a sanguine temperament better adapted for the pursuit than lymphatic stolidity, and yet the nervous organization so well-balanced that excitement will not overthrow the judgment or endanger self-possession. From the description given of training public dancers that and the description connected with the education of fast trotters have many points of resemblance.

The professor of the art of educating trotters labors under greater disadvantages than one who has pupils who can understand his spoken admonitions. That is the knowledge of the meaning of commands from the first without a long series of lessons to give the explanation. Thus if the knees of the neophyte are not hended enough, an intimation to that effect, and an example by the teacher, would remedy the defect, or, at least, convey the desire of the instructor that the action should be improved. Mechanical devices are the resort, and the only ones, which the tutor of quadrupeds can employ, and then there are four legs to govern, doubting the difficulties met in a bipedal scholar. Few, indeed, the apt scholars which give no trouble, with perfect or nearly perfect action, from the first lessons in the kindergarten to the time they reach a mark low down in the teens. Generally one or more defects to overcome, and it does not require long arguments to prove that intelligence in the pupil is a prominent factor in establishing improvement. Some of the numerous appliances have resulted in correcting the bad habit, the action changed by their use for the better; the sensible colt, remembering the lesson, adopts that "way of going" and performs the task without being hampered with mechanical devices. And now comes a query not altogether inappropriate in relation to instinct. The colt has acquired the proper action to trot fast, in a great measure, the result of education. It is not instinct in that case that has given the propensity, intelligence being the prime factor in the development of speed. But instinct, in all probability, has arisen from mental activities pursued from generation to generation, and what was originally guided by intelligence becomes automatic, and every succeeding generation more intensely automatic than those which preceded. But even where the automatic faculty has been intensified by inheritance come exceptions, and some of the very fastest trotters can only claim the inheritance from one side of their genealogical tree. In such cases it is fair to assume that instinct is strengthened by a greater degree of intelligence, and a higher form, i. e., physical and mental qualities of a better type for rapid locomotion at a trotting gait.

THE LATE AUCTION SALES.—Dame Fortune has so much to do with the prices obtained at auction sales that any predictions of prices which are likely to rule are of little value. That is, when articles or animals offered come under the classification of luxuries. Thus paintings and trotting horses are liable to such a fluctuation in prices that the most astute observer can, at the best, only hazard a guess at the result of a sale "by auction." The top of the wave or the depth of the trough. This has been forcibly illustrated in the winter sales in New York. Notwithstanding the tumult raised over the sale of Stamboul and the much lower price obtained than was predicted by sanguine estimators, the average was remarkable, and without taking the trouble to go over the records, I am of the opinion that for the number, or an approximate number, sold it is the largest reached in the sale of trotting-bred horses. The Case sale, which followed, sank towards the bottom of the trough; the San Mateo, though the altitude of the hill was not as high as that on which the stock of the neighboring farm was carried into port, it was still of favorable height, and the average what might be termed highly satisfactory. Then came the Palo Alto sale, so much below former returns that writers of little experience and those whose bitter prejudices and former denunciations of Palo Alto methods forbade an honest opinion, endeavored to cast all the blame on near crosses of thoroughbreds, when their own figures showed that the lowest prices in the list were trotting-bred, the highest with the malignant strains not far away. But even this, with an average of something over three hundred dollars, was not at the very bottom of depression. Stony Ford came after, and with only twenty-four animals in the catalogue, the average was less than $250. Just as fair to claim that it was owing to the trotting strains in that famous breeding farm's horses which frightened buyers, and as Stony Ford has always held high rank and enjoyed a well-merited reputation for the bluest and richest of trotting blood, the most solid stalker for racing infusious would have more gumption than to advance so senseless a plea.

Luck has a great deal to do with the success of auction sales. When Fortune congregates such bidders as Messrs. Schultz, Pierce, Moore and Henry, the sky is bright. When they lock horns at the outset of the offering it is an augury that the strife will continue to the end of the engagement. Their heroism excites that of others, and there is a rattle of musketry all along the line while the big guns are preparing for heavier conflicts. Enthusiasm rules. Auctioneers catch the spirit of the hour, and the magnetic influence extends to the horses. Inspired by the plaudits the bidding has elicited, be the colt ever so dull for the time he is transformed, and sweeps around the exhibition ring with proud and lofty step. Nothing like excitement to bring out the action which is so taking to the spectators. There is a buoyancy, an abandon, a surrender to the spirit which is swaying the assemblage, and there is a sort of mental telegraphy, an odic current, a stream of good feeling running from man to animal, a joint fascination in the exuberance of high spirit which pervades the atmosphere, an exhilaration which animates hiped and quadruped, a jovial hypnotism, an ardor, almost a passion, nearly a frenzy when a wink means a hundred, and a nod a cool thousand dollars, and winks and nods coming as rapidly as the bullets from a Winchester.

When the dame is not in a benignant mood, and everything appears to be "wrong end to," and there is not a single rift in the dark cloud which overhangs the proceedings, listlessness is sure to prevail. Dull, dreary, stale, flat and unprofitable, not a spark of magnetism, not a glint of electricity, not a ray of good-feeling, the joyous banquet-hall hung with sackcloth, scarcely a remembrance of the good cheer remaining, "sermons and soda-water" in lieu of hurgundy and champagne. The blind goddess cannot be placated when she has fairly made up her mind to be contrary, and were she to be too lavish of her favors they would not be properly appreciated. Let others moralize and look wise, and give a multitude of reasons for the success of one sale and the failure of another, after all the ratiocinations and learned disquisitions I must still believe that luck has a good deal to do with auction sales.

DEPARTURES IN TROTTING—For the spring meeting of the Pacific Coast Trotting Horse Breeders Association many new departures from the old-time methods have been resolved upon, one of the most important of which, in my estimation, is that which reserves larger portion of the purses offered for classes to be determined upon after the horses are congregated at the track. Thus some of the purses for the opening day, in all probability which will be Saturday, May 20th, will close on the Thursday preceding that date, for the second day, Tuesday, on the Saturday previous, and so on during the pendency of the meeting. The other events are named in the advertisement which appears in this number of the paper, but the main feature will be what may be termed improvised races.

The trouble which has arisen, from time classification, with the entries closing some time before the races are trotted, is that a few horses are so much superior to others in their respective class that the contests are one-sided, and hence owners of outclassed animals have little chance to win expenses. But if there is a good assemblage of horses to select from there is an opportunity to bring the contestants more nearly on an equality, and with dash race and heats of a mile horses can participate in a far greater number of races than was possible under the old system, and that without a severe strain. The meeting is billed to hold four days, Saturday, Tuesday, Thursday and Saturday, and if restricted to the proposed number there will be at least twenty races on the hills. But if the number of horses present at the opening of the meeting warrants the addition other days will be added, the intention being to give all the horses which assemble a fair chance to make an earning. Contests are the aim. That will interest the public, and, with the public interested, the question of success will surely be decided favorably. It is essential, however, that owners second the efforts of the association by bringing their horses to the meeting in sufficient numbers to insure novelty, so that the stereotyped sameness which heretofore has governed will not be presented. Better by far to have hard-fought battles than contests which are so one-sided that they are in reality no contests, if even the time is some seconds slower, and by careful selections this can be managed.

One of the greatest drawbacks to trotting in California has been that the trotting season has been curtailed to a few of the autumn months. A spring and early summer circuit will prove a boon to owners and breeders who cannot send their horses across the mountains, and in place of staking money will have a good chance to make the business remunerative. All that is necessary to secure a public support that will warrant an early-in-the-year circuit is to offer attractions which will incite attendance, and I have the utmost confidence that the good sense of the owners of trotters all over the State will prompt a hearty support of the schemes which promise so well, and with that support there cannot be failure.

NOT—The omission of that little word of three letters changed the meaning of a sentence to directly opposite of that intended. It occurred in the article "Manette and her dam," one sentence of which should have read: "There are few, I imagine, who will not agree with me in the necessity for perfecting the machinery of the association so that when questions, involving large pecuniary interests, arise, that there shall be the power to administer oaths, and to punish when the truth is violated." With not left out there is a reversal of the meaning, though subsequent sentences would show that it was an error.

I have yet to meet one person, and I have conversed with several on the subject, who did not coincide in the justice of the claim, and lawyers especially vigorously denounced the admission of testimony which could be so easily perverted. There are plenty of men whose word would be equally as valuable as when given under oath, and there are others who might not start out with the intention of giving false testimony, but is cornered to sustain their first avowals that prevarication did not appear to be in the way when that would present absolute for the original lapse. In this very case there is a marked discrepancy between the affidavits and the amendatory testimony, and surely when that which has been endorsed by oath can be supplemented with random talk, and that given as much weight, or actually more credit, than the first, it is time that there should be a change. It is due the gentlemen who give valuable time to the consideration of disputed questions that their time shall not be wasted by listening to evidence which cannot command the attention it should to compensate for their labor, and in justice to them as well as litigants the reform should be made.

HOOF-BEATS.

FOUR of Buccaneer's daughters appear as dams of trotters in the new list for 1892.

MONROE SALISBURY left this city on Tuesday for Kentucky. He will be gone three weeks.

SAMUEL GAMBLE arrived in this city last Saturday. He has not made any arrangements about his future plans.

JAMES E. BERRYMAN resigned his position with A. T. Hatch, and intends to open a public training stable at the Oakland track. Mr. Berryman is a competent man and should do a large business.

THERE seems to be "a kick" all along the line against the action of the American Trotting Association in rejecting the records, and many believe the way Kremlin got his record ought to be investigated also.

HORSEMEN should not forget the sale of Maltese Villa horses at Oakland Trotting Park at 1 o'clock to-day (Saturday). Twelve head will be sold, consisting of the famous race horse, Ed Corrigan, Alto Mio, Thermidor, Panchita, Mozart, three excellent broodmares, three two-year-olds and a suckling. All are beautifully bred, and the horses should bring excellent prices.

MAJOR ALEX P. WAUGH, "Grim," is to remain at Steiner's headquarters below the office of the BREEDER AND SPORTSMAN, where he will be pleased to see his many friends. Mr. Steiner has sold his interest in the place to J. C. Diamond, a very popular gentleman, who was formerly proprietor of the "Mum" saloon. The stock of liquid refreshments to be dispensed with will, in the future as in the past, be unsurpassed.

MATT STORN's racing stable in 1893 will consist of eleven excellent horses, as follows: Marigold, ch m, 6 years, by Miller—Katy Pease; Topgallant, ch h, 4 years, by imp. Mariner—Lady Clare; Centella, ch m, 4 years, by Joe Hooker—Katy Pease; Red Prince, ch h, 5 years, by imp. Woodstock—Oklohoma; Tohasco, blk c, 3 years, by Judge McKinstry—by Kingston; Modesto, hr c, 2 years, by Hyder Ali—Visalia; Amanda, ch f, 2 years, by Warwick—Mischief; Lochinvar, b c, 2 years, by imp. Cheviot—Arathusa; Del Norte, br c, 2 years, by imp. Greenback—Priscilla; Hermitage, h c, 3 years, by imp. Friar Tuck—Mistake, and Excuse Me, ch g, 5 years, by Dudley—Wah-o-naisa. The horses are well engaged at the leading tracks in the Far East, and will doubtless do much toward keeping up California's reputation for the production of fast and game race horses.

GETTING AN EDGE ON!

THE Stallion Ringwood, Stud of Percherons The Famous Son of Sidney.

Ringwood is a dark bay; black points; 15 1/2 hands, and resembles Sidney in formation more than any of his sons. He is a pure-gaited trotter, and has shown remarkable speed from a colt. With but little work, he showed trials of speed in 2:19 1/4 as a four-year-old, and would have received a record of 2:18 or better but for an accident at the Napa track, and was drawn from his engagements, and never has been put in race since. Ringwood is six years old, and as a sire of speed, form and color, is equal to his noted sire, Sidney. Several of his colts have been sold at high prices, and have gone East. He is a sure foal-getter and of fine disposition, and a lady can handle or drive him. Ringwood is highly bred on the dam's side. Alma was by Dashaway (thoroughbred), he by Williamson's Belmont, he by American Boy; second dam Fanny Cob, a noted roadmare brought from Canada to California. Alma is a noted producer of speed.

ALSO FOR SALE

Tippoo Tib,

Gelding record, 2:26. Can trot in 2:20 or better; will show quarters in 0:32; 15 1/2 high; light bay; a great road horse; single or double, and perfectly sound. Ringwood or Tippoo Tib can be put in training and with their price in one season. For further particulars, address A. C. DIETZ, Oakland, Or, Breeder and Sportsman Office, San Francisco.

A NUMBER OF

Fine Standard-Bred Mares

(With Foal to Dexter Prince).

Three are registered and the others are eligible to be registered.

ALSO

Three Thoroughbred Mares,

One by Hyner All, dam Kate Fletcher, by Harry O'Fallon. One by Kyle Daly; first dam by Joe Daniels; second dam Queen Emma, by Woodhull. One by Bryant W; first dam by Joe Daniels, full sister to Lord Brock, winner of the Australian Derby last year.

The first mare is Undine, full sister to Lisette, the winner of $10,000 purse last fall in New York. All these mares are for sale cheap. Reason for selling, my ill-health and wish to close out all of my stock. The standard-bred mares are all good individuals as well as the runners. Will sell them together or singly

THE TROTTING STALLION

BLUE BULL,

(Known as CHISHOLM'S BLUE BULL).

Sired by Wilson's Blue Bull (sire of 80 in the list) dam Maggie Rice, by Gage; Logan 127 (sire of Skinkie Hambletonian, 2:28 1/4, and 3 sires of 12 and 5 dams of 5 in the list); grandam, Fanny Stratford, a mare s. t. b. thoroughbred. Gage's Logan was by Hambletonian 10 out of Lady Wallace by Ohio Eclipse; grandam, Sally Miller by Post Boy, son of Duroc. This handsome Blue Bull stallion was foaled in 1879, the property of R. B. Chisholm of Kane County, Illinois. He is one of the finest-looking, purest-gaited and most intelligent horses in this State. His colts are all remarkably handsome, combining size with plenty of substance.

ALSO

A BROWN GELDING

Six years old, sired by the above stallion out of a mare by Gen. Reno 464. He is sound as a dollar, a pure trotter and as game as a bulldog. Prices very reasonable. Address R. Breeder and Sportsman Office.

FOR SALE.

STANDARD STALLION

FRED DRAKE 4834,

(Rac Record, 2:26 1/4).

By Joe Oavin 564 (sire of six in the list), he by Messenger Duroc 106 (sire of 20 in the list), first dam, Minnie Drake (dam of 2 in the list), by Louis Napoleon 207 (sire of 16 in the list). Fred Drake 4844, 2:26 1/4, is a splendid individual; stands about 16 hands high, and weighs over 1,100 lbs., is of excellent disposition. His record is no mark of his speed as he can trot in :20 or better with training next season. Reason for selling is that owner is engaged in other business and has not the time to devote to the horse. Will be sold at a reasonable price. For particulars address Greatest Sale of the Season!

Look For Next Week's Advertisement of the Combination Sale of Trotters

TO TAKE PLACE AT

NAPA, MARCH 8, 1893.

Some of this choicest Stallions, Broodmares, Colts and Fillies Ever Offered at Auction in California will be Disposed of.

THE DANE 11,304, by Stamboul, 2:07 1/2, dam Dolly McMann (dam of Lilly Stanley, 2:17 1/2). This fellow is a true type of his noted sire, and should make a great trotter as well as a great sire. His colts, now yearlings, are considered to be unsurpassed for beauty and speed, and are all solid bays and browns and are "Young Stambouls."

ALCONA 730, sire of 5 in 2:30 list, three producing sons and a producing daughter at fifteen years old, by Almont 33, dam Queen Mary, by Mambrino Chief. No two of this sire's descendants have ever been trained by the same man. His produce are forcing their way to the front without booming. They all trot fast and breed on. Alcona is the greatest prize winning stallion in California.

ALCONEER 15,120, (5), brother to Alcona Jr. 2:19, by Alcona 730, dam Madonna (dam of Alcona Jr., 2:19, by Del Rey, 2:24 1/2, and grandam of Silas Skinner, 2:17, King Orry, 2:23 1/4) by Cassius M. Clay Jr. 22, etc.

THE GREAT TROTTER MARE LILLY STANLEY, 2:17 1/2, dam of the sensational trotter and pacer in Salisbury's string. It is expected that one of these colts will "hit the two minute mark."

A GREAT 3-YEAR-OLD FILLY BY DIRECTOR, 2:17 1/2, dam Tricks; second dam Katy Tricks (dam of Conde, 2:20, and Empress, 2:24). This is a magnificent-looking one and will make a race mare of the first class.

Besides these there are a number of mares and fillies by Steinway, 2:25 1/4, Mountain Boy, Grandissimo, 2:24 1/4, Alcona 730, Alconeer 15,120, The Dane 11,304, Director, 2:17, Silas Skinner, 2:17, Whippleton 1883, Geo Washington, 2:20, and other noted sires.

COMEDY, bl. f. (4), by Director, 2:17, dam Dolly McMann (dam of Lilly Stanley, 2:17 1/2). This filly is a perfect counterpart of her famous sire, and whoever gets her will have one of the greatest campaigners in America.

A TWO-YEAR-OLD FILLY BY GEO. WASHINGTON, 2:20, out of Lucy by McClellan 143. This is a great filly, if one is to judge by the way she trots alongside a fast saddle horse.

A TWO-YEAR-OLD FILLY BY SILAS SKINNER, 2:17, out of the famous old Lady Sargent. This one is a hammer, and will astonish everyone at the sale by her nice way of going.

CADUCAS 10,840 (4), by Almont Medium, 2:18 1/4, dam Amelia T. by Alcona 730, grandam Warwick Maid (dam of Prince Warwick, trial 2:16, and Warwick Medium, 2:35 1/2, as a two-year-old over a half mile track), by Almont Mambrino 701. Here is one of the most fashionably bred young stallions in this State, and is a race horse. If given an opportunity will get a low mark this fall.

A YEARLING FILLY BY AZMOOR, 2:20 1-2, out of Urania by Kentucky Prince; second dam Hambletonian 10; third dam by American Star 14. This breeding needs no comments; the filly is perfection.

A YEARLING FILLY BY DIRECTOR, 2:17, out of Elma, 2:24, by Elmo 890. This filly is a natural pacer and is "fast as a bullet."

FOR SALE.

SINFAX,

By Wildile, dam Fostress, by Foster, etc.

THE GREAT

HIGHLAND STOCK FARM

Near Lexington, Ky.,

The Home of The Mighty :- Red :- Wilkes

SIX HUNDRED AND SEVENTY (670) acres of unsurpassed Blue Grass soil, all in grass, two hundred and fifty (250) acres being beautiful, open woodland. About twenty (20) large stock barns of 200 box stalls. Numerous paddocks with roomy boxes. Various cottages and other houses for employees. Coachman's quarters, vehicle and harness apartments, veterinary and farrier's office and shop, and numerous other buildings required in this extensive business. The main residence is an imposing two-story brick of twelve rooms. Another with eight rooms with conservatory and billiard hall; both of recent build, supplied with all modern conveniences of water works, gas lights and electric bells, which latter also connect outbuildings with the office. Telephone connection with Lexington. Only four miles to center of the city by turnpike and Louisville Southern Railroad. Station on margin of farm. Numerous daily trains. Pure limestone water to every enclosure by three force pumps and also by windmill. Living springs, pools and a number of large cisterns at the dwelling and barns. The best private track in the State. Farm enclosed and subdivided by the best fencing. The entire place is high table land, affording good drainage, insuring good health to stock and early and more nutritious grasses, in which two particulars Highland has always excelled.

Will have ready in a short time a detailed printed description of this great establishment, and later on will supplement this by a lithographed diagram of the entire place in its subdivisions and photographic views from different perspectives, all of which will be mailed to you on demand.

With great reluctance Messrs. France & Son agree to part with Highland, so delightful a home and a business too, which the public is aware has proven such a signal success, but the health of the former will not permit him to continue longer in the business. The price is made to insure an immediate sale.

Many Additional Purses Will be Given

For Class Races and Special Events, which will be made to close at 5 p. m. on each day of the meeting for the following race day, entrance to which will be 3 per cent. from starters and 2 per cent. additional to declare out.

CONDITIONS.

No horses and colts owned on the Pacific Coast by others than members of the P. C. T. H. B. A. are eligible to the above purses, but horses owned outside of the Pacific Coast are eligible thereto, regardless of membership.

All States and Territories lying in whole or in part west of the Rocky Mountains are held to be part of the Pacific Coast.

The Directors reserve the right to change the hour and day of any race, except when it becomes necessary to ante-date a race, in which instance the nominator will receive three days' notice of change by mail to address of entry.

Entries not declared out by five o'clock p. m. of the day preceding the race shall be required to start.

When there is more than one entry to purses by one person or in one interest, the horse to be started must be named by five o'clock p. m. of the day preceding the race.

Five to enter and three to start.

In all dash races where there are more than six starters the number of starters shall be divided by lot; each division shall constitute a race. For instance, should there be more than six starters and not more than twelve, there shall be two divisions. If more than twelve, then three divisions, the divisions being as nearly equal as the number will permit; in case of seven four and three; or nine, five and four, etc. When under this rule it becomes necessary to divide the number of starters, the Association shall add 30 per cent. of the amount of the purse in case there are two divisions, and 60 per cent. of the amount of the purse in case there are three divisions. The total amount to be equally shared between the divisions, the first horse in each division to receive 75 per cent. and the second 25 per cent.

Trotting and racing colors shall be named by five o'clock on the day preceding the race, and MUST be worn upon the track.

Otherwise than the above, National Trotting Association Rules will govern. Suspensions and expulsions of the American Trotting Association will be recognized.

DIRECT LINE, Limited to Twenty-Five Approved Outside Mares at $75 the Season, from Feb. 15 to June 1, 1893.

He will then be trained for a record. Direct Line is a fine-looking bay horse, stands 15 1/2 hands high, and is a splendid individual. He is by Director, 2:17 (who sold for $75,000); sire of Directum, 2:11 1/2, champion three-year-old in a race; Evangeline, 2:11 1/4 at four years old in a race; Margaret S., 2:12 1/2, and Direct, 2:05 1/2, champion pacing stallion, and fourteen others from 2:18 1/2 to 2:30. Dolly, dam of Director, 2:17, is also the dam of Craning, 2:21; Thorndale, 2:22 1/2 (sire of seven trotters from 2:15 1/2 to 2:30, and the dams of nine in the list); Onward, 2:25 1/2 (sire of sixty-four with records from 2:14 1/2 to 2:30, and the dams of twelve from 2:14 1/2 to 2:30); Dictator 118 is the sire of Director, 2:17; Phallos, 2:18 1/4; Jay-Eye-See, 2:10 trotting and 2:06 1/2 pacing, and thirty-nine others from 2:16 1/2 to 2:30, and of the dams of Nancy Hanks, 2:04 (the world's record), and twenty-seven others from 2:19 1/4 to 2:30. Clara, dam of Dictator, Dexter, 2:17 1/4, and two others in the 2:30 list, is by American Star 14, sire of four trotters and the dams of forty-five in the 2:30 list. Dictator is by Hambletonian 10, sire of forty trotters and of the dams of ninety-two in the list. The dam of Direct Line is Lida W., 2:18 1/4, dam of Nutwood Wilkes, 2:20 1/2 at three years, and is the fastest daughter of the great Nutwood 600, 2:18 3-4, who is not only the greatest living sire, but is also the greatest broodmare sire of 1892, he having put in twenty-seven and his daughters twenty-four in the 2:30 list. [For Lida W. see tabulated pedigree.]

CALIFORNIA NUTWOOD 15 119 LIMITED TO FIFTY MARES AT $50 FOR THE SEASON.

CALIFORNIA NUTWOOD is a handsome chestnut horse, stands sixteen hands one and a half inches high, and is the sire of Maud C., 2:19; Annie C., 2:25; Albert H., 2:27 1/4; Mollie C., 2:37 1/4, and several others knocking at the door. He is by Nutwood 600, 2:18 3-4, dam by Geo. M. Patchen Jr. 31, 2:27. This represents the best strains of Hambletonian and Clay blood, a combination that cannot fail to produce fast and game race horses, as well as great broodmares.

(For pedigree of Nutwood 600 and Geo. M. Patchen Jr. 31, see tabulated pedigree above.) NOTE: You will hardly realize the strength of this breeding until you examine the above tabulated pedigree closely, then you will see that there is not only 7 great performers in it, but the greatest of sires, as well as brood mare sires. You also find a number of great brood mares, all of which you rarely find in the pedigree of two young stallions. Guy Wilkes, 2:15 1/4, and Director, 2:17, were not only fast and game race horses, but are producing young and extremely game race horse speed to a wonderful extent. Guy Wilkes, 2:15 1/4, is the only horse living or dead with 8 in the 2:15 list. Director is the sire of Direct, 2:05 1/2, the fastest pacing stallion, and Directum, 2:11 1/2, the fastest three-year-old race horse the world ever saw. Now, with these two sires on one side of Nutwood Wilkes and Direct Line, and Lida W., 2:18 1/4, the fastest daughter of the great Nutwood 600, 2:18 3-4, on the other side, I cannot see how one can make a mistake in breeding a good mare to either of these two young horses. It looks as if we had everything but the possible nick and should get that nine times out of ten. Mares not proving in foal may be returned the following season free of service fee. Parties desiring the services of any of the above named stallions must send the mare or 10 per cent. of the service fee with the engagement. Excellent pasturage, and the best condition of the animals requires little hay or grain, or both, will be fed at $10 per month. The best of care will be taken of mares, but no liability for accidents or escapes. Mares may be shipped direct to me at Irvington, Alameda County, Cal., via broad gauge railroad. All bills are due at time of service, but must be paid by Aug. 1st, 1893. No stock will be allowed to leave the place until all bills are settled. Season from Feb. 15th to Aug. 1st, 1893.

Young Stock For Sale. Visitors welcome any day. Address MARTIN CARTER, Nutwood Stock Farm, Irvington, Alameda Co., Cal.

BOODLE 5829 RECORD, 2:21 1/2 In Fifth Heat

Will make the SEASON OF 1893, commencing FEBRUARY 1st and ending JUNE 1st, at AGRICULTURAL PARK, SAN JOSE.

VERMONT HERO 11 Dam of Searcher Mambriño Chief 11 Rhodes Mare, by Gano Hambletonian 10 Katy Darling Abdullah 1 Untraced Abdullah 1 Clus Kent Mare American Star 14 Old Sorrel, by Exton Eclipse Vermont Black Hawk 5 Untraced

DESCRIPTION. BOODLE, in color, is a seal brown; stands 16 hands and weighs 1,100 pounds. He has splendid limbs, a kind disposition, and is, in fact, a perfect horse in every respect. He is only seven years of age, and has not been bred to many mares, yet all of his progeny show that they are destined to be great performers. BOODLE was never handled for speed until very last year, and many who saw him get his record believe he will trot below 2:20 this year. TERMS, $400 FOR THE SEASON, with the usual return privilege. Excellent care taken of mares, but no responsibility assumed for accidents or escapes. C. A. STOCKTON & CO., Owners.

DELWIN 14,681, Record 2:26 1-2, will, if he has no set-backs, pace in 2:15 or better, and beat 2:30 trotting. Delwin is one of the handsomest grandsons of The Moor; in color he is a dark dapple bay, sound as a dollar; 15 1/2 hands high, and weighs 1600 pounds; he is one of the finest-formed horses I have ever seen; has the same level head and intelligence that his half-brother, Guide, 2:16 1/4, has. Delwin has the same blood lines as the handsome grandson of The Moor, Stamboul, 2:07 1/2; he has two crosses of American Star 14, also of Clay, one of Hambletonian 10, sire of the dam of Stamboul, 2:07 1/2; one to Mambriño Chief, sire of the dam of Director, 2:17, and two of the great Pilot Jr., sire of the dam of Nutwood, 2:18 1/4, combining altogether the same blood lines that lay in the grandest stallions, Delwin, 2:24, sire of Don Tomas, 2:20, San Pedro, 2:21, pacing record 2:10, and Cousin Joe, 2:20 1/4, being a full brother to the dam of Sable Wilkes, 2:18, sire of Freedom, 2:29 1/4, Sahledale, 2:18 1/4, and others better than 2:30. Delwin's colts all show the trot out of any kind of mares.

TERVIS 840, with usual return privilege. Good water and pasturage at $5 per month, but will not be responsible for accidents or escapes. Mares can be shipped to the farm and home of Delwin, the Meese Stock Farm, Danville, Contra Costa County, Cal., per S. P. R. R., via Martinez. For further particulars, address WM. MEESE or SAMUEL GAMBLE, Danville, Cal. Delwin is owned by Wm. Meese and Mrs. Samuel Gamble.

Will Make the Season of 1893, commencing February 10 and ending June 15, at Race Track, Pleasanton.

SERVICE FEE (With usual return privilege), payable at end of Season..... $100

DIABLO was foaled 1889, is a handsome chestnut in color, stands 15 1/2 hands and in conformation, disposition and action is absolutely perfect. He is a pure trotter and will get a mark close to 2:20 at that gait this fall. His record, 2:14 3/4, was made in his second race on the turf and is no mark of his speed as a pacer. His breeding entitles him to be considered one of the most fashionably-bred stallions in America. He is by Chas. Derby (record 2:20 in sixth heat), brother to Steiner, 2:29 1/2, by Steinyway; dam Bertha, sister to Bayard Wilkes (record 2:15 in sixth heat), by Alcantara, record 2:23; second dam Barcona (dam of Alarie, sire of Victor B., 2:20 1/4), by Bayard 53 (record 2:31, sire of Kitty Bayard, 2:12; on half mile track and 15 others in list); third dam Blandina, dam of six producing sires, including Switzer and King Rene, by Mambriño Chief 14, fourth dam Birch Mare (dam of Rosalud, 2:31, and Donald, 2:27), by Parker's Brown Pilot, sire of Sophronia, grandam of Nancy Hanks, 2:04. Chas. Derby, by Steinyway, dam Katy G., dam of two in list, by Electioneer; second dam Fanny Malone (grandam of Maud C., 2:10), by Niagara (sire of Fairmont, 2:22 1/2); third dam Fanny Wickham, the great twenty-mile trotter, by Imp. Herald, out of a daughter of Imp. Trustee, etc. The great broodmares Katy G., Abbess, Alma Mater, Green Mountain Maid, Barcona, Blandina, Birch Mare, Lady Watermire and Fanny G., great grandam of Palo Alto, 2:08 1/4, appear in this pedigree, besides such sires as Electioneer, Steinyway, Alcantara, Geo. Wilkes, Pilot Jr., Mambriño Patchen, Hambletonian 10 and Mambriño Chief 11, and the strongest thoroughbred families known. Address MURRAY & RICHARDS, Owners. PLEASANTON, CAL. Pedigree.—Alexander Button is by Alexander 460, dam Lady Button, by Napa Rattler; second dam a pacing mare, s. l. b. by Copperbottom. Alexander's sire of Lady, 2:22 1/2; Tommy Todd, 2:24; Nellie Panchon, 2:27 1/2, by Geo. M. Panchon Jr. 31, record 2:27; first dam Lady Gram (dam of Geo. Dana, sire of dam of Frank M., 2:17 1/2), by Brown's Bellfounder. Geo. M. Panchon Jr. 31 is sire of ten in 2:30 list and his sons and daughters are noted for their speed and breeding on mares.

Every performer sired by Alexander Button is out of non-standard mares at the time they were bred. No matter what mares he was bred in every colt from 4 to 6 dates up could trot fast.

TERMS $100 FOR THE SEASON.

All bills must be paid at end of season. Mares not proving with foal may be returned next season free of charge. Good pasturage furnished at $2 per month, and due care taken to prevent accidents or escapes, but no liability what-so-ever assumed. Will stand at Cacho Creek Farm, which is situated about one and one-half miles west of Yolo Station. All mares sent to Yolo in my care will be forwarded free of charge.

SILVER BOW 11,708

Bay stallion, 16 hands high, foaled June 26, 1887. Two-year-old record, 2:37 1/2; three-year-old record, 2:26; four-year-old record, 2:22 1/2; five-year-old record, 2:16 1/2.

WILL BE ALLOWED TO SERVE TWENTY OUTSIDE MARES AT $150 FOR THE SEASON. Season to close June 1, 1893, as we intend racing him this Fall. Usual return privilege for mares not proving to be in foal. Silver Bow has trotted twenty-six races and won sixteen. He has won in purses and stakes over $11,000. His oldest colts are two-years-olds this Spring. We had three of them, and two of these are sure to be fast trotters. The only one we worked last season won the yearling stake at the San Jose Fair; time 2:58 1/2. Good pasturage at $5. Mares can be shipped direct to Milpitas. No responsibility assumed for accidents or escapes.

ALL BILLS DUE ON OR BEFORE JUNE 1, 1893.

LADY DUNN, (Americus Star 14). Dam of William J., 2:19 (Captain Roberts mare). MAMBRINO PATCHEN 58 (Mambrino Chief 11). Sire of the dams of Alyceno, 2:23. Guy Wilkes, 2:15 1/2. Baron Wilkes, 2:18. And 50 others in the list. By EDWIN FORREST 49. Sire of Billy Hoskins, 2:26 1/2. Champagne, 2:30. HAMBLETONIAN 10. Sire of 40 trotters in 2:30, including Dexter Prince, 2:17 1/2. Nettle, 2:18. Orange, 2:20. DAUGHTER OF GRANDAM OF JUSTINA, 2:20. Glendennis, 2:17 1/2. Olencoe, etc. HAMBLETONIAN 10. Sire of the fastest double-gaited horse in the world, Jay-Jay-ee, 2:10 grand sire of the queen of the turf, Nancy Hanks, 2:24, and is sire of 35 in 2:30 list, etc. DIRECTOR 2.17. Sire of Direct, 2:05 1/2. Directum (3), 2:11 1/2. Evangeline, 2:11 1/2. Margaret S., 2:12 1/2. Van der Beld, 2:22 1/2. Stella C., 2:26. And 12 other 2:30 trotters. ELECTIONEER 125. Sire of Sunol, 2:08 1/2; Palo Alto, 2:08 1/2; and 130 others in the list. NELLY W. (Died at 4 years). Waldstein was her only foal. SISTEB, Dam of Bonanza, 2:19 1/2; Albert W., 2:20; Vixen, dam of Vids Wilkes, 2:18 1/2; and Sabieda, 2:18 1/2.

WILL BE ALLOWED TO SERVE FIFTEEN MARES OF APPROVED BREEDING. FEE $75.

Season commences February 1st and ends June 1st, 1893. Other conditions same as Silver Bow. DESCRIPTION.—Dark bay; 15 1/2 hands; foaled 1890. Fine head and neck well set on to strong pair of shoulders; fine mane and tail, good legs and feet. I consider him worthy of his royal breeding. He was not broken until August 15th, 1892, as I bought him at Lexington, Ky., and was unable to get him shipped out sooner. He already shows himself to be a trotter. His gait is faultless, and he can show speed enough already to make me think him a trotter. I think I could easily put him in the list if I wanted to this season, but no "tin-cup" record for me, as I raise horses to win money with. His breeding needs no comment from me, and I will allow you to be the judge. Address all communications to

WALDSTEIN 12,597. RECORD 2:22 1-2

Champion Stallion Record for Five Miles, 13:05 1/2.

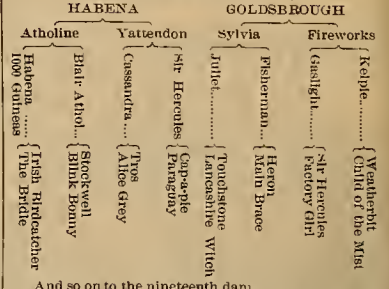

- DICTATOR 113. Sire of the fastest double-gaited horse in the world, Jay-Jay-ee, 2:10 grand sire of the queen of the turf, Nancy Hanks, 2:24, and is sire of 35 in 2:30 list, etc. DIRECTOR 2.17. Sire of Direct, 2:05 1/2. Directum (3), 2:11 1/2. Evangeline, 2:11 1/2. Margaret S., 2:12 1/2. Van der Beld, 2:22 1/2. Stella C., 2:26. And 12 other 2:30 trotters. ELECTIONEER 125. Sire of Sunol, 2:08 1/2; Palo Alto, 2:08 1/2; and 130 others in the list. NELLY W. (Died at 4 years). Waldstein was her only foal. SISTEB, Dam of Bonanza, 2:19 1/2; Albert W., 2:20; Vixen, dam of Vids Wilkes, 2:18 1/2; and Sabieda, 2:18 1/2. HAMBLETONIAN 10. The king of the trotting world. CLARA, by American Star 14. Dam of Dexter, 2:17 1/2; Alma, 2:23 1/2; Astoria, 2:28 1/2. MAMBRINO CHIEF 11. Sire of 25 sires. FANNY, by Ben Franklin. Grandam of Lady Vajollia 2:26 and Abiallah Manolrino 37:5. HAMBLETONIAN 10. Sire of 40 in the list. GREEN MOUNTAIN MAID. Dam of 4 in the list. JOHN NELSON 187. Sire of 4 and the dams of 8 in 2:30 list. LAMOTT MARK. Dam of Aurora, 2:27, and grandam of 4 in the list.

WALDSTEIN was foaled in 1885. In color, he is a dark shade of brown with two white coronets; stands 15 1/2 hands and weighs 1100 lbs. He is one of the handsomest and most perfectly formed stallions in this State. His fine, intelligent head, well-shaped neck, strong shoulders, short back, powerful loins, heavy quarters, well-shaped barrel, heavy muscular stifles and arms, clean, straight, strong knees and hocks, short cannon bones, excellent pasterns and feet at once command him to the observer as a representative trotting horse. In disposition he is faultless, being kind, gentle and level-headed. His gait is perfection, and his races during his short career on the track ably demonstrate the game qualities which he possesses. His breeding cannot be surpassed. He is the only son of Director out of an Electioneer mare standing for service. Of his sire, can any more praise be said than that his sons and daughters prove more sensational every year, and the races won by Director, Evangeline, Direct, Margaret S. and the rest stamp him as one of the most prepotent sires of the time. Waldstein's dam is by the immortal Electioneer out of sisterdam of Albert W., 2:20 his sire of Little Albert, 2:19 1/2, (lower than 2:10). Waldstein's third dam was the famous Lamott mare, one of the greatest mares that ever came to California. She was also a great brood mare. Waldstein has four yearlings that have records; one has a record of 2:31 1/2, another 3:05, another 3:08 and the other 3:08. All his colts are natural trotters, perfect in form, solid in color and very strongly built. Waldstein cannot help being one of the greatest of sires. To the student of breeding, conformation and quality he fills the ideal.

SERVICE FEE, $60 (with usual return privilege), for the season commencing February 1st and ending June 30th. No responsibility assumed for accidents or escapes, but the best of care taken of mares. Address H. S. HOGBOOM, Woodland, Cal.

The Imported Thoroughbred Stallion MERRIWA

Will make the season of 1893 at Oakland Race Track 3 Days Each Week, at San Jose Race Track 2 Days, and at Fisher's Ranch, Coyote, Santa Clara County, 2 Days, from Feb. 10th to June 1st. MERRIWA.

MERRIWA is a magnificent black horse, standing 15 1/2 hands, bred in 1885 by Frank Reynolds, of Tocal, Vide Australian Stud Book, Vol. IV, folio 153. By Goldsbrough from Habena, by Yattendon from Atholnie, by Blah Athol from Habena (winner of 1,000 Guineas in England), by Irish Birdcatcher from The Bride, by The Saddler from Moonada, by Taurus from Mons, by Partisan. Merriwa is undoubtedly a very fast horse and through an accident which rendered his temporary retirement from the turf, has not had a fair chance to prove his greatness in pace by winning. He is descended from one of Australia's greatest families.

Goldsbrough, his sire, won amongst other races, the A. J. C. Sires' Leger Hawkesbury Grand Handicap, and Great Metropolitan Cup, Impulse (won Wazza Gold Cup), Arsenal (winner Melbourne Cup), Sorrells (won A. J. C. Derby and Leger and V. R. C. Champion Stakes), Algerian (Tattersall's Spring Handicap, Sydney Handicap, &c.), Cardigan (winner Tattersall's Final Stakes, Hawkesbury Grand Handicap, Great Metropolitan Stakes, Anniversary Handicap, Summer Cup, &c.), Devotion, Merriment (winner Tramway Handicap and Hawkesbury Guineas), Ellendale (winner Tattersall's Cup and Hawkesbury Grand Handicap), The Jewel (winner A. J. C. Christmas Gift Handicap), (won Hawkesbury Autumn Handicap, Rose Hill Handicap, &c.), The Orphan, Albina, Jettison, Manola, Cardance, Kilmore, (winner Royal Stakes), &c., &c.

Merriwa is the grandam of Merriwa, produced Habena (dam of Merriwa) and Narina, both winners of Maribyrnong Plate. Geraldine and Huntingtower each ran second in that race, while Gainsborough and Blairgowrie each ran third. It will thus be seen that Atholnie's dam has performed with phenomenal success in that every of all racing men, the Maribyrnong Plate.

THE THOROUGHBRED STALLION THREE CHEERS

Will make the season of 1893 at WM. M. MURRY'S STABLES, 715 Twenty-third street, Sacramento, Cal.

Fourth dam Reality; fifth dam, by Imp. Medley, sixth dam, by Imp. Sentinel; seventh dam, by Mark Anthony; eighth dam, by Imp. Janus; ninth dam, by Imp. Monkey; tenth dam, by Silvereye; eleventh dam, by Spanker. (See Bruce's American Stud Book, Vol. I, page 427.)

THREE CHEERS, produced the great winners Bonnie Lizzie, Chaquita, Ohio Bly, Nellie Peyton, Little Buttercup, Red Fox, Madusa, Brad, Referee, Monk, Hattercap, Lady Middleton and many others of the turf.

NEWMINSTER, grandsire of Three Cheers, won the St. Leger at Doncaster in 1851. His dam, BESSIE, was the dam of the great fifty-four year old bay, four year mare, among them being the Doncaster Cup of 1837, 1840, 1841 and 1842, the only horse that ever accomplished that remarkable feat. Her sire was DR. SYNTAX, a famous race-horse.

THREE CHEERS combines, in addition to the above, the great strains of Bay Middleton (winner of English Derby, St. Leger and Two Thousand Guineas) and the blood of the wonderful old racing filly of TOUCHSTONE, Imp. TRUSTEE, EMILIUS and SIR CHARLES.

As can be seen by the above, Three Cheers is bred in the purest and stoutest lines. His dam, Young Fashion, was the dam of Surprise, Scotland (the only horse that ever beat Asteroid a heat), Liverpool, Columbus and Bonnie Kate, the dam of Little Enterprise and the slyling Bonnie Lizzie, and her grandam, Fashion, was the greatest race mare of her era, defeating Boston in that historical match at four-mile heats that is recorded as one of the greatest events in the annals of the turf.

THREE CHEERS is a beautiful bay in color, perfectly sound in wind and limb, his family on both sides being noted for their exemption from curbs, spavins, sores or any other hereditary annoyances. Horsemen who can appreciate the highest type of the thoroughbred are especially invited to inspect Three Cheers. He has already sired the splendid performers

Acclaim, Almont, Mystery, Cheerful, Applause, Ignacio and Royal Flush, AND THEY SPEAK FOR THEMSELVES. TERMS. Seventy-five Dollars for the Season. Good pasturage at $5 per month. Mares cared for in any manner owners may desire, on hay and grain, either hot or cold, at reasonable rates. None but competent grooms employed, but no responsibility assumed for accidents or escapes.

:: Dictator

DICTATUS

Will make the Season of 1893, commencing February 1st and ending June 1st, at

BELMONT STOCK FARM,
BELMONT, SAN MATEO COUNTY, CAL.

SERVICE FEE FOR THE SEASON..... $150
(Will be allowed to serve fifteen approved outside mares.)

DAMS OF 2:30 PERFORMERS WILL BE TAKEN AT $100.

DICTATUS was foaled in 1890. He was sired by the great RED WILKES 1749, (sire of 88 in the list); dam, MISS LOLLIE, by DICTATOR 133 (sire of JAY-EYE-SEE, 2:10, DIRECTOR, 2:17, and 41 others in the list, besides the dam of NANCY HANKS, 2:04, etc.); second dam, Gold Pen (dam of Felina, 2:29½, and granddam of Hill Boy (p), 2:20, by Mambrino Abdallah 2201 (son of Mambrino Patchen 58); third dam by Harold 413 (sire of Maud S., 2:08½, and 41 others in the list and grandsire of Kremlin, 2:07½); fourth dam, Emily Chester, by Mambrino Patchen 58; fifth dam Patsey (dam of Midway), by Snowstorm (sire of Jim Irving, 2:23). He is in color a chestnut, with star in forehead, one hind pastern white. In conformation he is perfect, being about 15.2 hands in height, very short back, strong over the coupling, heavy quarters, large, well-muscled gaskins and arms limbs straight, cannon bones short, hocks and joints clean and bony, and feet of the finest kind. His neck, head and body denote an iron constitution. His shoulders are sloping, and taking him all in all, a more perfect representative of the great Wilkes-Dictator cross does not exist to-day. His breeding speaks for itself. He traces four times to Hambletonian 10 through his greatest sires—GEO. WILKES, DICTATOR, HAROLD and ABDAL-LAH 15. He traces to Mambrino Patchen twice and three times to Mambrino Chief. His blood-lines are unequalled by any stallion on this Coast.

The best of care taken of mares, but no liability assumed for accidents or escapes. Service fee must be paid before mares leave the farm.

IMMENSE EARNING CAPACITY

—OF THIS—

GREAT HORSE!

At the time of the death of Mr. Valensin, Sidney was under a three years' contract with W. C. France, by the conditions of which the latter gentleman was to pay $20,000 per year with a contingent additional payment of $5,000 per year. This contract, by its conditions, terminated on the death of Mr. Valensin; but that astute breeder, W. C. France, promptly offered the Executors to renew it under the same conditions, thus showing the immense earning capacity of this great sire.

TAKE THE LEAD.

My latest patent on my carts is May 31st, 1892, No. 475,974.

IF YOU WANT TO SUCCEED WITH YOUR HORSES BUY

Bilz' Training, Speeding and Combination Carts

They are the lightest and strongest and are made from the best selected material. Nothing but the Dalsell Centennial Axle used, which is the best axle made. They are the lightest running, hold the oil the longest, and no dust can enter the arm.

Some of the noted trainers pronounce my Speeding and combination carts superior to any other.

Frou-Frou and Frank M. made their fastest time in this speeding cart.

Training The Trotting Horse.

BY CHARLES MARVIN.

This great practical horse book is a handsome, three-hundred page octavo, bound in cloth, elegantly printed, superbly illustrated, and explains in every detail the remarkable success of CHARLES MARVIN and the whole plans and methods pursued at Palo Alto as to breaking, training, shoeing, gaiting, driving, keeping, racing and breeding trotters.
Read what J. C. Sibley, the owner of St. Bel, says of this book: "In this work Marvin has let out all the mysteries of the craft, and it is so simple and plain that any breeder, owner, trainer or rubber who has any relish for his business can take a colt as a yearling and develop to the highest and fullest extent that colt's capacity as a trotter. The work impressed me so strongly that I have ordered twenty copies, and shall place one in the hands of every rubber on our farm."
Mailed prepaid for $5.50. Address is to prevent disease, to regulate the bowels and urine; it strengthens the kidneys, prevents scouring, colic and leg swelling; loosens the hide, fattens stock, promotes the appetite, cures coughs, destroys worms and bots, and produces a fine, glossy coat. To the stall-fed horse it has the beneficial effects and results of grazing without the softening effects of a season of grass with loss of time and money. For milk cows it increases and enriches their milk.

REBEL BALL

ITS OBJECT

ANTI-STIFF

To Strengthen the Muscles.

To Strengthen the Muscles.

It is a marvelous preparation for strengthening the Muscles System. With Anti-Stiff there is no fault required; it goes straight for the muscles, and you can feel it at work. It has a peculiarly warming, comforting and stimulating effect on all weak or stiff muscles and sinews. Quick in its action, cleanly and pleasant in use. But it isn't the muscles every night for a fortnight, and you will be pleased at its supporting and strengthening properties. There is not, nor has been, anything like it in the world. It differs from all Oils, Embrocations and Liniments, both in substance and effect. Some Athletes are so fond of it that they rub it all over them.

Price 20c. and 35c. per box.

Beware of Imitations.

Acknowledged by leading horse men of the world to be the ONLY preparation in the world that will remove a Bone Spavin after it has become ossified.

It Cured Ormonde.

Mr. JOHN PORTER, trainer to the Prince of Wales, says: "I have thoroughly tested OSSIDINE for the removal of Splints, Spavins, etc. I believe it is unequalled. Among other famous horses I have successfully treated with it is Ormonde. It never failed me."

N.B.—Ormonde is the great $150,000 horse recently purchased by Mr. MacDonough, and the winner of many big stakes.

Sanfoin, Common, Orme, and other well-known English race-horses have recently been treated successfully with OSSIDINE. We also have authority to refer to Mr. Jerome I. Case, Messrs. S. A. Browne & Co., Mr. Fred. Gebhard, and hundreds of others, from whom we have very flattering testimonials.

Sold by C. S. Crittenton, A. R. Van Nest & Co., and C. M. Meseman & Bro., New York City; Becker & Wickser, Buffalo, N.Y.; George De B. FULL LENGTH 24 INCHES.

DR. CANADAY'S IMPREGNATOR.

Especially adapted to hard breeders, but indispensable to every stock man. Saves time, annoyance, "opering" and practicaly insures. Cost of instrument saved every time it is used. Thoroughly tested last season in hundreds of cases. Every one satisfactory. With this instrument two or more mares can be impregnated with one service or horse, thereby saving his vitality.

Cambridge City, Ind., October 21, 1892.—This is to certify that I have used Dr. Canaday's Impregnator with great success on mares which no stallion could have got in foal. I consider it a great help for valuable stallions as well as for owners of mares.—Chas. Kohlbeier.

H. S. Covault, V. S., Hagarstown, Indiana, says: I impregnated a nine-year-old mare that had been bred every year for five years and never was with foal until now. I transferred the semen from another mare and the horse has not touched her.

The Blacklock Blood.

No line of thoroughbred blood has received more abuse from a section of the scientific breeders of the old country than that of the "accursed Blacklock." To Dr. Shorthouse, who was head and front of the offenders, the mention of the name of Blacklock was like holding a red rag to a bull. Blacklock was his bete noire, and because Lord Clifden possessed a single strain through his dam, Volley (sister to Voltigeur), he expressed his readiness to eat that horse if ever he won the St. Leger. After losing so much ground at the start that his success appeared to be an impossibility, Lord Clifden gradually overhauled his field, and passing them one by one, galloped home a pretty easy winner. This effectually disposed of the doctor's theory, but until a few years ago there were many other detractors of the Blacklock line, and even when Galopin won the Derby they did not hesitate to declare that he was a chance horse. It is difficult to understand why such a set should have been made against the Blacklock blood. We can only ascribe the opposition to blind prejudice, for Blacklock himself was one of the most wonderful stayers of his day. He was only beaten for the St. Leger through being shut in, and afterwards won the subscription purses of 1,000 and 300 sovereigns at York. The former was over the four-mile course, and making strong running throughout, he nearly distanced all of his opponents. On the next day he beat Silenus easily over the four-mile course, and then showed what endurance he possessed by immediately coming out and beating Rasping, St. Helena, Mandeville and Skipjack in a canter over two miles. At Doncaster he won another four-mile race, and in 1819 he ran his greatest race over a similar distance, when he won, the time being 7 min. 47 sec. In his pedigree there are no less than 18 strains of the Godolphin Arabian, 16 each of the Darley Arabian and Byerly Turk, and 20 of the Lister Trnr. As a race horse his chief characteristic was stamina. He could stay all day, and to many of his descendants he has transmitted the same faculty, Voltigeur and Vedette being striking examples, and more recently Galopin, Rosebery, Speculum, Tibthorpe and St. Simon. Now we have Donovan to keep up the reputation of the family. So little was thought of Galopin as a foal that at the sale of the Diss Stud he and his dam were disposed of for the modest sum of 100 guineas. However, he won the Derby and other races for Count Batthyany, and when the latter died he was purchased by Mr. Henry Chaplin for 9,000 guineas; but again the opponents of Blacklock declared that he was too full of the blood to be a success at the stud. These prophecies were not fulfilled, for in his very first season he begot one of the best horses of the century in St. Simon, who, as if still further to perpetuate the fame of his ancestors, in his first season gained third honors amongst winning stallions, nine of the ten two-year-olds of his that started having gained winning brackets. Mr. Chaplin, it will be remembered, is the owner of the celebrated stud horse, Hermit, by whose victory in the Derby so disastrous a blow was administered to the Marquis of Hastings. It is estimated that the net return that Hermit has made as a stud horse is £100,000, and the past and prospective value of Galopin cannot be estimated at a lesser sum. These figures will show what a fortune there is in a successful stud horse. Galopin's son, St. Simon, in addition to these strains of Blacklock through his sire, Galopin, has another through Hornsea, who was by Velocipede, son of Blacklock. This would appear to have been no detriment to him either as a racehorse or a sire, and the blood has been so successful in England during the past few years that we regret that Australia is possessed of so little of it in the male line. Mr. G. G. Stead purchased a member of this family in Splendor, who was subsequently disposed of to Mr. Frank Reynolds, and now occupies a place in the Tocal Stud. But few of his stock have yet appeared, and, therefore, no fair criterion has yet been obtained, though we notice that his son Randolph won in Sydney on Saturday. In Australia, where horses of Stamina are more in request than sprinters, the Blacklock blood should be invaluable, and ere another decade has passed away Splendor will probably have made a name for himself at the stud; but as one swallow does not make a summer, neither will one representative of a successful line of racehorses prove sufficient for Australia, and we must urge upon our wealthy breeders the necessity for introducing other male members of the Blacklock tribe. Mr. W. R. Wilson, who has devoted considerable sums of money to the purchase of thoroughbred stock in England, New Zealand and Australia, has secured amongst other fillies by such equine borses as St. Simon and Barcaldine, two of the greatest horses of modern times; and he has also bought a sire whose breeding cannot be surpassed, but it would have been better, perhaps, had the filly by St. Simon been a colt, so that he might have benefited by the presence of a grandam of so wonderful a horse as Galopin. However, there are other rich Australians who are about to purchase thoroughbred stock in the old country, and we would impress upon them the advisableness of following successful results. They will do well to remember that the Blacklock line is carrying all before it in England, and they will serve Australia best by securing a distinguished member of the tribe whose representatives have for some years been proving their superiority upon the race courses of the old country.—The Australasian.

Mr. Hamlin on the Market.

"The bottom has not fallen out of the trotting horse market, as some breeders have maintained, and the sales today are good and healthy, comparatively," was the response Mr. C. J. Hamlin made to a Buffalo Commercial representative's inquiry. "The prices brought at the Buffalo sales and other large sales recently were fair," continued the veteran breeder, "and the breeders have no just cause for complaint. Trotting horse breeding is strictly an American institution and it will never deteriorate. At the sale here I sold nothing but 'culls,' and the prices paid were entirely satisfactory. No breeder need expect to realize largely on a weeding-out sale. But, in regard to the disposal at auction of Stamboul for $41,000, I think the stallion is not worth that amount. In these days a fast record is not as consequential to a stallion as is the earning capacity of his progeny. Stamboul has a reputed tin-cup record of 2:07½, which will not be allowed, while his actual race record is nearer 2:12. His get are not bread-winners, not even speedy, and therefore do not enhance the value of their sire. Stamboul is, in my judgment, a valuable stud horse.

"A stallion to be good in the harem should not be campaigned extensively. There has been a false impression that I am an opponent to the developed sire idea, but this is not so. I don't believe, however, that any stallion or mare can improve its reproductive powers by being campaigned for a speedy record. To condition a stud-horse for a record trial one must necessarily speed him daily and this constant track work will sap his vital powers. Therefore he will not be strong and vigorous for generating purposes. This is the principal reason why I have not campaigned Chimes, who showed quarters in 35 and 37 when a two-year-old, and can to-day, with little preparation, jog quarters in 33. Although undeveloped, he has showed himself to be a sire of extreme speed. I could cite many instances where young stallions that would have proved valuable in the stud, were made virtually useless by early and heavy track work. Bell Roy, 2:19½, and St. Bel, two full brothers to Chimes, were useless in the stud. Stallions doing service do not need track exercise; turn them loose in the paddock or in the field, and their natural instinct will be to cavort about."

Families of Trotters.

The following will show the grand total of the descendants of the different families in 2:30 and better. It will be very useful to the beginner in breeding and buying stock, and will do no harm to the professional breeder. It shows what families are the most productive and profitable. By combining all the greatest producing blood into one individual it is most likely to produce the two-minute trotter, and is Bible doctrine that like begets like.

George Wilkes 1208, Alexander's Abdallah 1109, Mambrino Patchen 645, Belmont 635, Almont 623, Volunteer 545, Woodford Mambrino 282, Electioneer 280, Blue Bull 210, Happy Medium 198, Daniel Lambert 194 and Aberdeen 90.

The one having the largest family I place first, "the little hacked-up pony," so called, when at seventeen years of age he took his stand in Kentucky. The "immortal George" died in 1882, producing the mighty family in nine years.

Second comes the unfortunate Alexander's Abdallah, foaled September 22, 1852, taken to Kentucky in 1859, and kept at Woodhurn until killed by soldiers February 2, 1865. He had about six years of stud service. His family proves him to be one of the most productive sires of race horse trotters that ever lived. His daughter, Goldsmith Maid, won more money and trotted more heats in 2:30 than any horse, mare or gelding that ever faced the starter.

Third is Mambrino Patchen, brother to Lady Thorn, one of the greatest broodmare sires, if not the greatest the world ever saw. He heads his list with Alma Mater, dam of the great Aleyone and five others.

Belmont and Almont, two of the greatest producing sons of the mighty Abdallah, each have a great family of their own. Next in order comes the great race horse sire, Volunteer. He has also produced a large family, and is breeding on.

Seventh, we have the old race horse that never knew when he was conquered. He founded a great family and they are making a fine show. "Blood will tell." Next comes Electioneer, the sire of the great race horse Palo Alto, etc. Blue Bull, number nine in the list, all things considered, should be placed among the first, as he is one of the greatest sires that ever lived. Once a teaser for a jack, with an eye knocked out and a knee broken from the kick of a mule, what horse of to-day can equal him? Produce one like him. He will make you a fortune. He never had a fortune spent on him for tinware. The unfortunate hero did it all himself. Happy Medium has a family of his own, headed by the queen of the turf.

The family of Daniel Lambert shows him a truly great horse. He is the greatest of the Black Hawk family, and his blood trots uniformly. Aberdeen, though his family of ninety is small compared to the others, has to his credit some good race horses, such as Kentucky Union, Alabaster, Lycurgus and Hattie Woodward. All but the last-named carries the blood of Alexander's Abdallah on the dam's side. Aberdeen was sold to Gen. Withers in 1877, and stood at Fairlawn until the General's death. He was then purchased by J. E. Clay, of Paris, Ky., and owned by him until he died last fall. He stood in Kentucky for fifteen years.

The above sires each stand on their own reputation, according as they have founded their families. The writer places before you the facts as he finds them.—Trenton, in Horse

Eastern Sporting Gossip.

(From our Resident Correspondent.)

NEW YORK, Feb. 4.—A continued spell of the soft weather that succeeded our prolonged cold snap of last month has ushered in February more like April than the last month of winter. But residents of Manhattan, used to our climatic changes, place little faith in this lull in winter's reign, looking any day for more arctic weather and freezing temperature. Indeed, if we are to believe the reasoning of the ground hog, who is reported to "take an observation" every 2d of February (Candlemas Day), spring weather is yet many weeks distant. Thursday, the 2d, was a dreary, cloudy day with a cold rain, and if the inquisitive rodent came out of his hibernating hole to look for his shadow he found none. Hence, as the story goes, he hid himself back to his burrow for another nap of six weeks, which, interpreted, means that spring will be delayed this year.

But weather signs do not interrupt the routine of the turf world at this time of year. While the Jersey races keep up their daily round of winter racing, the managers of the summer tracks are awake and doing. The legislative enactments desired both at Albany and Trenton are being lobbied for all they are worth at these capitals, Mike Dwyer having left his Florida hotel to come North and try to engineer the Jersey bill through. But so far the measure hangs fire, and unless Dwyer and his fellow-track managers at Linden, Clifton, Monmouth, Guttenberg and Gloucester act in concert the desired law may not be put through.

As matters stand now Guttenberg, Gloucester and Monmouth will race right along, law or no law, trusting the favorable county feeling towards each track. But in Union county, where the Elizabeth and Linden tracks stand, local feeling is not overwhelming in favor of the race tracks nor is it in Passaic county either, where unsatisfied sentences hung over the devoted head of three officials of the race course.

So the action of the Trenton Legislature is likely to be largely dependent on the efforts of the Dwyers, the Engemans, and Manager Appleby of the Linden Park track. While the other track managers noted will, no doubt, meet those named half way, in helping to get a pool bill passed, they are necessarily lukewarm compared to the owners of the tracks that have been closed for two years now. Certainly the public would welcome a change even to Clifton, sandwiched in with Guttenberg, for the latter's prolonged meetings of seven months gets rather monotonous to the public.

Albany's lobbying racing men are not quite as much on the anxious seat as their fellows in Jersey, for the reason that all they want apparently is more time to race. The mooted extension of the State racing season, so as to begin earlier than May 15 and race later than October 15, is likely to hang fire until the Jersey pool bill is settled. For if that goes through all right and the two race courses at Elizabeth are again opened those two tracks will want just the two months for their spring and fall meetings that the New York State season would gain by extending the present legal limit of five months, and as the managers of the Elizabeth tracks are mutually interested in the New York State tracks, it is safe to say that action at Albany of the sort outlined will await the fate of the pending relief measures at Trenton.

Of more interest to the turf world in general than the troubles of the lobbying racing men are the weights for the big spring handicap published this week by the rival handicappers of the Brooklyn, Coney Island and New York Jockey Clubs. The announcement of the weights for the Brooklyn, Metropolitan and Suburban handicaps always seems to bring the regular season one step nearer, for the reason that it is February when the weights appear, and three weeks later the declarations are due. By that time it is close to March 1st, and the backbone of winter generally broken. Then books are generally opened on the three big events, betting begins, the work of the horses is a matter of daily comment, and, before race-goers are aware of it, the season is at hand.

Therefore the publication of the weights on Wednesday aroused general interest. The fact that the three handicappers, Messrs. McIntyre, of the Brooklyn Club; Lawrence, of Coney Island, and Vosburg, of Westchester, all had their own ideas as to the weights added to the general interest felt in the results of their labors; and while extended comment must be deferred for lack of space, some remarks on the weights are in order.

The scale observed in the Brooklyn handicap, the first one of the three great events, is lower than that of the Suburban. On the other hand, the Metropolitan, run at Morris Park, between the other two events, has a pleasingly higher scale of weights, Handicapper Vosburg having given us an innovation in this regard that will in time become popular with horsemen. I say in time, for there will no doubt be cold water thrown on this high-weight handicap by dissenting owners and trainers who do not believe in such a scale of weights.

But all who have noted the annoyances attendant on having so many lightweights in the saddle will overcome a scale that will allow older jockeys to ride and prevent that dangerous practice of reducing weight beyond safe bounds. Many a well-known jockey has fallen a victim to practice of "reducing," and the entire system of racing would be greatly benefited by having heavier weights in vogue. Horses run just as well with more weight up and the public obtains infinitely better sport with men in the saddle than with the unruly widgets who are now so frequently given charge of a horse.

Hence the scale of weights for the Metropolitan handicap putting 134 pounds each on Lamplighter and Tammany, and 133 each on St. Florian and Banquet, 129 on Doctor Hasbrouck and 127 on Raeland, &c. Down to 90 on the bottom weights, allows of a margin of 41 pounds. This gives the handicapper a chance to show his judgment of the horses, and he seems to have turned out a good piece of work.

Still bearing in mind my remarks on the opposition that this high scale of weights will undoubtedly meet with from owners and trainers, I fully expect to see many declarations from the Metropolitan, more than from the other two races. Wildwood is well in at 112 pounds, a weight that should not hold him over the nine furlong course at Morris Park, if he is good. Monowai at 95 is turned loose, and both of these Pacific Slopes will be objects of great interest if they are present. Other California-bred horses in the race are Doctor Hasbrouck 129, Montana 123, Nomad 118, Rey del Rey 116, Sir Matthew 100 and Silver Fox 95. The division is not a bad-looking one on paper, and stranger things have happened than that it contains the winner.

The Brooklyn Handicap starts in on a seven-pound lower scale than the Metropolitan, Longstreet 127, Lamplighter 125, Banquet 123, Kingston and Major Domo 122 each being the top weights, down to Long Beach at 90. California horses in this, the first of the big events, are only represented by Wildwood, who gets in at 105 pounds. Of those bred on the slope Nomad 110 is the only representative. In the Suburban a scale between the Brooklyn and Metropolitan is followed. Longstreet at 130 heads the list, followed by Lamplighter and Tammany, 127 each, Banquet at 125 and Kingston at 124. Then the others grade down from 119 on La Tosca to 93 on the English Miss Simon, now on board the steamer Tauric with Col. North's other horses, bound for this port.

California-bred horses in the Suburban are represented by Montana and Doctor Hasbrouck 116 pounds each, Nomad 110, Tammany 107, Rey del Rey 106 and Silver Fox 100. Against the Dwyer and Lorillard cracks this division, however, looks to stand little chance, whatever Tammany may do with them for Marcus Daly. Take the three handicaps as a whole they will make interesting study for turf students for some weeks to come.

As to the theatrical season, it was never more prosperous than now, the opening of the new Empire Theatre adding one more to the elegant places of amusement already in Gotham. Counting museums and music halls where plays are given, we have now thirty-two places of amusement in this city, of which twenty-three easily come under the head of first-class theatres.

Of the lot the New Empire Theatre, opened under the management of Charles Frohman, in some respects surpasses in completeness any other house in the city. The dedication play, "The Girl I Left Behind Me," is a stirring melodrama of the plains and frontier life acted with realistic effect by a first-class company. The play has met with much favor on all sides, and the New Empire has started with a boom.

Other successes of the season are the "Mormite Bank" and "The Fencing Master." The former at the Garden Theatre with Lillian Russell and the latter at the Casino with Marie Tempest are both turning away people nightly. Both pieces, particularly "The Fencing Master," have scored unqualified hits.

THE GLEANER.

Santa Rosa Scintillations.

(Special Correspondence of the BREEDER AND SPORTSMAN.)

SANTA ROSA, Feb. 14.—Santa Rosa is becoming each year more important as a trotting horse center. And we have Pierce Bros. to thank, in a very large measure, for such a condition of affairs. They are showing their faith in the trotting horse in a very substantial way, and we hope that the thousands of dollars invested in fine stock each year by them will yield them handsome returns. The consignment of horses purchased by them at the Corbett sale arrived a few days ago via the Southern Pacific. One of them was very sick on the way, and upon its arrival here was placed on a truck and started to the fair grounds. The animal died before the stables were reached, and thus did Pierce Bros. lose a promising trotter worth over a thousand dollars.

Among the large number of horses purchased by Pierce Bros. recently is the grand old Milton Medium mare, the mother of Redwood and other good ones. She was bought from A. McFadyen, who has made a small fortune from her produce. With her they secured a fine colt sired by Silver Bow. The mare is now in foal to Commodore, we understand.

W. B. Sanborn has gone into the livery business again, having bought the Anteeo stables on Fourth street, with Harry Starr as a partner. But Mr. Sanborn has not abandoned his "gallopers" by a good deal. He has his great old horse Inkerman at Oakland, being shaped up for the spring meetings, and the courageous old sprinter is said to be as limber as an eel. Mr. Sanborn's Mamie C. is at Sacramento, and he is expecting every day to hear that she has a foal by Three Cheers. He has two good young runners at his stables here, Miss Edsall and The Flood. Both are bred to the queen's taste, and will be sent along the line this season. Sanborn's confidence in runners grows with his years.

Alfred Trembley has sold his handsome stallion by Gibraltar to Tom Fawcett, who will give breeders a chance to see him frequently. This horse is a blood bay, well built and a good mover. He has a disposition as gentle as that of a lamb.

H. J. Newton, of Oakland, called upon many Santa Rosans during the week. Mr. Newton a few months ago sold his fine farm near this city and moved away. He has Anteveros and a number of other very well-bred young trotters. Some of them will be campaigned this season.

Harvey Warde Peck, the well-known Healdsburg horseman and turf writer, was here a few days ago. He says that turf matters are very quiet in the pretty city on Russian River.

Mr. Allen, of Napa, was here a few days ago. He has a fine Silver Bow youngster in training in Mart Rollins' hands, and he came over to see how the little stepper is progressing. He returned well satisfied.

Wyman Murphy's iron-hearted Anteeo mare, Maud M., is at her home in this city. She is as frisky as a kitten, and will be in splendid shape for this year's campaign. She is sound as a berry, tough as whalebone, and will be a formidable antagonist for those in the "twenty" class this year.

It is reported that Rufus Murphy will bid farewell to race horses and horse-racing. That may be, but we believe it will be a very frigid day when "Rufe" Murphy loses his interest in a smart horse race. He has not disposed of his stock yet, and can be seen frequently behind a pair that can knock off better than a "thirty" gut.

Since Vida Wilkes was brought here by Pierce Bros., Santa Rosa can claim two of the most famous mares in the State. We doubt if there is another town in the States that contains as famous a pair of five-year-olds as Pierce Bros., Vida Wilkes and Isaac DeTurk's Myrtle. Both have been sensational in their performances, and we hope to see them in the lists again.

Frank Laughlin, manager of the Laughlin Stock Farm at Mark West, was in town Saturday. Some of the best stock in the county can be found on the Laughlin ranch. Of recent years considerable attention has been paid there to the raising of mules. They have a well-bred and good-sized jack, and this, bred to some excellent mares, has resulted in producing some exceptionally fine mules. But the Laughlin boys are proud of their Anteeos, and these they delight in showing their visitors.

Nearly every stall at Pierce Bros.' fair grounds is taken, and the prospects for an exceedingly lively time here this season appears very bright. Dozens of horses are to be trained here, many more in fact than ever before and horsemen and those interested in fine horses are impatiently awaiting the coming of the time when active work begins. There are a number of new horses to make a mark and many that have already reputations will be in training. Silas Skinner, the Black Cyclone, is one of the most notable. "Mc" says he is as great a "hoss" as ever and that he will raise his majestic head in many a race this fall.

"PUBLIUS."

Salem Notes.

(Special Correspondence of the BREEDER AND SPORTSMAN.)

SALEM, OR., Feb. 6.—The Oregon Legislature, now in session for the seventeenth biennial term, is discussing the proposition to abolish all appropriations for district and State agricultural associations. Erratic Governor Penney so recommended in his biennial message, and the sentiment was echoed by Mr. Elmore, of Linn county, who introduced a bill in the House repealing all acts or parts of acts which appropriated money for the State fair or the State Board of Agriculture. Elmore's bill, however, has not reached third reading in the House and is now resting with the committee on agriculture, where it will die, as it should. Oregon must keep up the fairs—State, district and county. She must improve them, also.

Both House and Senate have passed a bill appropriating $60,000 for maintaining an Oregon exhibit at the World's Fair. Governor Penney will veto the measure, and there is serious doubt if the legislature can pass it over his veto, as the bill came very near to death's door on third reading.

The Oregon Breeders' and Speed Association will in a few days complete the arrangement of its speed programme and all details for the July meeting. The association is awaiting the action of the Legislature in relation to the State fair before completing the details of its meeting.

A horse recently purchased from a farmer near Independence, to be taken to the World's Fair, is said to be twenty hands and two inches high. He will out-top all others, and can pick the tallest persimmon.

John Galbraith arrived from Independence a few days ago with his stable of horses, headed by the well-known Patsy O'Neill. He has a number of youngsters besides, and has located at the fair grounds, where they will make their appearance the coming season under the colors of gold and green. Mr. Galbraith is in charge of Z. Craven's also. Mr. Craven's best horse is Hello, the winner.

T. G. Perkins has been so unfortunate as to lose his Rockwood four-year-old colt, Decoration, out of Charley Reilly's mare. Paralysis of the esophagus was the cause, and his sale to a Portland man for $600 was just being arranged. Decoration had been in training here for months, and gave promise of making good time.

CABE.

More English Mares Bought.

It is now revealed that further purchases were made for America at the Newmarket December sales. On that occasion the American buyers seemed at first to be conspicuous by their absence, and so they were personally as a matter of fact, says the Daily Spirit. They had agents on hand, however, and, though no great talking was done, many bargains were secured. Mr. Allison was buying for Mr. James R. Keene, Mr. Francis for Mr. W. O'B. Macdonough, and it now appears that Mr. Weatherby, who had bought at the Doncaster sales for Mr. Morris, was acting in behalf of Mr. W. H. Forbes, of Readville, Mass. The mares, of whom a list is given below, are all to stay in England to foal there and to be served by fashionable sires before shipment with their sucklings, which will take place about June. The following are the mares, who are, it will be seen, rarely well-bred and connected:

Orizaba, b m, 1888, by Bend Or, dam Douranee, by Rosicrucian; second dam Feulla, by Cambuscan; third dam La Favorita (the dam of Flageolet, Rayon d'Or's sire), by Monarque. Covered by Bendigo, 410 guineas.

Frolic Grace, b m, 1880, by Sterling, dam Wild Duchess, by The Duke; second dam Countess Agnes, by Wild Dayrell; third dam Miss Agnes (great grandam of Ormonde), by Birdcatcher. Covered by Hampton, 600 guineas.

Chestnut filly, 1892, by Galliard, dam Frolic Grace, 80 guineas.

Ettarre, br m, 1880, by Macaroni, by Lynette (dam of Cameliard), by Lord Lyon; second dam Alarum, by Alarm; third dam Amata (full sister to the Derby winner, Amato), by Velocipede. Covered by Highland Chief, 200 guineas.

Bargain, ch m, 1887, by Barcalaine, dam Boot, by Sterling; second dam Brigantine (winner of the Oaks and Ascot Gold Cup), by Buccaneer; third dam Lady Macdonald (full sister to Lord of the Isles, winner of the Two Thousand Guineas, and sire of Scottish Chief), by Touchstone. Covered by Tyrant, 300 guineas.

Sale of Thoroughbreds.

The following thoroughbreds, the property of R. Porter Ashe, were sold by Killip & Co. at Oakland track last Saturday, February 11:

Total.....$2,935
Average, per head.....$326.11

This was certainly slaughter, as it was expected that the first three on the list would bring about the amount realized on the nine head. Everything disposed of, in all probability, was worth twice as much as it brought.

The aged bay horse Joe Lee, by Voltiguer, out of Bonheur, fell dead on the track at Gloucester, on Thursday last, having burst a blood vessel while at work.

HOOF-BEATS.

GEORGE COVINGTON is working Fidelia, Flirtation, Cadmus and Picton for Thos. H. Williams at Bay District track.

KING ORRY is by Alcona Clay, out of Pansy. In the account of records made at Stockton it is stated that he is by Clay Duke, which is an error.

COUNT ANTEEO 14,692, the handsome son of Anteo, 2:16½, out of Countess (dam of Dawn, 2:18½ and Strathway, 2:19), will make the season of 1893 at Colusa. See the advertisement.

THE PACER, Chief Thorne, that made a record of 2:20 as a two-year-old in 1890, was sold in Chicago this week to Barney Demarest, of Baltimore for $1,050. He is by Hawthorne, son of Nutwood.

REY DEL REY is apparently as sound as a dollar and sure to stand a preparation. His long retirement from the track has probably saved a good horse to the turf, and he will be apt to figure prominently in the handicaps this year.

RANDALL'S HORSE REGISTER is the title of a new and very neat turf paper published at Indianapolis, Ind. It is not given up exclusively to the trotter, galloper or saddle horse, but treats of all in a very able manner. The editor of the paper is N. A. Randall, a gentleman who has forty years' experience in the line of turf journalism.

CHAS CHASE, the well-known auctioneer, while stepping on a Market street cable car last week slipped and fell. On being picked up it was ascertained that he had injured his leg so severely as to confine him to his room for several days. The physician in attendance believes he will soon have his patient able to attend to business.

ALDEN GOLDSMITH, son of the late James Goldsmith, takes to the calling of his father as naturally as might be expected of the descendant of a line of ancestors all born horsemen. He is at present under the tuition of his Uncle John, and few ever mounted as sulky under more favorable educational advantages. Young Goldsmith likes the business, and hopes to merit and win a share of success.

AT the annual meeting of the Directors of the 17th District Agricultural Association held on the 11th inst., M. L. Marsh was re-elected president, George Fletcher vice-president, E. M. Preston treasurer and I. J. Rolfe secretary. It was decided to hold their fair this year at Glenbrook Park, commencing August 29th and ending September 2d. The pavilion will be in Grass Valley.

THE Sacramento Bee reporter in his ecstasies over discovering the great Kearney, describes the fellow as being a quiet, unassuming man, with "an open and frank face." When the committee at Stockton read the article and looked at the "conspirator" they felt like calling the reporter to the stand and asking him if he was really sober when he wrote about the "open and frank face."

THE $45,000 yearling colt by Joe Hooker, from the great Marion, is not dead after all, as reported. It was the Joe Hooker—Countess Zeika yearling that died at Theodore Winters' ranch. The $45,000 offer from Chris Smith, the plunger, for the brother to Yo Tambien, will not, however, be accepted, as it is understood that the Nevada turfman will keep the youngster for use in the stud.

PACING blood, as the pacer himself, is becoming more and more fashionable with the advent of each year; and the time is coming we hope, when a good pacing cross will be considered as nearly the proper thing as any of the crosses to our most fashionable sires. In fact, the future is likely to prove that pacing blood will work wonders in the way of an outcross for our intensely interbred trotting families.

AN exchange, which has allowed prejudice to get the better of its judgment, remarks: "The Palo Alto stock went for a song in New York last week. They sold well, however, when the prices for Wilkes stock, sold week before last, are considered." A sage opinion, which will not, however, prevent many of the animals sold turning out great bargains, as was the case at the first Palo Alto sale in New York in 1886.

WILLIAM MURRY, of Sacramento, owner of Three Cheers, was in this city during the week, and expressed a determination to take in the Montana circuit during the coming racing season. He will have a string of ten to twelve horses, prominent in which will be Miss Pickwick, Geoffrey, Gracie S., Belfast, Thornhill and Pricelle. The last two mentioned are two-year-olds; in fact, the majority of the members of the Murry string are youngsters.

CALIFORNIA horses are gaining the respect of our brethren at the East very fast. In the last issue of The Horseman is a fine picture of A. B. Speckles' magnificent mare Hilda, 2:14½, while in the American Sportsman of February 2d appears an excellent portrait of Redwood, 2:21½, by Anteo—Lou Milton. Redwood was formerly the property of Mr. McFadyen, now of this city, but the stallion is now owned by Dr. Theo. A. Burnett, of Springfield, O.

Do NOT forget to attend the sale of Asylum Stock Farm horses. This promises to be one of the best years the farmers have ever had in this State, and it will pay them to get a few well-bred horses to replace the scrubs, while they are to be sold cheap. There may never be as good an opportunity as this, and the progressive farmer who believes in having only the purest-bred cows, hogs, poultry and sheep should also try to have some standard-bred trotters on his farm. Come to the great sale and have your neighbors come with you.

St. PAUL dispatch of February 7th: "The bill for the suppression of pool-selling in Minnesota failed to pass in the House by a vote of 45 to 35. The failure of the measure after its unanimous recommendation for passage yesterday was the greatest surprise of the season, and was as clever a piece of finesse as was ever worked on the Legislature. The measure as drawn was simply aimed at the poolrooms and contained a proviso expressly permitting pool-selling during race meetings. The opponents of the bill claim that they had but small chance to defeat it as originally presented, and had it amended so as to apply to all fairs and race meetings. To-day when the bill came up they made a savage attack upon it on the ground that its enactment into law meant the ruin of every race association and county fair in Minnesota. The former members changed their votes and the pool bill was lost."

AN exchange says the word "bay" used with reference to horses, did not signify a color originally, but was first applied to a breed too light to be called brown and too brown to be called red. These horses were found in a district in England noted for its bay trees, for the leaves of which they showed a great liking. Every breeder of horses in that locality relied upon these trees for the medicine with which to cure his diseased animals. The horses coming from this district became known as bay horses; and their uniformity in color led to the common use of the term.

WADSWORTH, that game son of Longfellow, has been taken up, and will commence his gallops over the Churchill Downs course. Jim Murphy, who, together with Bob Holloway, owns the horse, says that he believes the colt will be in great form this year. He considers Wadsworth better than Yo Tambien, and is in the Metropolitan Handicap at a weight that will make him a good thing. Teuton has been permanently retired, and will make a season the coming year at the Elmendorf Stud. Such mares as Kinseem, Kaloolah, Semper Fidelle, Fauva and Anna have been sent to him by Murphy & Holloway, and from outside parties the dam of Hawthorne, Marion C., the dam of Ed. Mack, sister to Runyon, Annie Woodcock and two Longfellow mares, the property of Mack Richardson, the former owner of Faraday. Al Hutchings will handle among others Ermine, Eleta and Mimi this year. He will go through the Northwestern circuit, starting about July 1st.—Horseman.

THREE CHEERS got thirty-two foals from thirty-five mares last season, which is certainly a remarkable showing for the old horse. Reports have been in circulation that Three Cheers was not a sure foal-getter, but his owner, William Murry, of Sacramento, is prepared to give the names of the mares bred to Three Cheers and substantiate his claims for the great son of Hurrah in every particular, as follows: L. C. Shippee, Stockton, bred 4 mares; Owen Bros., Fresno, 5 mares; Archie Stevenson, Woodland, 2; Gibson, Colusa, 2; John Lodge, Sacramento, 2; Pbil Herzog, 3; the owner, 3; J. W. Harper, Suisun, 4; Watson, Sacramento, 1; Dr. Cutler, Sacramento, 1; Cavanaugh, Sacramento, 1; Allsopp, Sacramento, 1; Andy Wakeman, 1; Donnelly & Dunn, Hollister, 1; C. Pacheco's two mares missed, also Belle of the Lake, W. Biehler's property. Here are the facts and figures, and there is no chance to get around this. Mr. Murry agrees to insure a foal by Three Cheers for $100, and on his horse's showing in the stud he is certainly justified in charging this moderate fee.

COLONEL JACK CHINN, of Kentucky, has purchased one of the best ranches in Colorado, and intends to ship all of his broodmares, stallions and young colts from Kentucky to this ranch and will hereafter breed his thoroughbreds here in Colorado, believing that better horses can be raised here. He will begin with 100 thoroughbred mares at the start. The ranch is situated twenty-eight miles from Pueblo near the head of the St. Charles river, and comprises about 4,000 acres, all under fence, 1,000 acres of which is under ditch fenced with a good stone wall. The river runs through and about equally divides this one thousand acres of cultivatable land. Water can be piped from the river to every paddock on the property. Oats, wheat and the best of hay can be raised there. He also intends to build a home on this ranch for old and broken-down gamblers, and will try and raise from the well-to-do sports a fund of $500,000 with which to endow it—Denver Field and Farm.

FIDELIA, in the Williams string, is, on looks, the pick of the young Californian's Derby candidates, though Picton and Cadmus are not bad-looking, by any means. The first-named, a daughter of Flood and imp. Flirt (dam of Flambeau, Gorgo and Faustine), has been hacked heavily to win the $60,000 American Derby, and if she pulls off the event it will be the first time a mare has won it since 1884, when Modesty had a head-and-head finish with Kosciusko and Boh Cook. Modesty was the first winner of the American Derby. California has been very successful in the production of American Derby winners and those that ran second, our horses winning the event in 1855 (Vofante), 1886 (Silver Cloud), 1887 (C. H. Todd) and 1888 (Emperor of Norfolk). Sorrento, by Joe Hooker, ran second in 1889; Santiago, by Grinstead, in 1890, and Zaldivar, by Joe Hooker, in 1892. It is about time a Californian captured the stake again, and we will make a bold bid for it with Fidelia, Picton, Dare, Monowai, San Francisco and Lady Bess.

THE winnings of some of the principal English horses up to and including their four-year-old performances are given in the following table. Donovan is far ahead of all the others, and it was all earned in two seasons. Baron Hirsch's La Fleche, who has won so many stakes during the past season, has $174,000 to her credit, and this in two seasons.

"QUANTRELL, the jockey, tells of an interesting race he once rode at Saratoga. It was in the year 1876, and took place on Sunday. Two of our local newspapers were vying with each other in the effort to reach Saratoga with their editions first, and their representatives, who worked together on the race track, also worked hard to beat each other in the delivery of their respective papers," says the Sporting World. "At the time in question Crickmore and The World had made special arrangements with a well-appointed team to bring the papers in flying. But Uncle Jo. Elliott learned of the plan, and forthwith cudgelled his brains to circumvent it. He finally lit on the plan of employing a live race horse and real jockey to do the trick, and Huckleberry, by Hurrah, was secured, with 'Tiny' Quantrell to ride. During the forenoon of that Sunday the facts leaked out, and great excitement was shown as to the result of the race. All the racing men turned out on the hotel verandas, and the natives awaited the result with interest. Finally Huckleberry, with Bill Towser hanging on to his tail, was seen approaching, ridden by Quantrell, clutching a bundle of New York Heralds in his hands. He beat the World rig from Hawthorn Hill to the track, and the result was provocative of the wildest excitement, many bets having been made as to the probable result of the novel race.

THE crack jockeys have nearly all made their engagements for the coming campaign. Hayward will ride for Burridge Bros.; A. Clayton for Bashford Manor Stable and Charles Fleischman; Tony Hamilton for August Belmont Jr., J. R. Keene and Foxhall Keene second calls; "Monk" Overton for Ed Corrigan; Hugh Penny for M. J. Daly; "Snapper" Garrison for Marcus Daly; John Lamley for M. F. Dwyer; W. Simms for Pierre Lorrillard; A. Covington for Green B. Morris; Fred Littlefield for J. A. & A. H. Morris; S. Doggett for Oneck Stable; Goodale for Ramapo Stable, and Walcott & Campbell second call; Fred Tariff for Walcott & Campbell; Thorpe and Scoggin Bros., George Miller and Narvaez for T. Williams, Ira Rausdell second call; Robert Smith, for Hugh Kirkendall.

THE following recent instances of good race horses, foaled by dams well advanced in life, are given by an English contemporary: "Miss Dollar was foaled when her dam was twenty; La Fleche, when her dam was seventeen; Royal Scot, when his dam was eighteen; Sir Inigo, when his dam was fifteen; Colorado, when his dam was sixteen; Trapezoid, when her dam was fifteen; Lauriscope, when his dam was seventeen." It would be easy to parallel these in this country. Tocques was twenty when she dropped La Tosca; Princess, sixteen when His Highness first saw light. Helen Nichols' dam, Orphan Girl, was foaled in 1871. Marion was eighteen when Yo Tambien was foaled, Colossa sixteen when Bella B. came into the world.

MANY people labor under the idea that Stockwell was an invincible horse; that his Derby defeat by the Irish horse (Daniel O'Rourke) was a fluke; and that he surpassed all contemporary horses on the turf, as he unquestionably did at the stud, says "Hidalgo" in the Los Angeles Herald. The truth is that Teddington, a horse 15 hands 1 inch high, beat him for the Ascot cup with 133 lbs. to Stockwell's 126; and Stockwell was a magnificently grown four-year-old, at the very least 16 hands high. In the following year West Australian won the same race, beating hotb Kingston and Stockwell in the order named, and the time was 4:27, the fastest on record for two and one-half miles in this very day and hour. They had only to run a half-mile in one minute to beat Norfolk's three-mile time with twenty-six per cent more weight.

As a money-making machine, so long as his powers to race continue, the gelding is fully as good as the colt and probably a deal better, if he happens to be fast and a weight-carrier. Of course he is practically worthless after his racing career is ended, but he is liable to race enough longer to earn sufficient to make up the difference. A gelding is less apt to be vicious, he is easier to care for, more easily kept in condition, and does not train off so readily as does either an entire horse or mare. Geldings are more to be relied upon, and once their value as racers is ascertained they are apt to live up to it in all their races, so that they are better in every way to a man who hacks the horses he races. So, too, they face longer as well as truer, and it would be a good thing if the racing associations would resuscitate the rule, which was abrogated a few years ago, giving an allowance to geldings, so as to induce owners, for the benefit of the weight allowance, to geld their colts, and so save the breeding interests of the country.

WHEN great horses leave the turf they drop out of sight of the general public and are heard of no more except through their offspring, says the New York Tribune. It is not uninteresting to know where some of the famous racers of the last ten years live. The mighty Salvator is, of course, lording it on Mr. Haggins' California ranch. Spendthrift is at the head of the Hartland stud, near Lexington. Iroquois, Tremont, Luke Blackburn, Inspector B., Clarendon, Great Tom and Enquirer are at Belle Meade, near Nashville; Onodaga, Hanover, Duke of Montrose, Macduff, Favor, Judge Murray, Strathmore and Woodlands are at the McGrathiana Stud, near Lexington; Prince Royal is in the Kingston Stud, near Lexington, and Bramble is in the La Belle Stud, a few miles away; Uncas, Stonehenge, Macaroon, Kinglike, Ventilator and Centaur (the Faverdale colt) are at Brookdale, near Red Bank; Falsetto, King Alfonso, Lishon and Powhattan are at Woodburn; Eolus and Eon are at the Ellerslie Stud, near Overton, Va., and Linden, Belvidere and Norwood are at the Stonewall Farm, near Midway, Ky. Magnetizer is in the Nursery Stud.

STAGNATION can safely be written in connection with the turf world just now, though doubtless there is plenty of life in Messrs. Weatherby's office, where the January entries will be absorbing all the attention of a large staff. Not until next week will the first hatch of these be to hand, and in the meantime the Derby is a dead letter, and gossip on any subject very scarce. I notice, however, a very strong Protectionist movement on the part of our American friends with regard to the sale of bloodstock, and this is nothing less than an announcement that American breeders have informed Mr. Easton (of Tattersall's, of New York) that if he sells yearlings bred in England he shall not sell any thoroughbred stock which is owned by them. Of course Americans can come to England in order to buy our yearlings; but if the stipulation had not been made, further consignments of surplus stock would, no doubt, have been shipped to the United States. And English breeders want every possible market they can find, for the number of foals showed an enormous increase last year, while prices were, on the whole, lower than they had been for many years before.—English exchange.

THAT good driver, Edward Geers, in speaking of the pacer Hal Pointer, says: "It is a rare thing to find a horse possessing the high degree of intelligence that Hal Pointer has shown, a striking instance of this occurring last summer at Detroit. He was there with the rest of the stable and had an engagement to go an exhibition with Direct, the arrangement being that they should keep together at a slow rate to the half and then brush home. Hal had not seen Direct since the race at Columbia the year before, and up to this afternoon at Detroit he had been taking his work in his usual quiet way since I first started him up at Baltimore in the spring. In warning him up and coming the wrong way of the stretch he met Direct on the homestretch, and at once pricked up his ears and acted as if he wanted to run away, and, in fact, never took hold as hard before or since. This showed that he plainly recognized his black rival, and George Starr told me afterward that Direct did much the same thing when we passed each other, as already stated. When we turned around together it was all I could do to keep Hal from rushing away in front, and it was only by talking to him till we got to the half that he would obey me at all, while the instant we began to brush he was full of fight, and showed how pleased he was to have his head and get another chance at his old enemy."

TURF AND TRACK.

The Sulky.

IT HAS not been decided whether Marvin will have Sunol or Arion this year.

RYSDYK's Hambletonian from a total of 1920 mares bred to him got 1834 foals.

S. G. REED's trotting stallion Cour de Alene has been brought back to Oregon to make a season in the stud.

STANBOL's record will be quoted in the Year Book as 2:11, but there will be a foot note stating that he trotted in 2:07.

TROTTING associations will confer a favor on us and consult their own interests by sending us their dates as soon as claimed.

THE trotter Diamond, 2:15, that two years ago was considered by his owner to be a world-beater, will be out pacing this year.

STEINWAY, with W. Wood, 4, 2:07, and Cricket, 5, 2:10, to his credit, may properly be denominated the champion of living sires of pacers.

JOHN MANN has entered his stallion Alto in the races at Independence, Or., and perhaps will take in the Montaa circuit on his way East.

WHEN Little Albert got his mark of 2:10 in a third heat last September, he was sent off a couple of lengths behind and was separately timed in 2:09.

THE Portland Speed Association has fixed the date for the spring meeting from June 24th to July 1st; fall meeting, September 2d to September 9th.

HORSEMEN in Portland are organizing headquarters for the purpose of entertaining free all visiting horsemen. The movement is meeting with general approval so far.

CAIRN, a three-year-old, by Anteros, out of a mare by Joe Downing, who stepped a quarter last year as a two-year-old in 35 seconds, is counted among the most promising colts of his age in Indiana.

VAN B. DELASHMUTT, of Portland, Or., will go through the Montana circuit with a stable of trotters and pacers this season, consisting in part of Blondie (pacer), 2:15; Susie S., 2:18, and Canemah, 2:20.

MESSRS. BAILEY & WINDOW, of Oregon, have had some good offers for their game racehorse Challenger Chief to go through the Montana circuit, but owing to engagements made for stud services they will not start him before fall.

VAN B. DELASHMUTT, R. Williams and Wm. Frazier have incorporated Witch Hazel Farm; capital stock $100,000. Van B. DeLashmutt was elected president; Richard Williams vice-president, and Ernest DeLashmutt secretary and treasurer.

DIRECT will probably make a stud season at Pleasanton this year, as most of the mares bred to him in Kentucky last season are in foal, and numerous breeders on this coast have expressed a wish to Mr. Salisbury to have a chance to breed to the little black this season.

AVENA, 2:19, Bell Bird, 2:22, and Orphina, 2:19, that have been enjoying the freedom of the paddocks at Palo Alto for the last two months, are again being jogged. They are a great trio, and, barring accidents, will add more glory to the name of Palo Alto in '93.

IT seems unaccountably strange in these days of phenomenal youngsters that the record for two-year-old geldings, Fred Crocker's 2:25, made in 1880, still stands unbroken, as does the three-year-old Faust's 2:18, made in 1889, and the four-year-old Jay-Eye-See's 2:19, made in 1882.

SENATOR BENJ. F. LANGFORD, of Lodi, has a Dexter Prince colt out of Luella (dam of Myrtle 2:19) that is astonishing the trainers and drivers at the race course. He is in charge of Chas. David and a prouder man than he does not sit in a sulky whenever he jogs the youngster on the track.

LAST Saturday Millard Sanders left the pleasant little town of Pleasanton for the East. In the baggage car attached to the rear palace car of the train was the great stallion Sidney, 2:19, and six highly bred broodmares. Some of them are to be sold with Sidney by Wm. B. Fasig, at Cleveland.

THE blackmailer, Kearney, has wonderful eyes, if he is to be believed, for he declares he could see the split second hands on a time watch eleven feet beneath him, and saw when it marked a quarter of a second. The manager of Lick observatory ought to engage him to "hunt for comets;" he is gifted with the far-seeing eye.

TWELVE new baby trotters have arrived since January 1, 1893. Several of them are of illustrious parentage and have very fast records—"to get." The most aristocratic youngster is a son of the famous Palo Alto, 2:08, and Waxana, dam of Sunol, 2:08. If he justifies his royal breeding he will surely prove a world-beater.—Palo Alto Gazette.

THE Belmont Stock Farm has decided to place the service fee of their royal-bred Red Wilkes—Dictator colt, known as Dictatus, at $100 for this season, giving small breeders who are owners of good mares an opportunity to breed to the most fashionable-bred young stallion on the coast at a reasonable figure. See advertisement in another column.

ERIN, 2:24, by Belmont 64, dam Eventide (dam of Kremlin, 2:07), and Evermond, 2:28, by Woodford Mambrino 345; second dam Vara dam of Vatican, 2:29, sire of Belle Vara, 2:08, by Hambletonian 10, third dam Venus, by American Star 14, will soon be in California. Henry Pierce, the progressive breeder, has secured him and recently sent a man to Hartford, Connecticut, to bring the stallion here.

WITH the introduction of the best two-to-three system of racing a two and three-year-old can be nominated in class events as well as in events for animals of a like age. It is no greater strain on a youngster to go two or three heats in the company of aged horses than it is in a class for their age. Where the strain comes in is in going so many hard heats. The new system will be greatly to the advantage of a man with a stable of young horses.

THE time will soon come when the horse that makes two or three breaks in a race will be lost. Each year the rules regarding breaking are being more strictly drawn, and the sentiment against skippers and skivers more thoroughly pronounced. The trotting horse is the only kind of horse that will be worth raising, and by a trotting horse is meant one that trots all the time.

IT is quality that distinguishes the race horse from the horse without the ambition or the ability to fight out a race to a finish. Quality means more than the term "individuality," which, as usually applied, refers chiefly to a horse's appearance. It means muscular force, capacity of heart and lungs, activity of brain and nerves, all controllable and acting together to do the will of man.

At the Napa sale the following breeders have entered all their stock. John McCord sells all of his and also advertises his farm for sale, as his business in this city prevents him from giving the place and stock proper attention. The Coombs Brothers are dissolving partnership, and in order to settle they are offering theirs. Fred W. Loeber intends to leave for the East after this sale, and will be gone for some time. He does not care to carry a large number of stock here, as the hills for keeping them will be too large.

A GREAT broodmare must have the essential characteristics to produce a winner; the nervous energy, the will-power to conquer or die; the quality we recognize in the word race horse. It is a well-known fact that a great broodmare will generally throw speed to different sires. To carry the matter a step farther, would not a great broodmare generally produce a better work horse or even a better mule than a mare of less nerve force. Breeders of mules assert that the higher the quality of the dam the higher the quality of the mule.—Ex.

IN the list of 2:12 trotters the only sires that appear twice are Electioneer and Director. Again if the list is examined closely, it will be found that Director is the only sire that has two with race records of 2:12, one a three-year-old, the other a four-year-old, and they were made the last heat in races which they won; they are also the race records for their age. The recent sales show that race horses bring the money. A race horse can win more money to-day than ever and will sell for more, and it stands to reason that they are the kind to raise DUBOIS BROS. have quite a large stable of trotters already on the race track at Denver, Col. They are: Elsie S. (four years), 2:29; W. W. P. (pacer), 2:17; Yolo Maid (pacer), 2:12; Mary Magdalene (three years), 2:29; Superior (aged), 2:17; Harvey, 2:21; Betsy Cotton, 2:31, by Jay Bird; Brilliant, by Electioneer, no record, but it is said that she can trot some, and Jennie McCoy, pacer (four years), 2:22. Besides these DuBois Bros. have ten or twelve yearlings and two-year-olds that will be handled in the spring, and some of them show great action.

MR. G. W. MORRISON, of Connersville, Ind., the owner of Anteros 6020, brother to Anteeo, 2:16, sire of fourteen in 2:30, Antevolo, 2:19, sire of four in 2:30, and of Coral, 2:18, writes us that he expects to put at least fifteen of his get in the 2:30 list this year. Anteros is already the sire of Doc Christie (4), 2:21, Nellie F. (4), 2:25, Anteros (4), 2:25, Major Ross (2), 2:30, and several others bordering on the 2:30 list. That Anteros will become as great a sire as either of his brothers we have not a doubt. But for his unfortunate injury he would have had as low a mark as any of them.

THE stallion Thorndale died recently on the place of his owner, Mr. Oakleigh Thorne, at Millbrook, Dutchess County, N. Y. Thorndale was foaled on the place of J. R. Adams, Scott County, Kentucky, twenty-eight years ago. His dam was Dolly, a famous brood mare in these days. Thorndale was purchased from Mr. Adams by Edwin Thorne and brought to Dutchess County, a two-year-old. His half-brothers, onward, by George Wilkes, and Director, by Dictator, are among the famous stallions of to-day. Thorndale died of old age, surrounded by as much luxury as any horse ever knew, and was buried with honors.

WHO says that true philanthropy is not as often found among horsemen as among the class who make a special claim to piety? Mr. Nathan Strauss, a well-known horseman and former owner of Majolica, 2:15, has opened a yard or depot in New York where coal is sold to poor people at actual cost. For example, his coal cost him $5 a ton by the boat load, and he has it retailed at four pounds for a cent, he paying out of his own pocket all the expenses of the men employed in serving the public. For a nickel a poor person may buy twenty pounds of coal, or for $1, 400 pounds, this being the limit either way of one sale to any one person.

GEO. W. FORD, the well-known nursery man of Santa Ana, purchased a colt called Chas. Willis at the sale held by the Oakwood Park Stock Farm last October. This youngster is by Albert W., 2:20, out of Clytie, by Nutwood 600, and has given his new owner hopes of entering the 2:30 circle this fall. The track at Santa Ana is assuming a lively appearance. A large number of horses are being worked there every day, and unless we are very much mistaken, the indications are more than favorable, for this being a greater year for California horses than ever, more of them will enter the lists, and the champion crowns will also be ours.

SINCE the organization of the North Pacific Trotting Horse Breeders' Association, one year ago, the interests of the light-harness horse have been rapidly advanced in this district. Until Salem took a forward stride and held a spring meeting in 1892, only one spring meeting—that of the Portland Speed Association—marked the racing year on the Northern coast. This spring shows a further advance. The Portland Speed and Driving Association leads off with a rousing meeting, beginning June 24th and lasting seven days. Salem comes next, claiming the Fourth of July, and holding a three-days' meeting. Independence and Albany will follow, but have not yet set their dates.—Oregonian.

UNLESS a horse has brains he is not teachable. A horse that has breadth and fullness between the ears and eyes will not act mean or hurt anyone. The eye should be full and a hazel color; the ears small and thin and point forward, the face straight with square muzzle and large nostrils. The under side of the head should be well cut under the jaw with jawbone broad, and wide apart under the throatle. The back short and straight and square rump, high withers, shoulders well set back, and broad but not deep into the chest, fore feet short with round mulish foot. There are all kinds of horses, but the animal that has all these points is almost sure to be slightly, graceful, good-natured and serviceable.

HARNESS racing will, during the coming season, attract the attention of the general public more forcibly than it has ever before done. It was only a few years ago that a very small portion of the public took any great interest in harness racing or harness racers, and the rapidity with which it has gained in favor during the last few years is little less than amazing. Running races, which a few years ago almost monopolized the attention of the horse-loving public, are now successfully conducted in a few of the larger cities only, and are supported more by the people who love the element of chance than by those who love racing for its own sake. The true lovers of horses take naturally to the trotter, and this very fact guarantees a future for harness racing brighter than even its most ardent admirers hardly dare to predict.

IT seems that the dog who was killed in the railroad wreck in Jersey last week was not "Doc," the famous trotting dog who attracted so much attention at the trotting meetings last season. The Toronto Globe of January 28th says: "The story of the death of the trotting dog Doc in a railway wreck in New Jersey last week has called out a deal of entirely unnecessary sympathy. Doc is worth a great many dead dogs yet. He is at home in Brighton, Ont., and has not been in New Jersey for many months. Mr. Ketchum's wonderful setter is not out for Mr. Bonner's purse for the 2:05 trotter, but he brings home in a season more dollars than a good many expensive horses earn, and barring accidents the canine trotter will be ready for all comers in his class next season."

THE breeder who shapes his business to meet the change in times will be likely to reap a rich harvest. Use the knife, then one-tenth part of the money required to develop speed will shape the gelding for a useful road horse. To do this drive him regularly and long enough at a time to quiet him, that he may learn to speed without pulling; make him familiar with steam and road use in cities, so that he can be driven by ladies or gentlemen. In this way road-riding would be made fashionable, as nothing drives away family or business cares like a spin behind a speedy family horse in a friendly contest. At present it is next to impossible to get a safe, handsome, well-broken driving horse with speed at a reasonable figure, as they are generally knocked to pieces in trying to make campaigners, and in most instances wind up by taking a tin-cup record and a place in a combination sale.—Rural World.

THE dispersal sale of stock belonging to the Asylum Stock Farm promises to be the largest and most attractive of any ever held in California, and Messrs. Killip & Co. are doing all in their power to make it successful. The small breeders who desire to get splendidly bred mares and fillies to breed to the most popular "stars" of the day will have an opportunity of securing them at their own prices. The stallions, colts and geldings that are consigned to this sale are also of royal breeding, and many of them will be seen on the circuit this fall in the races, if the owners see them move. The names of all who may be interested in securing "a good one to have on the farm" are desired, and by sending a postal to the auctioneers (with the names and addresses of such people) catalogues will be sent to them immediately. The sale takes place on the 2nd and 3d of March at the Bay District track. Nearly every animal will be shown in harness.

J. S. PHIPPEX has been employed at Palo Alto more than twelve years, but last season he was given his first opportunity to demonstrate to the public his ability as a trainer and driver, and for his first season's work upon a public track in races and trials against time his record is unequalled. He put twenty horses into the 2:30 list, thirteen of them being two-year-olds—six more than the farm ever put into the list in any previous year. Two of the two-year-olds he gave records better than 2:20, viz., Rowena, 2:17, and Avena, 2:19, a feat never before accomplished by any driver in one year. He drove Sweet Rose to a yearling record of 2:25, which is within a quarter of a second of the world's best record for that age, and gave Truman a four-year-old mark of 2:12, and the three-year-olds, Elden and Advance, records of 2:19 and 2:22, respectively. He drove the twelve-year-old horse Alfred, a condemned cripple, to a record of 2:25, and reduced Bernal's record from 2:24 to 2:17, Langton's from 2:26 to 2:22, Bell Bird's from 2:26 to 2:22, Truman's from 2:22 to 2:12 and Rowena's from 2:37 to 2:17.

FIVE thousand dollars seems to be an extravagant price for a sapphire, and probably no such crystal gem, no matter how blue or beautiful or large, ever brought that sum, but when A. H. Moore, the liberal Philadelphia breeder, bid the noted matron Sapphire up to that figure at the recent Kellogg combination sale in this city he expressed himself as well satisfied with the investment. "There are no more of them," remarked Mr. Moore, referring to the daughter of Jay Gould and Lucy, and her companion, Thornetta, both of whom he has added to the harem at Cloverdel, "and blood-lines like these are good enough to bank on." Sapphire is still comparatively young, while Thornetta, though nearly out of her teens, is well preserved and quite a bargain at $1100. The union with Director will be a mingling of the bluest blood, including the valued strain from American Star which he and Sapphire get in the third generation. It does not always follow that rarity makes worth, but given an equal amount of quality the value increases as the numbers lessen. Lady Thorn and Lucy were first-water gems in their day, and their daughters, though undeveloped, naturally command a ready market.—Horseman.

THE late snow storm has dampened the ardor of the horse-trainers, and about all they can do is to trot races around a red-hot stove. All the horses so far are wintering well, and seem to enjoy the abundant supply of the "beautiful." At Vancouver we have found Sam Costo, with Althais, two-year-old record, 2:27, and Altawood, pacer, one-year-old record, 2:37. Mr. Tilden has Ella T., one-year-old record 2:34, and several youngsters. Matt Mann has Alto, record 2:17; Trumont, 2:29, and some young fellows. Lute Lodsey has Alexis, pacer, 2:18. Sperry & Crawford have their Red Wilkes colt, Scarlet Letter. George Misner is wintering at City View with J. S. C. What Ho and Frank O'Neill. John Sawyer is wintering at Witch Hazel with Phallmont Boy, Princemont, Alfa L. and some green ones. Moshier has Challenger Chief, 2:21; King Patchen; Combination George, pacer, 2:20; Anna Alene and others. Charley Woons, who has charge of the Witch Hazel stock, is jogging Blondie, Vanquish, Noonday, Canemah, and a lot of youngsters by Hambletonian Mambrino. Wes. Redmon is jogging Senator Tongue's horses, Pandora, You Trump and Fred Hambleton. Kitty Horn will be sent to Witch Hazel to be trained for this season's racing.—Oregonian.

The Saddle.

THE Western jockey, Vignes, will ride for the .Etna Stable this season.

GAYOSO died of lung fever at Montgomery Park, Memphis, Tenn., last week. Gayoso was a four-year-old chestnut by imp. Great Tom-Buttress.

GEORGE H. ENGEMAN has purchased the interest of his nephew, William A. Engeman, in the Clifton race track, and is now sole proprietor.

JOCKEY PERKINSON, who was bere with the Lorraine Stable horses at the last Blood Horse meeting, has signed to ride during 1893 for R. L. Baker, of Lexington, Ky.

J. DELONG has been bought from Billy Lakeland, the six-year-old bay horse Lord Dalmeny, by imp. The III Used, out of Lady Rosebery, and the horse will probably be sent to Chicago.

SAN EMEGDIO, the three-year-old Apache—Cinderella colt won another race at Hawthorne on February 6th, beating Zanippa, Blancbe's Last and Sylvia R. Charles Kerr, of Bakersfield, Cal., bred the colt.

THE Los Angeles meeting commences on Saturday, March 18th, and lasts seven days. The Santa Anita two-year-olds may race there. A number of stables are being built to accommodate the large number of flyers expected.

THE Blood Horse Association have secured a fine suite of rooms in the Halleck block, corner Sansome and Halleck streets. The apartments have been elegantly fitted up, and the leading "horse" papers of the country will be placed on file.

A LEXINGTON (Ky.) special of February 5th, said: "The valuable broodmare, Laura L., 9, by Longfellow, dam Vexy, by Vexation, second dam by John Morgan, is dead at the farm of Captain William May, in this county. She was valued at $3,000."

SENATOR WILLIAM THOMPSON, of Reno, Nev., gave us a pleasant call last Monday. He reports his horses that are at Bay District track and in Nevada in excellent shape, and is especially sweet on the filly by imp. Cheviot, out of Bessie Shannon (sister to Bishop), by Shannon. Martinet has filled out into a very fine colt, and will not be last in the American Derby by any means.

HERBERT KING, of Chicago, for a long time superintendent of Garfield Park and one of the most thorough horsemen in America, has been in San Francisco several months, and will probably return home ere long. It is to be regretted exceedingly that a horseman of Mr. King's ability should be unable to secure a string of horses in California worth having or a position as superintendent on one of our leading stock farms. Mr. King is not only a first-class trainer, but is an excellent veterinarian, especially clever in the line of horse dentistry.

A FEW more declarations from the American Derby came in yesterday, making the total number struck out 175, and leaving 150 still in the race. The additional declarations are Unalaska II, Pasha, Ohyesa, Charm, Grandee, Solitude and Dick O'Malley. Pittsburg Phil's colt, Sir Roy, is declared, but his Wormser is left in, a clerical oversight having made it appear that Wormser was scratched and Sir Roy left in the list of declarations published Monday.—Chicago Inter Ocean, Feb. 7. Castro, Anchoret and Linville have also been declared out, according to the Inter Ocean.

MR. JAMES R. KEENE has bought from Lord Rosslyn the chestnut mare Cushat, foaled 1887, by Hermit, dam Stockdove, by Stockwell; second dam Beatrice (dam of Prestonpans), by Voltigeur, etc. This mare is own sister to Blue Rock (dam of St. Simon of the Rock). Cushat, as a two-year-old, running in Lord Calthorpe's colors, ran a dead heat with Lord Alington's Bena for the Lavant Stakes at Goodwood, defeating Memoir, Bonaventure, etc. She has a fine yearling by Satiety, and is now in foal to Rosebery, the result of which cross will be breeding very similar to that of Amphion.

THE epidemic of "ringers" is now supplemented by one of horse-stealing. The last victim is J. Sullivan, who recently purchased Clobo and Experience (by Prince Charlie), paying $3,050 for the latter at the sale of the Macduff Stable. These two horses he shipped on to Chicago in charge of a colored lad, George Todd. They arrived safely in the Windy City on Monday, and were sent off to Roby under Todd's care, but never reached that track. Clobo was purchased from "Bill" Brien on private terms. Both are fair class horses, and would win a lot of races at Roby.

IN the names claimed by the Oneck Stable that appear in another column will be noted a very neat specimen of nomenclature. The filly by Midlothian, out of Patty, is presumably half Scotch and half Irish—a very hardy breed, as Mr. W. L. Powers incidentally remarked—so she is dubbed Micmac Queen. One of the names, Lambayeque, will prove a stumbling block to the public and even the most nimble-tongued hookmaker. In all likelihood "Clambake" will be found a handy substitute for this polysyllabic cognomen, which is the name of a town in Peru.—Daily Spirit.

J. W. ROGERS, the widely-known trainer of the great colt Lamplighter, was at Hawthorne yesterday, and among other things joined Ed Corrigan and John Brennock in a weighty and venturesome turf transaction, says the Chicago Inter Ocean of February 7th. The trio, after due consultation, pooled their funds and bet Joe Ullman $6 against $30,000 that Gould & Curry will win the next American Derby. Another bold speculator viewing the matter differently bet $20 against $20,000 that Todd's Only will carry off the race of the year. Two hundred dollars against $6,000 was also bet on Hugh Penny.

A TURFMAN who recently made a trip to Sacramento and saw all the thoroughbreds in training at the State capital said regarding Yn El Rey, Dare and Floodgate, of the Fair string: "I never in all my life saw a finer-looking colt than the brother to Yo Tambien. After gazing at him for nearly an hour I failed to see where he was lacking in a single particular, and the longer one looks at him the more he becomes impressed with the belief that Yo El Rey is sure to be one of the greatest horses the American turf has ever known. Dare has filled out into a grand big horse, and if nothing happens he will make a hot fight for first honors in the American Derby of 1893. Floodgate is also looking well, and many are sweet on his chances in the rich event at Washington Park."

THE effort to pass a bill in the Tennessee Legislature making it a misdemeanor to bet on races run in the State has failed. It was amended in the Senate, and on its passage was defeated by a vote of 18 to 10. There are too many men interested in the breeding and racing of horses in that State to make such a law advisable, and so far as public sentiment is concerned, it is largely in favor of the sport.

PICKING the winner of such a race as the American Derby thus far in advance is a hard task, but twenty horses that are almost certain to start for the great race, if no accident occurs to them in training, are: Dare, Don Alonzo, Cadmus, Calhoun, Eltham Queen, Floodgate, Gov. Foraker, G. W. Johnson, Tyro, Hugh Penny, Lady Violet, Lookout, Monowai, Picton, Rainbow, St. Croix, Sir Francis, Ramapo, The Reaper and Tobe Bell. The man who can select the best of this lot will probably pick the Derby winner in doing so.

TALK about cast-offs! Oakdale, a brown gelding by imp. Partisan, dam Pet, by Melbourne Jr. (dam of Birdcatcher, Mattie C., Brown Bess and Partisana), sold by William Murry, of Sacramento, to Taylor & Caldwell, of Illinois, for a song, has been winning right along at Hawthorne, and in good company, too. On the same date (Feb. 7) San Emeodio, also a Californian, put another race to his credit. He was bred by Chas. Kerr, of Bakersfield, and is by Apache, dam Cinderella (dam of Herald), by Catesby.

IMP. MERRIWA has had a large number of mares booked to him already, among the number being May Pritchard, by Tyrant; Panchita, by Alta; May D. (dam of Esperanza), by Wilddle—Sally Hart; Belle W., her sister; Viola Rea (dam of St. Patrick), by Lodi—Mamie Hall; Sally Hart (dam of Fanny F.), by Montana—Crocket, by Rificman; Fanny F., by Wilddle—Sally Hart; Miss Adda, by Bank Roll; Lurline, by Longfield—Katy Pease; Mistake, by Wilddle—Katy Pease; Priscilla, by Thad Stevens—Eliza, by Norfolk; Lizzie Gard, by Jim Brown—by Monday, and Cheerful, by Three Cheers—Queen Emma, by Woodburn.

It is already apparent that the American Derby of this year will be marked by the heaviest ante-post betting that has yet been a feature in connection with any race decided in this country. Joe Ullman and his partners, O'Neill and Eckert, have as yet posted no odds, as they are awaiting the February declarations; but such is the eagerness to invest that they have already taken many bets at their own terms. G. W. Johnson has been backed this week at the slim rate of $11,000 and $1,100 in two bets of $6,000 and $600 and $5,000 and $500, and yesterday a bet of $15,000 to $70 against Enthusiast was laid, as was also another of $2,500 to $25 against the Duke of Beaufort's colt, Son of a Gun, now in England. When the full lists are made public the $20,000 book will be speedily closed on a really surprising number of candidates.—Chicago Inter Ocean.

JOHN CASSIDY, on the Cliff House road, has a number of celebrities in the horse world in his charge, and all are looking finer than silk. Imp. Loyalist (son of The Marquis and Loyal Peeress), that held the mile and a quarter record in Australia (208) until Carbine beat it, is looking as strong as the proverbial ox, and is as sound as a dollar. This grandson of the mighty Stockwell (there are only a few in the male line in this country) may be trained and raced this season, and if he does it will take a "corker" to lower his colors. Imp. Idallium is looking as well as ever in his life, and if anything he is a better-looking horse than his brother, imp. Sir Modred, which is saying a good deal. Charley C., 2:18, and his half-brother, Bloomfield Boy, by Gny Wilkes, 2:15, are in the pink of condition, as their shining coats and clear eyes denote, and Mr. Cassidy thinks this pair will trot double close to 2:20 this season, notwithstanding Charley C.'s record was made at the pace. She, by Abbottsford, is a picture of equine beauty and as gentle as a pet dog. It is thought she will lower her record of 2:25 materially this season. A mammoth black horse at Mr. Cassidy's by Valensin, 2:23, dam Flight, attracts considerable attention, and is a pretty good looker for a big fellow.

MYALL KING, the Australian-bred racehorse that won the Viceroy's Cup at Calcutta three times for Lord William Beresford, at length broke down in his preparation for that event. As it was, the Maharajah of Cooh Bobar ran first and second with Australian horses, Highborn and Good Hope, with the English mare, Catarina, third. The Maharajah showed himself a good sportsman by having both his starters ridden out. Highborn was the less fancied of the pair, going to the post at 4 to 1, but in a rattling finish he beat his stable mate, who was at 2 to 1, a neck. The distance, one and three-quarter miles, was run in 3:09, says the Daily Spirit. This race has set some English critics to thinking whether there is not more than has been commonly supposed in the very high claims Australians make for their horses. Of course, while Catarina was smart, she was not strictly first-class, or perhaps anything like it in England, but the same may be said about the Australians who were each conceding her 9 lbs. In addition, Ringmaster, who was well known in England, was handsomely beaten in the same event. The general idea seems to be that for staying blood Australia would undoubtedly take a lot of beating, and that the breeders of that country knew what they were about when they secured Musket, Fisherman and Tim Whiffler, "three of the best long-distance runners the English turf ever produced."

DR. ROBERT JENNINGS, the well-known veterinary surgeon, died at his residence in Detroit, Mich., recently, from paralysis of the brain. Tuesday night he went to bed in his usual health, and his wife had no suspicion of his illness until about 8 o'clock Wednesday morning, when her efforts to arouse him proved fruitless. Dr. Jennings was born in Philadelphia sixty-eight years ago. He was the founder of the first veterinary college on the American continent, that institution being situated at Philadelphia, and being called the Philadelphia Veterinary College. He was professor of veterinary science in seven agricultural colleges in ensuing years, among them being the Ohio Agricultural College, situated at Columbus. Fifteen years ago he came to Detroit, and began practice. For twelve years he had charge of the fire department horses in that city, but finally give it up on account of ill health. He was the author of five different works on horses, their training and the diseases which they are heir to. He also invented some very useful surgical instruments. He was the editor of a veterinary department in several newspapers, and was regarded as an authority on all matters pertaining to his profession. The deceased leaves a widow, son and two daughters to mourn his loss. His son, Dr. Robert Jennings, is a practicing physician in Pittsburg and his daughters, Mrs. Linna Parker and Mrs. George Gibson, live in Detroit.

THOMAS HEFFERNAN has in training at Stockton the following: Recordo, by Wilddle, dam Blue Bonnet, by Joe Hooker; second dam Kate Carson, by Joe Daniels. He is a beautiful chestnut colt with white star in forehead, stands 15 1/2 hands, and is such a made horse as Wildwood, and Mr. Hefferman thinks he will gain just such a reputation. Then there is one with the peculiar name, Soda Crackers. He is a bright chestnut with blaze face and four white legs. He is by Prince of Norfolk, dam Reta B., by Joe Hooker, and he looks every inch a racehorse (Longshot all over). And then there is Donna Juana, a sorrel filly, by Prince of Norfolk, dam Blue Bonnet, by Joe Hooker; second dam Kate Carson, by Joe Daniels; third dam Belle Mahone, by Norfolk; fourth dam Maid of the Oaks, by Jack Hawkins; fifth dam by imp. Glencoe, and so on. The above are the property of G. W. Trahern, and will probably be seen at the spring Blood Horse meeting.

RICHARD CROKER has identified himself with the turf. He does not expect to win the fame or the money made by Pierre Lorillard, the Dwyers or other leading turfmen of the country. "I am going into the business," he said to me yesterday, "only in a small way comparatively. I am not doing it to make money, but the benefit of my health, so as to be more in the open air." "But you will run your horses for money?" I said. "I shall run them for all they are worth," was the quiet reply, "and I shall be perfectly satisfied if I come out winner." The horses upon which Mr. Croker mainly relies for success in his initial turf ventures are Yorkville Belle, Red Banner and Fairy, which were recently bought for him by Mike Dwyer. These horses have fine records and made large winnings for their former owners. Mr. Croker has already entered them in the principal events of the year, including the Brooklyn and Suburban handicaps.—N. Y. Herald. Mr. Croker's registered colors are "Yale blue, gold tassel."

IN a letter to a friend in Washington Colonel Thomas P. Ochiltree says of the horses from Colonel North's stable that he will have charge of in their American campaign this year: "You will see by the list that I have no great horses, only quite a useful lot of fellows for handicaps. All but one of the Colonel's entries for the stake events at Chicago went amiss except Royal Harry and Eltham Queen. The former will represent them in the English (Epsom) Derby, and the latter, I hope, will start for the American event. Neither Colonel North nor myself expect to accomplish much this year with the string entrusted to my care. It is entirely experimental, a breaking of the ice as it were. If the horses have a safe voyage, and progress well in acclimatization, get into good working form and are leniently treated by the handicappers I will compromise by getting along somewhere in the wake of 1, 2, 3 occasionally. Of one thing I feel assured. If this venture goes well I am convinced Colonel North will re-enforce my command with a lot of youngsters, and perhaps, such a real good one as El Diablo, and then other English owners will follow suit. Amen, say I." From the above it may be inferred that Colonel North deems Royal Harry and Eltham Queen the pick of his three year olds, and that in sending the latter over to this side to contend for American Derby honors he was sending over an animal of real merit. It is to be sincerely hoped that she has not been injured by her stormy voyage in the Tauric.

MANY consider the Doncaster St. Leger the most important three year-old event in England, as the distance is considerably greater than that in the Derby. Stockwell won the St. Leger and made a truly wonderful record as a sire of St. Leger winners, starting the ball rolling in 1860 with St. Albans; in 1861 the great mare Callou, by Stockwell, won it, beating, among others, Kettlebram, winner of the Derby, he by Ratanplan, brother to Stockwell; in 1862 The Marquis, son of Stockwell and sire of imp. Cbesterfield and Loyalist, won the great event; in 1864, Blair Athol, Stockwell's greatest son, landed the St. Leger, again beating General Peel, winner of the Two Thousand Guineas, and also Cambuscan, sire of the dam of imp. Sir Modred, Cheviot and Idallium; in 1866 Lord Lyon, by Stockwell, won the Leger, with Savernake, also by Stockwell, second, and in 1867 Achievement, by Stockwell, was first, beating the Derby winner, Hermit (sire of St. Blaise and Friar Tuck). Then the Stockwell family went right on winning the great stake, for in 1875, Craig Millar, a son of Blair Athol, won it, and in 1877 Silvio, by the same great sire, was first past the post. In 1880 Robert the Devil landed the stake for Mr. C. Brewer, and the winner was by Bertram, he by The Duke, son of Stockwell. In 1886 Ormonde put the St. Leger to his credit, and he was by Bend Or, a son of Doncaster, he by Stockwell; in 1888 Seabreeze got the verdict, and she was by Isonomy, that was from a daughter of Stockwell. No sire in English turf history approaches Stockwell in getting St. Leger winners, and his blood is telling in the mother country to this day more than that of any other horse.

THE growth of horse racing as a popular sport in England and the extent of the general public interest in it are sufficiently proved by the fact that the London Times thinks it necessary to devote the greater part of a page to racing statistics. It gives, among other things, a list of the principal owners of winning horses during the last six years, and the amount of their gains, mentioning only those who have made more than $25,000 a year for the period under consideration. It appears that nineteen owners of race horses won altogether in six years rather less than a million sterling in prizes alone—the list beginning with the Duke of Portland, who won more than $765,000, and ending with several gentlemen who carried off more than $150,000. There were no less than twenty-six owners whose horses won for them last year less than $25,000 and more than $5,000. Speaking roughly, there are a hundred owners whose winnings in one year are between $5,000 and $100,000. In 1889 the Duke of Portland carried off more than $365,000, but that was due to a series of successes altogether exceptional. A better idea of the extent of the business is obtained from the racing fixtures, of which there are 100, all more or less important, for next year, to say nothing of the countless third and fourth-rate local meetings. It is plain that all the chief prizes go to the very rich persons who do not need them, and that, except in the case of a minority of horse owners, racing in itself is not a paying business. If it were it would, of course, be undertaken by business men and stock-owners. The idea that it is maintained by patriots who wish to improve the race of English horses no longer obtains much credit. A few of the very rich are willing to contribute largely to its support for their own pastime, but, of course, the real reason why it flourishes there as elsewhere is that it gratifies the human passion for gambling and excitement.

THE GUN.

What a National Association Could Do.

The more closely the subject of a National Sportsmen's Association is considered the more favorable will it become impressed upon the minds of all who are interested in field sports.

It will be conceded, we think, without argument that in order to be effective in reaching the public and impressing it with the importance of any idea that the only way by which this may be done is through competent and thorough organizations.

No idea however popular, however meritorious and deserving in and by reason of its own inherent virtue has ever become incorporated into the law of the land without having a party, well organized and governed back of it which had as its central object the development, recognition and establishment of the special idea for which it was formed.

It should not become a political organization only so far as it is necessary to insure the success of its demands, and in this lies its salvation. The idea of sportsmen going to legislature after legislature petitioning and begging for that which is alone for the public good, to be snubbed and turned away simply because there is no united party or power behind their demands is humiliating.

When will the politicians listen respectfully to the demands of the guild? Whenever there is an organization of legal voters back of the demand sufficient to compel them to take notice of the demand and not before.

An organization of 500 or 1000 voters pledged to one idea or plan is a most potent argument in its favor and one that will not be disregarded.

More can be accomplished this year than could be accomplished in two ordinary years, that is, the central event of the age at Chicago presents such favorable opportunities that to fail to avail ourselves of them would be little short of treason to the cause of the sporting interests generally.

The National Association should have a legal representative whose business it would be to familiarize himself with the laws of the several States and by coming in touch with the legislative committees of the associations of the several States to aid in the formulation of such bills as would avoid the pitfalls into which others have fallen, thus saving time, expense and the blight of defeat which serves, in many cases, to effectually dampen the energies of well intentioned sportsmen.

In coming in touch with the National Fish Commission and furnishing reliable channels through which the distribution of National aid could be made effectual, would be a strong point of advantage.

The collection of funds would be a comparatively easy matter when the donors are once convinced that the channels of distribution are solid and substantial and under the government of the best ability of the country.

Again the stimulating influence of a National Sportsmen's Association would call out the best ability of the sportsmen of America and in this the cause would be strengthened as it would be impossible otherwise to do. There can be no question of the feasibility and importance of the project. Let it not slumber; it is of the first importance to the sportsman's interest of the whole country.

Inanimate Target Shooting.

From the necessities of the case and largely from inclination and the fact that the sport can be indulged in by the great majority of sportsmen owing to the fact of its being within the reach of all financially, the sport of inanimate target shooting is destined to become far more popular than it has been heretofore on this coast.

The flying disks present an admirable target at which to fire in the air, the motion of the targets much resembling the flight of live birds. There are many men who would love to become experts in handling the gun and this sport presents, in the fullest sense, all of the requisites going to prepare one for handling the gun effectually in the field.

The intention seems to be, for the present season, to push this department of trap shooting to the front as never before. Certain it is that few organizations in the State have succeeded in establishing better sport than that of the Lincoln Gun Club, which is one of the oldest and most popular inanimate shooting clubs to be found within the State, or indeed upon the Pacific Coast.

The grounds at Oakland Shooting Park are to be specially fitted up for this purpose and hereafter, at all times, the lovers of inanimate target shooting will there find the very best and most convenient facilities for the enjoyment of the sport.

We hope to see a general interest awakened in this department to the end that every lover of the gun may enjoy the sport to the fullest extent.

The Recreation Gun Club.

The annual meeting of the Recreation Gun Club was held at the Occidental hotel on Thursday evening of last week. There was a good attendance of the membership.

Mr. Thomas R. Barney was elected president for the ensuing year, Dr. G. G. Gere Vice-President and D. M. Osborn Secretary. Messrs. F. B. Norton, R. A. Eddy and Dr. S. E. Knowles were elected directors of the Club.

Some changes were made in the rules of the Club looking to a more liberal treatment of the sportsmen locally as to participating in the regular events of the club. The second Sunday in March will witness the inaugural of the Club's sport for the season. The Club is in good condition financially and otherwise, and its membership look forward to a pleasant season of sport at the trap.

The winter has been very severe on all classes of game birds in the eastern and middle States. California and the South only have escaped the curse in this line. We should be happy to know that about the only change which the weather holds in store for our game is to cause it to migrate from the valleys to the foothills when the fog lies over the former and the sunshine obtains in the hills.

The Country Club

The following annual statement of the Country Club is given to the public with the belief that the sportsmen of the country generally will be interested in the grand achievements accomplished by this club.

"The year 1892 has been one of prosperity. The number of visitors has been greater than in any former year. The privileges of the Club House and Preserve have been greatly enjoyed by all, and nothing has occurred to mar the pleasure of our members.

"FISH AND FISHING—The fishing in the Club's waters was steadily good during the whole season. The Olema, Bear Valley and Alamillo Streams have shown a greater abundance than in the years before the Club's control. We have been rejoiced at the success resulting from the stocking of our lakes. In April, 1891, 14,000 Eastern trout were put in Trout Lake, and last year these fish were of the almost uniform size of twelve inches in length and three-quarters of a pound in weight each; and, according to the natural rate of increase, we may look for them in the next fishing season of the length of fifteen inches, and from one to one and a half pounds in weight. Trout Lake last July was for the second time stocked with 17,000 Eastern trout, and these fish are now seven inches in length. Bass Lake, which is located a short distance from Trout Lake, was stocked with black bass from Crystal Springs Lake in 1890, and from Menlo Park Lake in 1891. From tests made the last year, we are confident that the members will enjoy fine sport the coming season. Crescent Lake, also located near Trout and Bass Lakes, was stocked last August with 30,000 land-locked salmon, and there would seem to be no reason for doubting that as good results will follow as in the case of the other varieties of fish.

"THE BEAR VALLEY DAM—We wish to congratulate the members on the success of the construction of the Bear Valley Dam, which was finished in November. The dam is situated near the outlet into the ocean of Bear Valley Creek. Its dimensions are fifty feet in length, twenty-seven feet in height, fourteen feet at the base and six feet at the top;—built of cement and rock. The time consumed in filling with water was fourteen days. The fact that it withstood the severe storms of the past winter proves its substantial construction. In August, there were placed in the Bear Valley Creek, above the dam, 17,000 rainbow trout (salmo irideus), which are noted for their game qualities.

"STOCKING—Trout lake has been stocked with 31,000 New Hampshire trout, Bear Valley Creek Dam with 19,000 rainbow trout, Black Bass Lake, Ocean Lake, Little Lake and Wild Cat Lake with black bass, and Crescent Lake with 30,000 land-locked salmon. There have been turned out, 30 Mongolian pheasants, 600 Arizona quail, and 100 Chinese quail.

"PROTECTION OF GAME—There has been little or no poaching on the Preserve grounds during the past year. Pleasant relations have been maintained by the Club, the neighbors and the Preserve tenants. Our keepers have accomplished good work in the trapping of vermin, which does more toward increasing and protecting game than the invasion of many pouchers. In March 1st, 160 traps will be put out by the keepers.

"CULTIVATION—We have plowed and sowed about sixty acres of land, which will produce sufficient hay to feed our sixteen horses and eight cows. We have one thousand acres fenced in for pasturage.

"IMPROVEMENTS—There have been built during the past year the Bear Valley Dam, hay-barn, granary, dog kennels, electric blue-rock pigeon traps with shooting house, and a handsome fence has been erected in front of Club House grounds and around the garden.

"RECREATION—Our bull's head breakfast in June, and our Monterey outing, in August, were both pronounced enjoyable and successful events. Our trap shooting team won its first match against the Alameda County Sportsman's Association. Another match is to be shot at this summer. During the past year 178 guests have visited the Club House. This includes many ladies, who are allowed the privileges of the Club House on Mondays, Tuesdays, Wednesdays and Thursdays.

"THE PRESERVE—The Preserve contains about 76,000 acres, with sixty miles of ocean front. The roads for driving are all good, and the scenery is unsurpassed. There are numerous lakes and trout streams, and an abundance of deer, quail, snipe and duck. The sea fishing and salmon fishing in Tomales Bay are features."

Since February, 1892, the following vermin and birds of prey have been killed on the preserve: 1 bear, 3 coyotes, 48 wildcats, 87 foxes, 65 coons, 31 skunks and 84 hawks. The financial statement of the Club shows for laborer's wages and for material in making improvements, and for general expenses from February 11, 1892, to February 11, 1893, the sum of $14,430.48. Total receipts for same period $15,447.03, leaving balance in treasury of $1,016.55. The membership is 100 with 14 on the waiting list. This showing makes the Country Club one of the very first sportsman's organizations in America.

Is the Emeric Bill Un-American?

It has become altogether too customary for men to designate any law that curtails any of their natural privileges as being un-American. Every law of civil government has its foundation in the fact that each individual citizen relinquishes certain of his natural rights to society that the common good may be the better thereby subserved. If a vicious, brutal fellow should assault you on the street or elsewhere and you, from physical inability or a desire to avoid a personal encounter, withdraw from the scene, you may call upon the peace officer to arrest and punish your assailant, for that is one of the things which society or civil government undertakes to do for the individual citizen in lieu of his obedience to its laws.

The very essence of good citizenship lies in the willing obedience to the laws of the land, and next to obedience, as a factor of good citizenship, comes a willingness to enforce the laws of the land whenever opportunity offers.

Nothing, in short, is un-American which has for its object the good of the whole people. Americanism was never more tersely expressed than by President Lincoln when he said this is "a government of the people, for the people and by the people."

Class legislation would be un-American, but every law which bears upon all alike, regardless of condition, caste or color, cannot be said to be un-American, for "equality before the law" proclaims the golden era of our boasted civilization.

The liberty to do as you may choose, regardless of the rights of another, is the most un-American thing that can be conceived.

It has been charged and urged with an ardor that would portend an honesty of conviction back of the statement that the Emeric bill now before the legislature, regarding the fish and game interests, is un-American. In what particular pray? In that it provides that any sportsman in going from one county to another shall have an invitation from some land owner or lessee in order to hunt there or be amenable to the authorities in the sum of $25? What is un-American about that, or what valid objection can be brought against such a provision? The object of this clause is undoubtedly to confine the shooting to such sportsmen as some reliable party would vouch for. Is this un-American? We think not. Would not the game be better protected by such a provision? Would any man shooting by right of such invitation be apt to go in for slaughtering every thing in sight? Would it not have a tendency to check market bunting? If so well and good. Would it prohibit any good American from bunting in any county in the State, and by good American we mean any good citizen of whatever nationality or blood he might be? Certainly not. Who would it prohibit or cause to take out a $25 license in order to hunt in any, save their own county? Certainly only those who would violate every rule of decency and common courtesy.

Do you wish to hunt on the lands of another? Then law or no law, if it be in a settled district, should you not first get the owners consent? If the lands be wild and uncultivated then we admit that a question as to the propriety of passing a law prohibiting shooting thereon would arise, and we do not see how such a law could be justly enforced. But surely sufficient warning could be posted notifying the public of the fact that such lands were preserved. The main question at issue is the preservation of the game, and any law that will fall equally in its restrictions upon all, cannot well be too stringent for this purpose.

The Emeric bill is certainly framed for the interest of game in this State; the clause regarding transportation of game, if carried into effect, would be a means of salvation to the game and fish of the State. This is true both of shipment into the State from without and also shipment from county to county or from one point to another within the State when unaccompanied by the owner.

Prohibiting the cold storage of game is an excellent clause. Some say it will cause too much inconvenience. Bob! if you are a sportsman what matters a little inconvenience if by it the game interests of the State may be subserved?

Too many so-called sportsmen, when bills of this nature are presented, are at once self-constituted lawyers and hasten to advance unsolicited opinions as to the legality of the enactment should it become a law, many of them stopping not until they had passed their opinions on the constitutionality of the measure.

Sufficient for the day is the evil thereof. As a whole we trust the Emeric bill will pass, but we would like the month of September left open for deer bunting.

The California Wing-Shooting Club.

On the first of the week the California Wing-Shooting Club inaugurated the sport of the season at the trap by holding a very enjoyable meeting at the Oakland Shooting Park.

The morning was bright and cheerful, which was enough to place all concerned in the very best of spirits, especially after the cold, damp weather which had prevailed so long prior to that date.

The attendance was good and the sportsmen generally were anxious to try their hands at the traps in order to see if their hand and eye had forgotten any of their cunning.

The birds were a strong lot and when taking advantage of the stiff breeze that was blowing across the traps they proved themselves quite able matches for most of the gentlemen who faced the traps.

Some really excellent shooting was done, Mr. H. C. Golcher fairly earning first honors in the main match.

Mr. Crittenden Robinson always shoots well. The balance of the gentlemen fell below their usual scores, but as it was the first shoot of the season, and that, too, under the most trying conditions, their scores may be said to be fairly good ones.

Table with 2 columns: Name and Score. Includes H. C. Golcher, Crittenden Robinson, Rogers, Johns, Slade, Morrison, Robt. Liddle, George Slack, Van Slyke.

A six bird match, $2:50 entrance, followed with the result appended:

Table with 2 columns: Name and Score. Includes Golcher, Robinson, Slade, Johns, Rogers, Johns, Van Slyke.

In a subsequent pool of like nature the result stood as follows:

Table with 2 columns: Name and Score. Includes Robinson, Slade, Johns, Fay, Rogers, Van Slyke, Chapman, Golcher.

In another event "Johns" won the first on straight score, Robinson second on five kills. In the pool shooting some remarkable work was done, as the wind had freshened and the birds darted away with marvelous swiftness. On the whole, the day was very pleasantly spent and served as a very fitting opening for the sport of the season.

Mr. J. A. R. Elliott, of Kansas City, the well-known and popular wing-shot, has issued a letter withdrawing from all contests at the trap for money wages. Hereafter he will only shoot for sport. He has formed a partnership with his brother and will, at Kansas City, conduct a general sporting goods establishment.

In all of Mr. Elliott's matches at the trap and in fact in every walk of life, he has justly earned the reputation of being an affable and agreeable gentleman. We wish him success in his new venture, and as his business will call him upon the road we shall look with pleasurable anticipations for his coming to the Pacific Coast.

Now that the trout season again approaches the angler will begin to pull down his rods and tackle generally and give them a thorough going over. This as a matter of course is quite essential as you will find upon examination that most of your goods used last year are now entirely untrustworthy. Books of flies must be overhauled and the damaged ones discarded and their places filled with fresh ones.

There are few things in life more provoking than to find, when on a stream or lake at a favorite hour that a little negligence in this matter has been the cause of spoiling, in a large measure, the sport of the occasion.

The lawmakers of Oregon are inclined to be somewhat severe in the enactment of game laws for that State. We are in for stringent laws however, and will watch the outcome of the efforts there with interest.

The open season for deer is proposed from August 1 to November 1; killing fawn prohibited at any time; killing deer at any time unless the carcass is to be preserved by the slayer; grouse, pheasant and quail may be killed between Oct. 15 and January 15. Heavy penalties by fine and imprisonment is provided for violations of the law.

A new wad has been placed on the market. This wad is manufactured under a Swedish patent and is of felt with conical end, which goes down over the powder, forcing the upper portion of the powder charge into the wad in conical form. The lower portion of the wad, covering the powder as above described, is soft and expands easily, thus preventing, it is claimed, the escape of any of the gases generated by the discharge. The upper portion of the wad is hard, thus presenting to the shot a solid surface. The wad, it is claimed, is blown to pieces on the discharge.

In one of the valleys of Oregon, according to an exchange, elk to the number of several hundred have been corralled and are being fed on hay, which they devour ravenously. They were nearly starved owing to the increased fall of snow, and were driven down into the valley by the inclement weather. A number of the elk were killed for food and then several tons of hay were slid down to them, which they devoured ravenously. The farmers there are feeding them hay each day for which act of humanity they should not only be thanked but remunerated handsomely.

The duck shooting this season has been very limited, not for years has it been so difficult to obtain good sport. In the early part of the season occasional good bags were made, but the flight of the birds was soon over and for the most part we have had no good shooting in this line although we have had some typical duck weather. It seems very strange that there should be such a variation in the flight of the birds from season to season, yet we presume it would all be plain enough could one but know the reasons which undoubtedly control the action of the birds.

One of those unaccountable accidents occurred to Dr. George F. Rodden, a dentist of this city, while hunting with a companion, Mr. Fred Elliott, in the vicinity of Bolinas on Monday last. Elliott had fired his first charge, when attempting to fire again his gun caught in some manner in his coat and swinging it around to disentangle it the accidental discharge occurred, filling Dr. Rodden's face and breast with shot. Luckily the charge was not fatal and the unfortunate Doctor will soon be about again, but little the worse for his exciting experience.

Mr. H. T. Payne, of Los Angeles, has purchased and will hereafter conduct "Field Sports" published in this city. Mr. Payne is an old and able newspaper man and a thorough sportsman fully identified and by actual experience familiar with the field from Oregon to Mexico.

Are you going to have one more quail hunt this season? If you are you have but little time to waste in preparation. The closed season is upon us and soon field sports, for the season, will be over.

We are informed by Mr. Crittenden Robinson that the legislative committee provided for at the last meeting of the State Sportsman's Association was appointed and that it has been doing good work.

The trap-shooting season opens with a strong tendency to enlarge and increase the sport for this season. We trust every such endeavor will meet with the success which it deserves.

Whelped.

At Echo Cocker Kennel, Stockton, Cal., property of J. G. Rieger, Fanny, black and white Cocker Spaniel bitch (by Punch D. 6467 ex Topsy Obo 7341) whelped to Giffee E. four, three black, one liver, January 18, 1893.

Champion Ruby Glenmore threw about January 5, 1893 to Champion Finglass, both owned by E. B. Bishop, Coffeyville, Kansas, a litter of five, three dogs.

Mr. J. B. Martin, the indefatigable fox-terrier fancier and breeder, reports that the interest in this line continues unabated. The Fox-terrier Club will come grandly to the front at the coming bench show. It was remarked that the class of fox-terriers shown here two years ago was fully up to the average in quality of those shown in the East. The fancy has been reinforced by several new factors since then which will serve to increase, very materially, the interest in this class. Dr. Bowhill's wire-haired fox-terriers are said to be of the first quality, and they stand as about the only representatives of this breed on this coast. They will compete in the open-class, contesting for first honors with their smooth-haired cousins.

Regrets are many that Mr. P. D. Linville was compelled to come away from the field trials before running his brace of English setters that appeared so well in the former year's Dery. These dogs are fine ones, and if working qualities could have been demonstrated it would have been a source of great satisfaction to that gentleman's many friends.

Dr. Q. Van Hummell's sworn statement as to the course between Meteor and Prince Charlie seems to dispose of that matter very effectually. It is very strange that such decisions are continually arising to the detriment of the sport of coursing.

THE KENNEL.

Dog owners are requested to send for publication the earliest possible notices of whelps, sales, names claimed, presentations and deaths, in their kennels, in all instances writing plainly names of sire and dam and of grandparents, colors, dates and breed.

Evening in the Hills.

BY CHARLES WESLEY KYLE.

Softly Night's mantle drapes the goodly hills And lies in darker folds within the vales; Like silver cords the foaming mountain rills In muffled voicings tell the woodland tales.

The crimson pencil of the dying sun Paints weirdly all the mountain tops and sky; Then bids good-bye to peaks, one after one, Which slowly fade from sight of mortal eye.

The tall pines on the lofty mountain side Blend slowly in one solid phalanx dark; The shadows from about still nearer glide And halt but at the camp-fire's blazing mark.

Strange voices fill the earth and all the air: Night's children all about us dance and sing; Their Queen is Conqueror they all declare, More potent than the Day's most gorgeous King.

A Hospital For Dogs.

The names of Doctors F. W. Skaife and A. R. Rowat have become long since familiar to every lover of the dog on the Pacific Coast in connection with their hospital for dogs which is located on Cedar avenue between Geary and Post and Larkin and Polk, this city.

Such an institution has long been needed here and that it is appreciated by the kennel fancy of this city and vicinity, is amply proven by the very liberal patronage which it has received from the very first day of its opening.

The hospital consists of a long low building in which are conveniently constructed a large number of roomy and well-apportioned kennels for the use of invalid dogs. In the building is also an operating room in which the dogs are placed to receive treatment, and in fact every necessary arrangement is fully complete for the care and treatment of dogs whatever may be their form of ailment.

On visiting the hospital on the first of the week we found it well filled with dogs of almost every variety that were undergoing treatment for almost every conceivable form of ailment. The doctors were busily engaged at the time in giving the disabled canines their daily treatment.

A fine-looking pointer was being treated for a chronic case of eczema. The treatment was of the constitutional order and although the animal had been in the hospital but a few days yet the signs of improvement were very pronounced.

A large fine-looking mastiff had undergone a surgical operation in which a large tumor near the root of the tail had been removed. The dog was doing finely.

A beautiful and valuable English setter afflicted with chorea and partial paralysis of the left fore leg is improving nicely under the treatment given.

A very obstinate case of eczema is that of an English setter. It has been under treatment for some three weeks and is slowly yielding to treatment. The doctors think that eventually the case will be cured.

One of the most interesting cases treated has been that of Mr. E. P. Schell's St. Bernard, Jumbo. This was a surgical operation and consisted in removing an abscess which was attached to the peritoneum. The operation was successful and the dog is doing well.

The public may be well assured that any dogs sent to the above-mentioned hospital will receive the very best and most-approved treatment known to the age.

The arrangements for the coming bench show under the auspices of the Pacific Kennel Club, are being pushed forward with a degree of rapidity which argues well for the complete success of that event. Never before in the history of the kennel world of this coast has such a universal interest been wrought up as at the present time. The management of the several departments of the exhibition are under the direct supervision of able and experienced committeemen, and there can be no doubt of the fact that everything is being done in a manner to insure the very best and highest results possible to attain under the circumstances, and as the outlook is favorable, grand results may be confidently expected.

Mr. John Yoell, of San Jose, has somewhat cooled, it is said, in his admiration for the Irish reds, and is looking with favor toward the popular idols in the kennel world—the English setters. This will leave Mr. L. L. Campbell practically alone as far as field dogs in the "reds" are concerned on this coast. If the latter does not develop some good field dogs from his present stock, then all signs will fail.

The Sex of Winners at Field Trials.

The following from the pen of Major J. M. Taylor will prove of interest to every close observer of the work of dogs in field trials. In a recent issue of the American Field, he says:

In a short editorial on American field trials our contemporary, the London Field, remarks: "The latest importations of English dogs to the United States have not performed so successfully at the Canadian and American field trials as their owners would have desired. The leading feature in the American trials so far has been the great success of Mr. Pierre Lorillard, Jr., a name that is not unknown to English sportsmen; and now that he has such a fine team of field trial dogs, both pointers and setters, it would be pleasing to see them over in England competing against our cracks. Another feature in these American trials has been the unusual success attained by the hitches, they having so far won a large majority of the prizes."

The statement that the hitches have so far won a large majority of the prizes is not warranted by the facts. Having spent considerable time in collecting the proper data in this respect I give the result of the winnings of both dogs and hitches of English, Irish and Gordon setters, and pointers, as well as a comparison of the English setter as against all other breeds of our field dogs. I give the result of the last nineteen years, or since our trials began in 1874.

In English setters two hundred and ninety dogs have won four hundred and seventy-eight times, while one hundred and fifty-five hitches have won two hundred and thirty-eight times, which makes the number of dogs winning nearly twice the number of hitches, while the winnings are a little over double.

In Irish setters twenty-six dogs have won forty times and thirty-two hitches have won forty times. This breed alone shows the greatest number of hitches winning, as against dogs of the same breed, yet the fewer number of dogs have won as often as the hitches have.

The Gordons show the fewest number of winners, the dogs having the most of it. Sixteen dogs have won nineteen times, one hitch winning but once.

In pointers one hundred and thirty dogs have won one hundred and seventy-eight times, and sixty-five hitches have won eighty-one times.

As to the number, comparatively, of dogs and hitches starting, I have not the time to look it up, but expect to some day. I shall also take up the comparative number of each breed starting. In the table below will be found a statement of the English setter dogs and hitches separately, with their winnings, as against all other breeds, as well as a statement showing the combined number of English setters, dogs and hitches, as against all other breeds, with their majority.

The statement of your foreign contemporary will not hold good as far as the year 1892 is concerned, for the tables show seventy-seven dogs winning eighty-nine times, as against forty-nine hitches winning sixty-one times.

Table with columns: RECAPITULATION, Dogs, Wins, Bitches, Wins. Rows include English setters, Irish setters, Gordon setters, Pointers, Total, and English setter majority over all breeds.

We are sorry to note the death, by pneumonia on January 25, of Mr. N. Q. Pope's Highland Chief. This splendid dog had won a large number of prizes on the bench and was well known to all show goers; he was by Courtoise (Clear the Way—Civility) out of Rechabite (The Admirable Crichton—Helen Macgregor), and was whelped in 1886; he made his first appearance at the Syracuse show in 1888 and won first. Mr. Pope also informs us that he has bred Best of Fashion (Norwegian—Buenavitero) to Champion Balkis.

Dr. A. De Monco, who has but recently settled in Los Angeles, has with him some fine blood in the pointer line. He has a number of excellent dogs and while at Bakersfield at the field trials arranged to place some of his dogs in training for next season's field trials.

The Philadelphia Kennel Club have introduced a series of banquets at their regular meetings, the first of which took place on Tuesday evening last, St. Valentine's day. They will doubtless serve to make the meetings of the Club more popular.

Mr. John Heffernan, notwithstanding his ill luck in St. Bernards, is still in the fancy and we may look for something new in his kennel soon. That it will be blood of the first order Mr. Heffernan's well-known proclivities fully warrant.

Mr. E. P. Schell reports that his kennel of St. Bernards are doing finely, and the outlook for the season is all that he could wish for. The demand for dogs of this breed is greater now than ever before.

E. B. Bishop's champion Finglass won first prize at the recent Chicago bench show in a class of seventeen. Same owner's Champion Colerane won first prize in open hitch class at same show.

The electric-pull inanimate target traps which Clnbrough, Golcher & Co. contemplate placing in order at Oakland Shooting Park will do much to encourage trap shooting in this line.

Mr. A. D. Franz, of San Bernardino, offers black pointer puppies (Pape stock) for sale. Dogs $25, hitches $20. Par-wishing such would do well to drop him a line.

The Occidental Coursing Club will hold a grand coursing event at Newark on the 22d inst, and no doubt but that the event will be largely attended.

Mr. Frank Allen is highly pleased with the breeding qualities of his famous St. Bernard California Alton. He is a grand dog.

The Chicago bench show which has just closed was a pronounced success.

The Angler's Picture.

BY CHARLES WESLEY KYLL.

I've a picture and a poem,
Ever present in my mind,
It has beauty and enchantment,
Only known unto its kind;
Tis a picture in the mountains,
When the balmy breath of June;
'Mid the lofty pines and cedars,
Plays for all a magic tune.

A blue lake calm and placid,
Typifies a perfect rest,
As it cradles in its bosom,
The tall mountain's snowy crest:
From its mirror is reflected,
Into each observant eye,
Every cloud and bird that passes
Over the bosom of the sky.

When the early twilight shadows
Fall upon this mountain lake,
And the sportive trout in leaping
Ripples on its bosom make;
Then I see an angler gently,
Push out quickly from the shore;
And go whipping of the waters,
Where the shadows told them o'er.

Now a trout has struck the lure,
And the lithe rods swerves and bends;
And the reel is singing sweetly,
As the hue its freedom lends—
And the angler, all expectant,
Plays the beauty with a skill;
Which foreshadows that the ending
Will mark well a splendid kill.

Thus the picture ever haunts me,
With a beauty which, for aye,
Holds enchanted my brightest fancy
By the hours of night and day,
And I wish that life forever
Could be blessed with such a boon;
Where the trout are ever striking,
And the time is always June.

A Black Bass Outing.

I don't care to swap John for any fishing partner I have ever run across. We work well together; never turn the yoke or kick over the pole, says N. C. Morgan in the Angler. Rare sport, days and days of it, we've enjoyed together, and better still, as a test of true mettle, may a long day, from dark to dark, have we whipped the water only to be whipped. Night falling on a fisherman we, and hungry, far from camp, creel empty, legs trembling from sheer weariness—that was John. Another fellow in the same fix—that was the writer. Discouraged? Not a bit. Supper at 10 o'clock, and oh! didn't that hot coffee find the tired spot. Pipes, feet to the fire—solid comfort, and sleep. Yes, the dead sleep of the weary angler. Not a whimper from John. True sportsman to the core; taking the bitter with the sweet. That's my kind of a fisherman. None of your sunshine anglers for me.

It was John who thought bass were ripe at Clyde and ought to be picked. I was agreeable, so we said we would tackle them to-morrow. Clark King's horse and buggy were at our disposal.

Long before light "to-morrow" I stepped forth into the darkness, clad in corduroy pants and flannel shirt, wading boots rolled below the knee, and carrying haversack, rod and minnow bucket. The sky was set with diamonds as I wended my way through the silent streets. The lonely night watchman wished me luck as I passed. Soon John, equipped like myself, but carrying in addition a minnow net, joined me. We were shortly under way, and still the stars looked down. The South Ridge was smooth and dry, and we bowled onward. Unionville was still sleeping as we passed and turned riverward, but in the east the stars were fading.

This little brown house, half-way down the winding river hill, is Andrews', and down in the shadow is Clyde Bridge. Here we leave the horse. Andrews has just sallied forth, and kindly consents to milk the cow out of doors that we may hitch in the little shed of a stable.

A wagon box on blocks, and covered with boards, gives forth strange, muffled sounds. As I gaze curiously at it, huxom, barefooted Mrs. A. comes with a pan of something and removes a portion of the cover. What a roar of wings and gullets! Chickens? I should say so. How so many could be crowded into so small a space and escape suffocation is still a mystery. Each night she wagon-boxed them away from the rats, she told me.

John cared for the horse and I put the rods together and strung them. Andrews will look after the feeding and watering at noon.

Now for the river.

The water is still dark, but above the bridge we hear the ripple of the shallows, and there we will find the minnows. The net scoops up loose stones and shale, and everything but minnows; they flee from us. Again and again we try. The morning is coming on apace, and still no bait. It won't do. Below us, in a little pool, a hungry bass is seeking an early breakfast. We can hear his eager rustles as the victims flee to the shoal water. We will attend to his wants later on. With an exclamation of impatience, John pitches the unlucky net among the willows. Minnow hooks are substituted for the No. 1 Sproats and baited with crawfish tails. Luck now, lots of it. Chubs, dace, shiners. Some are too large and we cast them back. Soon we have all that we can keep alive handily, and desist. None too soon.

Below us the high steel bridge is all bright with the sunlight that is slowly creeping down to the water.

"Feed that hungry bass," says John, laconically, as he picks up his bucket and starts for a favorite pool farther down.

I wade with the swift-running water until the dark, still surface of the pool is within reach. Replacing the Sproat, I select a dace and pass the hook through its lips. How gamely it plays in the current as I besetate and look around! Not a sound save the rush of water and the splash, splash, as John leisurely wades down stream. Away below the bridge the sun has found the water. Now! The reel sings. Across the intervening ripples flies the minnow; a hundred feet away it drops upon the still surface. A rush and swirl—I have him! "Oho!" I call to John, and he looks back to see the heaving rod as the gamy bass fights for life in the water, where, but a moment ago, he reigned as king. Retribution. "The hater bit." He sought to catch and kill a fellow fish and met his fate.

Meanwhile John has tackled a larger pool, and I hear his shout. The fight is on as I wade down. It is a good one.

On the other side of the river the water looks favorable. I bait and cast. Bait and bass meet at the surface, and I sing out to let John know that luck is running our way. Lost! Well, it isn't the first time I've been beaten by a fish.

John pulls another two-pounder, then down we splash, splash, under the bridge, past the site of the one-time Clyde Furnace, fishing the pools as we go.

What a glorious morning! Fleecy clouds; gentle breeze; balmy air. There's a little bit of still water. Can a bass lurk, unseen, where the rocky bottom shows so plainly? I'll try it once for luck. There! he takes it. Where did he come from? Goodness knows. I thought I could see a nail anywhere in that water.

Times flies. It is past noon, and still we are wading down stream. Some time ago we cached our fish—too heavy to carry. This little brook, rickling over the rocky incline, is pure spring water, and we will use it to wash down our lunch—bread and butter, hard-boiled eggs, cold meats, and last, but not least, onions and salt. Onions have a strong, homely sound, to read about, but if you haven't tried them when fishing, do so—unless you have conscientious scruples against them. Did you ever find anything that you couldn't digest when on a fishing junk? Things that would give a goat or an ostrich acute dyspepsia go with a relish. What a dinner! sweetened and flavored through and through with good luck, fresh air, mellow sunshine and healthy appetites. The broken murmur of the running water, even the ragged cry of the kingfisher, is pleasant to the ear. There he goes; his jerky flight is, after all, the poetry of motion. We bid him welcome as a faithful fellow-fisherman. I'd rather have a kingfisher for a companion than some men I wot of. He takes his luck, good or ill, like a philosopher.

At 3 o'clock we reluctantly turn our faces up stream. This day was all too short. Daylight fades out and we are still a long way from Clyde.

Unjoint the rods; the day's fishing is done. A mile of wading and we turn our backs on the river. A day gone to join many others, but that day is never lost that dwells, a spot of sunshine, in the memory. While recollection lingers, this trip will be, to two of us, a well-spring of happy reminiscences. So with many others. Even the unlucky trips, hunger and cold, involuntary baths, skinned shins, broken tips, and rain, becomes patches of sunshine when softened by time.

Andrews, with a lantern, scanned our catch and called his wife. They sadly admitted that they were unsuccessful fishermen. We gave them four for breakfast. Clark, with a lantern, came to help put out the horse. He thought it must be glorious sport to catch such fish; he tried and tried in vain. We gave him six. The rest we carried home, slung between us on the rods—just twenty-five, 25 and 6 and 4; enough—satisfied. Tired, hungry and happy. Now for supper, with hot coffee, and then cigars. Good-night.

The Rod and Reel.

The season for sport with the rod and reel again approaches. It is always a pleasure of a most pronounced order to realize that soon we may be rocking lightly in a canoe on the bosom of some mountain lake or threading our way along some of the many enticing streams where trout abound.

The first effort of the season is apt to prove disastrous if we are not careful in the selection of time and place for our inaugural outing. Much of the season's sport depends upon the first effort; if that be successful, all is well, but if failure or indifferent success attend our effort then a cloud is cast over our horizon, which will affect most sportsmen more than they at first will admit.

Perseverance is an essential in the pursuit of all kinds of sports, and more especially in that of angling. We have known more than one angler to cast repeatedly and constantly for a half or even three-quarters of an hour in order to secure a special rise. Such a man has the true elements of a sportsman within him. One may thus literally tease a trout into striking when all other means have been known to fail. If one can find the trout it is a question of skill and patience to catch them, and frequently the more refractory the trout the greater the sport. One feels that they have accomplished something worthy of self-congratulation when the most stubborn difficulties have been overcome and success has attended the effort.

Another Function of Fishes' Ears.

Sharks have lately been affording contributions to science, says the Boston Transcript. The biologists have been vivisectioning them for the purpose of finding out about the functions of the ear, which in fishes is made to some extent on the same pattern as in man. The fact has been known for some time that the ear is not merely an organ of hearing. It has to do with the sense of equilibrium. Light has been thrown on this matter by removing portions of the auditory apparatus of sharks, which are thus rendered unable to maintain their balance in the water. The part on which this faculty seems to depend is the "labyrinth," and the same effect is produced by cutting the nerves communicating with it.

The sunny enticing angling resorts within this State will soon be thronged by the lovers of pleasures piscatorial. If there be superior sport to that of angling for trout in some of the grand lakes of the upper Sierras then we are incapable of realizing it. To float out from shore in a light canoe, with rod and brilliant lure ready for an encounter with the speckled tribe is a source of pleasure inexhaustible. The white-capped peaks reflected in the calm beauty of the lakes, the music of converging streams all pouring their wealth of liquid treasure into these blue reservoirs are scenes of beauty not easily forgotten. To enjoy these scenes is the province of the angler.

Sing a song of pleasure,
Play it on the reel,
While we hook the beauties,
Filling up the creel;
When the sport is ended
No angler will deny
But that he owes his pleasure
Unto the gamy fly.

Now is the time to select with care your book of flies for the season. Do not suppose that because one fly is good for one stream that it will prove equally successful in another. It will not do so. You should learn from some practical and experienced angler the flies which are best adapted for the several streams which you contemplate whipping.

TROTTLING REFORMATION. } This triple "side-head"
TROTTLING IMPROVED. } does not give the proper cue

TROTTLING REGENERATED. } to the changes which are proposed to bring trotting races into greater popularity with the general public, and it is a difficult job to condense the questions which are now so prominently brought forward and so heartily discussed by the advocates of trotting sports all over the country. There is a unanimity of opinion, which amounts to nearly a general acquiescence, that there is an absolute necessity for a change in the methods pursued in the management of trotting meetings, and that there must be reformation, improvement, regeneration, or whatever other words may be used in order to obtain a like support to that which is given to racing meetings.

Those who are so hopelessly bigoted that they cannot see the imperative necessity for changes for the better, and who deny that the "turf" stands on a firmer basis than the "track," are, fortunately, so far in the minority that practically the sentiment, or rather the conviction of the necessity for reforms, is paramount. Were it necessary to present testimony to show how far racing overshadows trotting, as trotting has been conducted, the example of the two largest cities on the continent would be sufficient. Chicago has four race courses, two of them within the city limits, not a single track. No place to train trotters. A large proportion of trotters which are owned in Chicago sent away to obtain schooling. New York has one trotting track, and that can only be sustained by voluntary subscriptions of members of the trotting club; the public will not tender even a limited support, a small percentage of the crowds which cross the river to Gravesend, Sheepshead Bay or journey to Morris Park. Obvious then to the dullest comprehension that the "truly American sport" has lost its charm, and when compared with its competitor, so far as attracting attention from the sport-loving public goes, the rivalry is not close enough to be noteworthy. Admitting the situation to be what every intelligent observer must concede, what steps shall be taken to increase the prestige of trotting meetings? Follow the example which racing clubs present is a sensible answer, though I would qualify that by amending so as to say: Adopt these portions of racing methods which are clearly beneficial, and which will receive the approval of a large majority of the community whose opinion is valuable, reject the features which can not be commended and to copy which will insure opposition and end in disaster. There is one adjunct of modern racing which, in my estimation, cannot be copied without hazarding the future welfare of trotting interests, and though it finds advocates, if a careful investigation be made, I have little fear of the good sense of the people being so obscured that the ultimate results will be hidden from their view. That is hook-betting. Misled by the glamour of the race-course, the life, the excitement, the surging crowds surrounding the betting stands, the eagerness to snap up the proffered odds, superficial observers come to the conclusion that there lies the secret of the popularity of racing. I readily grant that without an opportunity for speculation racing and trotting would fail to enlist the attention that is now awarded to the galloping division of fast horses. A venture of some kind, where profit and loss are consequent upon the risk, has charms for a large proportion of the human family, and that so generally exhibited that it may be called an instinctive faculty, and one of the distinguishing marks of reasoning beings. Should the professor who is now engaged in the endeavor to discover whether apes and monkeys possess a language which is superior to the few sounds which the limit of animal intelligence also discover, that they have gambling propensities, that will be stronger proof of affinity with humanity than a gift of gab would indicate. The second grand passion in the list of human proclivities, and were it entirely eradicated there would be an end to progress. But like all the other potential desires which are implanted in the race, there is a necessity for control; it must be made subservient, in a measure, to reasonable restraints, and while it is given its proper place as an adjunct of sport, it must not be allowed to dominate. Kept within bounds, restricted to a sphere which will meet general approval, or, at least, disarm the antagonism of the major portion of the community, opposition will be reduced to a minimum, and that there will be a reasonable assurance that bigotry shall not prevail to a degree which will jeopardize the continuation of the most popular of all kinds of outdoor recreation. This line of argument will apply to racing as well as trotting, and I freely admit that if I were granted the power hook-betting would be banished from race courses as well as from trotting tracks. But the danger is greater, and should it gain the same foothold in trotting as it has in racing, all that can be done to popularize trotting will be of little avail. The first step towards securing public favor will be in the direction of insuring the patron of trotting honest sport. There is no disguising the fact that heretofore there has been a lack of confidence in the integrity of those who had the management of trotting, and so lax a sentiment regarding infractions that papers "devoted to the trotter" would publish histories of noted horses in which defeat was explained by stating that it was so ordered before the start, and in place of denunciation give credit for the transgression, eulogizing the animal by accounting for defeat with the plea that it was so intended, and not a word of censure for the baseness of the man who engineered the villainy. One would expect that there would follow an indignant denial from the owner when such a history was given publicly, and, not forthcoming, it is not strange that people should come to the conclusion that this was a common practice in place of being one of the few instances where rascality prevailed. The few, however, has tainted the whole, and it will require strong and united effort to remove the opprobrium. Book-betting presents a powerful temptation to wrong-doers. A driver can give a commission to a bookmaker to bet a certain amount against the horse he drives, and there is a direct return for the investment. In pools the winning horse must be "backed" to gain the benefit, and even with one put out of the calculation it may be troublesome to pick the winner. The secret in our case is between the principal and his broker, for though the odds on the slate may appear to be longer than is justified, this will only show when money enough has been laid against the horse to force him back in the betting. The racing rascal, in most instances, has to confide in the jockey as well as the broker, and men who would not hesitate to accept the risk when that rests on themselves, are likely to be somewhat chary when a pal is in the confederacy. Then the pools cannot be worked as silently as the books. The hiding is public. However cunning the scheme may be handled there is small opportunity for carrying it through without giving an intimation of the design. As stated before, bets cannot be laid directly against a horse in either auction or mutual pools, and therefore there is a double check, support and non-support, a candidate with a fair show to win neglected, others bringing more than circumstances justify. Big bettors and little bettors it is claimed are benefited by book-betting, the reasoning being that large amounts can be wagered without exposing the person who wagers, and the little operator can invest as small a sum as two dollars. I do not believe that the interests of trotting depend upon associations making it handy for "plungers" to plunge, and that any reasonable amount can be invested in pools is too well known to require proofs. Mutual boxes with two-dollar tickets give the same opportunity as the books afford for small ventures, and therefore the contention on these two points is not sustained.

There is only one other point that I desire to present at this time, that being that people are so thoroughly inured with the belief that "crookedness" in racing is mainly due to a conspiracy between owner or jockey and some hookmaker that even when races are lost on their merit the suspicions will not down. The effect is nearly as bad as when suspicions are justified, as no amount of argument will convince those who are prone to see rascality in nearly every race, and though it does not matter so much whether that class is satisfied or not, it is of vast importance that trotting be conducted so as to give as little ground as possible for accusations. By interdicting a method whereby direct wagers against a horse winning may be laid by the person controlling the horse, that much of a guarantee will have salutary effects by lessening the cause for virulent criticisms.

GRAND EXPECTATIONS.—It is hardly possible that I am too sanguine in regard to one of the innovations on old methods adopted by the Pacific Coast Trotting Horse Breeders Association, but the more consideration given to the subject the more thoroughly I am impressed with the advantages which will follow. That is, in delaying classification until the horses congregate, with entries close to the time of performance, so that with horses enough to draw upon there will be a reasonable certainty of securing good fields, resulting, as a rule, in close contests.

The change in this respect from the old methods is so great, the departure from the old course so wide, that it cannot be otherwise than that at the first proposition the whole body of conservatives will elevate their hands in holy, or unholy, indignation. Revolution pure and simple. If successful, patriotism, if it fails, treason. A far-reaching innovation, overturning the whole fabric of what has been with the first explosion, and preparing a foundation for a temple worthy of the site. The object to place one of the greatest interests of the country on a plane which will insure a better return for capital invested; to replace a losing venture with a pursuit which will give good prospects of remuneration. To look at it from an Occidental standpoint it may be compared to a mine in which plenty of ore is revealed, but of different grades of richness. Under the old formula only the richest would pay the cost of reduction and leave a profit, the second quality just about the cost, economically handled; all the other at a positive loss. None of these ores could be positively rated at sight, all had to be treated in the same way before it could be demonstrated what was pure metal and what was alloyed. It is evident that in the many grades of ore discovered in the equine lode no system can bring the inferior qualities to the standard of the first, and the aim will be to discover uses for the baser metal which, while of smaller value, will yet leave a profit over the expense of handling.

Let me give an illustration of the California innovation by reprinting the programme for the spring meeting, though that may be termed merely a preliminary trial, in which a few of the old examples are retained. Six races for colts from two to four years olds, a free-for-all, a 2:28, and free-for-all pacing, the only time classification being the 2:28. To carry the idea to its fullest expansion the advertisement would read: The Pacific Coast Trotting-Horse Breeders' Association will give a spring meeting for trotters and pacers, commencing on Saturday, May 20, 1893, and closing on Saturday, May 27th, Bay District Course, San Francisco. The various classes and conditions will be determined after the horses are on the ground, excepting stakes which have closed previous to this announcement. There will be at least five races on each day of the meeting, dashes from one mile up and heats of a mile best 2 in 3, and due care will be observed in the classification to meet the approval of owners and satisfaction of those who attend. The classification will be made, amount of purses, distances, etc., not more than two days previous to the time fixed for trotting; the entrance fee in purses to be five per cent., with a rebate of two per cent. to starters, and the division shall be sixty per cent. to the first, thirty per cent. to second and ten per cent. to third. Six starters shall constitute a field, and if there be more than six and less than thirteen in any one purse, that shall be divided, after thirty per cent. has been added, into two portions, making two races in place of one, and the division made by "drawing lots." Should there be an odd number of starters—for instance, if seven, four to constitute one field, three another, if nine, five and four, etc.—and should there be a greater number of starters than twelve, the same rules shall prevail, and in that case thirty per cent. more added. A still better plan might be to fix on a certain amount for a field of six horses, and add one-sixth for each one in excess of that number and subtract one-sixth for each one less than six, the minimum being three starters. Let there be a positive assurance that whenever a class could be arranged so as to make a contest it would be provided for, irrespective of records heretofore made, though that would not, of course, interfere with classification based on records. Contests, actual contests, the aim, and subsequent classification after the horses had demonstrated their capacity result in a series of races that would delight the spectators. To enable the association to obtain a line for future guide in addition to the official timers, whose duty the rules define to time the first and second horses, others could be appointed—two would be sufficient with split-second watches when the maximum of starters is limited to six—and a record kept of the time made by each of the contestants. But there are so many possible variations from the old methods, every one of which appears to me an improvement, that they will come in more appropriately in future articles. In this I am more anxious to show the advantages which will accrue to the owners of trotters from the adoption of the proposed system. That is the first point to consider, as the whole thing rests in their hands. If the owners of trotters on this coast will second the efforts of the Association with a full and hearty support, the question will surely be settled by the first trial. With that there cannot be failure, and even success, greater success than has ever been awarded a trotting meeting on this coast, will be a small part of the benefits which eventually will result. There will be opposition, stubborn opposition to the proposed radical change, but with success here, the first skirmish settled in our own favor will secure the winning of future battles. And now I will present, as briefly as possible, the advantages, or rather the opening advantages to owners of trotters which will follow the new system. Hereafter the advantages to associations and consequently the reasons why it will increase the attendance and add to the emoluments, outside of gate receipts, will be presented.

Entrance money is one of the main expenses of a trotting stable. Even when reduced to five per cent. on the amount of the purse, and that with the usual "four moneys" means ten per cent. on the first. But when the entries close some time before the race takes place, there is a risk of horses going wrong, or a lack of expected improvement, and the entrance is lost without any chance of reimbursement. There is a greater risk after an engagement has been made than if there was no definite one to prepare for. A horse may be slightly ailing, and if there could be a let up in the work a favorable chance for recovery, but if that engagement be kept the work must be continued. Under the new arrangement there is no risk of losing entrance from incapacity to trot, and ailments can be nursed without incurring loss. When the old rules are in force and 3 in 5 races are the inevitable order, the work must be severe to key the horse up to the requirements. Under the new dispensation if heats of 2 in 3 are thought to be too arduous the work is restricted to that which is necessary to prepare for a dash. With this chance of trotting horses in accordance with their condition, the work will be lighter, and as a consequence fewer casualties.

In order that the business of trotting horses may be generally remunerative there must be a certain return outside of the money put up by owners. It is very nice for one owner to win a big sweepstake, not so nice for the losers. In the National Trotting Stallion Stake won by Stamboul some years ago, the horses which did not start put up $2,100, for which there was no return.

The question is not entirely confined to that of, "How shall we increase the earning capacity of the trotter?" unless there be added an amendment, the net earning capacity. Lessening expenses is the readiest way of increasing profit, and when in business or domestic life there is a falling off of receipts expenditures are cut down. The owners of fast horses have been subjected to high charges so long that extortion is overlooked, and so long as the heavy taxation could be met it was paid. But the main resource to meet these burdensome expenses has been cut off, or, at least, so greatly narrowed that it is no longer an available asset. That was the chance to sell for a price that would leave a margin of profit, and it will be a waste of time and words to throw them away in proving what is universally conceded.

This new arrangement, however, will not only reduce the risk of making entries to the minimum and lessen expenses in other ways, but it will also give a value to animals which are now practically worthless so far as race-trotting is concerned. No longer "outclassed," no longer debarred from participation in races by being so far inferior to many with the same records that there is no show for them when time made is the only basis for classification.

Just as the above sentence was finished the morning mail came, among the papers the Kentucky Stock Farm. In the Tennessee department of that was the following:

"At this particular time, when there appears to be a little uneasiness about the business, the man who will think up some way to render the sport more popular and at the same time increase the earning capacity of the trotter will do more good for his country, make his name more cherished than all the blood-wrought heroism that ever linked a man to the world's remembrance.

"How shall we handicap the trotter?" Without claiming so much for the originator of the idea as is expressed in the above quotation, I have a supreme confidence that in the hereafter the Pacific Coast Trotting Horse Breeders' Association will receive plaudits for breaking away from the old trammels, lifting the wheels of progress out of the deep ruts which a half century's use has worn. It might be called a spontaneous idea, a general presentiment in which all shared, and to illustrate how forcibly it governed, the following illustration will not be inappropriate:

The meeting of the directors which adopted the spring programme was held February 6th, another was called for February 13th, one of the objects being to decide upon the "fixed events" for the fall meeting. That was the largest congregation of the directors in the history of the association, eleven of the fifteen members of the Board being present. Colt purses for the various ages of trotters and pacers and two produce stakes were arranged without disagreements, and then came the question of purses for stallions. At the meeting of the directors held last February a series of stallion purses were decided upon with $2,000 for a free-for-all, $1,500 2:15 class, $1,000 2:25 class and $1,000 three-minute class. There were plenty of entries, seven in the free-for-all, nine in the 2:15, thirteen in the 2:25 and the big array of nineteen names in the three-minute. These events, so far as furnishing sport went, were an utter failure. There was a good deal of debate over the conditions which should govern in similar events for the coming fall meeting. With entrance fees cut from ten to five per cent. it was somewhat hazardous to risk the same amounts, that and proper classification eliciting arguments to quite an extent. Finally it was proposed to put stallions on the same ground that was selected for the other classes, grading the amount of the purses and arranging the classification when the stallions were on the ground. The suggestion met with approval, without wasting further time in argument, and the vote was unanimous in favor of the amendment. Simple enough the plan. Stallion owners can rest assured that they will be given an opportunity whenever a class can be gotten together, and the risks which heretofore were inevitable are absent.

In reply to the query, "How shall we handicap the trotters?" Classification governed by actual capacity at the time when the race is to be decided will obviate, in a measure the necessity for handicapping. Now with the improved sniky, the old-fashioned sulkeys, carts of various weights and skeleton wagons there is quite a range in the way of equalizing the chances of winning. These dashes of various distances also come in, though the main hope, in my estimation, is selection, selection governed by equal ability when the choice is made.

IRREGULAR RACING.—The charges which have appeared in the daily papers that the racing on the Oakland Trotting Park track this week has not been square have, as might be expected, raised quite an excitement. The charge is strenuously denied by those who are said to be guilty, and as my knowledge is limited to what I hear, not having been present, I cannot testify from personal knowledge. But this much I can say, that what may be termed irregular racing, and trotting of the same class can also be included, is a serious detriment to racing and trotting interests, and that it would be far better for the interests of all concerned were it strictly tabooed. No matter how honestly such races may be conducted, the general public will not believe that they are straight, and, unfortunately, there are often good grounds for that belief. It behooves every one, therefore, who has the future interests of racing and trotting at heart to take decided ground in opposition to the practice of irregular racing. And while reproaching that class of racing which prevails when not under the surveillance of a regular association, denouncing that which a proprietor offers in his endeavor to make something to pay expenses, let it not be forgotten that there are evils which also threaten the permanency of legitimate sport, and which are sanctioned by clubs of the highest standing. Reform in every direction should be the watchword, and the earnest apostle of reform must not discriminate.

F. R. L. Cottonwood.—I have a colt two years old this spring that has got thoroughbred and bog spavin. I have doctored it with Brindle's spavin Cure for three months and blistered it four times, and it did no good. Please inform me through your paper what to do. Answer—In young animals a spring truss applied to the part is of benefit when taken in time. I fear it is too late now, after so many months, to hope to reduce it. It will be lame from it, firing and blistering, followed by rest, is the best treatment.

M. R. Sacramento.—I have a horse that is lame off and on for a few months past, sometimes in one hind leg, sometimes in the other. I have applied liniment to each leg when affected, and each application appeared to do good, but I think he has got rheumatism, and I would to give him some medicine that might take it out of his system.

Answer—Give him two drams of sodium sulphate three times a day for a week or so, then give two drams each of sodium bicarbonate and potassium nitrate three times a day for another week, and let me know the result.

T. R., Bridge, Idaho.—In answer to your questions will say: First, no; second, no; third, no. As compared with the other foot the frog is small, contracted and perhaps diseased. I have been using Campbell's horse-foot remedy, but the hoof keeps contracting and marked with reddish colored rings. There is nothing I have used appears to give it a healthy growth. Answer—Cut down the heels gradually, leaving the frog meat, so that it may rest on the ground at each step. Apply Stockholm tar to the frog daily to keep it soft and healthy. Pressure on the frog will tend to widen the heels, especially if the frog be kept soft and healthy.

R. L., San Rafael.—I have a horse that got badly foundered last year and he never got over it. He is now so sore on his feet that he can hardly walk on hard ground and his hoofs are all wrinkled and turned up in the toe. I have tried almost every remedy possible to make him well, but without any benefit. Now I have been told that a veterinary surgeon in San Francisco can cure him by nerving him so that he will never go lame again on them. I would like to get your advice on the subject before getting him operated on. Answer—By performing neurotomy you relieve the pain in the feet, but do not cure the disease. In "Laminitis," or founder, as your horse is suffering from, neurotomy generally causes the hoofs to sunken and drop off. Therefore, although it is said in such diseases as ringbone, it should not be performed for this disease.

It is given out that Mr. Foxhall Keene will upon his return from England bring an English jockey with him. The experiment has been tried before and never found productive of immediate results. No matter how good a jockey may be in England he has to practically re-learn his profession in America. The style of racing differs, and the plan of riding ditto. Americans who have ridden abroad have found it so—Gilpatrick, in 1857, and Billy Donohue, in 1884. English jockeys who have ridden here never did any good for themselves until they had ridden several months. If a jockey is quick to adapt himself to the change, his superior drilling, such as they give jockeys in England, may render him a useful man. If not, he may as well remain at home.

The stable of Mr. W. H. Forbes, of Boston, will make its formal appearance in the racing arena the coming season. It consists of about a dozen two-year-olds, and will, I believe, be trained by Mr. Choate, of Readville, Mass.—at least that gentleman will superintend affairs. Mr. Forbes is an enthusiastic horseman and will prove a decided acquisition to the turf, regarding it as a field of legitimate sport and enjoyment rather than a business. There are enough professional owners already, and, if many more come in, it strikes me there will not be enough of the spoils to "go round." Racing is an amateur's sport, say what you will. Absolute professionalism would soon bring it to a standstill—it would not be above the grade of a circus.

H. S. HOGBOOM has just sold his four-year-old stallion, Cocoonut, to E. J. Thornhill of Newcastle, Colorado, for $1,500. Cocoonut is a beautiful chestnut, standing fifteen hands three inches high, combining the best strains of Woodnut, Nutwood and Admiral blood, and although he has never been trained, can trot his mile in 2:40. Mr. Hogboom bought the colt at Vallejo and takes a just pride in having developed such a promising bit of horseflesh. The stallion was shipped to his new owner on Monday, who has reason to be proud of his purchase, for a better-formed, more stylish looking one would be difficult to find.

"TIP" WILLIAMS, formerly trainer for Dr. Crowley, of St. Louis, and Ed Corrigan, now has charge of Theodore Winters' string at Reno, Nevada. Williams is said to be a most excellent handler of race horses.

WALLACE MENDENHALL, who has been superintendent of the Valensin Stock Farm since the late G. Valensin left California, resigned his position last week.

CHARLES L. FAIR, owner of Dare, Floodgate, Yo El Rey and other thoroughbreds, has returned from the East.

A Good Pennsylvania Law.

The following act has been approved by the Pennsylvania Legislature:

An act to prevent deception and fraud by owners or agents who may have control of any stallion kept for service by proclaiming or publishing fraudulent or false pedigrees or records, and to protect such owners or agents in the collection of fees for services of such stallions, and to prevent the entering of trotting horses out of their classes.

SECTION 1—Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the Commonwealth of Pennsylvania in General Assembly met, and it is hereby enacted by the authority of the same: That every owner or agent who may have the custody or control of any stallion, who shall charge a fee for the services of such stallion, shall before advertising or offering such services to the public, for any fee, reward or compensation, file with the prothonotary of the county in which such owner or owners, agent or agents resides, or in which such stallion shall be kept, for service, a written statement giving the name, age, pedigree and record, if known, and if not known then that the same is unknown, the subscription, terms and condition upon which such stallion will serve. Upon filing such statement the prothonotary for the county shall issue a certificate of license to the owner or owners, agent or agents having the custody and control of such stallion, that such a statement has been filed in his office. The owner, agent or agents of the owners of such stallion shall then post a written or printed copy of the statement so filed with such prothonotary in a conspicuous place in each locality in which said stallion shall be kept for service.

SEC. 2—Every owner or agent who shall file, proclaim or publish a false or fraudulent pedigree or record or statement of any kind regarding any stallion, or who shall neglect or refuse to comply with the provisions of section one of this act, shall forfeit all fees for the services of such stallion, and the person or persons who may be deceived or defrauded by such false or fraudulent pedigree or record or statement may sue and recover in any court of competent jurisdiction, such damages as may be shown to have been sustained by reason of such false and fraudulent representation.

SEC. 3—Whenever the owner or agent of an owner or owners of any stallion shall have complied with the foregoing provisions of this act the services of such stallion shall become a lien on each mare served, together with the foal of each mare resulting from such service for an amount agreed upon between the parties at the time of service, or in the event of no such agreement, having been entered into between them then in such an amount as specified for service fee of such stallion or stallions in the statement hereinbefore required to be filed with the prothonotaries of said counties. Provided, that a notice of such lien shall be filed within six months after such service, which lien shall terminate at the end of one year from the date of filing notice thereof, unless within that time an action shall be commenced for the enforcement thereof.

SEC. 4—It is hereby made unlawful for any person or persons knowingly to enter or cause to be entered for competition or to compete for any purse, prize, premium, stake or sweepstake offered or given by any agricultural or other society, association, or person, or persons in the state of Pennsylvania, any horse, mare, gelding, colt or filly under an assumed name or out of its proper class when such prize, purse, premium, stake or sweepstake is to be decided by a contest in trotting races.

SEC. 5—That any person or persons found guilty of a violation of section four of this act shall upon conviction thereof be imprisoned in the state of Pennsylvania for less than one year, nor more than three years, or imprisoned in the jail of the county in which the offense was committed for any definite period not less than six months, and shall be fined in any sum not exceeding $1,000.

SEC. 6—That this act shall take effect from the date of its passage.

ATHLETICS.

Athletic Sports and Other Pastimes.

EDITED BY ARPHIPPUS.

SUMMARY.

Owing to the disruption between the University and Olympic Club athletes, the outlook for the coming season is anything but bright. True, there will be some out-door meetings held during the present year, but the competitors will lack interest on account of the two leading athletic factions having decided not to oppose each other in the state of Pennsylvania. The Olympic Club will hold its championship meetings during the year, but they will have no outside opposition, and hence the public will soon weary of onesided contests. The student athletes from across the bay are resolved to form an Intercollegiate Athletic League, and their efforts will be strictly confined to trying to down their brethren from Palo Alto. With only the representatives of the University of Berkeley and Stanford Universities in the course of a couple of months, which will afford the athletes of the latter college an opportunity to test their metal against that of the U. C. boys. For several months past football has claimed the attention of the sport-loving public, but the season is about over and out-door athletics and cricket will be the next attraction.

THE OLYMPIC CLUB BOXING TOURNAMENT.

On Thursday, February 9th, there began in the new gymnasium of the Olympic Club, on Post street, a series of boxing competitions, which will be continued every Thursday evening until March 2d. On the first night there were ten matches, and an audience of about 1,500 members were present and enjoyed the bouts, which began precisely at eight o'clock and ended shortly after midnight.

The gymnasium in the club's new quarters is much larger than the recently vacated one on O'Farrell street, and owing to the splendid manner in which the seats were arranged the members were able to witness the proceedings from very comfortable positions. The events on the program were arranged as quietly as possible and the spectators were never once given an opportunity to trundle at needless delays. During the evening President William Greer Harrison took occasion to make a few remarks to the members on the welfare of the club. His announcement that the Supervisors had decided to allow the club the privilege of drawing water from the ocean near the Cliff House, into the city was received with much cheering and hand-clapping. There was given for the evening a very interesting and humorous to the controversy between himself and Mr. Sutro, he remarked that: "For the past four weeks I have been in the ring myself, but my competitor was much older than myself, and he has retired from the contest." Mr. Harrison said that the club was still some $25,000 behind, and that a grand Roman festival, or fair, would open in the club rooms on April 17th, and would last six days and six evenings. He further stated that a fine programme would be arranged for the occasion, which would include all kinds of Roman games, etc., and that an admission fee of fifty cents would be charged to each entertainment. He urged upon the members present the necessity of their helping the scheme out, and assured them that if they lent their support the festival would more than net the amount now due by the club.

The first contest of the evening was between M. Lea and D. Mac Askill. The former weighed 136 and the latter 140. Lea, although much lighter than his opponent, outclassed his man and was awarded the medal. J. Cunningham, 126 was defeated by R. Carroll, 123. William Cook, 130, and H. F. Flinn, 149, ended their difficulty in the second round, when Flinn was completely worn out. Hanton and J. J. Sullivan started in to box four rounds, but in the second round Hanton threw up the sponge. Al. Williams, 123 1/2, defeated W. H. Hagen, 125, in six rounds. T. Killeen, 110 and Nick Smith, 120, fought six rounds and the referee decided that the contest was a draw. Each man will receive a medal. F. Coughlan, 114, defeated H. Fitzgerald, 118, in four rounds. W. McAvoy, 130 and C. S. Phelan 130, boxed six rounds and the latter won. A. Hergotte, 142, won the medal from James Davlin, 140, in six rounds. W. Dulligan and W. Thomas wound up the first evenings fun and the latter was defeated. Jack Kitchen of the Acme Club of Oakland was the referee and Mess. A. J. Treat and J. Conroy acted as judges.

From a scientific point of view the contests were not up to the average, but the majority of the boxers showed that they had plenty of grit and were willing to learn. One or two of the bouts were characterized by a great display of viciousness on the part of the youngsters engaging in the contests and such developments should not be encouraged. It is a foregone conclusion that the members of any athletic club, whether professional or amateur, do not care any longer to sit and witness the old time parlor style of boxing, but nevertheless there is a market for all things, and while fighters may feel like hitting each other often and hard they should go about their work in an artistic manner and not give the onlookers a chance to think that they are surrounding an old Roman arena wherein are going on a series of contests between human butchers. The contests were continued on Thursday evening last, but as we go to press early in the week we are unable to give a summary of the results in the present issue.

Chicago's Great Spring Sale.

F. J. Berry & Co. are in receipt of many choice consignments to their great Spring Sale, March 27th to April 1st, including the great Red Wilkes filly, Evelyn Hope, that is sure to make a race mare. Col. R. P. Pepper & Son will offer the grandest collection of Outwards, Norvals and Mares ever sold in the North, including fine brood mares and sisters to some of the best performers by these noted sires. Jas. Murphy, Chicago, proprietor of Park Ridge Farm, pledges a great lot by Hambletonian Wilkes and other fashionable sires. Among the offerings will be found great speed prospects by Wilton, Red Wilkes, Onward, Ambassador, Egotist, Norval and other famous sires of richly bred hares. Consult early. Write for entry blanks to F. J. Berry & Co., Union Stock Yards, Chicago.

A Suggestion to Our Legislators.

EDITOR BREEDER AND SPORTSMAN: In the last issue of your esteemed journal there appears a copy of "Montana's Good Bill."

Will not some one cause a similar bill to be introduced in the present session of the Legislature? It will prove of great value to the small breeders, especially so to those remote from the large stock farms. We often find men keeping stallions, scrubs if you please; they do not get out posters, or publish a pedigree, are at no expense whatever for keeping the horse, as he does regular work on the ranch or whatever his owner has for him to do. Now his owner will give away (?) colts (or services), sometimes twenty or thirty in a season, taking these mares away, perhaps, from a really well-bred horse standing in the neighborhood, but whose service fee is higher than the scrub.

Now, sir, it does seem to me that a law of this nature would be of great value to horsemen in this State. Whatever is done must be done quickly, as the session will end in about fifteen days. Respectfully Yours, G. W. S.

Notes from Napa.

Special Correspondence of THE BREEDER AND SPORTSMAN.

NAPA, February 17th, 1893.—The clearing up of the weather and the spring-like opening which is fast drying up the track has aroused a cheerful spirit in all the boys around the Fair grounds, and the exhilarating effect of the warm sun is awaking the usual renewed activity of the trainers, even the horses seeming happy to enjoy the warm spring run and the opportunity of again exercising on the track.

Thos. Kinney is about one of the busiest men on the grounds. From morning until night he is driving or leading colts, and the way some of them come down the stretch beside the saddle pony it impresses one with the idea that they are trotters. He has some ten or twelve head, the property of Messrs. Zollner & Even, that he is educating to drive or lead, and they are a fine lot. The brown filly (2) by Secretary, son of Director, 2:17, out of Maggie Vann, by Whippleton 1883 (sire of Lily Stanley, 2:17 1/2, Homestake, 2:16 1/2, etc.), second dam by Naubic 504, etc., is a grand looker, and she is, like all the Secretaries, a trotter.

Ada Evans, a three-year-old filly by Mountain Boy, 2:27 1/2, dam Lady Lodi, by Lodi, thoroughbred, is a rangy, smooth-gaited filly that will make a trotter if given an opportunity. Whippanette, a beautiful black filly, three years old, by Whippleton, 1883, dam Queen Ad, by Admiral 488, second dam Nellie, by Black Hawk, 7:67, will be a fine-looker, and if she does not make a world-beater she will be attractive in a gentleman's buggy and should be good enough for any harem.

There is a brown filly, two years old, by Mountain Boy, dam Eva Steinway, by Steinway, 2:25 1/2, second dam Lady Lodi, by Lodi (thoroughbred) that any breeder would feel proud to own; she leads like a trotter, and is a perfect little gem. Among the yearlings Mr. Kinney has a little miss by The Dane, son of Stamboul, 2:07 1/2, and Dolly McMann (dam of Lilly Stanley, 2:17), dam Eva Steinway, by Steinway, 2:25 1/2, second dam Lady Lodi, by Lodi (thoroughbred) that is simply hard to beat. Any one that can produce a yearling that can beat her through the stretch can win a new bat from Mr. Kinney. Mr. Evans' fancy is a filly by Mountain Boy, dam by Aleona. Clay (sire of King Orry, 2:23 1/2, second dam Lady Lodi. This filly is a beauty, and will surely be a trotter if she has an opportunity. Another very promising filly in the juvenile department is a chestnut in color, sired by Aleona 730, dam Lady Lodi, by Lodi. This filly is hard to discount for looks, substance and nerve force, some of the requirements for trotters. Messrs. Zollner & Evans have some geldings that will make grand road horses as well as trotters. Napa Boy is a rangy, symmetrical-built four-year-old chestnut gelding fully 16.2 hands high, as smooth as any thoroughbred, sired by Aleona 730, dam Lady Lodi, by Lodi. This colt moves like a trotter, and with his size and style would make a gentleman's roadster that would attract attention in any country. There is another promising gelding, a chestnut three-year-old, by Happy Prince, son of Bayonne Prince, 2:21 1/2, dam by Aleona Clay; second dam Lady Lodi, by Lodi. This fellow knows nothing but trot, and is made like iron. The broodmares owned by these gentlemen are choice, and were bred up from a thoroughbred foundation. Eva Steinway, by Steinway, 2:25 1/2, dam Lady Lodi, by Lodi, is a very strong, smooth-turned individual and a natural pacer. She would have been fast had she been trained.

The Highland Stock Farm For Sale.

It is only once in a lifetime, on an average, that the opportunity is offered to purchase such a place as the Highland Stock Farm, which is now offered for sale. Beyond question, this is the most highly improved and desirable place in all the Bluegrass section. It is located four miles from Lexington, on the old Frankfort turnpike, right in the heart of the Bluegrass section, and right in the midst of the most celebrated stock farms of this locality.

This place contains 670 acres of as fine bluegrass land as ever the sun shone on, and the improvements cannot be surpassed. For many years it has been devoted to the breeding of the trotter on a large scale, and every convenience known to that business is to be found on the place. Houses, barns, paddocks, in fact everything that could be thought of and money procure, have been erected, until it may be truly termed a model stock farm. There is a track on the place a full mile long, that is superior to many race tracks, and was built at great expense.

It is not due to any supposed depression in the trotting horse market that has caused Messrs. W. C. France & Son to offer the Highland Stock Farm for sale, but they have reluctantly concluded to part with it entirely in account of the bad condition of the elder Mr. France's health.

The matter of disposing of this valuable piece of land has been placed entirely in the hands of Messrs. Jerry E. Dulph & Sons. See advertisement.

C. A. BROWN'S string is now quartered at Bay District track. Wildwood, Mr. B.'s handicap horse, is said to be constantly improving, and, this being the case, his chances in the Brooklyn, Metropolitan and Maturity Handicaps are of the best. Prince of Orange, a bay son of Prince of Norfolk and Eda, by Powhattan, second dam Haidee (sister to Joe Cotton, winner of the Kentucky Derby), by King Alfonso, is a remarkably good-looking two-year-old with lots of substance, but his owner regrets exceedingly that he is not more extensively entered at the East. However, the colt is entered in the Quickstep Stakes. Among the other races in Brown's string are a bay colt, two years, by Monday Final, dam Ella Doane; a black colt, 2 years, by John A., dam Rose, by Duke of Montrose, and a three-year-old black filly by John A., dam Miss Flash, by Kyrle Daly. He is also working Ottinger's bay gelding, Joe Cotton. He will be taken East to race in the Toboggan Slide and other sprinting events, and although he is not a quick starter is great in the homestretch, and is likely to be close up at the finish. With 111 pounds on it is thought he can gallop three-quarters of a mile close to 1:00 on a regulation track.

SENATOR WILLIAM THOMPSON has four horses in training at Bay District track in charge of Morris Pepper's—Martinet, the American Derby colt, by imp. Mariner—Marin, Imp. filly two-year-old filly Silver State, by imp. Cheviot—Bessie Shannon; chestnut two-year-old filly, by Ned Ban—Swift, and the three-year-old colt The Drummer, by Ed Corrigan—Fanny D. All are looking and doing well, and great things are expected of the youngsters.

SECRETARY J. H. STEINER has issued notice that the annual meeting of the stockholders of the American Trotting Register Association will be held at the Auditorium Hotel, Chicago, on the 5th day of April, 1893, for the election of officers and the transaction of such other business as may be properly presented.

In another portion of this paper will be found advertised a number of colt stakes for trotters and pacers, to be contested during the progress of the State Fair at Sacramento of 1893. The conditions are exceedingly liberal, and entries will close with Secretary Edwin F. Smith at his office in Sacramento on the 15th of March, 1893.

Stockton Record Investigation.

The way in which the records made at the Stockton kite-track were thrown out at the last meeting of the American Trotting Register Association is well known to our readers. The story of how Stamboul was sold and the low price he brought has been circulated to all parts of the globe. The meeting of the District Board of Appeals of the National Trotting Association, which convened last Friday and Saturday, had these two important subjects brought before them for consideration. At this meeting it was shown that the record meetings were properly advertised and local notices were inserted in the daily papers every day the races were to take place. The judges were chosen from among the directors, and the timers appointed were above reproach and capable of attending to the work allotted them. The races were always called on time, according to rule. The "three-breaks-rule" was strictly enforced. No horse that "skived," "hopped" or "rau" was allowed the time he made to the wire. If there was any doubt in regard to the fairness of a record, the horse never got the benefit of it; this was the experience told by the owners of these horses, who, as witnesses, were called to testify at this meeting. The rules were so strictly observed by this association that its fame extended from Shasta to San Diego and from Nevada to the Coast. All the horses had to earn their records on these tracks, and hence they are entitled to them as much as if they had trotted on any other course in America. It is an injustice to deprive them of their rights and when a complete transcript of the proceedings are carefully considered by the officers of the American Trotting Association they will agree with the parent organization, the National Trotting Association, and give the horses the credit due them.

When the minutes of the meeting of the Board of Appeals are read by every horseman a far better idea will be gained of the manner in which the investigation was conducted. The officers and directors of the San Joaquin Valley Agricultural Association were eager to sift the matter to the very bottom; they did all in their power to aid the Board in its work and afforded every facility for having the investigation thorough. Nothing was withheld, every witness seemed to be anxious to have justice accorded, and at the three meetings which were held the large committee room was filled to overflowing by many of Stockton's most prominent citizens.

The association is one of the strongest in California. Its officers and directors have resided in the district for years. They are prominently identified with the government of our State. Senator Benj. F. Langford has held his position in the Senate longer than any man in California. Assemblyman J. M. Larue was secretary of this association for many years. L. U. Shippee, the able president, has been the foremost citizen of Stockton for over twenty years. L. Gerlach, R. L. Russell, Chas. Needham, David Young and Ross Sargent are all leaders in financial circles, and their names are synonyms for sterling worth and reliability. Their testimony regarding the conducting of the record meetings must have weight in the deliberation of the question, "Shall the Stockton records stand?"

The story of the Stamboul record and the telegram read at the sale of the Hohart horses, whereby this magnificent son of Sultan and his progeny were sold for one hundred per cent. below their value, is known to every one. It will be remembered, also, that James Cross, one of the executors of the estate, made a statement that Stamboul should be sold regardless of his record, 2:07 1/2. This gentleman had, at that time, a letter in his pocket which caused him to make this announcement, and he did not care to involve the estate in lawsuits if the charges in that letter were proven true. He did not know the writer, neither had he heard it rumored that Stamboul had not trotted in 2:07 1/2 previous to his departure from California, consequently he was placed in a very unenviable position.

After the "sacrifice" he, with Samuel Gamble, attended the meeting of the American Trotting Register Association, Chicago, determined to ferret out the black-mailers and have Stamboul's crown placed more securely where it belonged, for, in their opinion, there was no doubt of the horse trotting in 2:07 1/2, and the affidavits of such men of honor as the timers, Frank W. Corey and James Thompson, strengthened that belief. They had no further interest in the horse than to see justice accorded him and having the villains, who had in a measure succeeded in accomplishing their ends, brought to justice.

Copies of dispatches sent by Register J. H. Steiner to McHugh, the letter writer, were shown and the impression prevailed among those present that Messrs. Allen and Steiner were prompted by motives inimical to the welfare of Stamboul, and were anxious to correspond with these unknown people in preference to seeking the truth from the officers and members of the society.

Coming to California, the District Board of Appeals of the National Trotting Association called a meeting to be held at Stockton to inquire into the facts of the case. Witnesses were subpoenaed and everyone who saw Stamboul earn the title of king of trotting stallions seemed anxious to be present, excepting those who had been in the conspiracy. Not an iota of evidence was presented to sustain the charges made except that of Grant Campbell and he could not rely on his watch. The meeting was advertised; the horse started at 10 o'clock; the track was not a sea of mud; the horse trotted to the half-mile in 1:02 1/2 and the mile in 2:07 1/2, with hut one little break; the horse did not run a quarter of a mile, and there were only two official timers there. The secretary's hooks were there; the man Kearney authorized Secretary LaRue to sign his name in the judges' hook, and the driver, Walter Mahen, with his weights, weighed the proper amount, and everything was conducted in accordance with the rules.

There is hut one thing to do with the scoundrels that have cast an odium on the racing at Stockton, and in fact a reflection upon every record made in California; (for these men have attempted to levy blackmail on the estate; and have shown their total disregard for the honor and reputations of the members of the Stockton Agricultural Association and the officers appointed on that memorable day; they should be expelled from the trotting tracks and consigned to a prison for a term of years where they can reflect on the enormity of their crime.

The Los Angeles Meeting.

Everything points to a most successful meeting in the City of Angels, commencing on the 18th of March. Already a number of horses have gone to the Los Angeles track, which is now in prime condition. The climate of California's most beautiful city at this season of the year is unsurpassed in any portion of the world, and horses will be greatly benefited by going from cooler climates to race at Los Angeles. Horses trained at that place have always done well at the San Francisco and other meetings, and we respectfully urge on our horsemen the sending in of their entries at once to the various liberal stakes, the conditions of which were printed in last week's issue. It should be remembered that the stakes close next Tuesday, February 21st, and entries mailed at any time previous to 12 P. M. will be received by the secretary, L. Thorne, 107 1/2 North Main street, Los Angeles. In addition to the stake races there will be plenty of over-night events, and all classes of horses are amply provided for.

OUR advertising columns are being rapidly filled by advertisements of choicely-bred trotting stallions. The blood lines represented prove conclusively that there is no room for scrub stallions in California, and owners of good mares have a better opportunity of breeding their mares to good ones at very low prices. The desire among all classes of horsemen seems to strongly incline to the best trotters—best in breeding, best in individuality, best in money-winning lines. There may not be so many mares bred this year, but what they lack in numbers they will more than make it up in quality, and owners of stallions are jubilant over the standard broodmares that are being hooked. The owners of these mares go around to see the horses and endeavor to select the horses that as individuals they think will "cross" well with their mares. If the breeding is all right the chances are more than favorable for the produce to become valuable wherever they are placed.

In two races at Oakland last Tuesday there were barefaced attempts to rob the public—in the first race, where Flora E. was hooked by the crooked brigade to wiu (the rest of the horses supposed to be "dead"), and in the third, where the heavily-played Altus was said to have been "stiffened" and not ridden to wiu. Several "sure-thing" games were in full blast in and around the hotel, and a reporter was offered money to keep any allusion to the games out of his paper. Where racing is conducted by one or two men, and not under the auspices of any recognized association, the public can expect little else but crooked racing, and the only wonder is that people will allow themselves to be gulled by a lot of would-be sharpers that never had the racing interests of this or any other State at heart. The sooner the meeting at Oakland, as at present conducted, comes to an end, the better.

The Root of the Evil.

The younger generation of jockeys, or those who have not reached the pinnacle of fame as knights of the pig-skin are, in many cases, between two fires, and as one of them remarked the other day, "We are often in a 'bad fix.' Any jockey in the land hates to pull a horse. Yet when a dishonest owner comes to a boy and tells him he must not win with a certain animal on which he has a mount, what is the poor jockey to do? If he goes on and wins he will at once be discharged for not 'riding to orders,' and if he follows instructions and makes a bungling job of it he gets ruled off, and the man that told him he must not win seldom gets punished, for it is an easy matter for the crooked employer to produce tickets showing that he has backed the horse that was pulled. The bookmaker that stood in on the play with the owner will see that his friend has all the tickets he wants. In the investigation that follows an owner's word will almost invariably be taken against a boy's, and we are made to suffer for the misdeeds of others." There is more truth than poetry in the above, and therefore, in view of the fact that nine times out of ten times the wrong person feels the lash of turf law, there should be some remedy applied. The bookmakers are at the bottom of a majority of the "jobs" perpetrated on the race courses of this country, and as long as dishonest owners will "stand in" with bookmakers it will be hard to mete out punishment to the proper parties, and jockeys will continue to be punished for something that they do not really deserve. The only way we can see to purify the turf is to do away with bookmaking and bookmakers. The pencilers can easily be dispensed with, and the sport would, without doubt, be much cleaner. For instance, let there be at a big race meeting four or five pool-sellers doing business at once, and not confined to one, as is the case all over the country. Then the heavy bettors could easily get their money on. Have a dozen or more pari-mutuel boxes running, with the prices for tickets placed at $1, $2 and $5. This would give the smaller speculators all the chance to bet they could wish for. It will be argued by the friends of the penciler that "a person wants to know what odds he is going to get against his money at once," but that really amounts to nothing. Anyone who has ever given the matter much thought knows that better odds are almost invariably received in the auction pools than in the books, and when a "long shot" wins in the mutuels the amount realized is generally far in excess of that which could be secured by betting a similar sum in the books. Let the associations hire their own set of auctioneers and pari-mutuel box men and reap the benefits now accruing to the bookmakers, who usually wear diamonds, live in swell hotels, smoke two-bit cigars and pay their sheet and ticket-writers at the rate of $10 per day apiece. In no other way could the turf be purified so easily and effectually. Soon the various racing organizations would be able to own beautiful race courses, grand stands and everything pertaining to a first-class racing institution, and rich stake races every day and happy-faced, well-fed turfmen would take the places of the wr-y-visaged, hyena-looking owners of the skate sprinters that are looking over the week's programme for a three-furlong selling race where they can get their "dog" in at 80 pounds, and if he wins let him go at $200. The present system is not as popular or profitable as it can be made to racing organizations, and let the turfmen who love a good horse reap the benefit, instead of the bookmaker, who seldom cares anything about "improving the breed of horses" in America, or any other portion of the world, for that matter.

Sale of Sidney.

The latest report from Wm. B. Fasig in regard to the number of guesses received from all parts of the United States and Canada must be very encouraging. The Tattersalls-Fasig Company, of which Mr. Fasig is the representative, is having printed in the German, French, English, Italian and Spanish languages advertisements of the great sale. Nothing is being left undone to make this one of the best advertised sales that ever took place in America.

Sidney has left some sons in California that will soon have representatives in the 2:30 list. We have not heard of one that is not the sire of very promising youngsters, and as the prospects are very favorable for his being placed at the head of some large stock farm where the very choicest of mares will be sent to him, his California family will continue to keep up his reputation as a progenitor of speed. In fact there never was any doubt that his colts and fillies will be esteemed highly in the stud and harem. Every breeder who has one considers that as the years roll on the Sidneys will be coming into the 2:30 list with greater regularity than ever. Every one of his descendants are noted for intelligence, courage and easy trotting action. If Sidney does not return to California his sons will be well patronized.

We received the following dispatch last Wednesday:

ST. LOUIS, Mo., Feb. 15, 1893.

"EDITOR BREEDER AND SPORTSMAN, SAN FRANCISCO:
"Col. B. W. Woodruff has been appointed presiding judge of our meeting, April 29th to June 23d, by President Rolla Wells.

BELLARS."

Now that Col. Woodruff (who presided at the last Blood Horse meeting) is evidently not coming here, suggestions as to his successor may be in order. We could never see the necessity of going far away for a presiding judge when such a man as Joseph Cairn Simpson resided in our midst. Mr. Simpson founded the Pacific Coast Blood Horse Association, framed nearly all its rules, and is not only thoroughly posted on the association's regulations, but with those of other racing organizations. His integrity has never been questioned, and he has for a lifetime been interested in the affairs of the turf—as a writer and as a practical horseman. Though not a young man, his eyesight is excellent and his knowledge of men and horses would make him, as a judge, second to no man in America. Therefore, if Mr. Simpson, the father of the Blood Horse Association of San Francisco, a man eminently qualified in every way, can be prevailed upon to act as presiding judge at the spring meeting of the organization which he founded, we will hail the selection with joy, and that he would give satisfaction to every fair-minded man is certain.

GOODWIN'S Official Turf Guide (the annual) is out, and is more complete in every detail than ever. In addition to its usual correct information regarding races run over any course of consequence in America, the racing and betting rules, great stake winners during the past few years and value of the stakes won, the Guide for 1892 contains all sales of thoroughbreds during the year just past made by Tattersalls of New York, which makes very interesting reading. Altogether, we do not see what racing men could do without Goodwin's Turf Guide.

Points About the Trotting Market.

Many months ago, when the first cry of alarm was raised that the bottom was about to drop out of the trotting market, this journal pointed out the fact that for some time the tastes of buyers had been gradually becoming more critical, and the market therefore more exacting as to quality, and argued that as a result prices for ordinary and mediocre trotting stuff would drop lower, while really first-class material would remain salable at figures highly remunerative. Later, when lots of ordinary and ordinarily-bred stuff went begging on the markets, the pessimists took the floor and disturbed the welkin with the wail that the trotting business had gone to the bow-wows—just because young animals that were simply standard-bred did not sell for averages high in the hundreds. The Corbitt sale and the Hobart sale showed that the trotting market is still strong for really select trotting stock, while many other sales have demonstrated that horses of ordinary breeding and ordinary individuality will no longer sell for more than their intrinsic value—all of which, we submit, proves the market to be in a cool, healthy and safe condition.

Occasionally we see in a sale report a colt or filly of really fashionable blood, by a very great horse and out of a mare of the richest breeding, going for a low price, and these instances are promptly seized upon as a text for some homily going to prove that we are in the throes of a panic. We would caution all our readers against being deceived by such appearances. The newspaper report gives you merely the color, the age, the sex and the bloodlines; it does not describe the individual; it does not give his defects; it does not say whether he is a trotter and sound and shapely, or whether he is a little roan or cream-colored "plug" perhaps with bad legs and no speed. The writer has seen hundreds of horses pass under the hammer in Chicago this winter, and he is bound to say that in his judgment the great majority of them were sold for about what they were worth. We have not seen a really desirable driving horse—a horse of good size, sound and good individually, and with reasonable style and speed—brought into the ring this winter and fail to excite lively and remunerative bidding. We have seen some pretty nice pedigrees attached to mighty ordinary individuals sell for just the price of a very ordinary horse, but there should be no complaint as to that. If it were possible for a saw-horse to have a nice fashionable pedigree it would still only serve a saw-horse's uses; and when a horse is not a demonstrated trotter and has no other special distinction the fact that he is nicely bred does not make him worth any more than other common horses that fill the uses to which his capacities are limited. The fact is that unless a horse has speed enough to win on the turf, or has the rare merits that entitle him to use as a stock horse, his pedigree need hardly be considered as an element in his market value. The man who buys a nice road gelding does not particularly care whether he is fashionably-bred. It is more important that he shall have style, good color, good disposition, attractive carriage, reasonable speed, and the other attributes of a good road horse.

Heretofore the combination sales have been largely made up of young things, yearlings, weanlings and two-year-olds, and a very large proportion of them stallion colts, for in the standard era, you know, every colt was intended for a trotting sire and every filly for a matron. Experience this winter, even with choice goods, has shown the folly of sending lots of youngsters to market. The majority of breeders no longer go to combination sales to reinforce their breeding studs. Therefore the buyers at these sales are mainly those buying horses for the turf, for driving or for purposes of ordinary utility, and thus the reading is apparent why young things of no present use, and especially young stallions of ordinary trotting breeding, are somewhat of a drug at the big winter sales.

Another fact that should not be lost sight of in reaching conclusions based on public sales is that, despite protestations to the contrary, these sale rings have been the great clearing houses for the culs of the whole country. Every breeder who has contributed to these sales will, if he speak candidly, admit that he has through that medium rid himself of the weeds that come, in greater or less proportion, to every farm, and has almost invariably reserved his choicest things for development or for private sale. This fact becoming more and more widely known has tended to bring the combination sale ring more and more to be a mart where the animal offered is judged and priced strictly on what he can show, what he individually is as a horse, and what practical use he can be put to.—Horseman.

The Great Thoroughbreds.

My apology for this letter is the poor knowledge of weight for age and handicap form which Mr. Lowell displays in his letter to you of January 19th. This letter is composed of inaccuracies relative to Foxhall, Iroquois and Bend Or's running in England in 1881.

Mr. Lowell states that Foxhall is the only three-year-old that ever won the Cesarewitch and Cambridgeshire, or, as it is called in England, the double event. In 1885 Plaisanterie won the Cesarewitch with seven stone, eight pounds, or 106 pounds. She also won the Cambridgeshire with eight stone twelve pounds, or 124 pounds; being a filly, this is the best performance made over the Cambridgeshire course, the difference between a colt and a filly at that time of the year, according to English racing rules, being three pounds. This would bring her weight up to one hundred and twenty-seven pounds. Mr. Lowell states that Foxhall carried 115 pounds in the Cesarewitch; this is incorrect. Foxhall's weight was seven stone, twelve pounds, or 110 pounds—five pounds less than what he says. He carried nine stone in the Cambridgeshire, or 126 pounds; not 127, as Mr. Lowell states. Taking into consideration sex allowance, you will see at once that Plaisanterie's performance is the best. This is a French mare, and she won fourteen races out of fifteen, being beaten on the one occasion by Martin Pecheur II, four years old, nine stone, 126 pounds, and Plaisanterie carried eight stone, two pounds, or 114 pounds. In the writer's opinion weight for age is the best test of horses, and when Bend Or beat Iroquois in the Champion Stakes and gave him fourteen pounds in one mile and two furlongs over Newmarket course there was no doubt in the minds of men who understand racing as to which was the best. Foxhall was away ahead of Iroquois; Peregrine was a very bad horse, and could not win the Cambridgeshire with seven stone, eight pounds, or 106 pounds. Yet he beat Iroquois in the Two Thousand Guineas. Iroquois happened to win the Derby in a bad year; he never beat anything approaching first-class form afterwards. When Foxhall won the Grand Prix de Paris, one mile and seven furlongs, he beat a good horse in Tristan, who was ridden by the late Fred Archer, George Fordham riding Foxhall, so there was nothing wanting in jockeyship on either side. Foxhall, in my opinion, was away ahead of Iroquois. Some very bad horses won the English Derby. Mr. Lowell also states that Blue Gown won with 126 pounds as a four-year-old. Blue Gown never won the Cambridgeshire. Blue Gown won the Derby in 1868. The highest weight ever carried over the Cambridgeshire course was carried by Bendigo in 1885, nine stone, eight pounds, or 134 pounds; and was beaten two lengths by Plaisanterie. Bendigo was the best horse that ran in any race in England for the last forty years. This horse won the Eclipse Stakes, one mile, two furlongs, with nine stone, seven pounds, or 133 pounds, in 1886, value being £10,000, and the best field of handicap horses in England in that year.—Barry in Dunton's Spirit of the Turf.

The European Trade.

The work now being done in Europe by Dr. J. W. Day, George Ketcham and John Splan in the interest of the American trotter will prove beneficial to every breeder in the country. That a magnificent market for our fleet stepping trotters and pacers in the countries across the sea only awaits development no one can contradict. Heretofore many wealthy and influential foreigners have evinced a desire to possess themselves with our style of driving animals and have come to this country only (in many instances) to serve as targets for the dishonest practices of a set of sharpers, who palmed off at exorbitant prices outclassed and defective animals. The almighty dollar seemed the only object in view, and little consideration was given to the upbuilding of a market in the countries referred to. No special effort was ever made to acquaint foreigners in a general way with the virtues of our national horse. But now the work has assumed a form that leads us to believe that in a very short period the trotter will become one of the prominent luxuries of the Old World. The Messrs. Day, Ketcham and Splan have left us prepared to demonstrate to our observing friends across the waters the general usefulness of our trotting horses, and should they fail to create enthusiasm in the hearts of foreigners for the trotter, then we will be forced to the opinion that the people of the mother land are indeed a peculiar lot. No, failure is not to be thought of. The American trotter is an animal that stands ever ready to court the admiration of every living person, from the kings and queens of the palace to the lowliest portagee, and to think that cultivated and enlightened Europe will refuse to join in our adoration of him would make one feel that the people of this age are indeed incapable of discerning a good thing when they see it. The time has arrived when the American breeder should take steps to develop the foreign markets, and the advanced steps taken by the gentlemen should be applauded by every breeder of the land. It is the purpose of these gentlemen to exhibit the trotter regaled in the same style of harness as he appears in at home, and he will at the same time draw the neat, light and serviceable road wagon of his native country. The vehicle at first, no doubt, will be viewed with a good share of credulity, and it may be doubtful whether a true Briton can be induced by even the persuasive words of the irresistible Splan to take a spin in such a "blasted frail thing" as is the American road wagon. But Splan is in Europe on a tour of education, and before he returns will have found many apt pupils to our style of road riding. It is good guessing that before he leaves for home the American buggy manufacturers will feel themselves under a thousand obligations to him. Let the good work proceed. The examples set by the above gentlemen is a fit one for emulation.—Western Horseman.

THE STAMBOUL RECORD.

How the Greatest Blackmailing Scheme Ever Known in the History of the Trotting Turf Failed.

Kearney, the Principal Gives His Testimony, While McHugh, One of the Conspirators, Slips Out—What Was Offered Before the District Board of Appeals.

On the train that arrived at Stockton last Friday there was a party of gentlemen who were on an important mission, one that would have more of a bearing on the records made by Stamboul and the other horses that had earned records last year than any other thought of in California. Captain N. T. Smith, Jesse D. Carr, of the District Board of Appeals of the National Trotting Association, Frank Shay, Secretary of the Board, Frank M. Covey, Samuel Gamble, James Cross, L. A. Richards, and a number of others. The building chosen in which the investigations were to be held was the Pavilion, and when the gentlemen arrived there they found quite a gathering of representative men from San Joaquin County, besides several witnesses who had been subpoenaed to appear. The meeting proved to be a very interesting one, and to Mr. Kearney it was surprising. The gentlemen comprising the Board conducted the examination with fairness and seemed to be very anxious to get all the facts. They impressed every one with the vital importance of getting full and succinct statements of each witness in regard to the manner in which the stallion trotted and the way the meetings were conducted; they aimed to accomplish a two-fold mission in doing so. Directors Shippee, Russell, Langford and Needham were present as witnesses. Assemblyman LaRue came from Sacramento with Senator Langford and Ross Sargent to attend. Arthur Ashley, the newly elected Secretary of the San Joaquin Agricultural Society, assisted in conducting the examination in an able manner. James Thompson, one of the timers who was present at the time Stamboul made his record, is in the East, and Grant Campbell, the man who has been reported as having timed the horse in 2:16, were subpoenaed but failed to appear. David Young, one of the Directors, testified that he had talked to Campbell a few days ago and he said he had made no affidavit in the matter.

When the meeting was called H. M. McHugh, the writer of the blackmailing letter, was seen with Mr. Kearney in the room. After Mr. Kearney concluded to confess Mr. McHugh slipped out of the room, and shortly after boarded the train for Lodi. At nine o'clock at night, in answer to a telephone message, it was learned that McHugh was quite sick. "He was badly frightened when he left the Pavilion," was the remark of one of the witnesses.

Assemblyman LaRue, who was secretary of the local association when the races were trotted, was the first witness called. He testified that the meeting was regular in every way, so far as they understood the rules. Kearney authorized the witness to sign his (Kearney's) name to the record. The witness saw every mile trotted except Stamboul's 2:07 1/2, and arrived at the track just as the horse finished the mile. Kearney made no objection to the announcement of the time. The track was fine and rain did not fall until the horse was finishing. He was sure the mile was trotted after 10 o'clock.

John S. Kearney was next called, but he refused to be sworn. He claimed a right to ten days' time after being subpoenaed and wanted to have witnesses called on his side of the case.

Captain Smith told him that he was not trying this case and they only asked him to testify.

Kearney said he had consulted a lawyer and would not testify. He said Parker and Grant Campbell had not been subpoenaed, but the subpoenas were before the Board properly served.

Captain Smith said Kearney had convicted himself and the answer was returned that he had not convicted himself and that he would take the case to the courts to defend his good name.

"I will declare you expelled," said the chairman, "but if you come in to-day to testify you will be reinstated."

Kearney said the Board had no authority to expel him, but Captain Smith said there was no use in talking further on the matter.

Mr. Ashley asked that Kearney be excluded from the room, as he had refused to testify.

Kearney asked that witnesses he named be subpoenaed.

"You do not understand this proceeding," said Captain Smith, "We want to get at the truth only, and you refuse to be sworn. You know the penalty. Sit down, sir; we don't want to hear anything further from you."

Kearney said that he made a wrong move, and after he had talked with Ross Sargent for a few moments he stepped forward to be sworn.

"Do you want to be sworn?" asked the chairman.

"Yes."

Kearney held up his hand while the oath was administered and then told his story as it had been printed a number of times. He could not say what time Stamboul made, as he did not hold a watch. He looked over the rail from the judges' stand and saw Campbell's watch, which the latter held in his hand while standing on the south side of the timers' stand. As near as he could see Campbell's watch showed the half mile in 1:53 1/2. That was the only time he saw, as Campbell changed his position.

When the mile was finished, Kearney said, Thompson went down on the track and the witness was out of the stand before Langford announced the time as 2:07 1/2.

"Did you sign the record?" asked Captain Smith.

"No," answered Kearney.

Mr. Ashley asked Kearney about his alleged statements to a number of witnesses to lay a foundation for the admission of his testimony in detail. Kearney said he did not know John L. Weston; he did not tell George Stortz that Stamboul made 2:07 1/2; he did not know one Heston; he did not tell J. H. McLeod, a horse-shoer, that there was a sack out and he was going to have some of it. The witness did not tell Daniel Bell that he was going to see Cross, and if he did not "come up" with some money he would squeal. He did not say to F. J. Cochran, a horse-shoer, that there was a "sack" out and he was going to get a part of it. He did not tell Costello of Lodi that the Stamboul performance was straight.

Kearney, in answer to questions put by Mr. Ashley, said he never wrote to Mr. Cross for money and never authorized any one to write for him. He never received any money from anybody in this matter, and did not expect any.

"Isn't it a fact that you, with two other men, attempted to secure money in this matter?" asked Mr. Ashley.

"No sir," answered Kearney. "I want any man to produce any letters or any man to say that I have done anything wrong. I propose to have justice, since my good name has been attacked."

"Did you know of any business for you?"

"I got some affidavits."

"Did John McLeod or McHugh offer to put up any money for you if you would break this record?"

"No."

The witness said Steiner wrote that if he would procure affidavits he would reimburse him for any outlay. As McLeod, a secretary of the local association, he got him to get affidavits. The witness wrote Allen (owner of Kremlin) to send a man there to investigate the record.

Kearney said he wanted W. S. Bailey and Duncan C. Lees, of Lodi, subpoenaed, and he was given a subpoena for them to appear this morning.

H. Corson, the Lodi harness man, testified that he employed McHugh for a year ending this month. Since Kearney went to Lodi the witness saw him at his (Corson's) barn where McHugh was employed. One evening McHugh was writing, with Kearney sitting near him. McHugh said: "I am helping John out a little." Once after that McHugh said there would be a piece in the Lodi paper which would open people's eyes about the Stamboul record, and it appeared in the next issue. Soon after that McHugh went to Stockton to buy blankets, and when he went back he said he had some good affidavits. The witness said to him that he was foolish to meddle in the matter. McHugh answered: "Well, because people are rich they needn't think they can run over us." He said $10 was as much to him as to anyone else.

The witness said he did not like it because it affected Senator Langford and he thought he would write exonerating the Senator.

One of the most important witnesses of the day was F. M. Covey. Mr. Covey said he was busy getting a yearling filly ready to trot when called into the stand. The judges were already there. After scoring once Stamboul got the word.

"I called time at the half," said Covey. "I called 1:0 1/2. That is what my watch said. It is a mistake—the statement that time was not announced in the stand. When he finished the mile I called again giving it at 2:07 1/2. Thompson did announce the time in the stand, and then Mr. Langford called him back. My watch and his watch agreed exactly, making the half in 1:0 1/2 and the mile in 2:07 1/2. There was another party in the stand, but he did not take his place until the horse got to the quarter. I am sure he was not in the stand at the beginning of the race. He walked across the track after Stamboul started and got into the stand just as the horse reached the quarter. He was there when we compared our watches. I did not know the man, but have since learned that his name was Campbell. He had horses there."

In the cross-examination which followed, Covey did not change this in any particular. He said he heard no one on the track say the time was not right. He thought the track that day was the best he had seen in Stockton. It was soft, but not too much so. It was so good that Covey tried to start the yearling he hoped to see make 2:23 or 2:21, but he had to give up the chance to Stamboul. Just as the finish was made the rain commenced. Covey had never seen a horse give a second the advantage in timing on the Stockton track. The rules were compiled with in all respects, the continuances were all made with due formality and adjournments were taken when there were more horses than could trot for records in a day. No question was advanced against the record until some time after the conclusion of the record meeting.

Then came another surprise. Covey said he had received a letter from Lodi, signed John Rogers, in which the writer said he had been approached by parties in Lodi and asked how much he would charge to say the horse started before 10 o'clock and did not make the mile in 2:07 1/2 or any such time. The writer asked if there was anything he could do to help Stamboul's owners. Covey answered, stating the record had been accepted.

Covey said in conclusion that it must have been after 10 o'clock when Stamboul started, as he had his filly ready to go when called to the stand. The horse did not run a quarter of a mile or any other distance. Stamboul broke but once, and that was in the stretch, and then he did not gain in the least.

Samuel Gamble, superintendent of the Honart stock farm for several years, was the time-keeper at Stockton when the horse made 2:07 1/2. His watch made the time 2:07 1/2 and a number of other watches made it 2:07 1/2. Shippee insisted the time must go as 2:08.

One of the most important witnesses of the day, not particularly for what he said but for the evidence he offered, was James Cross, who was most vitally interested in Stamboul's time.

After there had been an attempt to blackmail you in this Stamboul record," asked Secretary Ashley.

"Yes, there has been an attempt to blackmail me," answered Cross. "The attempt I refer to was made while I was in New York. It came in the form of a letter. I received the letter about two days before the sale in New York. It came in care of Kellogg & Co."

Cross took an envelope from his pocket, drew a letter out and handed it to the witness. As it was closed the witness opened it and Mr. Cross began to take the liveliest interest in the proceedings. By the time the perusal was finished it seemed as if the curtain of deceit had fallen and the whole conspiracy been laid bare. The letter in full and verbatim follows:

Lodi, Cal., Dec. 30, 1892. JAMES CROSS, Esq., 107 John St., New York City, N. Y.—Dear Sir: I drop you this letter of information to inform you that Parties Who Was Present at Stockton and had Watches on the horse Stamboul. When he trotted his last mile in the Reported time of 2:07 1/2. One of these Parties Was one of the Judges in the Stand When Stamboul went the mile in 2:07 1/2 on November 23d these Parties have Just Returned from San Francisco where they Went to See you on this Business But you had left for New York City, they have Placed this in my hands to inform you of the facts. These Parties are all sworn to the Oath to that effect that the Time of 2:07 1/2 is False and that the Time Was Regular and they Say Further that they are Prepared to Prove these Facts and Will Put them before the Public Before the Sale takes Place in New York City if something is Not Done. So you can Draw your own Conclusions What that means. These Parties, 3 three of them are in the Judge Stand. That Was in the Judge Stand When Stamboul trotted on Nov. 23d. Now you see the horse when they tell me this they have a good many Facts, and they Say they can Prove that Stamboul Did Not trot a mile in 2:07 1/2 on November 23d 1892 and if something is Not Done Between Now and the 15th of Dec. 31st—this month to Satisfy them they Will make affidavit that Stamboul's time of 2:07 1/2 was Falsely Given from the Judges Stand and that the trial Was Regular, and they Will Substantiate other facts in regard to the trial, they Will Send these affidavits east and they have them Published through the Press of the Country. Facts are very Stubborn things and if these Parties are Not Kept Still they Will surely come out before the 20th or 21st of this month, you can wire me any time here for these Parties Between Now and the 15th of this month I am writing you as correspondent for these Parties and this letter is Written for them by myself.

I am Resp yours HEXAY M. McHUGH over

P. S. these Parties are all horsemen but I am not at liberty to give you their names But anytime you call on me at Lodi I Will tell you Who they are. So you Will then Be Satisfied Yours Respe H. M. McHUGH.

Mr. Cross explained that the letter was mailed in Lodi, December 9, 1892, and was received in New York, December 11, 1892, as indicated by the post-marks.

"That is the letter I refer to when I speak of blackmail," said Mr. Cross. "As you see I got it I did the same thing to read it if any affidavits came questioning Stamboul's record, I would tell the horse without a guarantee. No affidavits came and the letter was not read."

Mr. Gamble spoke of the injury false rumors about Stamboul's time had done. Several persons stood ready to bid $60,000, $65,000 and $75,000, but the horse went for $11,000 merely because the question was raised.

David Young testified that he saw Grant Campbell last Monday and that Campbell told him he had made no affidavit. Young was on the track just after the race was over. He knew it was after 10 o'clock.

W. H. Marshall, of the Sacramento Bee, was asked if he had any facts about the Stamboul matter that had not been printed. He said he had none. He was asked if he had interviewed Kearney and others, and he said he had.

Mr. Person was shown the McHugh letter, and comparing the writing with signatures on receipts which McHugh had given him, said he believed the letter was in the handwriting of McHugh.

W. J. Williams, who had charge of the Stockton track, said it was in fact 10 o'clock when Stamboul made his fast mile. Fifteen minutes before 10 o'clock he started a crowd of about 100 with four horses pulling a clod masher. After the mile was trotted he saw marks of the horses' feet showing that Stamboul trotted squarely.

John McLeod was called and asked if he wrote a letter to Steiner saying he could break Stamboul's record for $3,000. McLeod said he never wrote such a letter. He was excused.

Willis Parker, a judge, was called and asked if he had seen the Lodi man taken with a fainting spell and had gone to his hotel.

McHugh did not appear, and men sent to find him said he was not in town. It was said that he had called on a doctor, but it was learned that he had not seen the doctor. Finally, Charles McHugh learned that McHugh had returned to Lodi, so a message was sent to him to appear before the Board this morning or take the consequences of refusal.

A. M. Worthing swore that Kearney came to him and asked for the address of James Cross.

Senator Langford testified that the mile was trotted after 10 o'clock in the presence of fully 100 persons. He believed that the record was straight, and certainly the judges knew nothing to the contrary. When Stamboul reached the half-mile post he asked for the time, and the answer came from the timers 1:02 1/2, which no man disputed, and when the mile was given at 2:07 1/2 no man said it was not right.

In answer to the question, "How was Mr. Kearney appointed judge?" the Senator said: "It was near the time to go into the stand. Will Parker was authorized to sign the affidavits, and I said, 'We need another judge, who will you get?' Some one in the crowd said, 'Some one of the track said Mr. Kearney. I turned around and asked, 'Who is he?' and the answer came back, 'A horseman.' That was enough for me, as I believe a horseman is about as good a man as we could have in the stand. I never noticed him after we got in the stand, as I was anxious to get Stamboul started. It was 10 o'clock and after when I gave the word I thought of the stallion as being as he believed he would break the record, for the track was especially prepared. No man could see the hands of a watch held by a person ten feet below him. It was humiliating for me to hear this man Kearney say that he did so. I asked if the weights were all right, and the answer came back that they were. I knew the race was regular, and after the horse came in the stand I asked for those below the track and the answer for at the half the words '1:02 1/2' were plainly heard where we stood, but when the mile ended I had to call for the time. Mr. Thompson was out of the stand and I told him to come back and give me the time. He did so, saying, '2:07 1/2.' I rang the bell and announced it from the stand, and as it was raining I started across the track. Mr. LaRue and I were authorized to sign the other judges' names. When the time was announced Mr. Kearney made no objection to the judge and the great feat as much as anyone. I heard no objection to the record. There was a mistake in the newspaper the next morning that annoyed me; it was that the horse started at 9:30. I spoke to the reporter about it; he told me he picked it up on the street. I told him that the report would cause trouble, as it was false."

Being asked if the witness was muddy, the witness replied, "No! It was perfect, and had we known that such a track would have suited Stamboul, the horse would have trotted in 2:36 easily. There were nearly 100 people on the track that morning, I should judge, and everyone was speaking of the wonderful mile. No complaints or expressions of doubt as to the correctness of the time were heard. It was not a month afterwards when the first rumor of the 2:16 story was heard."

At the evening session Secretary Ashley read a lot of affidavits to show the motive which he alleged led Kearney to make a contest against Stamboul's record. The main points covered are as follows:

Elliott McQuaid swore before E. L. Wilhoit, notary public that he timed Stamboul's mile and made it in 2:07 1/2. The stallion started to beat the record after 10 o'clock.

Daniel Bell swore that Stamboul started after 10 o'clock. That the affiant was not about 150 yards north of the judges' stand, and he timed the mile 2:07 1/2.

George Stortz, of Lodi, a trainer and driver, swore that he had several conversations with J. S. Kearney immediately after Stamboul made his record of 2:07 1/2. Kearney said that he acted as one of the judges, and that Stamboul trotted the mile in 2:07 1/2 to the best of his knowledge and belief.

Daniel Bell testified in another affidavit that Kearney said to him about ten days after Stamboul's performance, in speaking of the mile, that he was going to San Francisco to see Cross and that if Cross did not "come up" with some money that he was going to "squeal."

F. J. Cochran swore that shortly after November 23d Kearney came to his horse-shoeing shop and asked for the address of James Cross. Cochran said that he had given the address to Kearney, and he replied that he knew that there was a "sack" out there on that day that he was going to have his share of it, and that he was going down to Cross to get a part of the sack, his portion.

Joseph L. Heston, a trainer and driver, swore that he saw Stamboul's mile. The stallion started after 10 o'clock. Kearney, who was one of the judges, was present at the affiant, authorized J. M. LaRue, the secretary, to sign his (Kearney's) name in the certificate of the judges of the record of Stamboul made November 23d.

J. H. McLeod, a horse-shoer, testified that on or about December 1st John Kearney came into the shop and made the remark to him (McLeod) that he (Kearney) thought that there was a "sack" in the matter of Stamboul's performance on November 23d, and that he was going to get a part of it.

Michael Costello, of Lodi, trainer of Dan McCarty's horses, testified that he had a talk with John Kearney a few days after Stamboul made his record of 2:07 1/2, and Kearney said he acted as a judge and that the performance was straight and proper. Kearney further said that he did not have a watch, but that he believed that the time officially announced was correct, owing to the fact that he had a watch which he had with him at the time of the race, and that he was in accordance with the National Trotting Rules, according to his best knowledge.

James Thompson's affidavit, written in the East, was also read. He swore that he acted as one of the timers when Stamboul made his mile in 2:07 1/2. He swore further that Stamboul did trot, according to the best of the affiant's ability as a timer, in 2:07 1/2, and he so announced the time to the judges.

W. H. McHugh, the Lodi horse trainer who sent the famous letter to James Cross, was greatly missed. He was in the room in the afternoon when the witness was taken to the stand, and was ready to make a statement to testify. He went out of the room, and his name was called from the door while his name was in hearing, but he failed to appear. He was told that he was wanted as a witness, but he said he was sick and was going home. Attorneys for the association were anxious to find the witness, and sent men around town to find him, but it was learned by telephone that he went to Lodi, where he was being excused. Notice was sent to him to appear before the board at 10 o'clock this morning, or he would be suspended. Several witnesses testified that McHugh was told that he was wanted as a witness.

Secretary Ashley said he wanted McHugh on the stand to ask him who he referred to when he spoke of two others in his letter to Mr. Cross, and he wanted to know, also, what authority McHugh had for writing the letter.

Chairman Smith said McHugh probably anticipated the questions.

D. O. Castle, of the local firm of Haas & Cattle, testified that Kearney worked for Niewonger & Castle in handling horses, but he was discharged because he was unreliable. Kearney told witness and his partner one thing and did another. He was untruthful.

Willis Parker, a judge of the race, said he weighed in Walter Maben, the driver of Stamboul, before the performance and knew he had full weight. The witness adjusted the weight and still holds the dead weight carried. The track was good and it was not raining when the horse started, but rained a little when he finished. Kearney made no objection to the record. The witness considered all the miles trotted on the track as being fairly good. Asked about reading the time from the judges' stand, the witness said he didn't think a person could see the timers down stairs.

Assemblyman LaRue was called again to explain the advertisements of the record meetings. Stamboul made his record of 2:08 on a day when there was a match race, Oct. 27th. Mr. LaRue said it would be impossible for Kearney to see a horse in the timers' stand on the south side because he could not see through a staircase. The witness repeated that Kearney authorized him to sign the record. Kearney offered to sign it and LaRue said he would sign for him, and Kearney said that would be all right. The witness declared positively that Kearney did authorize him to sign the record. Mr. LaRue thought there were about 50 to 100 persons on the track when Stamboul made his record of 2:07 1/2.

Mr. Ashley proved by Willis Parker and Senator Langford that they did not authorize McHugh to write a letter to Mr. Cross. The object of this testimony was to show that McHugh did not mean any judge but Kearney when he wrote the famous letter.

W. B. Ruggles, a judge, said that Kearney was not one of the leading citizens of the growing town of Lodi, but was a creature feud.

L. S. Shippee testified to the correctness of the records made before the Stamboul performance, which he did not see, as he was ill that morning. He said Orrin Hickok had investigated the matter at the request of Mr. Allen and said the record was all right. Crow, who drove the masher, said he took that Stamboul made the half mile in 1:02 1/2 and kept on very fast to the three-quarters post, when Crow lost the time in attending to his horse. A man who said the mile was made in 2:17 told Hickok he was at a stable 250 yards away, and timed the horse by the bell. Mr. Shippee said the judges always enforced the rules and refused records to a number of horses for failure to keep within their limits. He knew Mr. Langford did not leave the Yosemite House that morning before a quarter to 10 o'clock.

At this point an adjournment was taken until next morning. Mr. Ashley said he wanted time to consult with Mr. Budd. He believed, they could trace this matter down to the beginning. The investigation involved personal matters, and it was important to consult before proceeding. The board adjourned to meet at 9:30 o'clock next morning.

In the morning a number of horsemen visited the track and tried to see if they could distinguish from the judges' stand the time on a watch held by a timer below. The trials proved conclusively that it was an impossibility for any one to tell whether a split second hand on a watch could be seen, as sworn to by Mr. Kearney. They came back to the city more fully convinced than ever that no credence could be placed in the testimony of a man who would swear to such a lie.

In regard to the advertisement of the record meetings held in Stockton, it was shown that they were postponed meetings and that they were advertised in the Independent, a daily paper published in the city of Stockton, on October 6, 7, 8, 9, 10, 11, 12 and 13. Twenty-five entries were made at each day of the meeting, according to the files shown. Local notices were inserted in regard to the races that were to take place; even on the day Stamboul won the crown a notice appeared, and it was announced that Stamboul would start for the world's record.

J. A. Shepard, Chairman of the Board of Supervisors, a citizen of the county for thirty-one years, testified that he never saw anything irregular in the conducting of the meetings. He was a horse breeder, and was interested. "There never was a race at which a director was not in the stand," he said.

Thos. Neesham (owner of Steve Whipple, 214), director of the Association for two-and-a-half years, testified that it was the aim of the society to always get the best timers procurable, and in regard to the judges, Messrs. Langford and Parker were among the best. The timers, Covey and Thompson, could not be depended upon. They were noted for accuracy in timing, and their reputation for honesty and truthfulness was most excellent. "We, as members of the Association, conducted all meetings so that the reputation of the Stockton track, so well earned, might be sustained."

David Young testified that Thompson's reputation was excellent in the community. He had great confidence in him and shipped a mare in his care to Chicago, and in his dealings with him found that he was honest and reliable in all that he said and did.

L. Gerlach, a resident for thirty-eight years in Stockton, testified to the facts, and said that the reputation of the management of the Stockton course was, that it was stricter than that of any other course in the State.

L. A. Richards, of Grayson, one of the largest land-owners and most extensive breeders in the San Joaquin valley, testified that Thompson's reputation was most excellent. He had a conversation with Crow at the Yosemite House on the day Stamboul trotted in 2:07 1/2. Crow said the time was 2:05 1/2. It had rained a little and the horse was excited by the little clods of earth striking him. He first heard of the doubtful rumors about three weeks after the day. The custom of the Society in observing all the rules and making trainers and drivers obey them had made this organization second to no other. Every one admitted that for restrictions no other society approached it. The trainers all over the State say if they got to Stockton they would have to live up to the rules.

When the Board commenced its session in the Pavilion at 9:30, the first witness examined was John H. McLeod. He said a dispatch addressed to John H. McLeod fell into his hands. It read: "Have you received an answer?" Answered as follows: "Charles Wesley, local notice, Secretary Ashley signed from this telegram and various other facts that McLeod was in the conspiracy and that the others were McHugh and Kearney. Williams, who had charge of the kite-shaped track, testified that a few days after the Stamboul performance Kearney came to him and said that he was out of the track of a pot of money and would spend the winter in San Francisco. He said the rest were getting money and he would get some, too.

Attorney Ashley then arose and said: "I would like to have this Board when it makes its report take into consideration the letter written by Secretary Ashley to Secretary Green, and the letter from Mr. Allen to Mr. Allen had told him he had received a letter from some man in Lodi offering to furnish proof that Stamboul's record was irregular for $2,000. Mr. Allen stated the man was employes and could not afford to have their names known for fear they would lose their jobs."

Mr. Allen then read the letter. It contains various erroneous statements concerning the Stamboul record, such as these: "The horse trotted in the rain," "It was before 10 o'clock," "The time was not announced," "Four men on the track held watches and all agreed the time was 2:16," and so on.

President Smith announced the letter and all other papers in evidence would be duly considered.

"I hate to suggest anything of the sort," said Secretary Ashley, "but I wish to remind this Board that the witness McHugh is not here. McHugh left the room under circumstances which are suspicious, to say the least. He was told to be here this morning. He is not here. I think he should be punished."

"This is a matter for this Board," interrupted Chairman Smith. "Very true, very true," remarked Ashley, "and I hope the gentlemen of the Board will pardon the suggestion that he ought to be vigorously dealt with."

At this point the proceedings took a turn that greatly astonished those who were present. W. C. Green, of Lodi, had been a quiet listener. He seemed to be highly interested in the proceedings, for by the knowledge that Green is a lawyer who rather likes to see a good race once and a while. He has spent money in banking up the Lodi track, and is generally recognized as a man with a turn of mind. When Ashley stated that McHugh should be punished, Green rose to his feet. As soon as Ashley finished Green introduced himself in these words:

"I appear as an attorney for Mr. Kearney and for Mr. McHugh. I was retained this morning and know nothing about the situation here more than this: McHugh is sick. He is sick in bed and I have a doctor's certificate to that effect."

Green threw the doctor's certificate on the table in front of President Smith. The certificate stated McHugh was threatened with pneumonia.

"Have you seen McHugh yourself?" demanded Chairman Smith. "I have not," answered Lawyer Green.

"This is very strange, to say the least," declared Mr. Carr. "It does not look just right. Why didn't McHugh tell us he was sick?"

"That I don't know."

"Why didn't he stay when he was here?"

"I cannot say."

"Why didn't he get excused?"

"And that I cannot answer," responded Green. "In fact, just as I have stated, I know very little about this matter. I will say, though, that I met the doctor last night and asked him where he had been. He said he had been to see a man named McHugh. At that time I had not been retained and did not know or imagine I was to appear here."

"You say he is sick?" broke in Attorney Budd.

"I have a certificate to that effect."

"Well, he wasn't very sick yesterday. He was around town all the afternoon after he left here. He was around Lodi until nine o'clock at night."

"He may have been for all I know," said Green. "I suppose he was, although I did not see him. I suppose he wanted to retain me as his attorney at that time."

"You say you represent Kearney and McHugh, do you?" asked Chairman Smith.

"I do," answered Green. "I represent Kearney and McHugh and the American Trotting Register Association. I mean to say I represent the American Trotting Register Association in so far as Kearney and McHugh represent that association. I wish to be distinctly understood. I have received no authority from the American Trotting Register Association except such as has been given me by Kearney and McHugh. If they have no authority I have no authority."

When asked to show what authority he had Green turned to Kearney, the individual who precipitated all this fuss. Kearney referred to the program which has been published in the Sacramento Bee's sensational article. He also showed a letter from Steiner asking him to gather what information he could bearing on the Stamboul record.

"I will now protest against the punishment of either McHugh or Kearney at the end of the going, and will also request a continuance of this inquiry. I do this because I desire to present to this Board proof of the most positive description showing that Stamboul's time was not better than 2:16. I wish to produce witnesses who will swear positively to this."

"Who are they?" demanded Chairman Smith.

"Some of them are now out of the State, as I am informed, and cannot reach here for some time."

"Who are they?" repeated Mr. Smith.

Green hesitated. "I am not sure," said he, "whether I can mention their names or not."

Then the lawyer turned to Kearney and asked: "Shall I name them?" "I don't care," granted Kearney.

"Well, then," said Lawyer Green, "their names, as I am informed are Crandall and Woods."

"We had to leave our affairs and come to Stockton to attend to this matter. We have put ourselves out a great deal. We summoned every person that we thought could throw any light on this matter. We summoned Kearney, McHugh and Grant Campbell. We summoned all of them. Kearney did not want to testify. McHugh slipped out as soon as he learned he would have to go on the stand. Grant Campbell we have heard from, and he says he has made to affidavit questioning the record. Don't you think you are asking a good deal when you ask us to continue this matter?"

"I think my clients have not had sufficient time. They—"

"No, my clients are by no means defaulters here. They are witnesses, and witnesses, merely."

"Yes, but wouldn't it be fair to them to grant them the time asked, particularly since Grant Campbell, a timer, and surely one of the most important witnesses, has not been heard? Isn't it fair to the other side?"

"No," responded Green. "You will surely admit that this has all come from these men I represent, won't you?" asked Green.

"That is not for this Board to say."

"Well, it looks to me as if Kearney had to uphold the other side," repeated Lawyer Green. "Surely he has been attacked; McHugh has been attacked, and it is imperative upon both of them to prove that this horse did not make his records. They must do this or forever lose their reputations; for their charge that Stamboul's time was 2:16 is what brought all this about."

"You're mistaken," spoke Attorney Budd, with much emphasis.

"What, what did bring it about then?"

"The attempt made by your clients to extort money by blackmail," was the reply. "Have you read the McHugh letter?"

"No," responded Green.

"Well, you had better read it. You will find there that he tried to extort money to suppress Stamboul's time and if you bring into court the letter that passed between McHugh, Kearney and Allen (the owner of Krenlin) you will find they also tried to extort money to show Stamboul's time. By the way, if you get a continuance will you bring before the Board those letters?"

"I will bring before this Board everything that I can," answered Green. "No, no, no, be more anxious to see this record established than I am. I want to see the truth proved because I am interested in the Lodi track. I am sure I will aid this Board to get the facts in every way I can. I would like to see the record maintained as well as any member of this Board, and would feel as well pleased as any member of this Board."

"It is not to maintain the record that this Board wants," stated President Smith. "It is to get at the truth and the whole truth. But you say you want witnesses Crandall and Wood. I am informed they are now in Oregon. This Board has no authority to send to Oregon."

"I will send for the Oregon witnesses."

"Will you also bring Kearney and McHugh?"

"I will. I assure you that."

"I don't know," said President Smith, doubtfully, as he turned to Kearney and asked: "Kearney, didn't you agree to have two witnesses here this morning?"

"I did," answered Kearney.

"Are they here?"

"No, sir."

"Are they coming?"

"They said they were coming over on the noon train."

"You said you would certainly bring them with you when you came this morning, didn't you?"

"And you didn't do it?"

"No, but—"

"There, you see," said Chairman Smith, leaning back triumphantly and looking at Green, "there is no reliability there."

Secretary Ashley took advantage of the situation to say: "All the evidence that these men can bring before this Board was brought before De Lashmuit. De Lashmuit weighed it all carefully and reported that there was nothing in it and that the record was fairly made."

Mr. Broadhead and Mr. Allen, after receiving Mr. De Lashmuit's report, enrolled the record of Stamboul as 2:07 1/2. It so appears in their catalogue.

The remaining witnesses were Louis Gerlach, Wm. G. Layne of the BREEDER AND SPORTSMAN, L. A. Richards, Sam Gamble and C. P. Newdham. They testified to the good character of the men connected with the San Joaquin Valley Agricultural Association, that they bore splendid reputations for integrity and that it was impossible to tell the time on a stop watch held by a timer from the judges' stand on the Stockton track.

On Lawyer Green's promise to produce all the evidence he could bring before the Board, an adjournment was taken until Thursday evening next in San Francisco.

ASYLUM STOCK FARM SALE.

The Greatest Collection of Royally-Bred Stock Ever Offered at Public Auction in California is Catalogued.

The time for securing bargains in well-bred standard trotters is near, and it is to the interest of every farmer and horseman to secure the very choicest as soon as possible. The approaching sale of the Asylum Stock Farm trotting stock should not be neglected. The grand collection of stallions, broodmares, colts and fillies, besides the handsome fleet-footed roadsters that have been gathered together by one of the best judges of horseflesh in the United States, must be sold. Every individual offered will go for whatever it will bring. These are the orders, and they are peremptory. When we say that the cream of all the stock farms in the State is to be found in the collection, we know that it is no idle boast. Representatives from Oregon and Kentucky are found beside those of our own loved State.

Every stallion of note, viz: Stamboul, Guy Wilkes, Director, Electioneer, Tilton Almont, Dexter Prince, Rupee, Eros, Eclectic, Mortimer, Dawn, Alcona, Paacoast, Sable Wilkes, Cassius M. Clay Jr., 22, Sidney, Simmocolon, Hambletonian Mambrino, Soudan, Alcona Jr., Le Grand, Mambrino Wilkes, Rustic, Ashland Almont, Gaviota, Silver Bow, Admiral, Balkan, General Dana, Gen. Benton Jr., Fitz Janes, Fred Arnold, Mohawk Chief, Oaknut, Elect, Privateer, Grand Moor, Signal, Blackbird, Bonner and many others are represented by sons and daughters that trace to the most famous trotting campaigners in California.

The black colt Almonition (by Alcona, dam Pansy), with a record of 2:24 1/2, as sound as a dollar and as game and handsome a trotter as ever looked through a bridle, is there. He is well-bred, too, and with a perfect right to go in 2:15 this fall. Halves in 1:09 he has trotted, and this year he is stronger and faster than ever. Some driver and trainer should get him.

Sid Fleet, 2:26 1/2, is a two-year-old the best-formed, strongest-limbed, purest-gaited and most perfect-built son of Sidney ever foaled. He is out of a famous producing dam. Those who believe in having a great matron in a pedigree of a sire should get him, for after his days on the track are ended what a sire he will be. He should, as a four-year-old, this season, get a mark of 2:18. He is sound, kind and in splendid order. By the way, all of these are looking splendid and are as perfect in condition as any ever sold in this State. Most of those offered will be shown in harness, and Sid Fleet and Almonition will be among them.

Director blood is valuable. The black stallion, Director Jr. (full brother to Corrector, a horse that trotted quarters as a four-year-old in 31 seconds), bred exactly like Direct, being out of an Echo mare, grandam thoroughbred, will also be sold. He is as handsome as a picture, and should be given to a trainer this fall. His colts shown in the sale will be living testimonials of his worth as a sire; they are race horses of the first class.

Stonewall, the large Director—Steinway stallion that is a credit and an honor to both of these game trotting families, will also be sold. "What a stock horse he will make when he gets through his races this fall!" will be the remark of every good judge at the sale. A stronger-limbed, stronger-horned or strooger made horse never entered the paddock of a stock farm than he. He traces to the famous St. Clair family that has done so much for Richards' Elector. All of his dams were fast mares, and the road never seemed too long for them. The three-year-old Electus, by Gaviota, dam Lilly Vernon (dam of Belmont Boy, 2:15), will at once elicit praise by his stylish appearance and smooth, easy way of going. A representative Electioneer he is, and a remarkably good one, too. The purchaser of this horse will have no need to regret it, for few better made colts are to be met with anywhere.

Here is a race horse, one that can go down the line in the hottest of company and never re-inquire an inch to a competitor—the handsome bay stallion Sablemont, by the greatest young sire of the year, Sable Wilkes, 2:18, out of Belmonta, a thoroughbred; game to the core and as beautiful as one could wish. His handler says he never rode behind a two-year-old as fast as this. The Sable Wilkes colts are esteemed highly everywhere; they brought the biggest prices in the New York sales, and there were none offered as promising as this one.

The two-year-old chestnut stallion Wallace Wilkes, by the mighty Guy Wilkes, dam Libbie B. (sister to Mollie Drew, 2:27) is "cream in the can" and one of the most promising youngsters ever bred at the San Miteo Stock Farm. He was purchased because of his breeding, phenomenal speed and perfect conformation. What a horse he will make to enter for the events for two-year-olds this fall! There are few sons of Guy Wilkes in this State that will compare with Wallace Wilkes. Lack of space prevents us from tabulating the pedigrees of these young stallions. They are all bred in the most fashionable lines and are worthy of being placed in a trainers' hands or at the head of any stock farm in the United States.

The two-year-old colt Loch More, by Ashland Almont out of Amy by Mambrino Wilkes, will show the people at the sale how fast a clip he can go. It will hardly be necessary for the auctioneer to say much when this fellow and Novato, a son of Dawn, 2:18 1/2, out of a Rustic mare, are trotted up and down the stretches. Two faster colts of their ages are not on any stock farm to-day. This is a bold assertion, but they will prove it on the day of the sale. It will pay the public to go to this sale just to see these youngsters move.

The three yearling colts, Adelaide, by Eclectic (brother to Arion, 2:10 1/2), out of the game trotting mare Kitty Almont, 2:22 1/2, should be the first to enter the list to the credit of his handsome sire and famous dam. He is a coal black diamond of the purest kind, and a better bred one would be hard to find. Merlin is the name of the other Eclectic colt. He is out of Lilly S., by Dawn, 2:18 1/2, and as he traces twice to Nutwood, the greatest living sire, it is needless to add greater praise. He is a trotter, if there ever was one. But here comes a beauty, Clay Sid, by the phenomenal sire, Sidney, out of Pansy (dam of Almonition, 2:24 1/2). This fellow is bred to the Queen's taste, and a better looking yearling would be difficult to find. What a stock horse he will make, for every colt out of Pansy was noted for speed and gameness, and as this one has, added to these qualifications, "more speed from Sidney," what a good future he has.

The famous mares Veronica, 2:29, and Pansy should be purchased by the Palo Alto Stock Farm. Better looking or more uniform breeders of speedy youngsters are not to be found. Such mares are scarce. Veronica is considered by experts to be one of the finest-formed mares in California, and her colts and fillies are all fast. Kitty Almont, 2:22 1/2, is so well known as a race mare that all of our readers will be glad to see her looking so well. She cost J. H. White $2,500 after she had left the race track, and is the dam of the handsome Stamboul filly, Helen White, that will be sold also at this sale. The scarcity of Tilton Almont mares and Stamboul fillies should make the bidding lively for all these grand individuals.

There is Bessie Pancoast, by the great sire Pancoast 1439 (sire of Ponce de Leon, 2:13, Patron, 2:14, Garnet, 2:13, and a score of others), out of Bessie Bowne, by Dictator 113 (the sire of the dam of Nancy Hanks, 2:04); second dam Lady Lightfoot, 2:35 (as a two-year-old); by Mambrino Time 1686 (son of Mambrino Patchen and the famous mare Puss Prall); third dam by Paddy Burns; fourth dam by Moseley's Copperhead. This filly is as beautiful as a picture and one of the purest-gaited, finest-formed individuals in the sale. When it comes to fashionable breeding what other filly in this State equals her?

Nellie K., by Simmocolon, 2:13 1/2, dam Sedina, 2:28 1/2, by Sidney, 2:19 1/2, is another royally-bred one, and as her sire and dam are well known, it can be truly said that with such a blending of royal bloodlines this filly has a right to be considered one of the very best offered.

The handsome five-year-old mare, Maid of Wood, that is stunted to Sidney, will also be sold. She is a sister to Kitty Lee, 2:29, and is sired by Hambletonian Mambrino 5:24, out of Lady Wood, by Rockwood 1467; second dam Lady Clark (dam of Lady Maid, 2:23); by Kisbar 1:27 1/2; third dam Coley, by Grey Eagle; fourth dam by Morse Horse 6. Some breeder will get this one, and her produce will be a gold mine to him every year.

Besides the above there are over one hundred and forty just as well bred, just as handsome and promising as colts, fillies, broodmares and roadsters that will be sold for very low prices. This is an opportunity not to be neglected by breeders. Every farmer who wishes to improve his stock and raise a class of horses that he can sell; every horse breeder who wants to get the most fashionable strains of trotting blood out his farm; every trainer and driver who wants a horse to win money with in the races; every gentleman who wishes to select a first-class, well-trained, stylish roadster that is fast and reliable; every young man who wants to buy a colt or filly to raise and train, and every lover of a good horse who wishes to see the finest collection of trotting stock ever brought to San Francisco should be on hand. Remember the sale takes place on the 2nd and 3rd of March at the Bay District track. Catalogues will be sent on application.

Dan McCarty Wins.

White-hat Dan McCarty is the luckiest man in New York for he has won his suit against the Altonwood Stock Farm. The amount of money involved is nearly $100,000 and, as Daniel has been investing all of his spare wealth in unimproved lands and Dexter Prince world-beaters lately, the money he will get out of this case will come in very nicely. Californians can look for the return of this celebrated horse-man very soon.

FORTY-ONE mares have been looked to Waldstein year. Mr. Hogboom writes that the stallion never let better.

THE STAMBOUL RECORD.

The meeting was called promptly at 7 o'clock at the rooms 313 Bush street. Capt. N. T. Smith and Jesse D. Carr conducted the proceedings, Frank Shay, secretary. The large rooms were filled with interested horsemen who came from Stockton, Sonoma and Sacramento. Attorney W. Green, of Lodi, was there with his client Kearney. H. M. McHugh, the penman, was at the entrance of the building when the investigation commenced, but failed to put in an appearance. He was in consultation with his attorney, Mr. Louttit. The evidence only verified that presented at Stockton. The conspirators attempted to extort money from the Hobart estate and also from W. R. Allen, and were it not for the fact that Jesse D. Carr had to leave Friday morning for the East, the committee would have almost concluded the taking of testimony to-day. The testimony of McHugh, the affidavits of Woods and Crandall, and the letters from W. R. Allen and J. H. Steiner are all that are necessary, but with the exception of McHugh's testimony the balance is expected every day. The amount of damage to the horse business in California that these conspirators have been guilty of cannot be calculated, and an example should be made of them.

Mr. J. Crowe being duly sworn testified that he drove the team on the day Stamboul trotted. He made the mile in 2:17 1/2, but he could not swear that the time was correct, it may have been 1 1/2, he never announced the time, as he had no confidence in his watch. Track was good. It began raining after they got away. It was 10 o'clock when they started. The answer would have gone faster if the track would be better.

John C. Gooby, trainer and driver, being sworn testified that he was driving for F. A. Arderton at Stockton. He made the time 2:18; he started his watch with the horse and went into a stall which was about 150 yards from the wire, when the bell tapped he did not know whether it was the time the horse came in or whether it was the time the record was announced at the stand. He stopped his watch then. He said "I never questioned the time of 2:17 1/2 as I did not see Stamboul start."

"Now, he went on, turning again to McCloud, "why didn't you go to the track officials with your complaint against Stamboul's time instead of to Allen, who was so anxious to have it questioned?" "I thought they would laugh at me," was the lame explanation. "We have sufficient evidence to catch McHugh," said Attorney Budd at the conclusion of the investigation. "He is at the back of this whole business. The letter in our possession proves him guilty of attempted extortion. Wood, a driver for an Oregon man, and McCloud are also implicated. Kearney appears to have been a tool in their hands. We are now waiting for some of the correspondence."

Imp. Consternation.

These were the times the writer saw imp. Consternation led out in all his glory to an admiring crowd.

I have a book in my possession that describes him thus: "As a brown horse dappled with bay, an unusual, but rich and pleasing color. He was fully 15 1/2 hands high without his shoes, and weighed between 1100 and 1200 pounds, compactly built, and for a thoroughbred, having remarkable bone like his immediate ancestors, Confederate, Curiosity, Figaro, etc. Indef his sire, Confederate, after being withdrawn from the turf was kept by his breeder, Earl Fitzwilliam, to breed hunters and carriage horses from, owing to his size, bone and symmetry, properties which eminently marked his progeny. His dam, Curiosity, was a large, strong mare and her sire possessed the same characteristics. The size and bone of Consternation are not therefore accidental or merely individual traits, they belong to his family and are consequently far more likely to be transmitted to his descendants, and experience has shown that he almost invariably transmitted these properties to his descendants. Consternation was beautifully symmetrical in all his proportions with a plumpness and roundness of outline unusual in the thoroughbred, more like a perfect hunter or exceedingly stylish carriage horse, but without a particle of coarseness or deviation from a true bloodlike look. He was a horse of extraordinary mettle and activity, rapid in all his paces, singularly elastic and graceful in all his movements. Could walk nearly five miles an hour, and was a beautiful and rapid trotter. No doubt he might have made a fleet if not a crack trotter in the hands of Woodruff or Wheelan. He ran but one race, which he won, and never was beaten in the show ring."—American Trotter.

Some Queer Things the Pacers Have Done.

The fastest mare that ever produced a 2:30 trotter is the pacing mare Mattie Hunter, 2:12 1/2. The horse that has produced the three fastest horses that ever went in harness was a pacer called Tom Hal.

The fastest horse—Brown Hal 2:12 1/2—that ever produced a 2:10 horse is a pacer—Storm 2:08 1/2.

The fastest stallion by 3/4 seconds is a pacer—Mascot. They have captured ten out of the fourteen records held in the 2:08 class, and captured nine of the ten in 1892.

They hold over two-thirds of the 2:10 records, and nearly all of them are race records. His daughters have produced the ex-queen of the trotting turf, Maud S., and the fastest trotter of his day, Jay-Eye-See.—Clark's Horse Review.

JUDGE S. K. DOUGHERTY, of Santa Rosa, has been permitted to put some choice-herd stock in the Asylum sale, which is advertised to take place at the Bay District track on Thursday and Friday, March 2 and 3d. Among them is Sabelle, a yearling filly by Sahle Wilkes, out of Betsey, the dam of Doc Button, grandam old Lady Button, dam of Alexander Button, the sire of Yolo Maid, Tom Ryder and more than a dozen other good ones in the list. Here is concentrated prepotency that the buyer of to-day is seeking for. If she is of good form and shows speed she ought to bring a good price.

M. L. SAYLES, the well-known owner of the trotting horse Temple Bar, began suit against the Cleveland Driving Park Association for $100,000 damages last Tuesday. At the summer meeting of 1892 Temple Bar, its owner and driver were expelled from the National Trotting Association because of alleged unfair driving in the 2:19 class, and Sayles claims that the trotter was thereby rendered valueless to him, and he therefore asks for damages in this sum named.

AN excellent opportunity is presented of securing two gifted young stallions, one by Guy Wilkes from an Arthurton mare, the other by Dexter Prince from a Nutwood mare, second dam the dam of Beauty Me, 2:14 1/2. See the Sulphur Spring Farm advertisement in another column.

CATALOGUES of the Asylum Stock Farm sale are printed and can be had by applying to Messrs. Killip & Co., the well-known auctioneers.

MILLARD SANDERS, who started East with Sidney, telegraphed from Cleveland, "Arrived safely. Horses well, without a scratch."

Brook-Nook Rancho.

The Brook-Nook rancho, Home Park, Mont., announces the purchase of Alaska, 14,429, a son of Electioneer. Alaska is a brown horse, about 15-3 hands, and weighs in condition about 1,200 pounds. Electioneer, his sire, is so well known to all lovers of the horse it is needless to more than say that as a sire of trotters he leads all other stallions living or dead, having at the close of 1892 one hundred and thirty-one of his get in the 2:30 list. His sons are breeding on, having already sired one hundred and sixteen with records better than 2:30.

"Green Mountain Maid, the dam of Electioneer, by virtue of being the dam of nine in the 2:30 list, has been with justice denominated "the great mother of trotters."

The dam of Alaska is Lucy, by a son of Geo. M. Patchen Jr., more generally known as California Patchen, which is very popular as a broodmare sire, his daughters being the dams of fourteen in the select list.

As an individual, Alaska is a typical Electioneer. He possesses a powerfully knit frame, well harnessed with muscle, shoulders powerful and well thrown back, loin full; he is deep through the heart, with well-sprung ribs, and good in the flank as well. His limbs are of the clean, hard, wiry sort, and are well supported by excellent feet. He is a horse of great speed; his gait is long and low, and carries him with the least possible apparent expenditure of force. He, in disposition, is a model at all times both in harness and in the stable. Alaska was campaigned this year, but obtained no record. At Independence, in the 2:45 class, he was second to Azote in 2:22; in the 2:40 class he trotted second to Frank Quirk in 2:18; the latter horse winning by a head, and second to Clara D. in the fourth heat of same race in 2:20. At St. Joseph, Mo., he took fourth money in 3:00 class, and trotted second to Ulee Wilkes in the 2:37 race, all three heats being better than 2:25.

The Breeders' Gazette of December 14th has this to say of Alaska:

"One of the incidents which illustrate how a horse may be a very fast trotter, he anxious to get a record in a race and still be unable to do so, is told by John Dickerson, the well-known Indiana driver, in a letter to a friend in this city concerning the Electioneer stallion Alaska. This horse, which is owned in Montana, was sent East last fall to be campaigned, having shown the ability to step a 2:20 gait, and it was confidently expected that he would be able to obtain a race-making that would be a credit to him. Alaska trotted a number of races and was always close to the front, but on each occasion met one or two animals that outclassed him enough in speed so that he was never able to be in front at the finish of a mile. In one of his races he trotted in 2:06 1/2, and yet in spite of that fact he goes into winter quarters with no record. He was one of the first sons of Electioneer to sire 2:30 speed, and as it is possible he may never obtain a record of 2:30 or better it is just as well while the fact is fresh in the minds of a great many people to chronicle his 2:06 1/2 performance, although it was a losing one and consequently not entitled to a place on the books. Alaska can therefore be counted among the developed sons of Electioneer that have sired 2:30 speed, and it is an interesting fact and one which should carry a lesson to breeders that nearly every one of the sons of Electioneer that have sired 2:30 speed is himself a fast trotter."

Alaska is the sire of Lena H., 2:29 1/2, while several others knocking for admittance to the 2:30 list. His colts are all fast, and judging from his breeding and race horse qualities, he should be a sire of more than ordinary merit.—Rocky Mountain News.

To Owners of Race Horses.

The attention of owners is called to the following: NEW YORK, January 2, 1893.—Under power delegated to the Board of Control, by the Coney Island, Brooklyn and New York Jockey Clubs, and the Monmouth Park Association's registration under the following Rule of Racing may he made at any time with the secretary:

"Rule 25. All partnerships and the name and address of every person having any interest in a horse, the relative proportions of such interest, and the terms of any sale with contingencies, or of any lease or arrangement, must be registered at least half an hour previous to the race with the clerk of the course before a horse sold with contingencies, or leased, or which is a joint property can start for any race; and all partners shall be jointly and severally liable for every stake or forfeit.

"All statements of partnership, sales with contingencies, leases or arrangements, shall declare to whom winnings are payable and with whom the power of entry or declaration of forfeit rests, and shall be posted by the clerk of the course in the offices of the association, but the real names of persons who have registered an assumed name shall not be disclosed."

The necessity of registering all partnerships in horses or assumed names with the Board should be very plain to owners. Neglect to do so might cause a horse winning a race to be disqualified. Rule 75 of Racing states that "An objection on the ground that he has run in contravention of the rules of partnership may be received up to the forty-eight hours, exclusive of Sunday, after the last race of the last day of the meeting."

The signature of each party to a partnership is required. W. S. VOSBURGH, Secretary.

Lumpy Jaw.

Secretary Rusk has received from Dr. Salmon, Chief of the Bureau of Animal Industry, a report on the experiments and investigations being made in Chicago in the treatment of cattle for actinomyces or "lumpy jaw." The report concludes that the remedy tried—iodide of potassium—is a remarkable success, 63 per cent. of the cattle there treated having been cured. The greater part of these were very seriously affected when taken for treatment. The report shows the cost of treatment to be trifling by comparison with the results, and it is also proved that the disease is not contagious, twenty-one head of healthy cattle having been confined in close quarters with the diseased for three months without showing any signs of being infected. The report severely arraigns the Live Stock Commissioners of the State of Illinois for what it regards as arbitrary and inconsistent rulings by which grave losses have been inflicted upon stock-owners seeking a market for their stock in Chicago. Animals have been condemned without proper appraisal, and the owners have not received fair compensation from the commissioners. Dr. Salmon charges unjustifiable interference on the part of the commissioners with the experiments of the bureau.

J. O'KANE has just completed a lot of work for the World's Fair. It is a credit to this well-known harness manufacturer and will demonstrate to the Eastern horsemen that the fame of this splendid workman is founded on something tangible.

Old Prodigal.

We tip the following from the Illustrated Sporting and Dramatic News just to hand, and give our readers the benefit of it without comment: In my inquiries after old horses that have won races, I have found nothing to equal this—har Hickory Jim, whose record is somewhat doubtful. "Dear Rapier," Mr. Wallis Brooke kindly writes, "how about old Prodigal? He was twenty-four years old when he won the great Hawkesbury Handicap in New South Wales; and it takes a good horse to do that. It was, moreover, his first appearance on a race course. What he did afterwards I do not know, except that he was so successful that he carried top weight in all the handicaps; in fact, it was this chiefly that led to his retirement from the turf, as it was impossible to get him in at anything like a reasonable weight. He died at the age of thirty-two or thirty-three, but up to the last he ran in the small local races up country, and almost invariably won. At a distance he was invincible, if only allowed to run his own race. His method was to lie off for a mile or so, and then when he did come it was terrific. He was handicapped top-weight with the celebrated "Dagworth," to my mind perhaps the finest thoroughbred I ever saw, and, in his day, as famous as Carbine. [Dagworth won the Hawkesbury Spring Handicap in 1872-'73.—ED. REFEREE.]

For many years old Prodigal was used as a pack-horse by cattle drovers, and could have been bought, and no doubt was often sold at from £8 to £12, it being by accident that his marvelous staying and racing abilities were discovered. He was the 'last of the Bezas,' a name well-known in Queensland. Old 'Beza' was an Arab imported from India by General Haly. This may seem to you all a romance, but is solid, cold drawn fact, and any Australian racing man who is over forty can corroborate me. Prodigal was a gelding, as of course you can tell, and very likely on the station where he was bred there were plenty just as good. I only wish I had a few horses half as good as many I used to ride when in the 'back-blocks.' By the way, I fancy Goldsmith Maid, who was trotting when I was in 'Frisco, did her best performance when fourteen or fifteen years old. You remember her, I suppose? This would be another instance of aged horses runding wonderfully well. I don't fancy old Prodigal's record will be lowered easily. The only thing to be said about it is, that it happened in Australia, and it is rather hard to convince the ordinary Englishman—so Mr. Brooke says, but I really do not think he is quite right—that horses are worth anything at all in Australia, or that Australians can ride, or know anything about horses. I dare say that you will hear from Australians in England or from the Colonial Press all about old Prodigal.

Answers to Correspondents.

Answers for this department MUST be accompanied by the name and address of the sender, but you did not favor publication, but as proof of good faith. Write the questions distinctly, on one side of the paper only. Positively no questions will be answered by mail or telegraph.

J. S.—Please state in your next issue the breeding of Roe Allan. Answer—There is no trace of his breeding.

Gonzales Tribune, Gonzales, Cal.—Please publish in next issue of your paper Victor's trotting record and pedigree. Answer—2:22 By Echo (son of Hambleton 10), dam by Woodburn.

Subscriber, Estrella.—Please inform me in next issue the breeding of Bloomsbury. Answer—By Boston, dam Diana, by Sid Hamet, the dam of Orphan Boy, is, we believe, the correct breeding.

H. C. B., Chico, Cal.—1. Please be kind enough to let me know if Bayford had a record and how many he had in the list. 2. How many had Woodford with records? Also what ones and how fast? Answer—1. He has no record. One in the list—Dr. Swift, pacer, 2:13. 2. Only one, Extravaçant, 2:25.

*A. H. B., Los Angeles.—1. Some time ago I wrote to you for the following information, but you did not favor me with it. The time made by the running horse Almont in the two races that he won in his two-year-old form at the State Fair meeting at Sacramento in the fall of 1888. Also the second and third horses and the weight they carried and who were their riders? 2. I would like to know the whereabouts of the jockey Mike Casey, who was riding for Hanger Jones in the fall of 1890? 3. The breeding of the running horse Ned Cook and some of his best performers. Answer—You did not in your former letter state in what year you wished to know Almont's best work at Sacramento. Now that you give the date. He ran a mile in 1:42 3/4 (100 pounds up, Lloyd), with Don Jose (100 lbs., Holloway) second and Pleno (109 lbs., Courtesy) third, in the California Annual Stake and a mile in 1:42 3/4 in the Nighthawk Stakes, carrying 81 pounds (Madden), Daisy D., 6 years, 115 lbs. (Holloway), second; Edelweiss, 5 years, 115 lbs. (Haslett), third.

STATE FAIR 1893.

THE STATE AGRICULTURAL SOCIETY HAS OPENED THE FOLLOWING COLT-STAKES FOR TROTTERS AND PACERS:

FOR TROTTERS. No. 1. FOR TWO-YEAR-OLDS (2:40 Class), $50 entrance, of which $10 must accompany nomination; $15 payable July 1st, and the remaining $25 payable August 10th, 1893, $30 added by the Society. No. 2. FOR THREE-YEAR-OLDS AND UNDER (2:30 Class), $100 entrance, of which $25 must accompany nomination; $35 payable July 1st, and the remaining $40 payable August 10th, 1893, $40 added by the Society.

No. 3. FOR FOUR-YEAR-OLDS AND UNDER (2:25 Class) Conditions same as for three-year-old class.

FOR PACERS. No. 4. FOR TWO-YEAR-OLD PACERS (2:40 Class). Conditions as to payments and added money same as No. 1.

No. 5. FOR THREE-YEAR-OLDS AND UNDER (2:25 Class). Conditions as to payments and added money same as No. 2.

No. 6. FOR FOUR-YEAR-OLDS AND UNDER (2:20 Class). Conditions as to payments and added money same as No. 2.

Entries to all the above stakes are limited to colts whose records are no better than the class named in conditions of each stake. In all stakes, failure to make payments as they become due, forfeits entry and money paid in, and releases subscriber from further liability. Five to enter, three or more to start. Money in each stake shall be divided as follows: To winning colt, all the stakes and 50 per cent. of the added money; second colt, 33 1/3 per cent.; third colt, 16 2/3 per cent. of the added money.

Two-year-old stakes, mile heats, three and four-year-olds, three in five. Any colt not winning a heat in three, or making a dead heat, is barred from starting again in that race. No added money for a walk-over, if but two start in any of the stakes, they must contest for the stakes paid in, and divide them two-thirds to winner, and one-third to second. Otherwise National Rules to govern.

Entries to close with Edwin F. Smith, Secretary, at office in Sacramento, March 15th, 1893. EDWIN F. SMITH, JOHN DOUGLASS, Secretary, President.

Stallion Ringwood, The Famous Son of Sidney.

Ringwood is a dark bay; black points; 15 1/2 hands, and resembles Sidney in formation more than any of his sons. He is a pure-gaited trotter, and has shown remarkable speed from a colt. With but little work, he showed trials of speed in 2:19 as a four-year-old, and would have received a record of 2:18 or better but for an accident at the Napa track, and was drawn from his engagements, and never has been put in race since. Ringwood is six years old, and as a sire of speed, form and color, is equal to his noted sire, Sidney. Several of his colts have been sold at high prices, and have gone East. He is a sure foal-getter and of fine disposition, and a lady can handle or drive him. Ringwood is highly bred on the dam's side. Alma was by Dash-away (the oxbred), he by Williams's Belmont, he by American Boy; second dam Fanny Cob, a noted roadmare brought from Canada to California. Alma is a noted producer of speed.

BLUE BULL,

(Known as CHISHOLM'S BLUE BULL.)

Sired by Wilson's Blue Bull (sire of 80 in the list) dam Maggie Rice, by Gage's Logan 127 (sire of Skinkie Hambletonian, 2:28 1/4, and 3 sires of 12 and 5 dams of 5 in the list); granddam Fanny Stratford, a mare s. t. b. thoroughbred. Gage's Logan was by Haubertian 10 out of Lady Wallace by Ohio Eclipse; granddam, Sally Miller by Post Boy, son of Duroc. This handsome Blue Bull stallion was foaled in 1879, the property of R. B. Chisholm of Kane County, Illinois. He is one of the finest-looking, purest-gaited and most intelligent horses in this State. His colts are all remarkably handsome, combining size with plenty of substance.

THE DANE 11,304, by Stamboul, 2:07 1/2, dam Dolly McMan (dam of Lilly Stanley, 2:17 1/2). This fellow is a true type of his noted sire, and should make a great trotter as well as a great sire. His colts, now yearlings, are considered to be unsurpassed for beauty and speed, and are all solid bays and browns and are "young Stambouls."

ALCONA 730, sire of 5 in 2:30 list, three producing sons and a pacin' daughter at fifteen years old, by Almont 33, dam Queen Mary, by Mambrino Chief. No two of this sire's descendants have ever been trained by the same man. His produce are forcing their way to the front without booming. They all trot fast and breed on. Alcona is the greatest prize winning stallion in California.

ALCONER 15,120, (5), brother to Alcona Jr. 2:19, by Alcona 730, dam Madonna (dam of Alcona Jr. 2:19, by Del Rey, 2:24 1/4, and grandam of Silas Skinner, 2:17, King Orry, 2:23 1/4) by Cassius M. Clay Jr. 22, etc.

THE GREAT TROTTERING MARE LILLY STANLEY 2,171-2, dam of the sensational trotter and pacer in Salisbury's string. It is expected that one of these colts will "bit the two minute mark."

A GREAT 3-YEAR-OLD Filly BY DIRECTOR 2:17-2, dam Tricks; second dam Katy Tricks (dam of Conde, 2:20, and Empruss, 2:24). This is a magnificent-looking one and will make a race mare of the first class.

Besides these there are a number of mares and fillies by Selenaw, 2:25 1/4, Mountain Boy, Grandissimo, 2:23 1/4, Alcona 730, Alconer 15,120, The Dane 11,304, Director, 2:17, Silas Skinner, 2:17, Whippleton 1883, Geo. Washington, 2:20, and other noted sires.

COMEDY, bl. f. (4), by Director, 2:17, dam Dolly McMan (dam of Lilly Stanley, 2:17 1/2). This filly is a perfect counterpart of her famous sire, and whoever gets her will have one of the greatest campaigners in America.

A TWO-YEAR-OLD FILLY BY GEO. WASHINGTON 2:20, out of Lucy by McClellan 143. This is a great filly, if one is to judge by the way she trots alongside a fast saddle horse.

A TWO-YEAR-OLD FILLY BY SILAS SKINNER 2:17, out of the famous old Lady Sargent. This one is a hammer, and will astonish everyone at the sale by her nice way of going.

CADUCAS 10,810 (4), by Almont Medium, 2:18 1/4, dam Amelia T. by Alcona 730, granddam Warwick Maid (dam of Prince Warwick, trial 2:15, and Warwick Medium, 2:35 1/2 as a two-year-old over a half-mile track), by Almont Mambrino 761. Here is one of the most fashionably bred young stallions in this State, and is a race-horse. If given an opportunity will get a low mark this fall.

A YEARLING FILLY BY AZMOOR 2:20 1-2, out of Urania by Kentucky Prince; second dam by Hambletonian 10; third dam by American Star 14. This breeding needs no comments; the filly is perfect.

A YEARLING FILLY BY DIRECTOR 2:17, out of Elma, 2:24, by Elmo 890. This filly is a natural pacer and is "fast as a bullet."

FOR SALE. THE GREAT

HIGHLAND STOCK FARM Near Lexington, Ky.

The Home of The Mighty Red Wilkes

SIX HUNDRED AND SEVENTY (670) acres of unsurpassed Blue Grass soil, all in grass, two hundred and fifty (250) acres being beautiful, open woodland. About twenty (20) large stock barns of 200 box stalls. Numerous paddocks with roomy boxes. Various cottages and other houses for employees. Coachman's quarters, vehicle and harness apartments, veterinary and farrier's office and shop, and numerous other buildings required in this extensive business. The main residence is an imposing two-story brick of twelve rooms. Another with eight rooms with conservatory and billiard hall; both of recent build, supplied with all modern conveniences of water works, gas lights and electric bells, which latter also connect outbuildings with the office. Telephone connection with Lexington. Only four miles to center of the city by turnpike and Louisville Southern Railroad. Station on margin of farm. Numerous daily trains. Pure limestone water to every enclosure by three force pumps and also by windmill. Living springs, pools and a number of large cisterns at the dwelling and barns. The best private track in the State. Farm enclosed and subdivided by the best fencing. The entire place is high table land, affording good drainage, insuring good health to stock and early and more nutritious grasses, in which two particulars Highland has always excelled.

Will have ready in a short time a detailed printed description of this great establishment, and later on will supplement this by a lithographed diagram of the entire place in its subdivisions and photographic views from different perspectives, all of which will be mailed to you on demand.

With great reluctance Messrs. France & Son agree to part with Highland, so delightful a home and a business too, which the public is aware has proven such a signal success, but the health of the former will not permit him to continue longer in the business. The price is made to insure an immediate sale.

DIRECT LINE

Limited to Twenty-Five Approved Outside Mares at $75 the Season, from Feb. 15 to June 1, 1893.

He will then be trained for a record. Direct Line is a fine-looking bay horse, stands 15 1/2 hands high, and is a splendid individual. He is by Director, 2:17 (who sold for $75,000); sire of Directum, 2:11 1/2, champion three-year-old in a race; Evangeline, 2:11 1/2, at four years for a race; Margaret S., 2:12 1/2, and Direct, 2:05 1/2, champion pacing stallion, and fourteen others from 2:16 1/2 to 2:30.

Dolly, dam of Director, 2:17, is also the dam of Carina, 2:21; Thorndale, 2:22 1/2 (sire of seven trotters from 2:18 1/2 to 2:30, and the dams of 16 in the list); Onward, 2:25 1/2 (sire of sixty-four with records from 2:14 1/2 to 2:30, and the dams of 206 1/2 pacing, and thirty-nine others from 2:18 1/2 to 2:30, and of the dams of Nancy Hanks, 2:04 (the world's record), and twenty-seven others from 2:19 1/2 to 2:30. Clara, dam of Director, Dexter, 2:17 1/2, and two others in the 2:30 list, is by American Star 14, sire of four trotters and the dams of forty-five in the 2:30 list. By Hambletonian 10, sire of forty trotters and of the dams of ninety-two in the list. The dam of Direct Line is Lida W., 2:18 1/4, dam of Nutwood Wilkes, 2:20 1/2, at three years, and is the fastest daughter of the great Nutwood 600, 2:18 3/4, who is not only the greatest living sire, but is also the greatest broodmare sire of 1892, he having put in twenty-seven and his daughters twenty-four in the 2:30 list. [For Lida W. see tabulated pedigree.]

CALIFORNIA NUTWOOD 15 119

LIMITED TO FIFTY MARES AT $50 FOR THE SEASON.

CALIFORNIA NUTWOOD is a handsome chestnut horse, stands sixteen hands one and a half inches high, and is the sire of Maud C., 2:19; Annie C., 2:25; Albert H., 2:27 1/2; Mollie C., 2:37 1/2, and several others knocking at the door. He is by Nutwood 600, 2:18 3/4, dam by Geo. M. Patchen Jr. 31, 2:27. This represents the best strains of Hambletonian and Clay blood, a combination that cannot fail to produce fast and game race horses, as well as great broodmares.

(For pedigree of Nutwood 600 and Geo. M. Patchen Jr. 31, see tabulated pedigree above.)

NOTE: You will hardly realize the strength of this breeding until you examine the above tabulated pedigree closely, then you will see that there is not only 7 great performers in 1891, but the greatest of sires, as well as brood mare sires. You also find a number of great brood mares, all of which you rarely find in the pedigree of two young stallions. Guy Wilkes, 2:15 1/4, and Director, 2:17 were not only fast and game race horses themselves, but are producing young and extremely game race horse speed to a wonderful extent. Guy Wilkes, 2:15 1/4, is the only horse living or dead with 8 in the 2:15 list. Director is the sire of Direct, 2:05 1/2, the fastest pacing stallion, and Directum, 2:11 1/2, the fastest three-year-old race horse the world ever saw. Now, with these two sires on one side of Nutwood Wilkes and Direct Line, and Lida W., 2:18 1/4, the fastest daughter of the great Nutwood 600, 2:18 3/4, on the other side, I cannot see how one can make a mistake in breeding a good mare to either of these two young horses. It looks as if we had everything but the possible nick and should get that nine times out of ten. Mares not proving in foal may be returned the following season free of service fee. Parties desiring the services of any of the above named stallions must send the mare or 10 per cent. of the service fee with the engagement. Excellent pasturage at $5 per month, and when the condition of the animals requires it, hay or grain, or both, will be fed at $10 per month. The best of care will be taken of mares, but no liability for accidents or escapes. Mares may be shipped direct to me at Irvington, Alameda County, Cal., via broad gauge railroad. All bills are due at time of service, but must be paid by Aug. 1st, 1893. No stock will be allowed to leave the place until all bills are settled. Season from Feb. 15th to Aug. 1st, 1893.

DESCRIPTION.

BOODLE, in color, is a seal brown; stands 16 hands and weighs 1,100 pounds. He has splendid limbs, a kind disposition, and is, in fact, a perfect horse in every respect. He is only seven years of age, and has not been bred to many mares, yet all of his progeny show that they are destined to be great performers. BOODLE was never banded for speed until very late last year, and many who saw him get his record believe he will trot below 2:20 this year. TERMS, $100 FOR THE SEASON, with the usual return privilege. Excellent care taken of mares, but no responsibility assumed for accidents or escapes. T. A. STOCKTON & CO., Owners.

SOUTHER FARM, 1893.

WILL BE ALLOWED TO SERVE FIFTEEN MARES OF APPROVED BREEDING. FEE $75. Season commences February 1st and ends June 1st, 1893. Other conditions same as Silver Bow.

DESCRIPTION. - Dark bay; 15 1/2 hands; foaled 1890. Fine head and neck well set on to strong pair of shoulders; fine mane and tail, good legs and feet. I consider him worthy of his royal breeding. He was not broken until August 15th, 1892, as I thought him at Lexington, Ky., and was unable to get him shipped out sooner. He already shows himself to be a trotter. His gait is faultless, and he can show speed enough already to make me think him a trotter. I think I could easily put him in the list if I wanted to this season, but no "tin-cup" record for me, as I raise horses to win money and his breeding needs no comment from me, and I will allow you to be the judge. WALDSTEIN 12,597. RECORD 2:22 1-2 In Fourth Heat.

Champion Stallion Record for Five Miles, 13:05 1/2.

DICTATOR 118. Sire of the fastest double-gaited horse in the world, Jay-Eye-see, 2:10 grand sire of the queen of the turf, Nancy Hanks, 2:04, and is sire of 35 in 2:30 list, etc. DOLLY. Dam of Onward, 2:25 1/2; Thorndale, 2:23 1/2; Czarina, 2:21; Director, 2:17; MAMBRINO CHIEF 11. Sire of 23 sires. FANNY, by Ben Franklin. Grandam of Lady Vindolice 2:25 and Abdallah Mambrino 3:15. HAMBLETONIAN 10. Sire of 40 in the list. GREEN MOUNTAIN MAID. Dam of 8 in the list. JOHN NELSON 187. Sire of 4 and the dams of 8 in 2:30 list. LAMOTT MARE. Dam of Aurora, 2:27, and grandam of 4 in the list.

WALDSTEIN was foaled in 1885. In color, he is a dark shade of brown with two white coronets; stands 15 1/2 hands and weighs 1100 lbs. He is one of the handsomest and most perfectly formed stallions in this State. He has fine, intelligent head, well-shaped neck, strong shoulders, short back, powerful loins, heavy quarters, well-shaped barrel, heavy, muscular stiles and arm, clean, straight, strong knees and hocks, short cannon bones, excellent pasterns and feet at once commend him to the observer as a representative trotting horse. In disposition he is kind, gentle and level-headed. His gait is perfection, and his races during his short career on the track fully demonstrate the same qualities which he possesses. His breeding cannot be surpassed. He is the only son of Director out of an Electioneer mare standing for service. Of his sires, can any more praise be said than his sons and daughters prove more sensational every year, and the races won by Waldstein's dam is by the immortal Electioneer out of Sisterdam of Albert W., 2:20, the sire of Little Albert, 2:10 1/2, the greatest trotter seen in 1892, and Vixen, the only mare that has a two-year-old and a three-year-old with records lower than 2:30. Waldstein's third dam was the famous Lamott mare, one of the greatest mares that ever came to California. She was also a great brood mare. Waldstein has four yearlings that have records; one has a record of 2:51 1/2, another 3:06, another 3:06 and the other 3:08. All his colts are natural trotters, perfect in form, solid in color and very strongly built. Waldstein cannot help being one of the greatest of sires. To the student of breeding, conformation and quality he fills the ideal. SERVICE FEE, $60 June 20th. No responsibility assumed for accidents or escapes, but the best of care taken of mares. Address B. S. HUGOBOOM, Woodland, Cal.

The Imported Thoroughbred Stallion MERRIWA

Will make the season of 1893 at Oakland Race Track 3 Days Each Week, at San Jose Race Track 2 Days, and at Fishner's Ranch, Coyote, Santa Clara County, 2 Days, from Feb. 10th to June 1st. MERRIWA.

And so on to the nineteenth dam. MERRIWA is a magnificent black horse, standing 15 1/2 hands, bred in 1880 by Frank Reynolds, of Tocal, Vide Australian Stud Book, Vol. IV, 46 to 132. By Goldsbrough from Habena, by Yatterdon from Atholone, by Blair Athol from Habena (winner of 1,000 Guineas in England), by Irish Birdcatcher from Thersilla, by The Saddler from Moneda, by Iamus, from Mooa, by Partisan. Merriwa is undoubtedly a very fast horse and through an accident which rendered his temporary retirement from the turf, has not had a fair chance to prove his great pace by winning. He is descended from one of Australia's greatest families, Goldsbrough, his sire, won amongst other races, the A. J. C. St. Leger Hawkesbury Grand Handicap, and Great Metropolitan Stakes, two miles; age, five years; weight, 128 pounds; time, three minutes, thirty-two and two-tenths seconds, fastest on record at that time. Goldsbrough had produced up to 1893 220 winners in the colonies.

And the winners by Goldsbrough are the following: The Broker (winner Normandy Stakes and V. R. C. Sires' Produce Stakes and Adelaide St. Leger) Mopeth (winner Battersall's Cup, Anniversary Handicap and Australia Cup), Impulse (won Wagga Gold Cup), Arsenal (winner Melbourne Cup, Sorolla, Melos (A. J. C. Derby and Leger and V. R. C. Champion Stakes), Algerian (Battersall's Spring Handicap, Sydney Handicap, &c.), Cardigan (winner Battersall's Foal Stakes, Hawkesbury Grand Handicap, Great Metropolitan Stakes, Anniversary Handicap, Summer Cup, &c.), Devotion, Merriment (winner Tramway Handicap and Hawkesbury Guineas), Ellerdale (winner Battersall's Cup), Impulse (winner Hawkesbury Grand Handicap), The Jewel (winner A. J. C. Christmas Gift, Kellib (won Hawkesbury Autumn Handicap, Rose Hill Handicap, &c.), The Orphan, Albina, Jettison, Manola, Cardones, Kilmore, (winner Royal Stakes), &c., &c. Atholone is the grandam of Merriwa, produced Habena (dam of Merriwa) and Narina, both winners of Marburying Plate. Gerardine and Huntingtower each ran second in that race, while Goldsbrough and Blairgowrie each ran third. It will thus be seen that Atholone's stock have performed with phenomenal success in that every of all racing men, the Marburying Plate.

TERMS - $60 FOR THE SEASON. Payable at time of service. Good pasturage at $5 per month. Mares cared for in any manner owners may desire and fed on hay or grain, either or both, at reasonable rates. No liability assumed for accidents or escapes. For further particulars apply to THOS. G. JOYNS, Agent, Oakland Race Trck, Or Care San Jose Race Track.

The Thoroughbred Stallion THREE CHEERS

Will make the season of 1893 at WM. M. MURRY'S STABLES, 715 Twenty-third street, Sacramento, Cal.

THREE CHEERS

Fourth dam Reality; fifth dam, by imp. Medley, sixth dam, by imp. Seaside; seventh dam, by Mark Anthony; eighth dam, by imp. Janus; ninth dam, by imp. Monkey; tenth dam, by Silvereye eleventh dam, by Sparker. (See Bruce's American Stud Book, Vol. I, Page 422.)

HURRAH, sire of Three Cheers, produced the great winner Bonnie Lizzie, Chaquita, Ohio Joy, Nellie Peyton, Little Buttercup, Red Fox, Madras, Brad, Referee, Monk, Hossage, Lady Middleton and many others. NEWMINSTER, grand sire of Three Cheers, won the St. Leger at Doncaster in 1851. His dam, BESSIE, was the winner of 61 of 107 races out of fifty-four starts, among them being the Doncaster Cup of 1837, 1840, 1841 and 1842, the only horse that ever accomplished that remarkable feat. Her sire was DR. SYNTAX, a famous race-horse.

THREE CHEERS comes in, in addition to the above, the great sire of Bay Middleton (winner of English Derby, St. Leger and Two Thousand Guineas) and the blood of the wonderful producing families of TOUCHSTONE, imp. TAUSTEL, EMILLUS and SIRCHABLES. As can be seen in the above, Three Cheers is bred in the speediest and stoutest lines. His dam, Young Fashion, was the dam of surprise, Scotland (the only horse that ever beat Asteroid a heat), Liverpool, Columbia and Bonnie Kate, the dam of Bay Battery, imp and the King, Bonnie Lizzie. His grandam, Fashion was the greatest race mare of her era, defeating Boston in that historic match at four-mile heats that is recorded as one of the greatest events in the annals of the turf.

THREE CHEERS is a beautiful bay in color, perfectly sound in wind and limb, his family on both sides being noted for their exemption from curbs, spavins, roaring or any other hereditary unsoundness. Horsemen who can appreciate the highest type of the thoroughbred are especially invited to inspect Three Cheers. He has already sired the splendid performers

Acclaim, Almont, Mystery, Cheerful, Applause, Ignacio and Royal Flush, AND THEY SPEAK FOR THEMSELVES.

TERMS. Seventy-Five Dollars for the Season. Good pasturage at $5 per month. Mares cared for in any manner owners may desire and fed on hay and grain, either or both, at reasonable rates. None but competent grooms employed, but no responsibility assumed for accidents or escapes.

∴ Dictator

DICTATUS

Will make the Season of 1893, commencing February 1st and ending June 1st, at

BELMONT STOCK FARM,

BELMONT, SAN MATEO COUNTY, CAL.

SERVICE FEE FOR THE SEASON..... $100
(Will be allowed to serve fifteen approved outside mares.)

DICTATUS was foaled in 1890. He was sired by the great RED WILKES 1749, (sire of 88 in the list); dam, MISS LOLLIE, by DICTATOR 133 (sire of JAY-EYE-SEE, 2:10, DIRECTOR, 2:17, and 41 others in the list, besides the dam of NANCY HANKS, 2:04, etc.); second dam, Gold Pen (dam of Felina, 2:29½, and grandam of Hill Boy (p), 2:20, by Mambrino Abdallah 2201 (son of Mambrino Patchen 58); third dam by Harold 413 (sire of Mand S., 2:03¾, and 41 others in the list and grandsire of Kremlin, 2:07¾); fourth dam, Emily Chester, by Mambrino Patchen 58; fifth dam Patsey (dam of Midway), by Snowsorm (sire of Jim Irving, 2:23). He is in color a chestnut, with star in forehead, one hind pastern white. In conformation he is perfect, being about 15.2 hands in height, very short back, strong over the coupling, heavy quarters, large, well-muscled gaskins and arms, limbs straight, cannon bones short, hocks and joints clean and hony, and feet of the finest kind. His neck, head and body denote an iron constitution. His shoulders are sloping, and, taking him all in all, a more perfect representative of the great Wilkes-Dictator cross does not exist to-day. His breeding speaks for itself. He traces four times to Hambletonian 16 through his greatest sires—GEO. WILKES, DICTATOR, HAROLD and ABDALLAH 15. He traces to Mambrino Patchen twice and three times to Mambrino Chief. His blood-lines are unequalled by any stallion on this Coast.

The best of care taken of mares, but no liability assumed for accidents or escapes. Service fee must be paid before mares leave the farm.

Training The Trotting Horse. BY CHARLES MARVIN.

This great practical horse book is a handsome, three hundred page octavo, bound in cloth, elegantly printed, superbly illustrated, and explains in every detail the remarkable success of CHARLES MARVIN and the whole plans and methods pursued at Palo Alto as to breaking, training, shoeing, cutting, driving, keeping, feeding and breeding trotters. Read what J. C. Sibley, the owner of St. Bel, says of this book: "In this work Marvin has let out all the mysteries of the craft, and it is so simple and plain that any breeder, owner, trainer or rider who has any wish for his business can take a coil as a yearling and develop to the highest and fullest extent that colts' capacity as a trotter. The work impressed me so strongly that I have ordered twenty copies, and shall place one in the hands of every owner on our farm." Mailed postpaid for $3.00. RULES AND REGULATIONS OF THE LODI RACE TRACK.

Rent of stalls, $2 per month each, in advance, with track privileges. Rebate allowed if stall is not used full month.

Those not renting stalls will be charged for use of track as follows: Single horse, $1.50 per month; two or more, $1.00 per month each.

Hay will be sold to those renting stalls at $8 per ton, and oats at $1.60 per hundred.

A fine galloping track has been built on the grounds in addition to the regular track and a number of new stalls have been added, making this the most convenient and well regulated quarters for horses on the Coast.

S. PROCTOR, Lessee

Lodi, Cal., October 27, 1892.

ITS OBJECT Is to prevent disease, to regulate the bowels and urine; it strengthens the kidneys, prevents scouring, colic and leg swelling; loosens the hide, fattens stock, promotes the appetite, cures coughs, destroys worms and bots, and produces a fine, glossy coat. To the stall-fed horse it has the beneficial effects and results of grazing without the softening effects of a season of grass with loss of time and money. For milch cows it increases and enriches their milk.

Old Bill.

Yer right, my friend, there is a hoss—
Or wor afore he got so old ;
There's good blood in him—Morgan cross.
Nigh thirty years since he wor foaled.
An' though he's blind, old age can't kill
The stylishness that's in old Bill.

I think a heap of our old Bill :
Mother and Sis is wus than me.
Sis? She's the school-marm on the hill—
A better one yer never see ;
A plucky gal, with mother's will,
An' full of style as are old Bill.

We got Bill kluder cur'us like—
A few weeks arter he wor foaled ;
His mammy died, an' brother like
Gave him to Gid, then two years old.
It's 'bout ten years since Gid went West ;
Of all Bill's friends he wor the best.

Bill never wor much good to work—
Gideon said he wor too smart ;
Just like most brainy folks he'd shirk,
An' let the others do his part.
I never see a horse so cute ;
With all his stylishness, to boot.

He won first premium at the fair,
At three year old—I tell yer wot,
Ther wor a heap of good ones there—
Next year he won the farmers' trot,
There worn't one of 'em could show
The clip that our old Bill could go.

Afore I joined the church, sometimes
I used to drive Bill into town,
An' I'd puceed to spend the dimes,
An' generally got loaded down.
When I'd get full, old Bill 'ud know ;
They'd load me in an' home he'd go.

When Gid went West, Bill seemed to fret,
An' whinner'd 'round a heap at night—
Sometimes I think he worries yet.
He shortly after lost his sight,
An' sis an' mother vow an' say
Bill ain't bin Bill since Gid went 'way.

Just walk up near him. Hullo, Bill,
What makes yer act so. Whoa! Come here.
There, stop yer fooling; now he still—
Why, darra it all, he's actin' queer.
WHAT! Mother! Sis! My boy! My Gid!
An' old Bill knowed yer fore I did.

WM. H. REESE in Horse World.

Recollections of the Early Morgans.

BY ALLEN W. THOMSON.

It was the writer's lot to be born and to have lived the most of his life in that part of Vermont where the Morgans were first bred, and where, too, they have always been the most numerous.

This, with the fact that he has taken something of an interest in horses, has naturally made him somewhat familiar with the characteristics of the breed. Yet, after reading some of the articles on the Morgans, I have felt that either I or the writers was mistaken as to these horses and their characteristics.

I will try and describe their traits as they impressed me. It is well to state that my feelings and sympathies were at first greatly in their favor. About the first the writer remembers hearing his father tell was his praise of old Woodbury and old Gifford. What a fine appearance they made at the trainings and musters, when ridden by the commanding officer! How high they carried their heads! What a light step they had! So handsome every way! This so excited admiration and feeling that one was somewhat carried away with them. It now looks as though my father might have been in some danger of having old Gifford on the brain, such was his praise and admiration.

Old Gifford was a very handsome pony-built horse, not much over fourteen hands high, and weighed a little over 900 pounds! In action, style and spirit he was not excelled. He was owned a few years in the town where I lived. I saw many of his colts, and when they were from large mares they made good-sized horses, about 15.2 hands high, and weighing from 1,000 to 1,050 pounds. His services then did not command a very high price. Many of his colts were got for half a dollar. The breeder of the Hackett horse paid but a quarter of a dollar for the service that got that horse. At that time in the village where Gifford was kept was one of his very best gelded sons. It was claimed that he was the first one that he sired. This may have been the case, as he was foaled in 1828. He was light chestnut in color, with some marks, 15.1 hands high and weighed 950 pounds. Aa a saddle horse or a driver he had no superior. So short and light was his step that in riding him one felt no motion. This I knew by experience. It was said that "it was as easy riding him as sitting in a chair." His easy, tireless gait made him a hard horse to follow all day. It was eighty miles from where he was owned to Burlington, and the Green Mountains had to be crossed. He was driven the distance a number of times in a day.

He was naturally kind, but instantly showed fight if abused. Once when he was taken care of by strangers, and used a little harsh, he showed so much fight that they did not dare to touch him, and sent for his owner. A few kind words from him and he allowed them to harness and hitch him to the wagon. All in the village felt a pride in his being owned there. When horse-buyers came and asked what good horses there were, this one was told of and his good qualities so extolled that the buyers would anxiously ask the price, and then they were told with something of glee that he was not for sale and could not be bought. Three hundred dollars was once refused for this horse. When he was twenty-two years old his owner's affairs became so involved that he had to be sold and brought at auction $55. He was used a while as a livery horse, and was then taken to Providence, R. I., and sold for $100, and was used there several years by a rich family as a driving horse.

Old Gifford was sold from the town where the writer was in 1844 for $100, and taken to New York. Not long afterwards Mr. F. A. Wier, of Walpole, N. H., took a fancy to the horse. He found Gifford in one of the towns hording on Lake George, drawing slabs from a saw-mill, bought him for $100 and took him to Walpole. The horse was then lame from corns. Mr. Wier took him into the village of Walpole in the evening so that the people would not see how sore and lame he was. In a short time, under Mr. Wier's careful treatment the lameness left him, and he rather astonished his neighbor by showing them the horse, his fine style, action and spirit (Mr. Wier states that he never cuts out corns in horses—merely files over them, and leaves them alone—and he has had the best results with treating them so.) In Mr. Wier's hands the price of Gifford's service was $30. In 1848 he sold him to a company for $1,800. The horse was at this time about "played out," as the saying is, and got but few colts after he was sold. He died in the fall of 1850, and was buried in the same lot with old Bulrush and the dam of Lady Sutton.

In the summer of 1847 two travelers stopped at the village hotel where Gifford had been kept. The talk turned upon horses, and then the good qualities of old Gifford and his high reputation was extolled. One of the travelers listened awhile, and then broke out in praise of the "South Royalton horse." He told that one time they were showing him in the street to bridle, when some one asked to see his gait. His attendant took off the bridle, leaving the horse in the street without anything on, and with other horses all around, while his groom went for saddle and bridle. His groom came back with them and put them on, rode the horse up the street, and the traveler said he thought the rider wanted the horse to act as lazy and awkward as he could, and it seemed the horse tried to do so; but when they got at the head of the street and turned to come back, he came as much like a chain of lightning as anything he could think of. It was not known or understood at the time that the one party had been praising the good qualities of the father, and the other the good qualities of his most noted son. Now a few facts will be given as to the "South Royalton horse," or as he is now called, Hale's Green Mountain Morgan, and generally known and called in Vermont, Old Green Mountain Morgan.

It was in the summer of 1833 or 1834 that Nathaniel Whitcomb, of Stockbridge, Vt., took to Stockbridge from Nashua, N. H., a mare that had been worked on the canal at Nashua. She was then called eighteen years old. Nothing was known or said as to her breeding. Mr. Whitcomb bred her that season to Clifford Morgan. The next fall George Bundy, of Bethel, Vt., bought the mare of Thomas J. Brooks for $5. Mr. Bundy let her run in the road. Near his place was a cider-mill. They often took the mare to grind the apples, and she went by the name of "the cider-mill mare." She was a low, thick-set mare that might have weighed 1,000 pounds, and at this time she was of a "mouse color." She had a ring-bone on one of her forward feet, but it did not make her lame. Mr. Bundy let the mare run in the barnyard the next winter, and in May she brought a colt that was known in that time as Old Green Mountain Morgan. Mr. B. sold the colt when four months old to Daniel Gay, of Stockbridge, for $25, and soon disposed of the mare, and nothing more is known of her. Mr. Bundy says he never heard it said that she was by Woodbury, or a Morgan mare, or of any other blood, as her breeding was unknown. Indeed, she must have been foaled before Woodbury Morgan. Mr. Gay sold the colt when four years old to Hiram Twitchell, of Bethel, Vt., and he sold him to John Woodbury, of the same place. At this time he was not broken. They had tried to break him, but through abuse he had turned "ugly" and contrary, and they could do nothing with him. (It is characteristic of the Morgans that they will not bear abuse or be driven by harsh treatment. They are the kindest of horses to handle if treated kindly, and the worst if treated unkindly.) Mr. Woodbury tried to break him the fall that he got him, but found him so bad that he gave it up, saying he would wait until harrowing-time came, and then he would break him. When harrowing-time came they hitched him to a harrow and drove him a while in a circle, but the horse went so fast that soon Mr. Woodbury lost his footing, and had to let him go. Being near the river the horse ran into it. The harrow got caught so that it held him fast. He was then in a foam and lather, and it was standing in the water that made him founder. One would not think, when he saw him at the fairs and musters that he was ever lame, but often when led from the grounds he would be so sore that he could hardly move. Still when asked to prance on parade no lameness could be seen. Nor would one think, either, when he became so perfectly broken that he was ever intractable. Mr. Woodbury sold him about 1812 to Silas Hale, of South Royalton, Mass., and he was known for several years as "the South Royalton horse." In Mr. Hale's pamphlet bill of the horse for 1853, he states: "The dam of Green Mountain was thought by persons who knew her and had observed her style, action and appearance to be a Woodbury mare. The certificate of George Bundy is given and it states: 'The dam of said horse was called a Woodbury mare. I owned her and put her to old Gifford, and she brought the colt known as Green Mountain Morgan.' The next is John Woodbury's certificate, and states: "His dam was a colt of the old Woodbury Morgan or was said to be by the one who raised her. She was a dark bay mare of great beauty and action."

Mr. Hale practically admits that the blood of the dam of his horse was not known. Mr. Woodbury does not give the name of the man who bred or raised her. Mr. Bundy's statement is not true, as he did not breed the mare to old Gifford. I have his statement in writing that he did not, and that he never heard her called a Woodbury Morgan mare either.

Old Green Mountain Morgan, as he was once known, but now generally called Hale's Green Mountain Morgan, had the greatest reputation, and was the most popular of any of old Gifford Morgan's sons. Woodbury was the most popular son of Justin Morgan, and old Gifford was the most popular of Woodbury's sons.

The season of 1851 Green Mountain (Hale's) was kept at four different places, and largely patronized. He was a remarkably prepotent sire, and stamped his characteristics on his progeny with great uniformity. He was not as finely made as was his sire, nor was he as good a stock-horse. He certainly did not transmit as much speed. He was shown at the fair at Woodstock, Vt., in 1890, and about a dozen of his sons followed him around the course, and they made a fine appearance. He died the fall of 1862.

In summing up the characteristics of the Morgans, it can be said that in disposition they are kind and affectionate, and in intelligence they are equal of any race of horses. Their heads show it. In endurance, hardness, pluck and spirit they are all that can be asked. In form and style they are handsome. Their face is often "dished," wide between the eyes, ears short, round at the end, and thick, indicating a strong constitution. The neck is rather thick and heavy, but arching finely; withers high, breast wide, showing great strength; fore legs placed wide, back short, body round, closely ribbed up, quarters smooth, rounding and well-filled out, showing great muscular development. The hind legs are rather crooked, but free from all hock unsoundness, and limbs short and heavy. A very small per cent. of the Woodbury Morgans have had ringbones, or been troubled with founder. One will find this unsoundness more frequently among them than among the Morrill's or Canadians, but will find curbs and among the Morgans.

Their short, quick, sure-footed step made them the best of saddle horses, and they were equally as good in the harness as drivers and roadsters. Though not as fast as some for a mile, yet for an all-day drive they would tire out many of the fast ones. It is doubtful if the first settlers of Vermont could have found a better class of horses for their use than were the Morgans.

Their handsome shape, fine appearance and high style at the trainings and musters made them the popular horse. At the first fairs, when the horses were shown to saddle and bridle, their popularity was maintained, but when the trotting course became a part of the agricultural fairs, then it was seen that more rangy horses, with larger bodies and a longer stride had the most speed. How at first the plucky, ambitious Morgan tried to stay with the longer striders, and how when they found they could not then they showed their temper, and would break and run!

There have been too many small ones among the Morgans. A small horse, unless having great speed, does not pay for raising, while a horse that is of good size and a good roadster will bring a good price without great speed. Since the demand has chiefly been for horses having great speed, the popularity of the Morgans has waned, and where thirty years ago all were Morgan stallions tracing to Woodbury, there is now scarcely one. Horses with more size and speed than the Morgans proper have now the call. It is well to note that there are less pacers among the Morgans than any of the other trotting families. It is claimed that Woodbury when he first started off paced. Of all the Morgan-bred horses I have seen but one inclined to pace. He was by Hale's Green Mountain Morgan, but there was a pacing-strain in his dam.

A grandson of Hale's Green Mountain Morgan sired the dam of Major, a black gelding with a record of 2:25, but he was from a fast pacing-mare by Pike's Black Hawk, that came from Canada, a very fast horse that sired fast trotters and pacers.

The Morgans are rather fast walkers. Clifton, by Hale's Green Mountain, once won a walking-race for $100 over Young Morrill.

I have seen a large number of the get of Hale's Green Mountain Morgan driven upon the course, and do not now remember of but one that beat 3:00. She was called the Strong Mare, was a chestnut with the shape and vim of the Morgans. She made a record of 2:55, but never was able to repeat it. She was bred to the long-striding horse, Cassius M. Clay 54, and by him produced several colts that made large horses and that had speed. One of her daughters got a record of 2:42, showed trials under 2:40, and could probably have been made to trot in 2:30. Now, will any one claim that if the Strong Mare had been bred to one of her sire's sons she would have produced speed? Her sire was bred to his daughters, but the result did not give speed, yet we are told that inbred Morgans have speed. It is only when crossed with rangy, long-bodied and long-gaited horses that we find great speed among the Morgans.

The best trotters are not bred entirely from one family. Their pedigrees show crosses of several of the trotting families.

One fact it is well to note, that when any tribe of horses are the popular breed, then many are falsely claimed to belong to that blood. It was so when the Morgan blood was the popular strain. Some of these pedigrees have been exposed, and there are more that can be.

Some writers set up claims for the Morgans that are false, because the pedigree on which they base their claims is false. They should first prove the pedigrees, then present the argument.—Wallace's Monthly.

A Sketch of the "Nitrate King."

A brief sketch of Colonel North, the man who is to race his horses on this side of the ocean this year, is given by an exchange in the following manner:

He is the "nitrate king" to the world. In the London Directory he is 'Colonel John Thomas North.' The story of his life reads like a tale from the "Arabian Nights."
