DISCUSSION TOPIC: WM AS A FREE AND OPEN KNOWLEDGE HUB	BREAKOUT SPACE: 1
ARTICIPANTS: Alice Backer, Mejan Wacha, Sandra Fauconnier, Kathrine Maha	TIME: 18:00
KEY POINTS: <ul style="list-style-type: none">- not just taking things, also being a hub for everyone- facilitating & inspiring.- "open" / free knowledge identifies for people- overlap w/ CC. but we = ^{platform} platforms. / OKFN- "open" is not just wikipedia- relevance for researchers, involve them in our movement- ↳ platform / space for experts; repository- oral history / storytelling- "open" is a more attractive / clear term than "wiki"- wikimedia = bad / difficult concept- participatory aspect = core value for us- 1 integrated experience for readers = hub.- interconnect our projects- feedback to researchers about "their" sources being seen, cited...	CONVENOR: THE DJ

CONCLUSIONS/RECOMMENDATIONS/ACTIONS (IF ANY):

- example of "hub" interface:

- monumental tool

- mobile home page

- Hay's Sum of All Knowledge

- Edu Found. dashboard

→ different "views" on top of our content from different sources

→ evaluating what exists?

→ toolkit for this may be helpful.

You must always be able to see the context, go back to the "original" content

- central router in data flows w/partners mutual updates

- enable people to create their own communities

connect.wikimedia.org

OKFN | OSM: partners, enabling them
open data

- people in charge of the identity of their "open" content = social feature

- build a social feature next to our other existing projects

Anonymity, pseudonymity is OK, full names too
