Those going from North Carolina can reach Washington over the Seaboard Air Line, the Atlantic Coast Line, and the Southern Railway, and the boats from Norfolk. They should leave Washington at 9:20 a.m.: to catch this train they will have to spend the previous night in Washington.

DEATH OF GENERAL RAMSEUR

After the battle of Second Cold Harbor, June 3, 1864, General Lee placed the divisions of Ramseur, Rodes, and Gordon under the command of General Early, and despatched them to the Valley of Virginia. They took part in all the fighting of Early's famous Valley Campaign during the summer and autumn of 1864. On October 19th Early attacked the Federal Army at Cedar Creek, near Winchester, Va., and the Federal Army was saved from a rout only by the timely arrival of General Sheridan, who was at Winchester when the battle began. Major-General Ramseur, in holding his line, was mortally wounded and fell into the hands of the enemy. He was taken to General Sheridan's headquarters, at the Belle Grove House, near Winchester, Va., where he received every possible attention from both his own and the Federal surgeons. He died at the Belle Grove House, October 20, 1864.

DEATH OF GENERAL PETTIGREW

At the battle of Gettysburg, Brigadier-General James Johnston Pettigrew commanded Heth's Division of the Confederate Army in the battle of July 1st, and in the famous assault on Cemetery Ridge on July 3d, in which he was wounded. During the retreat, which began on July 4th, he fell back with Longstreet's Corps, of which Heth's Division formed a part, crossing the Potomac at Falling Waters. There, on July 14th, the rear guard, under Pettigrew's command, sustained an attack by an enemy force who had been mistaken for Confederates, during which General Pettigrew was mortally wounded. He was moved to the Boyd House, at Bunker Hill, W. Va., where he died July 17, 1863.

RAMSEUR-PETTIGREW MEMORIAL

The two memorials marking the houses in which Generals Ramseur and Pettigrew died have been erected jointly by the North Carolina Historical Commission, the North Carolina Division of Confederate Veterans, and the North Carolina Division, United Daughters of the Confederacy. The columns which support the bronze tablets are the gift of the late Colonel P. H. Mayo, of Richmond, Va.
