PR 4352 A75+ The date shows when this volume was taken.

To renew this book copy the call No. and give to the librarian. HOME USE RULES. State of the 1881 All Books subject to Recall. Books not in use for instruction or research are returnable within 4 weeks. Volumes of periodicals and of pamphlets are held in the library JUN 2 1952G as much as possible. For special purposes they are given out for a limited time. Borrowers 'should Borrowers not use their library privileges for the benefit of other persons. Students must return all books before leaving town. Officers should arrange for the return of books wanted during their absence from town. Books needed by more than one person are held on the reserve list. Books of special value and gift books, when the giver wishes it are not all and the special sp it, are not allowed to circulate. Readers are asked Cornell 4 to report all cases of books marked or mutilated. Do not deface books by marks and writing.

A268643

BOOKSELLERS SUPPLIED WITH TRIMMED OR UNTRIMMED COPIES AS THEY MAY INDICATE THEIR PREFERENCE,

Number 208.

PUBLISHED BY HARPER & BROTHERS, NEW YORK.

PRICE 20 CTS.

Butered at the Post Office at New York, as Second-class Mail Matter

Poetry of Byron.

CHOSEN AND ARRANGED BY

MATTHEW ARNOLD.

ENGLISH MEN OF LETTERS.

EDITED BY JOHN MORLEY.

	TATIONS
GIBBONJ. G. Morison.	SOUTHEY Professor Dowden.
SCOTT R. H. HUTTON.	CHAUCER Professor A. W. WARD.
SHELLEYJ. A. Symonds.	BUNYANJ. A. FROUDE.
HUMEProfessor HUXLEY.	COWPER Goldwin Smith.
GOLDSMITH	POPE LESLIE STEPHEN.
DEFOE WILLIAM MINTO.	BYRONJohn Nichola
BURNSPrincipal SHAIRP.	LOCKE THOMAS FOWLER
SPENSER The DEAN OF ST. PAUL'S.	WORDSWORTH F. Myers.
THACKERAY Anthony Trollope.	DRYDENG. SAINTSBURY.
BURKEJohn Morley.	LANDOR
12mo, Cloth, 75 cents per volume.
HAWTHORNE. By Henry James, Jr
VOLUMES IN PREPARATION:
SWIFTJOHN MORLEY.	BENTLEYProfessor JEEB.

PUBLISHED BY HARPER & BROTHERS, NEW YORK.

HARPER & BYOTHERS will send any of the above works by mail, postage prepaid, to any part of the United States, on receipt of the price.

FRANKLIN SQUARE LIBRARY.

TIGHTINE DEL		OENT	71Do
OENTS 1 IS HE POPENIOV? A NOVAL RUANTBONY TROLLOPE	5 5 1	106. MADEMOISELLE DE MERSAC. A Novel	15.
1. IS HE POPENJOY? A Novel. By ANTBONY TROLLOPE. 12. THE HISTORY OF A CRIME. By VIOTOR HUGO. 14. 3. THE RUSSIANS OF TO-DAY. 14. 4. PAUL KNOX, PITMAN. A Novel. By J. B. HARWOOD. 16. MY HEART'S IN THE HIGHLANDS. A Novel. 16. HENDLEPURE. A Novel. 17. HENDLEPURE. A Novel. 17. HENDLEPURE. A Novel. 18. HENDLEPURE. A Novel. 19. HENDLEPURE. A Novel. 19. HENDLEPURE. A Novel. 19. HENDLEPURE. A Novel. 19. HENDLEPURE. 19. HENDLEPURE. A Novel. 19. HENDLEPURE. 19. HENDLEPURE. 19. HENDLEPURE. A Novel. 19. HENDLEPURE. 19	0 1	107. THE NINETBERNTH CENTURY. By ROBERT MACKENZIE. 108. A SYLVAN QUEEN. A Novel. 109. A SYLVAN QUEEN. A Novel. 101. TOM SINGLETON. By W.W. FOLLETT SYNGE. 111. THE RETURN OF THE PRINCESS. A Novel. By Jacques Vincent. 112. RUSSIA BEFORE AND AFTER THE WAR. 114. RUSSIA BEFORE AND A Novel. By A. GRIFFIYIIS.	15
4. PAUL KNOX, PITMAN. A Novel. By J. B. Harwood	ŏ i	109. A SYLVAN QUEEN. A Novel	15 15
5. MY HEART'S IN THE HIGHLANDS. A NOVEL	0 i	111. THE RETURN OF THE PRINCESS. A Novel. By JACQUES VINCENT. 1	10
6. HENRIETTE. A Novel. By ERNEST DAUDET
7. CHRISTINE BROWNLEE'S ORDEAL. A NOVEL. BY MARY FATROX. 8. A BEAUTIFUL WOMAN. A Romanice. By Leon Brook. 9. HONOR'S WORTH. A Novel. By META ORRED. 10. KINGSDENE. A Novel. By the HOD. MIS. FETHERSTONHAUGH. 11. CLEVIDEN. A Novel. By Stephen Yorre. 12. PEOPLE OF TURKEY. By R CODSUL'S Daughter and Wife. 13. THE YOUNG DUKE. A Novel. By BENJAMIN DIBBARLI. 14. HAVERHOUME. A SQUING BY R. LEVENING. 14. HAVERHOUME. A SQUING BY R. LEVENING.	5 1	14 TWI WINKIN. A NOVEL BY GEORGIANA IN CHARLEST THE CONTRACT OF THE PROPERTY O	15 15
10. KINGSDENE, A Novel. By the Hon. Mrs. Fetherstoniator	0 1	16. FOR HER DEAR SAKE. A Novel. By Mary Croil Hay 1	15- 15
12. PEOPLE OF TURKEY. By a Consul's Daughter and Wife 16	5 1 5 1	118. FROM GENERATION TO GENERATION. A Novel. By Lady Novel. 1	15.
14. HAVERHOLME. A Satire. By E. JENKINS. 16. "BONNIE LESLEY." A NOVEL BY MIR. H. MARTIN. 10	Λ I 1	19. YOUNG LORD PENRITH. A Novel. By J. B. HARWOOD 190. CLARA VAUGHAN. A Novel. By R. D. BLACKMORE 1	15. 15.
16. THE EARL OF BEACONSFIELD, K.G. With Two Portraits, 10	0 1	21. THE HEART OF HOLLAND. By HENRY HAVARD.	50° 10°
17. SELECTED POEMS OF MATTHÉW ARNOLD	0 1 5 1	23. MARY ANERLEY. A Novel. By R. D. BLACKMOBE	5
19. AMONG ALIENS. A Novel. By Mrs. F. E. Trollope. Illustrated 18 20. GUY LIVINGSTONE. A Novel. By Gro. A. LAWRENGE	5 1 0 1	125. POET AND PEER. A Novel. By Hamilton Albe	15
21. TIME SHALL TRY. A Novel. By F. E. M. Norley 14	5 1	26. THE DUKE'S CHILDREN. A Novel. By Anthony Trollope 20	20, 25.
22. EVELINA. A Novel. By Francis Burnev	0 1	28. MISS BOUVERIE. A Novel. By Mrs. Moleswortu	اق. 10
24. AULD LANG SYNE. By W. CLARK RUSSELL. II. 25. MACLEOD OF DARE. A NOVEL. By WILLIAM BLACK. II. 26. THE MISTLETOE BOUGH. Edited by M. E. Braddon. II. 27. RARE PALE MARGARET. A NOVEL	0 1	121. THE HEART OF HOLLAND. BY BENRY HAVARD. 122. REATA. A Novel. BY E. D. GREAED. 22 REATA. A Novel. BY E. D. GREAED. 23. MARY ANERLEY. A Novel. BY R. D. BLAOKMORE. 24. THE PENNANT FAMILY. A Novel. BY ANNE BEALE. 25. POET AND PEER. A Novel. BY HAMILTON AIDÉ. 26. THE DUKE'S CHILDREN. A Novel. BY ANTHONY TROLLOPE. 27. THE QUEEN. BY MIS. OLIPHANT. Illustrated. 28. MISS BOUVERIE. A Novel. BY MIS. MOLESWORTU. 29. DAVID ARMSTRONG. A NOVEL. 30. HYPATIA. A NOVEL. 31. CAPE COD AND ALL ALONG SHORE. Stories. BY CHAS. NORDHOOFF. 32. LIFE COP JAMES A. GARFIELD. BY BY BY BONUND KIRHE. Illustrated. 29. 21. IFE OF JAMES A. GARFIELD. BY BY BOMUND KIRHE. Illustrated.	5
26. THE MISTLETOE BOUGH, Edited by M. E. Braddon	5 1	131. CAPE COD AND ALL ALONG SHORE. Stories. By Chas. Nordhopp. 132. LIFE OF JAMES A. GARFIELD. By Edmund Kirre. Illustrated 20	5 20
	5 1	33. CROSS PURPOSES. A Novel. By Ceollia Findlay 10	0 5
25. LIGHT AND SHADE, A NOVEL DY C. G. O'DELEN	0 1	185. PRIDE AND PREJUDICE. A Novel. By Jane Austen	5
31. ELINOR DRYDEN. A Novel. By Mrs. K. S. Maoquoid. 16 32. THE IRISH BAR. By J. Rodreick O'Flanagan 16	$\begin{bmatrix} 5 & 1 \\ 5 & 1 \end{bmatrix}$	137. CAST UP BY THE SEA. By Sir Samuer. W. Baker. 1	5.
33. THE LAST DAYS OF POMPEIL BY EDWARD BOLWER	5 1	188. THE MUDFOG PAPERS, &c. By Charles Diokens	(}∞ (§~
35. SPORT AND WORK ON THE NEPAUL FRONTIER. 10	ŭ Î	40. A MEMOIR OF THE REV. SYDNEY SMITH	5 5∞
36. JANE EYRE. A Novel. By Charlotte Bronte		31. CAPE COD AND ALL ALONG SHORE. Stories. By Chas. Nordboope. 11. 32. LIFE OF JAMES A. GARFIELD. By Edmund Kirre. Illustrated. 22. 33. CROSS PURPOSES. A Novel. By Croulta Firdlay. 11. 34. CLEAR SHINING AFTER RAIN. A Novel. By C.G. HAMILTON. 11. 35. PRIDE AND PREJUDICE. A Novel. By JANE AUSTERN. 12. 36. WHITE WINGS: A Yachting Romrice. By William Black. 14. 37. CAST UP BY THE SEA. By Sir Samuel W. Baker. 12. 38. THE MUDFOG PAPERS, &O. By CHARLES DIOKENS. 14. 40. A MEMOIR OF THE REY. SYDNEY SMITH. 14. 41. JUST AS I AM. A Novel. By M. E. Braddon. 14. 42. A SAILOR'S SWEETHEART. A Novel. By W. CLARK RUSSELL. 14. 43. RURNS. By Principal Shaire.—GOLDSMITH. By WILLIAM BLACK.	5-
38. MAN AND WIFE. A Novel. By WILKIR COLLINS	5 1	43. BURNS. By Principal Shairp.—GOLDSMITH. By William Black.— BUNYAN. By J. A. Froudr	5-
30. CHRISTIANS AND MOORS OF SPAIN. By C. M. YONGE. 11 31. ELINOR DRYDEN. A NOVEL. By MYS. K. S. MAOQUOID. 12 32. THE IRISH BAR. By J. RODERIOK O'FLANAGAN. 14 33. THE LAST DAYS OF POMPEIL. By BOWAED BOLWER. 12 34. THROUGH ASIATIC TURKEY. By GRATTAN GRARY. 12 35. SPORT AND WORK ON THE NEPAUL FRONTIER. 11 36. JANE EYRE. A NOVEL. By CHARTAN GRARY. 12 37. AN EYE FOR AN EYE. A NOVEL. BY ANTHONY TROLLOPE. 11 38. MAN AND WIFE. A NOVEL. BY WILLIE COLLINS. 12 39. A TRUE MARRIAGE. A NOVEL. BY EMILY SPENDER. 12 40. KELVERDALE. A NOVEL. BY THE LAST 12 41. WITHIN SOUND OF THE SEA. A NOVEL. 13 42. THE LAST OF HER LINE. A NOVEL. BY ELIZA TAROR. 14 43. YIXLEN. A NOVEL. BY ELIZA TAROR. 14 44. WITHIN SOUND OF HER LINE. A NOVEL. BY ELIZA TAROR. 14 43. YIXLEN. A NOVEL. BY ELIZA TAROR. 15	5 1	442. A SAILOR'S SWEETHEART. A NOVEL BY W. CLARK RUSSELL	о.
42. THE LAST OF HER LINE. A Novel. By Eliza Tabor. 19	5 1	45. THE THREE RECKUITS. A Novel. By JOSEPH HATTON 18	5
43. VIXEN. A Novel. By M. E. Braddon. 16 44. WITHIN THE PRECINCTS. A Novel. By Mrs. OLIPHANT. 17	5 1	47. HORACE MoLEAN. A Novel. By ALIOR O'HANLON	5.
45. ALL OR NOTHING. A Novel. By Mrs. F. C. Hory	5 1 0 1	48. FROM THE WINGS. A Novel. By B. H. Boxton 18 49. HE THAT WILL NOT WHEN HE MAY, A Novel. By Mrs. Oliphant. 18	5. 5.
47. GRAHAMS OF INVERMOY. A Novel. By M. C. STIBLING. 18 48. COWARD CONSCIENCE. A Novel. By F. W. ROBINSON. 18	5 1	50. ENDYMION. A Novel. By the Earl of Beaconsfield. (With B Key
49. THE CLOVEN FOOT. A Novel. By M. E. Braddon. 19	5 1	51. DUTY. By Samdel Smiles. 18	5
43. VIXEN. A Novel. By M. E. Braddon	5 1 5 1	10. In Proceedings 10. In Pr	5. 5-
52. THAT ARTFUL VICAR. A Novel	5 1 5 1	154. THE REBEL OF THE FAMILY. A Novel. By E. LYNN LINTON 20	0 5
54. BOTHEN. By ALEXANDER WILLIAM KINGLARE. 11. 55. "FOR A DREAM'S SAKE." A Novel. By Mrs. H. Maetin. 12. 56. LADY LEE'S WIDOWHOOD. A Novel. By E. B. Hamley. 12. 57. HISTORY OF OUR OWN TIMES. Part I. By J. Mocaetiny. 22. 57a. HISTORY OF OUR OWN TIMES. Part II. By J. Mocaetiny. 24.	0 1	154. THE REBEL OF THE FAMILY. A Novel. By E. Lynn Lindon. 22. 155. DR. WORTLE'S SCHOOL. A Novel. By Anthony Trollope. 11. 156. LITTLE PANSY. A Novel. By Mrs. Randolph. 22. 157. THE DEAN'S WIFE. A Novel. By Mrs. Alfren W. Hunt. 22. 158. THE POSY RING. A Novel. By Mrs. Alfren W. Hunt. 16. 159. BETTER THAN GOOD. A Story for Girls. By Annie E. Ridley. 16. 160. UNDER LIFE'S KEY, AND OTHERS STORIES. By Mary Cecil Hay. 17. 161. ASPHODEL. A Novel. By M.E. Braddon. 11. 162. SUNRISE. A Novel. By William Blook. 11. 163. THE GLEN OF SILVER BIRCHES. A Novel. By E. O. BLACKBUENE. 12. 164. SOCIAL ETIQUETTE AND HOME CULTURE. 22. 165. THE WARDS OF PLOTINUS. A Novel. By Mrs. John Hunt. 22.	10
56. LADY LEE'S WIDOWHOOD. A Novel. By E. B. HAMLEY 19	5 1	58. THE POSY RING. A Novel. By Mrs. Alfred W. Hunt
57a, HISTORY OF OUR OWN TIMES. Part I. By J. Mocaethy 20	$\begin{bmatrix} 0 & 1 \\ 0 & 1 \end{bmatrix}$	[59. BETTER THAN GOOD: A Story for Girls. By Annie E. Ridley 18 160. UNDER LIFE'S KEY, AND OTHER STORIES. By Mary Croil Hay. 18
10 10 10 10 10 10 10 10	5 1 5 1	161. ASPHODEL. A Novel. By M. E. Braddon
60. ORANGE LILY. A Novel. By May Cromnelin	0 1	163. THE GLEN OF SILVER BIRCHES. A Novel. By E. O. BLACKBURNE. 18	5
62. THE ZULUS AND THE BRITISH FRONTIERS. By Capt. T. J. Lucas 10	Ď i	164. SOCIAL ETIQUETTE AND HOME CULTURE	20.
64. THE HOUSE OF LYS. A Tale. By W. G. HAMLEY. 1	5 1	166. REMINISCENCES BY THOMAS CARLYLE. Edited by J. A. Froude. 18 167. HIS LITTLE MOTHER, AND OTHER TALES. By Miss Molook 10	5. 0
66. THE LIFE OF CHARLES LEVER. By W. J. FITZPATRICK	5 1	168. LIFE OF GEORGE IV. Part I. By Perov Fitzgerald	80 80-
67. MR. LESLIE OF UNDERWOOD. A Novel. By Mary Patrick 1: 68. THE GREEN HAND. A Short Yarn. By Grorof Cupples 1:	5 1	170. INTO THE SHADE, AND OTHER STORIES. By MARY CROIL HAY 18	5-
69. DORCAS. A Novel. By GRORGIANA M. CRAIK	5 1	172. MEMOIRS OF PRINCE METTERNICH. Part I	0 0
71. THE LIFE OF C. J. MATHEWS. Edited by CHARLES DIOKENS	5 1	174. MEMOIRS OF PRINCE METTERNICH. Part III. 2	20°
73. FRAMLEY PARSONAGE. A Novel. By Anthony Trolloge 18	5 1	175. MEMOIRS OF PRINCE METTERNICH. PRIT IV	30 5-
62. THE ZULUS AND THE BRITISH FRONTIERS. By CRPL T. J. LUGAS 63. JOHN CALDIGATE. A NOVEL. BY ANTONY TEOLLOFE. 64. THE HOUSE OF LYS. A Tale. By W. G. HAMLEY. 65. HENRY ESMOND. A NOVEL. BY W. M. THAOKERAY. 66. THE LIFE OF CHARLES LEVER. BY W. J. FIZZATRIOS. 67. MR. LESLIE OF UNDERWOOD. A NOVEL BY MARY PATRIOS. 68. THE GREEN HAND. A Short Yarn. By GROBOR CUPTLES. 69. DORCAS. A NOVEL. BY GRODIANA M. CRAIK. 69. DORCAS. A NOVEL. BY GRODIANA M. CRAIK. 61. THE GYPSY. 61. THE GYPSY. 62. MATHEWS. Edited by CHARLES DIORENS. 63. FRAMLEY PARSONAGE. A NOVEL BY MeINSINE. 64. THE AFGHAN'S KNIFE. A NOVEL BY R. A. STRENDALE. 65. THE TWO MISS FLEMINGS. A NOVEL 66. ROSE MERVYN. A NOVEL. BY ANNE BEALE. 67. RELIGEN DA VIDGER. A Tale OF BOYS. BY J. GERENWOOD. 68. THE TALISMAN. BY SIY WALDER SOOTT, BERT. Illustrated. 69. THE TICKWICK PAPERS. 60. MADGE DUNRAYEN. A Tale	5 1	TT. MISS WILLIAMSON'S DIVAGATIONS. Stories. By Miss THACKERAY. 11 ITS. THOMAS CARLYLE: THE MAN AND HIS BOOKS. By W. H. WYLLE. 22
76. ROSE MERVYN. A Novel. By Anne Brale	5 1	19. LORD BEACONSFIELD. A Study. By Georg Brandes 19. THE LIFE AND SUPPRISING ADVENUEDED OF DODINGS.	5-
78. THE TALISMAN. By Sir Walter Soott, Bart. Illustrated	5	CRUSOE	2O·
80. MADGE DUNRAVEN. A Tale	ŏ	CRUSOE ANOVEL BY MIS. E. LYNN LINTON. 2182. BESIDE THE RIVER. A Tale. By KATHABINE S. MAQQUOID. 2283. HARRY JOSCELYN. A NOVEL. BY MIS. OLIPDANT. 2384. THE MILLER'S DAUGHTER. A NOVEL. BY ANNE BEALE. 2494. THE MILLER'S DAUGHTER. A NOVEL. BY ANNE BEALE. 2595. THE CHAPLAIN OF THE FLEET. A NOVEL. BY W. BEEANT RID. J. RIDE. 2605. THE CHAPLAIN OF THE FLEET. A NOVEL. BY W. BEEANT RID. J. RIDE. 2705. THE CHAPLAIN OF THE RIPET. A NOVEL. BY MARY CROIL HAV. 2806. MY FIRST OFFER, AND OTHER STORIES. BY MARY CROIL HAV. 2807. UNDELIEF IN THE 18TH CENTURY. BY JOHN CARDS, D.D. 2808. REVISED VERSION OF THE NEW TESTAMENT. 2809. A CHILD OF NATURE. BY ROBERT BROBLANAN.	50-
81. YOUNG MRS. JARDINE. A NOVEL BY MISS MULOOK 10	0 1 5 1	183. HAKKY JOSCELYN. A Novel. By Mrs. OLIPDANT	20⊹ ' 20∗ '
82. POEMS OF WORDSWORTH. Edited by Matthew Arnold. 11 83. COUSIN HERRY. A NOVEL BY ANTHORY TROLLOPE. 12 84. SENSE AND SENSIBILITY. A NOVEL. BY JANE AUSTEN 12 85. THE BETTRAMS. A NOVEL. BY ANTHORY TROLLOPE. 11 86. THE FUGITIVES. A Story. By Mrs. O.IPITANT. 12 87. THE PARSON O' DUMFORD. A NOVEL. BY G.M. FENN 12 88. HIGH SPIRITS. BY JAMES PAYN. 13 89. THE MISTLETOE BOUGH FOR 1879. Edited by M. E. Braddon. 14 90. THE EGGIST. A NOVEL. BY GRORE MEREDITH. 12 91. BELLS OF PENRAVEN. A NOVEL. BY B. L. FARSON 14 92. A FEW MONTH'S IN NEW GUINEA. BY O. C. STONE. 14 93. A DOUBTING HEART. A NOVEL. BY ANNIE KEART. 14 94. LITTLE MISS PRIMROSE. A NOVEL. BY ELIZA TARGE. 12 95. DONNA QUIXOTE. A NOVEL BY GESTIM MOCARTHY. 15	0 1	165. THE CHAPLAIN OF THE FLEET. A Novel. By W. BESANT RDd J. RIGE. 20186. MY FIRST OFFER, AND OTHER STORIES D. M. D. M. D.	20
85. THE BERTRAMS. A Novel. By Anthony Trollope. 16 86. THE FUGITIVES. A Story. By Mrs. Oliphant. 16	5 1	187. UNBELIEF IN THE 18TH CENTURY. By JOHN CAIRNS, D.D 2	20,
87. THE PARSON O' DUMFORD. A Novel. By G. M. Fenn. 19	5	189. A CHILD OF NATURE. By ROBERT BUCHANAN.	•••
88. HIGH SPIRITS. By JAMES PAYN	ğ }	190. AT THE SEASIDE, AND OTHER STORIES. By MARY CROIL HAY 18	[5·
90. THE EGUIST. A Novel. By George Meredith	0 1	192. VISITED ON THE CHILDREN. A Novel. By THEO. GIFT	50- 50-
92. A FEW MONTHS IN NEW GUINEA. By O. C. STONE. 193. A DOUBTING HEART. A Novel. By Annie Kraev. 1	0 5 1	194. AN OCEAN FREE-LANCE. A Novel. By W. CLARK RUGSELL 2	20
94. LITTLE MISS PRIMROSE. A Novel. By Eliza Tabor. 195. DONNA QUIXOTE. A Novel. By Justin McCarthy. 19	5	With Characteristic Illustrations.	20
96. NELL—ON AND OFF THE STAGE. A Novel. By B. H. Buxton 1	5	WILLIAM BLAOTH OL WRETCH. A Brighton Story. By WILLIAM BLAOK. With Characteristic Illustrations	20∙ 30
97. MEMOURS OF MADAME DE REMUSAT. 1802-1808. Part I	0 1	198. THE NEPTUNE VASE. A Novel. By Viboinia W. Johnson	20 Minu
98. MADAME DE REMUSAT. Part II	0 9	200. LETTERS OF MADAME DE RÉMUSAT	20
and Walter Besant	0 2	202. RESEDA. A Novel. By Mrs. Randolph.	20)
100. THE MUNISTER CIRCUIT. By J. R. O'FLANAGAN. 1 101. SIR JOHN. A Novel. By the Author of "Anne Dysart". 1 102. THE GREATEST HEIRESS IN ENGLAND. A Novel. By Mrs. OLIPHANT 1	5	204. WITH COSTS. A Novel. By MIE. NEWMAN. 1	20∱. 15∛
105. QUEEN OF THE MEADOW. A Novel. By CHARLES GIBBON	5 5		20 \ 20
105. COUSIN SIMON. A Novel. By the Hon. Mrs. R. Marsham 1	0 3	201. SCEPTRE AND RING. A Novel. By B. H. Buxton	20 20
			/

Number 208.

PUBLISHED BY HARPER & BROTHERS, NEW YORK.

PRICE 20 CTS.

October 7, 1881.—Issued Weekly.

Copyright, 1878, by Harper & Brothers.

Subscription Price per Year of 52 Numbers, $10.

POETRY OF BYRON.

CHOSEN AND ARRANGED BY

MATTHEW ARNOLD.

CONTENTS.

		TO DESCRIPTION AND MADE AND ADDRESS OF	III.—DRAMATIC 38
Preface Page 5		11.—DESCRIPTIVE AND NARRATIVE.
2		Gresce	Manfred and the Seven Spirits Page 36
1.—PERSONAL, LYRIC, AND ELEGIAC.		The Same	Manfred on the Cliffs 37
Loch Na Garr		The Same	The Witch of the Alps
"Well! Thou Art Happy"		Hellsport	Astarte
Epistle to a Friend		Troy	Manfred's Farewell to the Sun 40
To Thomas Moore	6	The Drachenfels	Manfred's End
Childe Harold's Departure		Watsrloo	Dying Speech of the Doge of Venice 42
Stanzas Composed during a Thunder-storm .		Lake of Geneva.—Calm 21	Death of Salemenes
"Maid of Athens"	7	Lake of Geneva.—Storm	Cain and Lucifer in the Abyss of Space
To Inez	7	Clarens	Cain and Adah
"One Struggle More"		Italy	Vani aliu Adan
Euthanasia		Venice	IV.—SATIRIC.
"And Thon Art Dead"	8	The Same
"When We Two Parted"	9	The Same	Fame
Stanzas for Music		An August Evening in Italy	Written after Swimming from Sestos to
TOTAL CONTRACTOR OF THE CONTRA		The Ave Maria	Abydos
Solitude		Arqua	On my Thirty-third Birthday 45
	9	Clitumnus	To Mr. Murray
The Same	10		Epistle from Mr. Murray to Dr. Polidori 45 To Mr. Murray
		Rome	Holland House
Bersavement		Tomb of Cecilia Metella	Epilogue to English Bards and Scotch Re-
England		Grotto of Egeria	viewers
Ruins to Ruins	10	Sennet on Chillon	The Landed Interest
The Dream		Bonnivard and his Brothers	Italy
The Poet's Curse		Bonnivard Alone	England
		The East	Wanted—a Hero
"She Walks in Beauty"	12	Journey and Death of Hassan 27	London
"Oh! Snatch'd Away"	13	Hassan's Mother 27	Things Sweet
Song of Saul	13	The Giaonr's Love 28
Vision of Belshazzar	13	Death of Selim 28	A Stormed City
		Corsair Life	Exhortation to Mr. Wilberforce 4
Ode to Napoleon Bonaparts 1	13	Parting of Conrad and Medora 29	Exhortation to Mrs. Fry 4
Ods on Waterloo		Conrad's Return	Satan Claims, at Heaven's Gate, George the
Napoleon's Farswell		Alp and Francesca 30	Third 4
Lament of Tasso		The Assault
Dante in Exile		Parisina	Our Children
The Isles of Greece		The Last of Ezzelin
Lines to a Lady Weeping 1	16	Mazeppa's Ride
Death of the Princess Charlotte		The Streamlet from the Cliff
Immortality	17	The Shipwreck
"On this Day I Complete my Thirty-sixth	10		Byron and his Contemporaries 5
Year"			Poetical Production
alite	17	Aurora Kany	The Lighter Side

11:15

PREFACE.

WHEN at last I held in my hand the volume of poems which I had chosen from Wordsworth, and began to turn over its pages, there arose in me almost immediately the desire to see beside it, as a companion volume, a like collection of the best poetry of Byron. Alone among our poets of the earlier part of this century, Byron and Wordsworth not only furnish material enough for a volume of this kind, but, also, as it seems to me, they both of them gain considerably by being thus exhibited. There are poems of Colsridge and of Keats equal, if not superior, to anything of Byron or Wordsworth; but a dozen pages or two will contain them, and the remaining poetry is of a quality much inferior. Scott never, I think, rises as a post to the level of Byron and Wordsworth at all. On the other hand. he never falls below his own usual level very far; and by a volume of selectious from him, therefore, his effectiveness is not increased. As to Shelley there will be more question; and indeed Mr. Stopford Brooke, whose accomplishments, eloquence, and love of poetry we must all recognize and admire, has actually given us Shelley in such a vol-But for my own part I cannot think that Shelley's poetry, except by snatches and fragments, has the value of the good work of Wordsworth and Byron; or that it is possible for even Mr. Stopford Brooke to make up a volume of selections from him which, for real substance, power, and worth, can at all take rank with a like volume from Byron or Wordsworth.

Shelley knew quits well the difference between the achievement of such a poet se Byron and his own. He praises Byron too unreservedly, but he sincerely felt, and he was right in feeling, that Byron was a greater poetical power than himself. As a man, Shelley is at a number of points immeasurably Byron's superior; he is a beautiful and enchanting spirit, whose vision, when we call it up, has far more loveliness, more charm for our soul, than the vision of Byron. But all the personal charm of Shelley cannot hinder us from at last discovering in his poetry the incurable want, in general, of a sound subject-matter, and the incurable fault, in consequence, of unsubstantiality. who extol him as the peet of clouds, the poet of sunsets, are only saying that he did not, in fact, lay hold upon the poet's right subject-matter; and in honest truth, with all his charm of soul and spirit, and with all his gift of musical diction and movement, he never, or hardly ever, did. Except, as I have said, for a few short things and single stanzas, his original peetry is less satisfactory than his translations, for in these the subject-matter was found for him. Nay, I doubt whether his delightful Essays and Letters, which deserve to be far more read than they are now, will not resist the wear and tear of time better, and finally come to stand higher, than his poetry.

There remain to be considered Byron and Words-That Wordsworth affords good material for a volume of selections, and that he gains hy having his poetry thus presented, is an old belief of mine which led me lately to make up a vel-time of poems chosen out of Wordsworth, and to bring it before the public. By its kind reception of the volume, the public seems to show itself a partaker in my belief. Now, Byron, also, supplies plenty of material fer a like volume, and he too gains, I think, by being so presented. Mr. Swin-burne nrges, indeed, that "Byron, who rarely wrote anything either worthless or faultless, can only be judged or appreciated in the mass; the greatest of his works was his whole work taken together." It is quite true that Byron rarely wrete anything either worthless or faultless; it is quite true, also, that in the appreciation of Byron's power a sense of the amount and variety of his work, defective though much of his work is, enters justly into our estimate. But, although there may be little in Byron's poetry which can be pronounced either worthless or faultless, there are portions of it which are far higher in worth and far more free from fault than others. And although, again, the abundance and variety of his production is undoubtedly a proof of his power, yet I question whether by reading everything which he gives us we are so likely to acquire an admiring sense even of his variety and ahnodance, as by reading what he gives us at his happier moments. Varied and abundant he amply proves himself even by this taken alone. Receive him absolutely without omission or compression, follow his whole outpouring stanza by stanza and line by line from the very commencement to the very end, and he is capable of being tiresome.

Byron has told us himself that the "Giaour" "is but a string of passages." He has made full confession of his own negligence. "No one," says he, "has done more through negligence to corrupt the language." This accusation, brought by himself against his poems, is not just; but when he goes on to say of them, that "their faults, whatever they may be, are those of negligence and not of labor," he says what is perfectly true. "'Lara,'" he declares, "I wrote while undressing after coming home from balls and masquerades, in the year of revelry, 1814. The 'Bride' was written in four, the 'Corsair' in ten days." He calls this "a humiliating confession, as it proves my own want of judgment in publishing, and the public's in reading, things which cannot have stamina for permanence." Again he does his poems injustice; the producer of such poems could not but publish them, the public could not but read them. Nor could Byron have produced his work in any other fashion; his poetic work could not have first grown and matured in his own mind, and then ceme forth as an organic whole; Byron had not enough of the artist in him for this, nor enough of self-command. He wrote, as he truly tells us, to relieve himself, and he went on writing because he found the relief become indispensable. But it was inevitable that works so produced should be, in general, "a string of passages," poured out, as he describes them, with rapidity and excitement, and with new passages constantly suggesting themselves, and added while his work was going through the press. It is evident that we have here neither deliberate scientific construction, nor yet the instinctive artistic creation of poetic wholes; and that to take passages from werk preduced as Byron's was is a very different thing from taking passages out of the "Œdipus" or the "Tempest," and deprives the poetry far less of its advantage.

Nay, it gives advantage to the poetry, instead of depriving it of any. Byron, I said, has not a great artist'e profound and patient skill in combining an action or in developing a character-a skill which we must watch and follow if we are to do justice to it. But he has a wonderful power of vividly conceiving a single incident, a single situation; of throwing himself upon it, grasping it as if it were real and he saw and felt it, and of making us see and feel it too. The "Giaour" is, as he truly called it, "a string of passages," not a work moving hy a deep internal law of development to a necessary end; and our total impression from it cannot but receive from this, its inherent defect, a certain dimness and indistinctness. But the incidents of the journey and death of Hassan, in that peem, are conceived and presented with a vividness not to be surpassed; and our impression from them is correspondingly clear and powerful. In "Lara," again, there is no adequate development either of the character of the chief personage or of the action of the poem; our total impression from the work is a confused one. Yet such an incident as the disposal of the slain Ezzelin's hody passes before our eyes as if we actually saw it. And in the same way as these hursts of incident, bursts of sentiment also, living and vigorous, often occur in the midst of poems which must be admitted to be but weakly-conceived and loosely-combined wholes. Byron cannet but be a gainer by having attention concentrated upon what is vivid, powerful, effective in his work, and withdrawn from what is not so.

Byron, I say, cannot but he a gainer by this, just as Wordsworth is a gainer by a like proceeding. I esteem Wordsworth's poetry so highly, and the world, in my opinion, has done it such scant justice, that I could not rest satisfied until I had fulfilled, on Wordsworth's behalf, a long-cherished desire—had disengaged, to the best of my power, his good work from the inferior work joined with it, and had placed before the public the body of his good work by itself. To the poetry of Byron the world has ardently paid homage; full justice from his contemporaries, perhaps even more than justice, his torrent of poetry received. His poetry was admired, adored, "with all its imperfections on its head," in spite of negligence, in spite of diffuseness, in spite of repetitions, in spite of whatever faults it possessed. His name is still great and brilliant. Nevertheless, the hour of irresistible vogue has passed away for him; even for By-ron it could not but pass away. The time has come for him, as it comes for all poets, when he must take his real and permanent place, no longer depending upon the vogue of his own day and upon the enthusiasm of his contemporaries. Whatever we may think of him, we shall not be subjugated by him as they were; for, as he cannot be for us what he was for them, we cannot admire him so hetly and indiscriminately as they. His faults of negligence, of diffuseness, of repetitionhis faults of whatever kind-we shall abundantly feel and unsparingly criticise; the mere interval of time between us and him makes disillusion of this kind inevitable. But how, then, will Byron stand, if we relieve him too, so far as we can, of the encumbrance of his inferior and weakest work, and if we bring before us his best and strongest work in one body together? That is the question which I, who can even remember the latter years of Byron's vogue, and have myself felt the expiring wave of that mighty influence, but who certainly also regard him, and have long regarded him, without illusion, cannot but ask myself, cannot but seek to answer. The present volume is an attempt te provide adequate data for answering it.

Byron has been overpraised, no doubt. ron is one of our French superstitions," says M. Edmond Scherer; but where has Byron not been a superstition? He pays now the penalty of this exaggerated worship. "Alone among the English poets his contemporaries, Byron," M. Taine, "atteint à la cîme — gets to the top of the poetic mountain." But the idol that M. Taine had thus adored M. Scherer is almost for burning. "In Byron," he declares, "there is a remarkable inability ever to lift himself into the region of real peetic art -art impersonal and disinterested - at ull. He has fecundity, eloquence, wit; but even these qualities themselves are confined within somewhat narrow limits. He has treated hardly any subject but one-himself; now, the man, in Byron, is of a nature even less sincere than the This beautiful and blighted being is at bottom a coxcomb. He pesed all his life long."

Our poet could not well meet with more severe and unsympathetic criticism. However, the praise often given to Byron has been so exaggerated as to provoke, perhaps, a reaction in which he is unduly disparaged. "As various in composition as Shakspeare himself, Lord Byron has embraced,' Sir Walter Scott, "every topic of human life, and sounded every string on the divine harp, from its alightest to its most powerful and heart-astounding tones." It is not surprising that some one with a cool head should retaliate, on such provocation as this, by saying, "He has treated hardly any subject but one—himself." "In the very grand and tremendous drama of 'Cain,'" says Scott, "Lord Byron has certainly matched Milton on his own ground." And Lord Byron has done all this, Scott adds, "while managing his pen with the careless and negligent ease of a man of quality." Alas! "managing his pen with the careless and negli-gent ease of a man of quality," Byron wrote in his Cain :"

"Souls that dare look the Omnipotent tyrant in His everlasting face, and tell him that His evil is not good;"

or he wrote:

"... And thou would'st go on aspiring
To the great double Mysteries! the two Principles!"
One has only to repeat to one's self a line from
"Paradise Lost" in order to feel the difference.

^{*} The italics are in the original.

of language, the Italian poet Leopardi, remarks how often we see the alliance, singular though it may at first sight appear, of the poetical genius with the genius for scholarsbip and philology. Dante and Milton are instances which will occur to every ene's mind. Byron is so negligent in his peetical style—he is often, to say the truth, so slevenly, slipshed, and infelicitous—he is so little haunted by the true artist's fine passion for the correct use and consummate management of words, that he may be described as having for this artistic gift the insensibility of the barbarian; which is, perhaps, only another and a less flattering way of saying, with Scott, that he "manages his pen with the careless and negligent ease of a man of quality." Just of a piece with the rhythm of

"Dare you await the eveut of a few mioutes' Deliheration?"

"All shall be void-Destroy'd!"

is the diction of

"Which now is psinful to these eyes, Which bave not seen the sun tu rise;"

". . . there let him lay!"

or of the famous passage beginning,

"He who hath bent him o'er the dead :"

with these trailing relatives, that crying grammatical selecism, that inextricable anacolouthon! To class the work of the author of such things with the work of the authors of such verse as

"In the dark backward and abyam of time"-

"Presenting Thebes, or Pelops' line, Or the tale of Troy divine"— is ridiculous. Shakspeare and Milton, with their secret of consummate felicity in diction and movement, are of another and an altogether higher order from Byron, nay, for that matter, from Wordsworth also; from the author of such verse as

"Sol hath dropt into his harbor"- or (if Mr. Ruskin pleases) as

"Parching summer hath no warrant "--

as from the author of

"All shall be void— Destroy'd!"

With a poetical gift and a poetical performance of the very highest order, the slovenliness and tunelessness of much of Byron's production, the pompousness and penderousness of much of Wordsworth's, are incompatible. Let us admit this to the full.

Moreover, while we are hearkening to M. Scherer, and going along with him in his fault-finding. let us admit too that the man in Byron is, in many And, putrespects, as unsatisfactory as the poet. ting aside all direct moral criticism of him-with which we need not concern ourselves here - we shall find that he is unsatisfactory in the same way. Some of Byran's most crying faults as a man—his vulgarity, his affectation - are really akin to the faults of commonness, of want of art, in his work-manship as a poet. The ideal nature for the poet and artist is that of the finely touched and finely gifted man, the εὐφυής of the Greeks; now, Byron's nature was in substance not that of the Evφυής at all, but rather, as I have said, of the barbarian. The want of fine perception which made it possible for him to formulate either the comparison between himself and Rousseau, or his reason for getting Lord Delawarr excused from a "lickat Harrow, is exactly what made possible for him also his terrible dealings in An ye wool; I have redde thee; Sunburn me; O ms, and it is excellent well. It is exactly, again, what made possible for him his precious dictum that Pope is a Greek temple, and a string of other criticisms of the like force; it is exactly, in fine, what deteriorated the quality of his poetic production. If we think of a good representative of that finely touched and exquisitely gifted nature which is the ideal nature for the poet and artist-if we think of Raphael, for Instance, who truly is εὐφυής just as Byron is not -we shall bring into clearer light the connection ron's sins of vulgarity and false criticism would have been impossible, just as with Raphael's art Byron's sins of common and bad workmanship.

Yes, all this is true; but it is not the whole truth about Byron, nevertheless-very far from it. The severe criticism of M. Scherer by ne means gives us the whole truth about Byren, and we have not yet got it in what has been added to that criticism here. The negative part of the true criticism of him we perhaps have; the positive part, by far the more important, we have not. Byron's admirers appeal eagerly to foreign testimonies in his favor. Some of these testimonies do not much move me: hut one testimeny there is among them which will always carry, with me at any rate, very great weight the testimony of Goethe. Goethe's sayings about Byron were uttered, it must, however, be remembered, at the height of Byron's vegue, when that puissant and splendid personality was exercising its full power of attraction. In Goethe's own household there was an atmosphere of glowing Byron-wership; his daughter-in-law was a passionate admirer of Byron; nay, she enjoyed and prized his poetry, as did Tieck and so many others in Germany at that time, much above the poetry of Goethe himself. Instead of being irritated and rendered jealous by this, a nature like Goethe's was inevitably led by it to heighten, not lower, the note of his praise. The Time-Spirit, or Zeit-Geist, he would himself have said, was working just then for Byron. This working of the Zeit-Geist in his favor was an advantage added to Byron's other advantages, an advantage of which he had a right to get the bene-This is what Goethe would have thought and said to himself; and so be would have been led even to heighten somewhat his estimate of Byron, and to accentuate the emphasis of praise. Goethe speaking of Byren at that moment was not, and could not be, quite the same cool critic as Goethe speaking of Dante, or Molière, or Milton. This, I say, we ought to remember in reading Gaethe's judgments on Byron and his poetry. Still, if we are careful to bear this in mind, and if we quote Goethe's praise correctly - which is not always done by those who in this country quete it-and if we add to it that great and due qualification added to it by Goethe himself-which, so far as I have eeen, has never yet been done by his quoters in this country at all-then we shall have a judgment on Byron which comes, I think, very near to the truth, and which may well command our adherence.

In his judicious and interesting "Life of Byron," Professor Nichol quotes Goethe as saying that Byron "is undoubtedly to be regarded as the greatest genius of our century." What Goethe did really say was "the greatest talent," not "the greatest genius." The difference is important, because, while talent gives the notion of power in a man's performance, geoius gives rather the notion of felicity and perfection in it; and this divine gift of consummate felicity by no means, as we have seen, belongs to Byron and to his poetry. Goethe said that Byron "must unquestionably be regarded as the greatest talent of the century."* He said of him, moreover: "The English may think of Byran what they please, but it is certain that they can point to no poet who is his like. He is different from all the rest, and, in the main, greater." Here, again, Professor Nichol translates: "They can show no (living) poet who is to be compared to him;" inserting the word living, I suppose, to prevent its being thaught that Goethe would have ranked Byron, as a paet, above Shakspeare and Milton. But Goethe did not use, or, I think, mean to imply, any limitation such as is added by Professor Nichol. Goethe said simply, and he meant to say, "no paet." Only, the words which follow; ought not, I think, to be rendered, "who is to be compared to him," that is to say, "who is his equal as a poet." They mean rather, "who may properly be compared with him," "who is his parallel." And when Goethe said that Byron was "in the main greater" than all the rest of the English peets, he was not so much thinking of the strict

Sainte-Beuve, speaking of that exquisite master | in Byron between the faults of the man and the | rank, as poetry, of Byron's production; he was language, the Italian poet Leopardi, remerks how | faults of the poet. With Raphael's character By- | thinking of that wonderful personality of Byron which se enters into his poetry, and which Goethe called "a personality such, for its eminence, us has never been yet, and such as is not likely to come again." He was thinking of that "daring, dash, and grandiesity "* of Byron, which are, indeed, so splendid, and which were (so Goethe maintained) of a character to do good, because "everything great is formative," and what is thus formative does us good.

The faults which went with this greatness, and which impaired Byron's poetical work, Goethe saw very well. He saw the constant state of warfare and combat, the "negative and polemical working," which makes Byron's peetry a peetry in which we can so little find rest; he saw the Hang zum Unbegrenzten, the straining after the unlimited, which made it impossible for Byron to produce poetic wholes such as the "Tempest" or "Lear;" he saw the zu viel Empirie, the promiscuous adoption of all the matter offered to the poet by life, just as it was offered, without thought or patience for the mysterious transmutation to be operated on this matter by poetic form. But in a sentence which I cannot, as I say, remember to have yet seen queted in any English criticism of Byren, Goethe lays his finger on the cause of all these defects in Byren, and on his real source of weakness both as a man and as a poet. "The moment he reflects, he is a child," says Goethe—"so-bald or reflectirt ist er ein Kind."

Now, if we take the two parts of Geethe's criticism of Byron, the faverable and the unfavorable, and put them together, we shall have, I think, the truth. On the one hand a splendid and puissant personality, a personality "in eminence such as has never been yet, and is not likely to come again;" of which the like, therefore, is not to be found among the poets of our nation, by which Byron "is different from all the rest, and, in the main, greater." Byron is, moreover, "the greatest talent of our century." On the other hand, this splendid personality and unmatched talent, this unique Byron, "is quite too much in the dark about himself;"† nay, "the mament he begins to reflect, he is a child." There we have, I think, Byron complete; and in estimating him and ranking him we have to strike a balance between the gain which accrues to his poetry, as compared with the productions of other poets, from his auperiority, and the loss which accrues to it from his defects.

A balance of this kind has to be atruck in the case of all poets except the few supreme masters in whom a profound criticism of life exhibits itself in indissoluble connection with the laws of poetic truth and beauty. I have seen it said that I allege poet y to have for its characteristic this: that it is a criticism of life; and that I make it to be thereby distinguished from prose, which is something else. So far from it, that when I first used this expression, a criticism of life, now many years ago, it was to literature in general that I applied it, and not to poetry in especial. "The end and aim of all literature," I said, "is, if one considers it attentively, nothing but that: a criticism of life." And so it surely is; the main end and aim. of all our utterance, whether in prose or in verse, is surely a criticism of life. We are not brought much on our way, I admit, toward an adequate definition of poetry as distinguished from prose by that truth; still a truth it is, and poetry can never prosper if it is fergetten. In poetry, however, the criticism of life has to be made conformably to the laws of poetic truth and poetic beauty. 'Truth and seriousness of substance and matter, felicity and perfection of diction and manner, as these are exhibited in the best poets, are what constitute a criticism of life made in conformity with the laws of poetic truth and poetic beauty; and it is by knowing and feeling the work of those poets, that we learn to recognize the fulfilment and non-fulfilment of such conditions.

The moment, however, that we leave the small band of the very best poets, the true classics, and deal with poets of the next rank, we shall find

[&]quot;Der ohne Frage als das grösste Talent des Jahrbunderts anzusehen ist."
† "Der ibm za vergleichen wäre."

^{* &}quot;Byron's Kühnheit, Keckheit und Grandiosität, ist das nicht alles bildend?—Alles Grosse bildet, sobald wir es gewahr werden."
† "Gar zu dunkel über sich selbet."

that perfect truth and seriousness of matter, in | close alliance with perfect truth and felicity of manner, is the rule no longer. We have now to take what we can get, to forego something here, to admit compensation for it there; to strike a balance, and to see how our poets stand in respect to one another when that balance has been struck. Let us observe how this is so.

We will take three poets, among the most considerable of our century : Leopardi, Byron, Wordsworth. Giacomo Leopardi was ten years younger than Byron, and he died thirteen years after him; both of them, therefore, died young, Byron at the age of thirty-six, Leopardi at the age of thirtynine. Both of them were of noble birth, both of them suffered from physical defect, both of them were in revolt against the established facts and beliefs of their age; hut here the likeness between them ends. The stricken poet of Recanati had no country, for an Italy in his day did not exist; he had no audience, no celebrity. The volume of his poems, published in the very year of Byron's death, hardly sold, I suppose, its tens, while the volumes of Byron's poetry were selling their tens of thousands. And yet Leopardi has the very qualities which we have found wanting to Byron; he has the sense for form and style, the passion for just expression, the sure and firm touch of the true artist. Nay, more, he has a grave fulness of knowledge, an insight into the real bearings of the questions which as a sceptical poet he raises, a power of seizing the real point, a lucidity, with which the author of "Cain" has nothing to compare. I can hardly imagine Leopardi reading the or following Byron in his theological controversy with Dr. Kennedy, without having his features overspread by a calm and fine smile, and remarking of his hrilliant contemporary, as Goethe did, that "the moment he begins to reflect he is a child." But indeed whoever wishes to feel the full superiority of Leopardi over Byron in philosophic thought and in the expression of it, has only to read one paragraph of one poem, the paragraph of "La Ginestra" beginning

"... And thou would'at go on aspiring To the great double Mysteries! the two Principles!"

"Sovente in queste piagge,"

and ending

"Non so se il riso o la pietà prevale."

In like manner, Leopardi is at many points the poetic superior of Wordsworth too. He has a far wider culture than Wordsworth, more mental lucidity, more freedom from illusions as to the real character of the established fact and of reigning conventions; above all, this Italian, with his pure and sure touch, with his fineness of perception, is far more of the artist. Such a piece of pompous dulness as

"O for the coming of that glorious time," and all the rest of it, or such lumbering verse as Mr. Ruskin's enemy,

"Parching summer hath no warrant,"

would have been as impossible to Leopardi as to Dante. Where, then, is Wordsworth's superiority? for the worth of what he has given us in poetry I hold to be greater, on the whole, than the worth of what Leopardi has given us. It is in Wordsworth's sound and profound sense

"Of joy in widest commonalty spread;"

whereas Leopardi remains with his thoughts ever fixed upon the essenza insanabile, upon the acerbo. indegno mistero delle cose. It is in the power with which Wordsworth feels the resources of joy offered to us in nature, offered to us in the primary human affections and duties, and in the power with which in his moments of inspiration he renders this joy and makes us, too, feel it; a force greater than himself seeming to lift him and to prompt his tongue, so that he speaks in a style far above any style of which he has the constant command. and with a truth far beyond any philosophic truth of which he has the conscious and assured possession. Neither Leopardi nor Wordsworth is of the same order with the great poets who made such verse as

"Τλητὸν γὰρ Μοῖραι θυμὸν θέσαν ἀνθρώποισιν."

"In la sua volontade e nostra pace;"

"... Men must endure Their going hence, even as their coming hither;

But, as compared with Leopardi, Wordsworth,

though at many points less lucid, though far less a master of style, far less of an artist, gains so much by his criticism of life being, in certain matters of profound importance, healthful and true, whereas Leopardi's pessimism is not, that the value of Wordsworth's poetry, on the whole, stands higher for us than that of Leopardi's, as it stands higher for us, I think, than that of any modern poetry except Goethe's.

Byron's poetic value is also greater, on the whole, than Leopardi's; and his superiority turns, in the same way, upon the surpassing worth of something which he had and was, after all deduction has been made for his short-comings. talk of Byron's personality-" a personality in eminence such as has never been yet, and is not likely to come again;" and we say that by this personality Byron is "different from all the rest of English poets, and in the main greater." we not he a little more circumstantial, and name that in which the wonderful power of this personality consisted? We can; with the instinct of a poet Mr. Swinhurne has seized upon it and named it for us. The power of Byron's personality lies in "the splendid and imperishable excellence which covers all his offences, and outweighs all his defects—the excellence of sincerity and strength."

Byron found our nation, after its long and victorious struggle with revolutionary France, fixed in a system of established facts and dominant ideas which revolted him. The mental hondage of the most powerful part of our nation, of its strong middle class, to a narrow and false system of this kind, is what we call British Philistinism. That bondage is unbroken to this hour, but in Byron's time it was even far more deep and dark than it is now. Byron was an aristocrat, and it is not difficult for an aristocrat to look on the prejudices and habits of the British Philistine with scenticism and disdain. Plenty of young men of his own class Byron met at Almack's or at Lady Jersey's, who regarded the established facts and reigning beliefs of the England of that day with as little reverence as he did. But these men, dishelievers in British Philistinism in private, entered English public life, the most conventional in the world, and at once they saluted with respect the hahits and ideas of British Philistinism as if they were a part of the order of creation, and as if in public no sane man would think of warring against them. With Byron it was different. What he called the cant of the great middle part of the English nation, what we call its Philistinism, revolted him; but the cant of his own class, deferring to this Philistinism and profiting by it, while they disbelieved in it, revolted him even more. "Come what may," are his own words, "I will never flatter the million's canting in any shape." His class in general, on the other hand, shrugged their shoulders at this cant, laughed at it, pandered to it, and ruled by it. The falsehood, cynicism, insolence, misgovernment, oppression, with their consequent unfailing crop of human misery, which were produced by this state of things, roused Byron to irreconcilable revolt and They made him indignant; they infuriated him; they were so strong, so defiant, so maleficent—and yet he felt that they were doomed. You have seen every trampler down in turn," he comforts himself with saying, "from Bonaparte to the simplest individuals." The old order, as after 1815 it stood victorious, with its ignorance and misery below, its cant, selfishness, and cynicism above, was at home and abroad equally hateful to him. "I have simplified my politics," he writes, "into an utter detestation of all existing governments." And again: "Give me a republic. The king-times are fast finishing; there will be blood shed like water and tears like mist, but the peoples will conquer in the end. I shall not live to see it, but I foresee it."

Byron himself gave the preference, he tells us, to politicians and doers, far above writers and singers. But the politics of his own day and of his own class-even of the Liberals of his own class -were impossible for him. Nature had not formed him for a Liheral peer, proper to move the Address in the House of Lords, to pay compliments to the energy and self-reliance of British middle-class Liberalism, and to adapt his politics to suit it. Unfitted for such politics, he threw himself upon poetry as his organ; and in peetry his topics were not Queen Mab, and the Witch of Atlas, and the Sensitive Plant: they were the upholders of the old order - George the Third, and Lord Castlereagh, and the Duke of Wellington, and Southey-and they were the canters and tramplers of the great world, and they were his enemies and himself. Such was Byron's personality, by which "he is different from all the rest of English poets, and, in the main, greater." But he posed all his life, says M. Scherer. Let us distinguish. There is the Byron who posed, there is the Byron with his affectations and silliness, the Byron whose weakness Lady Blessington, with a woman's acuteness, so admirably seized: "His great defect is flippancy and a total want of self-possession." But when this theatrical and easily criticised personage betook himself to poetry, and when he had fairly warmed to his work, then he became another man; than the theatrical personage passed away; then a higher power took possession of him and filled him; then at last came forth into light that true and puissant personality, with its direct strokes, its ever-welling force, its satire, its energy, and its agony. This is the real Byron; whoever stops at the theatrical preludings does not know him. And this real Byron may well be superior to the stricken Leopardi, he may well he declared "different from all the rest of English poets, and, in the main, greater," in so far as it is true of him, as M. Taine well says, that "all other souls, in comparison with his, seem inert;" in so far as it is true of him that with superb, exhaustless energy he maintained, as Prifessor Nichol well says, "the struggle that keeps alive, if it does not save, the soul;" in so far, finally, as he deserves (and he does deserve) the noble praise of him which I have already quoted from Mr. Swinburne-the praise for "the splendid and imperishable excellence which covers all his offences, and outweighs all his defects-the excellence of sincerity and strength. True, as a man, Byron could not manage himself, could not guide his ways aright, but was all astray. True, he has no light, cannot lead us from the past to the future; "the moment he reflects he is a child." The way out of the false state of things which unraged him he did not see - the slow and laborious way upward; he had not the patience, knowledge, self-discipline, virtue, requisite for seeing it. True, also, as a poet, he has no fine and exact sense for word and structure and rhythm; he has not the artist's nature and gifts. Yet a personality of Byron's force counts for so much in life, and a rhetorician of Byron's force counts for so much in literature! But it would be most unjust to label Byron, as M. Scherer is disposed to label him, as a rhetorician only. Along with his astounding power and passion, he had a strong and deep sense for what is beautiful in nature, and for what is beautiful in human action and suffering. When he warms to his work, when he is inspired, Nature herself seems to take the pen from him as she took it from Wordsworth, and to write for him as she wrote for Wordsworth, though in a different fashion, with her own penetrating simplicity. Goethe has well observed of Byron that when he is at his happiest his representation of things is as easy and real as if he were improvising. It is so; and his verse then exhibits quite another and a higher quality from the rhetorical quality-admirable as this also in its own kind of merit is-of such verse as

"Minions of splendor shrinking from distress,"

and of so much more verse of Byron's of tha stamp. Nature, I say, takes the pen for him and then, assured master of a true poetic styl though he is not, any more than Wordsworth yet as from Wordsworth at his hest there wi come such verse as

"Will no one tell ms what she sings?"

so from Byron, too, at his best, there will con

"He heard it, but he heeded not; his eyes Were with his heart, and that was far away."

Of verse of this high quality Byron has much; of verse of a quality lower than this—of a quality rather rhetorical than truly poetic, yet still of extraordinary power and merit—he has still more. To separate from the mass of poetry which Byron poured forth all this higher portion, so superior to the mass, and still so considerable in quantity, and to present it in one body by itself, is to do a service, I believe, to Byron's reputation, and to the poetic glory of our country.

Such a service I have in the present volume attempted to perform. To Byron, after all the tributes which have been paid to him, here is yet one tribute more:

"Among thy mightier offerings here are mine!"

not a tribute of boundless homage, certainly, but sincere; a tribute which consists, not in covering the poet with eloquent sulogy of our own, but in letting him, at his best and greatest, speak for himself. Surely the critic who does most for his author is the critic who gains readers for his author himself, not for any lucubrations on his author—gains more readers for him, and enables those readers to read him with more admiration.

And in spite of his prodigious vogue, Byron has never yet, perhaps, had the serious admiration which he deserves. Society read him and talked vation of the old impossible world so fiery battle—

about him, as it reads and talks about "Endymion" to-day and with the same sort of result. It looked in Byron's glass as it looks in Lord Beaconsfield's, and sees, or fancies that it sees, its own face there; and then it goes its way, and straightway forgets what manner of man it saw. Even of his passionate admirers, how many never got beyond the theatrical Byron, from whom they caught the fashion of deranging their hsir, or of knotting their neck-handkerchief, or of leaving their shirt-collar unbuttoned! how few profoundly feth his vital influence, the influence of his splendid and imperishable excellence of sincerity and strength!

His own aristocratic class, whose cynical makebelieve drove him to fury; the great middle-class, on whose impregnable Philistinism he shattered himself to pieces—how little have either of these felt Byron's vital influence! As the inevitable break-up of the old order comes; as the English middle-class slowly awakens from its intellectual sleep of two centuries; as our actual present world, to which this sleep has condemned us, shows itself more clearly—our world of an aristocracy materialized and dull, a middle-class purblind and hideons, a lower class crude and brutal—we shall turn our eyes again, and to more purpose, upon this passionate and danntless soldier of a forlorn hope, who, ignorant of the future and unconsoled by its promises, nevertheless waged against the conservation of the old impossible world so flery battle-waged it till he fell—waged it with such splendid and imperishable excellence of sincerity and strength. Wordsworth's value is of another kind. Wordsworth has an insight into permanent sources of joy and consolation for mankind which Byron has not; his poetry gives us more which we may rest upon than Byron's-more which we can rest upon now, and which men may rest upon always. I place Wordsworth's poetry, therefore, above Byron's, on the whole, although in some points he was greatly Byron's inferior, and although Byron's poetry will always, probably, find more readers than Wordsworth's, and will give pleasure more easily. But these two, Wordsworth and Byron, stand, it seems to me, first and pre-emicent in actual performance, a glorious pair, among the English poets of this century. Keats had probably, indeed, a more consummate poetic gift than either of them; but he died having produced too little and being as yet too immature to rival them. I, for my part, can never even think of equalling with them any other of their contemporaries—either Coleridge, poet and philosopher, wrecked in a mist of opium; or Shelley, beautiful and ineffectual angel, beating in the void his luminous wings in vain. Wordsworth and Byron stand out by themselves. When the year 1900 is turned, and our nation comes to recount her poetic glories in the century which has then just ended, the first names with her will be these.

I.—PERSONAL, LYRIC, AND ELEGIAC.

LOCH NA GARR.

Awax, ye gay landscapes, ye gardene of roses!
In you let the minions of luxury rove;
Restore me the rocks, where the snow-flake reposes,
Though still they are sacred to freedom and love:
Yet, Caledonia, beloved are thy mountains,
Round their white summits though elements war;
Though cataracts foam 'stead of smooth-flowing fountains,
I sigh for the valley of dark Loch na Garr.

Ab! there my young footsteps in infancy wander'd;
My cáp was the bonnet, my cloak was the plaid;
On chieftains long perish'd my memory ponder'd,
As daily I strode through the pine-cover'd glade:
I sought not my home till the day's dying glory
Gave place to the rays of the bright polar star;
For fancy was cheer'd by traditional story,
Disclosed by the natives of dark Loch na Garr.

"Shades of the dead! have I not heard your voices Rise on the night-rolling breath of the gale?"
Surely the soul of the hero rejoices,
And rides on the wind o'er his own Highland vale.
Round Loch na Garr while the stormy mist gathers,
Winter presides in his cold icy car:
Clouds there encircle the forms of my fathers;
They dwell in the tempests of dark Loch na Garr.

"Ill-starr'd, though brave, did no visions foreboding Tell you that fate had forsaken your cause?"

Ah! were you destined to die at Culloden,
Victory crown'd not your fall with applause:
Still were you happy in death's earthy slumber,
You rest with your clan in the caves of Braemar;
The pihroch resounds, to the piper's loud number,
Your deeds on the echoes of dark Loch na Garr.

Years have roll'd on, Loch na Garr, since 1 left you,
Years must elapse ere I tread you again:
Nature of verdure and flow'rs has bereft you,
Yet still are you dearer than Alhion's plain.
England! thy beauties are tame and domestic
To one who has roved on the mountains afar:
Oh for the crags that are wild and majestic!
The steep frowning glories of dark Loch na Garr!

WELL! THOU ART HAPPY.

Well! thou art happy, and I feel
That I should thus be happy too;
For still my heart regards thy weal
Warmly, as it was wont to do.

Thy husband's blest—and 'twill impart Some pangs to view his happier lot: But let them pass—Oh! how my heart Would hate him, if he loved thee not!

When late I saw thy favorite child,
I thought my jealous heart would break;
But when the unconscious infant smiled,
I kiss'd it for its mother's sake.

I kiss'd it—and repress'd my sighs.
Its father in its face to see;
But then it had its mother's eyes,
And they were all to love and me.

Mary, adieu! I must away:
While thou art blest I'll not repine;
But near thee I can never stay;
My heart would soon again be thine.

I deem'd that time, I deem'd that pride Had quench'd at length my boyish flame: Nor knew, till seated by thy side, My heart in all—save hope—the same.

Yet was I calm: I knew the time
My breast would thrill before thy look;
But now to tremble were a crime;
We met—and not a nerve was shook.

I saw thee gaze upon my face, Yet met with no confusion there: One only feeling could'st thou trace; The sullen calmness of despair.

Away! away! my early dream Remembrance never must awake; Oh! where is Lethe's fahled stream? My foolish heart be still, or break.

EPISTLE TO A FRIEND.

IN ANSWER TO SOME LINES EXHORTING THE AUTHOR TO BE CHEERFUL, AND TO "BANISH CARE."

"OH! banish care"—such ever be The motto of thy revelry! Perchance of mime, when wassail nights Renew those riotous delights, Wherewith the Children of Despair Lull the lone heart, and "banish care." But not in morn's reflecting hour, When present, past, and future lower,

When all I loved is changed or gone,
Mock with such taunts the woes of one,
Whose every thought—but let them pass—
Thou know'st I am not'what I was.
But, above all, if thou would'st hold
Place in a heart that ne'er was cold,
By all the powers that men revere,
By all unto thy bosom dear,
Thy joys below, thy hopes above,
Speak—speak of anything but love.

6

'Twere long to tell, and vain to hear, The tale of one who scorns a tear; And there is little in that tale Which better bosoms would bewail. But mine has suffer'd more than well 'Twould suit philosophy to tell. I've seen my bride another's bride-Have seen her seated by his side-Have seen the infant, which she bore, Wear the sweet smile the mother wore, When she and I in youth have smiled, As food and faultless as her child-Have seen her eyes in cold disdain, Ask if I felt no secret pain; And I have acted well my part And made my cheek belie my heart, Return'd the freezing glance she gave, Yet felt the while that woman's slave; Have kiss'd, as if without design, The babs which ought to have been mine, And shew'd, alas! in each caress. Time had not made me love the less.

But let this pass—I'll whine no more,
Nor seek again an Eastern shore;
The world befits a busy brain—
I'll hie me to its haunts again.
But if, in some succeeding year,
When Britain's "May is in the sere,"
Thou hear'st of one, whose deepening crimes
Suit with the sablest of the times,
Of one, whom love nor pity sways,
Nor hope of fame, nor good men's praise,
One, who in stern ambition's pride,
Perchance not blood shall ture aside,
One rank'd in some recording page
With the worst anarchs of the age,
Him wilt thou know—and knowing pause,
Nor with the effect forget the cause.

TO THOMAS MOORE.

My hoat is on the shore,
And my bark is on the sea;
But, before I go, Tom Moore,
Here's a double health to thee!

Here's a sigh to those who love me, And a smile to those who hate; And, whatever sky's above me, Here's a heart for every fate.

Though the ocean roar around me, Yet it still shall bear me on; Though a desert should surround me, It hath springs that may be won.

Were't the last drop in the well, As I gasp'd upon the brink, Ere my fainting spirit fell, 'Tis to thee that I would drink.

With that water, as this wine,
The libation I would pour
Should he—peace with thine and mine,
And a health to thee, Tom Moore.

CHILDE HAROLD'S DEPARTURE.

("Childe Harold," Canto i., Staozaa 4-11.)

CHILDE HAROLD bask'd him in the noontide sun, Disporting there like any other fly; Nor deem'd before his little day was done One blast might chill him into misery. But long ere scarce a third of his pass'd by,
Worse than adversity the Childe befell;
He felt the fulness of satiety;
Then loathed he in his native land to dwell,
Which seemed to him more lens than Eremite's sad cell.

For he through Sin's long lahyrinth had run,
Nor made atonement when he did amias,
Had sigh'd to many though he loved but one,
And that loved one, alsa! could ne'er he his.
Ah, happy she! to 'scape from him whose kiss
Had been pollution unto aught so chaste;
Who soon had left her charms for vulgar hliss,
And spoil'd her goedly lands to gild his waste,
Nor calm domestic peace had ever deign'd to taste.

And now Childe Harold was sore sick at heart,
And from his fellow-bacchanals would flee;
'Tis said, at times the sullen tear would start,
But Pride congeal'd the drop within his ee;
Apart he stalk'd in joyless reverie,
And from his native land resolved to go,
And visit scorching climes beyond the sea;
With pleasure drngg'd, he almost long'd for woe,
And e'en for change of scene would seek the shades below.

The Childe departed from his father's hall:
It was a vast and venerable pile;
So old, it seemed only not to fall,
Yet strength was pillar'd in each massy aisle.
Monastic dome! condemn'd to uses vile!
Where Superstition code had made her den
Now Paphian girls were known to sing and smile;
And monks might deem their time was come agen,
If ancient tales say true, nor wrong these holy men.

Yet ofttimes in his maddest mirthful mood
Strange pangs would flash along Childe Harold's brow,
As if the memory of some deadly feud
Or disappointed passion lurk'd below:
But this none knew, nor haply cared to know;
For his was not that open, artless soul
That feels relief by bidding sorrow flow,
Nor sought he friend to counsel or condole,
Whate'er this grief mote be, which he could not control.

And none did love him—though to hall and hower
He gather'd revellers from far and near,
He knew them flatt'rers of the festal hour;
The heartless parasites of present cheer.
Yea! none did love him—not his lemans dear—
But pomp and power alone are woman's care,
And where these are light Eros finds a feere;
Maidea, like moths, are ever caught by glare,
And Mammon wins his ways where Seraphs might despair.

Childe Harold had a mother—not forgot,
Though parting from that mother he did shun;
A sister whom he loved, but saw her not
Before his weary pilgrimage begun:
If friends he had, he bade adieu to none.
Yet deem not thence his breast a breast of steel:
Ye, who have known what 'tis to dote upon
A few dear objects, will in sadness feel
Such partings break the heart they fondly hope to heal.

His house, his home, his heritage, his lands,
The laughing dames in whom he did delight,
Whose large blue eyes, fair locks, and snowy hands,
Might shake the saintship of an anchorite,
And long had fed his youthful appetite;
His gollets brimm'd with every costly wine,
And all that mote to luxury invite,
Without a sigh he left, to cross the brine,
And traverse Paynim shores, and pass Earth's central line.

STANZAS

COMPOSED DURING A THUNDER-STORM.

CHILL and mirk is the nightly blast,
Where Pindus' mountains rise,
And angry clouds are pouring fast
The vengeance of the skies.

Our guides are gone, our hope is lost, And lightnings, as they play, But show where rocks our path have crost, Or gild the torrent's spray. Is you a cot I saw, though low?
When lightning broke the gloom—
How welcome were its shade!—ah, no!
'Tis but a Turkish tomb.

Through sounds of foaming waterfalls
I hear a voice exclaim—
My wayworn countryman, who calls
On distant England's name.

A shot is fired—by fos or friend? Another—'tis to tell The mountain-peasants to descend, And lead us where they dwell.

Oh! who in such a night will dare
To tempt the wilderness?
And who 'mid thunder-peals can hear
Our signal of distress?

And who that heard our shouts would rise To try the dubious road? Nor rather deem from nightly cries That outlaws were abroad.

Clouds hurst, skies flash—oh, dreadful bour!
More fiercely pours the storm!
Yet here one thought has still the power
To keep my hosom warm.

While wand'ring through each broken path, O'er brake and craggy brow; While elements exhaust their wrath, Sweet Florence, where art thou?

Not on the sea, not on the sea!

Thy hark hath long been gone:
Oh, may the storm that pours on me
Bow down my head alone!

Full swiftly blew the swift Siroc,
When last I press'd thy lip;
And long ere now, with foaming shock,
Impell'd thy gallant ship.

Now thou art safe; nay, long ere now Hast trod the shore of Spain; 'Twere hard if aught so fair as thou Should linger on the main.

And since I now remember thee In darkness and in dread, As in those hours of revelry Which mirth and music sped;

Do thou, amid the fair white walls, If Cadiz yet be free, At times frem out her latticed halls Look o'er the dark blue sea;

Then think upon Calypso's isles, Endear'd by days gone by; To others give a thousand smiles, To me a single sigh.

And when the admiring circle mark
The paleness of thy face,
A half-form'd tear, a transient spark
Of melancholy grace,

Again thou'lt smile, and, blushing, shun Some coxcomb's raillery; Nor own for once thou thought'st of one Who ever thinks on thee.

Though smile and sigh alike are vain, When sever'd hearts repine, My spirit flies o'er mount and main, And mourns in search of thine.

"MAID OF ATHENS."

Ζώη μοῦ, σάς άγαπῶ.

MAID of Athens, ere we part, Give, oh, give me hack my heart! Or, since that has left my breast, Keep it now, and take the rest! Hear my vow hefore I go, Ζώη μοῦ, σάς ἀγαπῶ. By those tresses unconfined, Woo'd by each Ægean wind; By those lids whose jetty fringe Kiss thy soft cheeks' hlooming tings; By those wild eyes like the roe, Zún μοῦ, σάς ἀγαπῶ.

By that lip I long to taste; By that zone-encircled waist; By all the token-flowers that tell What words can never speak so well; By love's alternate joy and woe, $Z\omega\eta \ \mu\sigma\bar{\nu}$, $\sigma\dot{\alpha}c \ \dot{\alpha}\gamma\alpha\pi\bar{\omega}$.

Maid of Athens! I am gons; Think of me, sweet! when alone. Though I fly to Istambol, Athens holds my heart and soul: Can I cease to love thee? No! Ζώη μοῦ, σάς ἀγαπῶ.

TO INEZ.

Nay, smile not at my sullen brow; Alas! I cannot smile again: Yet Heaven avert that ever thou Shouldst weep, and haply weep in vain-

And dost thou ask, what secret woe
I bear, corroding joy and youth?
And wilt thou vainly seek to know
A pang ev'n thou must fail to soothe?

It is not love, it is not hate,

Nor low Ambition's honors lost,

That hids me loathe my present state,

And fly from all I prized the most:

It is that weariness which springs
From all I meet, or hear, or see:
To me no pleasure heauty brings;
Thice eyes have scarce a charm for me.

It is that settled, ceaseless gloom
The fahled Hebrew wanderer hore;
That will not look beyond the tomb,
But cannot hope for rest before.

What exile from himself can fiee?

To zones, though more and more remote,
Still, still pursues, where'er 1 be,
The blight of life—the demon thought.

Yet others wrapt in pleasure seem, And taste of all that I forsake; Oh! may they still of transport dream, And no'er, at least like me, awake!

Through many a clime 'tis mine to go,
With many a retrospection curst;
And all my solace is to know,
Whate'er hetides, I've known the worst.

What is that worst? Nay, do not ask—
In pity from the search forbear;
Smile on—nor venture to unmask
Man's heart, and view the Hell that's there.

"ONE STRUGGLE MORE."

"One struggle more," and I am free
From pangs that rend my heart in twain;
One last long sigh to love and thee,
Then back to busy life again.
It suits me well to mingle now
With things that never pleased before:
Though every joy is fled below,
What future grief can touch me more?

Then bring me wine, the banquet bring;
Man was not form'd to live alone:
I'll be that light, unmeaniog thing
That smiles with all, and weeps with none.
It was not thus in days more dear,
It never would have been, but thou

Hast fled, and left me lonely here; Thou'rt nothing—all are nothing now.

In vain my lyre would lightly breathe!

The smile that sorrow fain would wear
But mocks the woe that lurks beneath,
Like roses o'er a sepulchre.
Though gay companions o'er the bowl
Dispel awhile the sense of ill;
Though pleasure fires the maddening soul,
The heart—the heart is lonely still!

On many a lone and lovely night
It soothed to gaze upon the sky;
For then I deem'd the heavenly light
Shone sweetly on thy pensive eye:
And oft I thought at Cynthia's noon,
When sailing o'er the Ægean wave,
"Now Thyrza gazes on that moon"—
Alas, it gleam'd upon her grave!

When stretch'd on fever's sleepless hed,
And sickness shrunk my throbbing veins,
"'Tis comfort still," I faintly said,
"That Thyrza cannot know my pains:"
Like freedom to the time-worn slave,
A boon 'tis idle then to give,
Relenting Nature vainly gave
My life, when Thyrza ceased to live!

My Thyrza's pledge in better daya,
When love and life alike were new!
How different now thou meet'st my gaze!
How tinged by time with sorrow's hue!
The heart that gave itself with thee
Is silent—āh, were mine as still!
Though cold as e'en the dead can be,
It feels, it sickens with the chill.

Thou bitter pledge! thou mournful token!
Though painful, welcome to my breast!
Still, still preserve that love unbroken,
Or break the heart to which thou'rt presa'd!
Time tempers love, but not removes,
More hallow'd when its hope is fied:
Oh! what are thousand living loves
To that which cannot quit the dead?

EUTHANASIA.

When Time, or soon or late, shall bring
The dreamless sleep that lulls the dead,
Oblivion! may thy languid wing
Wave gently o'er my dying bed!

No hand of friends or heirs be there, To weep, or wish, the coming blow: No maiden, with diahevell'd hair, To feel, or feign, decorous woe.

But silent let me sink to earth,
With no officious mourners near:
I would not mar one hour of mirth,
Nor startle friendship with a fear.

Yet Love, if Love in such an hour Could nobly check its useless sighs, Might then exert its latest power In her who lives and him who dies.

'Twere sweet, my Psyche! to the last
'Thy features still screne to ace:
Forgetful of its struggles past,
E'en Pain itself should smile on thes.

But vain the wish—for Beauty still
Will shrink, as shrinks the ebbing breath;
And woman's tears, produced at will,
Deceive in life, unman in death.

Then lonely be my latest hour,
Without regret, without a groan;
For thousands Death hath ceased to lower,
And pain been transient or unknown.

"Ay, but to die, and go," alas!
Where all have gone, and all must go!
To be the nothing that I was
Ere born to life and living woe!—

Count o'er the joys thine hours have seen, Count o'er thy days from anguish free, And know, whatever thou hast been, 'Tis something better not to be.

"AND THOU ART DEAD."

"Heu, quanto miuus est cum reliquie versari quam tui memiuisse!"

And thou art dead, as young and fair
As aught of mortal birth;
And form so soft, and charms so rare,
Too soon return'd to Earth!
Though Earth received them in her bed,
And o'er the spot the crowd may tread
In carelessness or mirth,
There is an eye which could not brook
A moment on that grave to look.

I will not ask where thou liest low,
Nor gaze upon the spot;
There flowers or weeds at will may grow,
So I behold them not:
It is enough for me to prove
That what I loved, and long must love,
Like common earth can rot;
To me there needs no stone to tell,
'Tie Nothing that I loved so well.

Yet did I love thee to the last
As fervently as thou,
Who didst not change through all the past,
And canst not alter now.
The love where Death has set his seal,
Nor age can chill, nor rival steal,
Nor falsehood disavow:
And, what were worse, thou canst not see
Or wrong, or change, or fault in me.

The hetter days of life were ours;
The worst can be but mine:
The sun that cheers, the storm that lowers,
Shall never more be thine.
The silence of that dreamless sleep
I envy now too much to weep;
Nor need I to repine
That all those charms have pass'd away,
I might have watch'd through long decay.

The flower in ripen'd bloom unmatch'd Must fall the earliest prey;
Though by no hand untimely anatch'd,
The leaves must drop away:
And yet it were a greater grief
To watch it withering, leaf by leaf,
Than see it pluck'd to-day;
Since earthly eye but ill can bear
To trace the change to foul from fair.

I know not if I could have borne
To see thy beauties fade;
The night that follow'd such a morn
Had worn a deeper shade.
The day without a cloud hath pass'd,
And thou wert lovely to the last;
Extinguish'd, not decay'd;
As stars that shoot along the sky
Shine brightest as they fall from high.

As once I wept, if I could weep,
My tears might well be shed,
To think I was not near to keep
One vigil o'er thy bed;
To gaze, how fondly! on thy face,
To fold thee in a faint embracs,
Uphold thy drooping head;
And show that love, however vain,
Nor thou nor I can feel again.

Yet how much less it were to gain,
Though thou hast left me free,
The lovelieat things that still remain,
Than thus remember thee!
The all of thine that cannot die
Through dark and dread Eternity
Returns again to me,
And more thy buried love endears
Than aught, except its living years.

"WHEN WE TWO PARTED."

When we two parted
In silence and tears,
Half broken-hearted
To sever for years,
Pale grew thy cheek and cold,
Colder thy kies;
Truly that hour foretold
Sorrow to this,

The dew of the morning
Sunk chill on my brow—
It felt fike the warning
Of what I feel now.
Thy vows are all broken,
And light is thy fame;
I hear thy name spoken,
And share in its shame.

They name thee hefore me, A knell to mine ear; A shudder comes o'er me—
Why wert thou so dear?
They know not I knew thee,
Who knew thee too well—
Long, long shall I rue thee,
Too deeply to tell.

In secret we met—
In silence I grieve,
That thy heart could forget,
Thy spirit deceive.
If I should meet thee
After long years,
How should I greet thee?—
With silence and tears.

STANZAS FOR MUSIC.

"O Lachrymarum fons, tenero sacros Ducentium ortna ex animo: quater Felix! in imo qui scatentem Pectore te, pia Nympha, sensit." Grav's Poemata.

THERE'S not a joy the world can give like that it takes away,
When the glow of early thought declines in feeling's dull decay;
'Tis not on youth's smooth cheek the blush alone, which fades so fast,
But the tender bloom of heart is gone, ere youth itself be past.

Then the few whose spirits float above the wreck of happiness Are driven o'er the shoals of guilt or ocean of excess: The magnet of their course is gone, or only points in vain The shore to which their shiver'd sail shall never stretch again.

Then the mortal coldness of the soul like death itself comes down; It cannot feel for others' woes, it dare not dream its own; That heavy chill has frozen o'er the fountain of our tears, And though the eye may sparkle still, 'tis where the ice appears.

Though wit may flash from fluent lips, and mirth distract the breast, Through midnight hours that yield no more their former hope of rest; 'Tis but as ivy-leaves around the ruin'd turret wreath, All green and wildly fresh without, but worn and gray beneath.

Oh, could I feel as I have felt, or be what I have been, Or weep as I could once have wept, o'er many a vanish'd scene; As aprings in deserts found seem sweet, all brackish though they be, So, midst the wither'd waste of life, those tears would flow to me.

STANZAS TO AUGUSTA.

Though the day of my destiny's over,
And the star of my fate hath declined,
Thy soft heart refused to discover
The faults which so many could find;
Though thy soul with my grief was acquainted,
It shrunk not to share it with me,
And the love which my spirit hath painted
It never hath found but in thee.

Then when nature around me is smiling,
The last smile which answers to mine,
I do not helieve it beguiling,
Because it reminds me of thine;

And when winds are at war with the ocean, As the breasts I believed in with me, If their billows excite an emotion, It is that they bear me from thee.

Though the rock of my last hope is shiver'd,
And its fragments are sunk in the wave,
Though I feel that my soul is deliver'd
To pain—it shall not be its slave.
There is many a pang to pursue me:
They may crush, but they shall not contemn—
They may torture, but shall not subdue me—
'Tie of thee that I think—not of them.

Though human, thou didst not deceive me,
Though woman, thou didst not foraake,
Though loved, thou forborest to grieve me,
Though slander'd, thou never could'st shake—
Though trusted, thou didst not disclaim me,
Though parted, it was not to fly,
Though watchful, 'twas not to defame me,
Nor, mute, that the world might belie.

Yet I blame not the world, nor despise it,
Nor the war of the many with one—
If my soul was not fitted to prize it,
'Twas folly not sooner to shun:
And if dearly that error hath coat me,
And more than I once could foresee,
I have found that, whatever it lost me,
It could not deprive me of thee.

From the wreck of the past, which hath perish'd,
Thus much I at least may recall,
It hath taught me that what I most cherish'd
Deserved to be dearest of all:
In the desert a fountain is springing,
In the wide waste there still is a tree,
And a bird in the solitude singing,
Which speaks to my spirit of thee.

SOLITUDE.

("Childe Harold," Cauto ii., Stanzas 25, 26.)

To sit on rocks, to muse o'er flood and fell,
To slowly trace the forest's shady scene,
Where things that own not man's dominion dwell,
And mortal foot hath ne'er or rarely been;
To climh the trackless mountain all unseen,
With the wild flock that never needs a fold:
Alone o'er steeps and foaming falls to lean;
This is not solitude: 'tis but to hold
Converse with Nature's charms, and view her stores unroll'd.

But midst the crowd, the hum, the shock of men,
To hear, to see, to feel, and to possess,
And roam along, the world's tired denizen,
With none who bless us, none whom we can bless;
Minions of splendor shrinking from distress!
None that, with kindred consciousness endued,
If we were not, would seem to smile the less
Of all that flatter'd, follow'd, sought, and sued;
This is to be alone; this, this is solitude.

NATURE THE CONSOLER.

("Childe Harold," Canto iii., Stanzas 13-15.)

Where rose the mountains, there to him were friends; Where roll'd the ocean, thereon was his home; Where a blue sky, and glowing clime, extends, He had the passion and the flower to roam; The desert, forest, cavern, hreaker's foam, Were unto him companionship; they spake A mutual language, clearer than the tome Of his land's tongue, which he would oft forsake For Nature's pages glass'd by sunbeams on the lake.

Like the Chaldean, he could watch the stars,
Till he had peopled them with beings bright
As their own beams; and earth, and earth-born jars,
And human frailties, were forgotten quite:
Could he have kept his spirit to that flight
He had been happy; but this clay will sink
Its spark immortal, envying it the light
To which it mounts, as if to break the link
That keeps us from yon heaven which woos us to its brink-

But in Man's dwellings he became a thing Restless and worn, and stern and wearisome, Droop'd as a wild-born falcon with clipt wing, To whom the houndless air alone were home: Then came his fit again, which to o'ercome, As eagerly the barr'd-up bird will beat His breast and beak against his wiry dome Till the blood tinge his plumage, so the heat Of his impeded soul would through his bosom eat.

THE SAME.

("Childe Harold," Canto iii., Stanzas 71-75.)

Is it not better, then, to be alone,
And love Earth only for its earthly sake?
By the blue rushing of the arrowy Rhone,
Or the pure bosom of its nursing lake,
Which feeds it as a mother who doth make
A fair but froward infant her own care,
Kissing its cries away as these awake—
Is it not better thus our lives to wear,
Than join the crushing crowd, doomed to inflict or bear?

I live not in myself, but I become
Partion of that around me; and to me
High mountains are a feeling, but the hum
Of human cities torture: I can see
Nothing to loathe in nature, save to be
A link reluctant in a fleshly chain,
Class'd among creatures, when the soul can flee,
And with the sky, the peak, the heaving plain
Of ocean, or the stars, mingle, and not in vain.

And thus I am absorb'd, and this is life;
I look upon the peopled desert past,
As on a place of agony and strife,
Where, for some sin, to sorrow I was cast,
To act and suffer, but remount at last
With a fresh pinion; which I feel to spring,
Though young, yet waxing vigorous, as the blast
Which it would cope with, on delighted wing,
Spurning the clay-cold bonds which round our being cling.

And when, at length, the mind shall be all free From what it hates in this degraded form, Reft of its carnal life, save what shall be Existent happier in the fly and worm—
When elements to elements conform,
And dust is as it should be, shall I not Feel all I eee, less dazzling, but more warm?
The bodiless thought? the Spirit of each spot?
Of which, even now, I share at times the immortal lot?

Are not the mountains, waves, and skies a part
Of me and of my soul, as I of them?
Is not the love of these deep in my heart
With a pure passion? should I not contemn
All objects, if compared with these? and stem
A tide of suffering, rather than forego
Such feelings for the hard and worldly phlegm
Of those whose eyes are only turn'd below,
Gazing upon the ground, with thoughts which dare not glow?

THE POET AND THE WORLD.

("Childe Harold," Canto iii., Stanzas 113, 114.)

I HAVE not loved the world, nor the world me;
I have not flatter'd its rank breath, nor bow'd
To its idolatries a patient knee—
Nor coin'd my cheek tosemiles—nor cried aloud
In worship of an echo; in the crowd
They could not deem me one of such; I stood
Among them, but not of them; in a shroud
Of thoughts which were not their thoughts, and still could,
Had I not filed my mind, which thus itself subdued.

I have not loved the world, nor the world me—
But let us part fair foee; I do believe,
Though I have found them not, that there may be
Words which are things—hopes which will not deceive,
And virtnes which are merciful, nor weave
Snares for the failing: I would also deem
O'er others' griefs that some sincerely grieve;
That two, or one, are almost what they seem—
That goodness is no name, and happiness no dream.

BEREAVEMENT.

("Childe Harold," Canto ii., Stanza 98.)

What is the worst of wees that wait on age?
What stamps the wrinkle deeper on the brow?
To view each loved one blotted from life's page,
And be alone on earth, as I am now.
Before the Chastener humbly let me bow,
O'er hearts divided and o'er hopes destroy'd:
Roll on, vain daye! full reckless may ye flow,
Since Time hath reft whate'er my soul enjoy'd,
And with the ills of Eld mine earlier years alloy'd.

LAST LEAVING ENGLAND.

("Childe Harold," Canto iii., Stauzas 1, 2.)

Is thy face like thy mother's, my fair child!

Ana! sole daughter of my house and heart?

When last I saw thy young blue eyes they smiled,

And then we parted—not as now we part,

But with a hope.—

Awaking with a start,
The waters heave around me; and on high
The winda lift up their voices: I depart,
Whither I know not; but the hour's gone by,
When Albion's lessening shores could grieve or glad mine eye.

Once more upon the waters! yet once more!
And the waves bound beneath me as a steed
That knows his rider. Welcome to the roar!
Swift be their guidance, wheresoe'er it lead!
Though the strain'd mast should quiver as a reed,
And the rent canvas fluttering strew the gale,
Still must I on; for I am as a weed,
Flung from the rock, on Ocean's foam, to sail
Where'er the surge may sweep, the tempeat's breath prevail.

ENGLAND.

("Childe Harold," Canto iv., Stanzas 8-10.)

I've taught me other tongues—and in strange eyes
Have made me not a stranger; to the mind
Which is itself, no changes bring surprise;
Nor is it harsh to make, nor hard to find
A country with—ay, or without mankind;
Yet was I born where men are proud to he,
Not without cause; and should I leave behind
The inviolate island of the sage and free,
And seek me out a home by a remoter sea,

Perhaps I loved it well; and should I lay My ashes in a soil which is not mine, My spirit shall resume it—if we may Unhodied choose a sanctuary. I twine My hopes of being remember'd in my line With my land's language: if toosfond and far These aspirations in their scope incline—If my fame should be, as my fortunes are, Of hasty growth and blight, and dull Oblivion bar

My name from out the temple where the dead
Are honor'd by the nations—let it be—
And light the laurels on a loftier head!
And be the Spartan's epituph on me—
"Sparta hath many a worthier son than he,"
Meantime I seek no sympathies, nor need;
The thorns which I have reap'd are of the tree
I planted—they have torn me—and I bleed:
I should have known what fruit would spring from such a seed.

RUINS TO RUINS.

("Childe Harold," Canto iv., Stanzas 130, 131.)

On Time! the beautifier of the dead,
Adarner of the ruin, comforter
And only healer when the heart hath bled—
Time! the corrector where our judgments err,
The test of truth, love—sole philosopher,
For all beside are sophists, from thy thrift,
Which never loses though it doth defer—
Time, the avenger! unto thee I lift
My hands, and eyes, and heart, and crave of thee a gift:

Amid this wreck, where thou hast made a shrine And temple more divinely desolate, Among thy mightier offerings here are mine, Ruins of years—though few, yet full of fate—If thou hast ever seen me too elate, Hear me not; but if calmly I have borne Good, and reserved my pride against the hate Which shall not whelm me, let me not have worn This iron in my soul in vain—shall they not mourn?

THE DREAM.

I saw two beings in the hues of youth Standing upon a hill, a gentle hill, Green and of mild declivity, the last As 'twere the cape of a long ridge of such, Save that there was no sea to lave its base, But a most living landscape, and the wave Of woods and cornfields, and the abodes of men Scatter'd at intervals, and wreathing amoke Arising from such rustic roofs; the hill Was crown'd with a peculiar diadem Of trees, in circular array, so fix'd, Not by the sport of nature, but of man: These two, a maiden and a youth, were there Gazing-the one on all that was beneath Fair as herself-but the boy gazed on her And both were young, and one was beautiful: And both were young—yet not alike in youth. As the aweet moon on the horizon's verge, The maid was on the eve of womanhood; The boy had fewer summers, but his heart Had far outgrown his years, and to his eye There was but one beloved face on earth, And that was shining on him; he had look'd Upon it till it could not pass away He had no breath, no being, but in hers; She was his voice; he did not speak to her, But trembled on her words; she was his sight, For his eye follow'd hers, and saw with here Which color'd all his objects—he had ceased To live within himself; she was his life, The ocean to the river of his thoughts, Which terminated all: upon a tone, A touch of hers, his blood would ebb and flow, And his cheek change tempestuously-his heart Unknowing of its cause of agony. But she in these fond feelings had no share: Her sighs were not for him; to her he was Even as a brother—but no more; 'twas much, For brotherless she was, save in the name Her infant friendship had bestow'd on him; Herself the anlitary scion left Of a time-honor'd race.—It was a name Which pleased him, and yet pleased him not-and why? Time taught him a deep answer-when she loved Another; even now she loved another, And on the summit of that hill she stood Lonking afar if yet her lover's steed Kept pace with her expectancy and flew.

A change came o'er the spirit of my dream. There was an ancient mansion, and before Its walls there was a steed caparison'd: Within an antique Oratory stood The Boy of whom I spake;—he was alone And pale, and pacing to and fro: anon He sat him down, and seized a pen, and traced Words which I could not guess of; then he lean'd His bow'd head on his hands, and shook as 'twere With a convulsion-then arose again, And with his teeth and quivering hands did tear What he had written, but he shed no tears. And he did calm himself, and fix his brow Into a kind of quiet: as he paused, The Lady of his love re-enter'd there : She was serene and smiling then, and yet She knew she was by him beloved-she knew For quickly comes such knowledge, that his heart Was darken'd with her shadow, and she saw That he was wretched, but she saw not all. He rose, and with a cold and gentle grasp He took her hand; a moment o'er his face A tablet of unutterable thoughts Was traced, and then it faded, as it came; He dropp'd the hand he held, and with slow steps Ratired, but not as bidding her adien, For they did part with mutual smiles; he pass'd From out the massy gate of that old Hall,

And, mounting on his stead, he went his way; And ne'er repass'd that heary threshold more.

A change came o'er the spirit of my dream. The Boy was sprung to manhood: in the wilds Of fiery climes he made himself a home, And his Soul drank their sunbeams: he was girt With strange and dusky aspects; he was not Himself like what he had been; on the sea And on the shore he was a wanderer; There was a mass of many images Crowded like waves upon ms, but he was A part of all; and in the last he lay Reposing from the noontide sultriness, Couch'd among fallen columns, in the shade Of ruin'd walls that had survived the names Of those who rear'd them; by his sleeping side Stood camels grazing, and some goodly steeds Were fasten'd near a fountain; and a man Clad in a flowing garb did watch the while, While many of his tribe slumber'd around: And they were canopied by the blue sky, So cloudless, clear, and purely beautiful, That God alone was to be seen in Heaven.

A change came o'er the spirit of my dream. The Lady of his love was wed with One Who did not love her better: in her home, A thousand leagues from his—her native home, She dwelt, begirt with growing Infancy, Daughters and sons of Beauty—but behold! Upon her face there was the tint of grief, The settled shadow of an inward strife, And an unquiet drooping of the eye As if its lid were charged with unshed tears. What could her grief be?-she had all she loved, And he who had so loved her was not there To trouble with bad hopes, or evil wish, Or ill-repress'd affliction, her pure thoughts. What could her grief be?-she had loved him not, Nor given him cause to deem himself beloved, Ner could he he a part of that which prey'd Upon her mind-s spectre of the past.

A change came o'er the spirit of my dream. The Wanderer was return'd. I saw him s I saw him stand Before an Altar-with a gentle bride; Her face was fair, but was not that which made The Starlight of his Boyhood; as he stood Even at the altar, o'er his brow there came The self-same aspect, and the quivering shock That in the antique Oratory shock His bosom in its solitude; and then-As in that hour-a moment o'er his face The tablet of unutterable thoughts Was traced—and then it faded as it came, And he stood calm and quiet, and he spoke The fitting vows, but heard not his own words, And all things reel'd around him; he could see Not that which was, nor that which should have been; But the old mansion, and the accustom'd hall, And the remember'd chambers, and the place The day, the hour, the aunshine, and the ahade, All things pertaining to that place and honr, And her who was his destiny, came back And thrust themselves between him and the light: What business had they there at such a time?

A change came o'er the spirit of my dream. The Lady of his love-Oh! she was changed As by the sickness of the soul: her mind Had wander'd from its dwelling, and her eyes They had not their own lustre, but the look Which is not of the earth; she was become The queen of a fantastic realm; her thoughts Were combinations of disjointed things; And forms impalpable and unperceived Of others' sight familiar were to hers. And this the world calls frenzy; but the wise Have a far deeper madness, and the glance Of melancholy is a fearful gift: What is it but the telescope of truth, Which atrips the distance of its fantasies. And brings life near in utter nakedness, Making the cold reality too real?

A change came o'er the spirit of my dream. The Wanderer was alone as heretofore; The beings which surrounded him were gone. Or were at war with him; he was a mark For blight and desolation, compass'd round

 $\mathbf{2}$

With Hatred and Contention; Pain was mix'd In all which was served up to him, until, Like to the Pontic monarch of old days, He fed on poisons, and they had no power, But were a kind of nutriment; he lived Through that which had been death to many men, And made him friends of mountains: with the stars And the quick Spirit of the Universe He held his dialogues; and they did teach To him the magic of their mysteries; To him the book of Night was open'd wide, And voices from the deep abyes reveal'd A marvel and a secret—Be it so.

My dream was past; it had no further change. It was of a strange order that the doom Of these two creatures should he thus traced out Almost like a reality—the one To end in madness—both in misery.

THE POET'S CURSE.

("Childe Harold," Canto iv., Stanzas 134-137.)

AND if my voice break forth, 'tis not that now I shrink from what is suffer'd: let him speak Who hath beheld decline upon my brow, Or seen my mind's convulsion leave it weak; But in this page a record will I seek.

Not in the air shall these my words disperse, Though I be ashes; a far hour shall wreak The deep prophetic fulness of this verse, And pile on human heads the mountain of my curse!

That curse shall be Forgiveness.—Have I not— Hear me, my mother Earth! behold it, Heaven!— Have I not had to wrestle with my lot? Have I not suffer'd things to be forgiven? Have I not had my brain sear'd, my heart riven, Hopes sapp'd, name blighted, Life's life lied away? And only not to desperation driven Because not altogether of such clay As rots into the souls of those whom I survey.

From mighty wrongs to petty perfidy
Have I not seen what human things could do?
From the loud roar of foaming calumny
To the small whisper of the as paltry few,
And subtler venom of the reptile crew,
The Janus glance of whose significant eye,
Learning to lie with silence, would seem true,
And without utterance, save the shrug or sigh,
Deal round to happy fools its speechless ohloquy.

But I have lived, and have not lived in vain:
My mind may lose its force, my hlood its fire,
And my frame perish even in conquering pain;
But there is that within me which shall tire
Torture and Time, and breathe when I expire;
Something unearthly, which they deem not of,
Like the remember'd tone of a mute lyre,
Shall on their soften'd spirits sink, and move
In hearts all rocky now the late remorse of love.

NATURE TO THE LAST.

("Childe Harold," Canto iv., Stauzas 175–184.)

My Pilgrim's shrine is won,
And he and I must part—so let it he!
His task and mine alike are nearly done;
Yet once more let us look upon the sea.
The midland ocean breaks on him and me,
And from the Alhan Mount we now behold
Our friend of youth, that ocean, which, when we Beheld it last by Calpe's rock unfold
Those waves, we follow'd on till the dark Euxine roll'd

Upon the blue Symplegades; long years—
Long, though not very many—since have done
Their work on hoth; some suffering and some tears
Have left us nearly where we had hegun:
Yet not in vain our mortal race hath run,
We have had our reward—and it is here;
That we can yot feel gladden'd by the sun,
And reap from earth, sea, joy almost as dear
As if there were no man to trouble what is clear.

Oh that the Desert were my dwelling-place, With one fair Spirit for my miniater, That I might all forget the human race, And, hating no one, love but only her! Ye Elements!—in whose ennobling stir I feel myself exalted—can ye not Accord me such a being? Do I err In deeming such inhabit many a spot? Though with them to converse can rarely be our lot.

There is a pleasure in the pathless woods,
There is a rapture on the lonely shore,
There is society, where none intrudes,
By the deep Sea, and music in its roar.
I love not than the less, but Nature more,
From these our interviews, in which I steal
From all I may be, or have been before,
To mingle with the Universe, and feel
What I can ne'er express, yet can not all conceal.

Roll on, thou deep and dark blue Ocean—roll!
Ten thousand fleets sweep over thee in vain;
Man marks the earth with ruin—bis control
Stops with the shore; upon the watery plain.
The wrecks are all thy deed, nor doth remain
A shadow of man's ravage, save his own,
When, for a moment, like a drop of rain,
He sinks into thy depths with bubbling groan,
Without a grave, unknell'd, uncoffin'd, and unknown.

His steps are not upon thy paths—thy fields
Are not a spoil for him—thou dost arise
And shake him from thee; the vile strength he wields
For earth's destruction thou dost all despise,
Spurning him from thy bosom to the skies,
And send'st him, shivering in thy playful spray
And howling, to his Gods, where haply lies
His petty hope in some near port or bay,
And dashest him again to earth—there let him lay.

The armaments which thunderstrike the walls Of rock-bnilt cities, hidding nations quake, And monarchs tremble in their capitals, The oak leviathans, whose huge ribs make Their clay creator the vain title take Of lord of thee, and arbiter of war; These are thy toys, and, as the snowy flake, They melt into thy yeast of waves, which mar Alike the Armada's pride, or spoils of Trafalgar.

Thy shores are empires, changed in all save thee—Assyria, Greece, Rome, Carthage, what are they? Thy waters wasted them while they were free, And many a tyrant since; their shores obey The stranger, slave, or savage; their decay Has dried up realms to deserts; not so thou, Unchangeable save to thy wild waves' play, Time writes no wrinkle on thine azure hrow—Such as creation's dawn beheld, thou rollest now.

Thou glorious mirror, where the Almighty's form Glasses itself in tempests; in all time, Calm or convulsed—in breeze, or gale, or storm, Icing the pole, or in the torrid clime Dark-heaving—boundless, endless, and sublime—The image of Eternity—the throne Of the Invisible; even from out thy slime The monsters of the deep are made; each zone Obeys thee; thou goest forth, dread, fathomless, slone,

And I have loved thee, Ocean! and my joy Of youthful sports was on thy hreast to be Borne, like thy bubbles, onward: from a boy I wanton'd with thy breakers—they to me Were a delight; and if the freshening sea Made them a terror—'twes a pleasing fear, For I was as it were a child of thee, And trusted to thy billows far and near, And laid my hand upon thy mane—as I do here.

"SHE WALKS IN BEAUTY."

SHE walks in beauty, like the night Of cloudless climes and starry skies; And all that's best of dark and bright Meet in her aspect and her eyes: • Thus mellow'd to that tender light Which heaven to gaudy day denies. One shade the more, one ray the less,
Had half-impair'd the nameless grace
Which waves in every raven tress,
Or softly lightens o'er her face;
Where thoughts serenely sweet express
How pure, how dear their dwelling-place.

And on that cheek, and o'er that hrow,
So soft, so calm, yet eloquent,
The smiles that win, the tints that glow,
But tell of days in goodness spent,
A mind at peace with all below,
A heart whose love is innocent!

"OH! SNATCH'D AWAY."

On! snatch'd away in beauty's bloom, On thee shall press no ponderous tomb; But on thy turf shall roses rear Their leaves, the earliest of the year; And the wild cypress wave in tender gloom:

And oft by yon blue gushing stream
Shall Sorrow lean her drooping head,
And feed deep thought with many a dream,
And, lingering, pause and lightly tread;
Fond wretch! as if her step disturb'd the dead.

Away! we know that tears are vain,
That death nor heeds nor hears distress:
Will this unteach us to complain?
Or make one mourner weep the less?
And thou—who tell'st me to forget,
Thy looks are wan, thine eyes are wet.

SONG OF SAUL.

WARRIORS and chiefs! should the shaft or the sword Pierce me in leading the host of the Lord, Heed not the corse, though a king's, in your path: Bury your steel in the hosoms of Gath!

'Thou who art bearing my buckler and how, .Should the soldiers of Saul look away from the foe, .Stretch me that moment in blood at thy feet!

Mine be the doon which they dared not to meet.

Farewell to others, but never we part, Heir to my royalty, son of my heart! Bright is the diadem, houndless the sway, Or kingly the death, which awaits us to-day!

VISION OF BELSHAZZAR.

THE King was on his throne,
The Satraps throug'd the ball;
A thousand hright lamps shone
O'er that high festival.
A thousand cups of gold,
In Judah deem'd divine—
Jehovah's vessels hold
The godless Heathen's wine!

In that same hour and hall,
The fingers of a hand
Came forth against the wall,
And wrote as if on sand:
The fingers of a man—
A solitary hand
Along the letters ran,
And traced them like a wand.

The monarch saw, and shook,
And bade no more rejoice;
All bloodless wax'd his look,
And tremulous his voice.
"Let the men of lore appear,
The wisest of the earth,
And expound the words of fear
Which mar our royal mirth."

Chaldea's seers are good,
But here they have no skill;
And the unknown letters stood
Untold and awful still.

And Babel's men of age
Are wise and deep in lore;
But now they were not sage,
They saw—but knew no more.

A captive in the land,
A stranger and a youth,
He heard the king's command,
He saw that'writing's truth.
The lamps around were bright,
The prophecy in view;
He read it on that night—
The morrow proved it true.

"Belshazzar's grave is made,
His kingdom pass'd away,
He, in the balance weigh'd,
Is light and worthless clay.
The sbroud his robe of state,
His canopy the stone;
The Mede is at his gate!
The Persian on his throne!"

DESTRUCTION OF SENNACHERIB.

THE Assyrian came down like the wolf on the fold, And his cohorts were gleaming in purple and gold; And the sheen of their spears was like stars on the se When the blue wave rolls nightly on deep Galilee.

Like the leaves of the forest when Summer is green, That host with their banners at sunset were seen; Like the leaves of the forest when Autumn hath blown, That host on the morrow lay wither'd and strown.

For the Angel of Death spread his wings on the blast, And breathed in the face of the foe as he pass'd; And the eyes of the sleepers wax'd deadly and chill, And their hearts but once heaved, and forever grew still!

And there lay the steed with his nostril all wide, But through it there roll'd not the breath of his pride; And the foam of his gasping lay white on the turf, And cold as the spray of the rock-heating surf.

And there lay the rider distorted and pale, With the dew on his brow, and the rust on his mail; And the tents were all silent, the banners alone, The lances unlifted, the trumpet unblown.

And the widows of Ashur are loud in their wail, And the idols are broke in the temple of Baal; And the might of the Gentile, unsmote by the sword, Hath melted like snow in the glance of the Lord!

ODE TO NAPOLEON BONAPARTE.

'TIS done—but yesterday a King!
And arm'd with Kings to strive—
And now thou art a nameless thing:
So abject—yet alive!
Is this the man of thousand thrones,
Who strew'd our earth with hostile bones,
And can he thus survive?—
Since he, miscall'd the Morning Star,
Nor man nor fiend hath fallen so far.

Ill-minded man! why scourge thy kind
Who bow'd so low the knee?
By gazing on thyself grown blind,
Thou taught'st the rest to see.
With might unquestion'd—power to save—
Thine only gift hath been the grave
To those that worshipp'd thee;
Nor till thy fall could mortals guess
Ambition's less than littleness!

Thanks for that lesson—it will teach
To after-warriors more
Than high Philosophy can preach,
And vainly preach'd hefore.
That spell upon the minds of men
Breaks never to unite again,
That led them to adore
Those Pagod things of sabre sway,
With fronts of brass, and feet of clay.

The triumph, and the vanity,
The rapture of the strife—
The earthquake voice of Victory,
To thee the breath of life;
The sword, the sceptre, and that sway
Which man seem'd made but to obey,
Wherewith renown was rife—
All quell'd!—Dark Spirit! what must be
The madness of thy memory!

The Desolator desolate?
The Victor overthrown!
The Arbiter of others' fate
A Suppliant for his own!
Is it some yet imperial hope
That with such change can calmly cope?
Or dread of death alone?
To die a prince—or live a slave—
Thy choice is most ignobly brave!

He who of old would rend the oak,
Dream'd not of the rebound;
Chain'd by the trunk he vainly broke—
Alone—how look'd he round?
Thou in the sternness of thy strength
An equal deed hast done at length,
And darker fate hast found;
He fell, the forest prowlers' prey;
But thou must eat thy heart away!

The Roman, when his burning heart Was alaked with blood of Rome, Threw down the dagger—dared depart, In savage grandeur, home. He dared depart in utter scorn Of men that such a yoke had borne, Yet left him such a doom! His only glory was that hour Of self-upheld abandon'd power.

The Spaniard, when the lust of sway
Had lost its quickening apell,
Cast crowns for rosaries away,
An empire for a cell;
A strict accountant of his heads,
A subtle disputant on creeds,
His dotage trifled well:
Yet better had he neither known
A bigot's shrine, nor despot's throne.

But thou—from thy reluctant hand
The thunder-bolt is wrung—
Too late thou leav'st the high command
To which thy weakness clung;
All Evil Spirit as thou art,
It is enough to grieve the heart
To see thine own unstrung;
To think that God's fair world hath been
The footatool of a thing so mean;

And Earth hath spilt her blood for him,
Who thus can hoard his own!
And Monarcha bow'd the trembling limb,
And thank'd him for a throne!
Fair Freedom! we may hold thee dear,
When thus thy mightiest foes their fear
In humblest guise have shown.
Oh! ne'er may tyrant leave behind
A brighter name to lure mankind!

Thine evil deeds are writ in gore,
Nor written thus in vain—
Thy triumphs tell of fame no more,
Or deepen every stain:
If thou hadst died as honor dies,
Some new Napoleon might arise,
To shame the world again—
But who would coar the solar height,
To set in such a starless night?

Weigh'd in the balance, hero dust
Is vile as vulgar clay;
Thy scales, Mortality! are just
To all that pass away:
But yet methought the living great
Some higher spurka should animate,
To dazzle and diamay;
Nor deem'd Contempt could thus make mirth
Of these, the Conquerors of the earth.

And she, proud Austria's mournful flower, Thy still imperial bride; How bears her breast the torturing hour?
Still clings she to thy side?
Must she too bend, must she too share
Thy late repentance, long despair,
Thou throneless Homicide?
If still she loves thee, hoard that gem,
'Tis worth thy vanish'd diadem!

Then haste thee to thy sullen Isle,
And gaze upon the sea:
That element may meet thy smile—
it ne'er was ruled by thee!
Or trace with thine all idle hand
In loitering mood upon the sand
That Earth is now as free!
That Corinth's pedagogue hath now
Transferr'd his by-word to thy brow.

Thon Timour! in his captive's care
What thoughts will there be thine,
While brooding in thy prison'd rage?
But one—"The world vas mine!"
Unless, like he of Babylon,
All sense is with thy sceptre gone,
Life will not long confine
That spirit pour'd so widely forth—
So long obey'd—so little worth!

Or, like the thief of fire from heaven,
Wilt thou withstand the shock?
And share with him, the unforgiven,
His vulture and his rock!
Foredoom'd by God—by man accurst,
And that last act, though not thy worst,
The very Fiend's arch mock;
He in his fall preserved his pride,
And, if a mortal, had as proudly died!

There was a day—there was an hour,
While earth was Gaul's—Gaul thine—When that immeasurable power
Unsated to resign
Had been an act of purer fame
Than gathers round Marengo's name,
And gilded thy decline
Through the long twilight of all time,
Despite some passing clouds of crime.

But thou forsooth must be a king,
And don the purple vest—
As if that foolish robe could wring
Remembrance from thy breast.
Where is that faded garment? where
The gewgawa thou wert fond to wear,
The star—the atring—the crest?
Vain, froward child of empire! say,
Are all thy playthings snatch'd away?

Where may the wearied eye repose
When gazing on the Great;
Where neither guilty glory glows,
Nor despicable state?
Yes—one—the first—the last—the best—
The Cincinnatus of the West,
Whom envy dared not hate,
Bequeathed the name of Washington,
To make man blush there was but one!

ODE ON WATERLOO.

WE do not curse thee, Waterloo! Though Freedom's blood thy pluin bedew; There 'twas shed, but is not sunk-Rising from each gory trunk, Like the water-spout from ocean, With a strong and growing motion-It soars and mingles in the air, With that of lost Labedoyère-With that of him whose honor'd grave Contains the "hravest of the brave." A crimson cloud it spreads and glows, But shall return to whence it rose; When 'tis full 'twill burst asunder-Never yet was heard such thunder As then shall shake the world with wonder— Never yet was seen such lightning As o'er heaven shall then he bright'ning!

Like the Wormwood Star foretold By the sainted Seer of old, Show'ring down a fiery flood, Turning rivers into blood.

The Chief has fallen, but not by you, Vanquishers of Waterloo!
When the soldier citizen
Sway'd not o'er his fellow-men—
Save in deeds that led them on
Whers Glory smiled on Freedom's son—
Who, of all the despots banded,
With that youthful chief competed?
Who could boast o'er France defeated,
Till lone Tyranny commanded?
Till, goaded by ambition's sting,
The Hero sunk into the King?
Then he fell:—so perish all,
Who would men by man enthrall!

And thou, too, of the snow-white plume! Whose realm refused thee ev'n a tomb; Better hadat thou still been leading France o'er hosts of hirelings bleeding, Than sold thyself to death and shame For a meanly royal name; Such as he of Naples wears Who thy blood-bought title bears. Little didst thou deem, when dashing On thy war-horse through the ranks Like a stream which burst its banks, While helmets cleft, and sables clashing, Shone and shiver'd fast around thee-Of the fate at last which found thee: Was that haughty plume laid low By a slave's dishonest blow? Once—as the Moon sways o'er the tide, It roll'd in air, the warrior's guide; Through the smoke-created night Of the black and sulphurous fight, The soldier raised his seeking eye To catch that crest's ascendency-And, as it onward rolling rose, So moved his heart upon our foes. There, where death's brief pang was quickest, And the battle's wreck lay thickest, Strew'd beneath the advancing banner Of the eagle's burning creat (There with thunder-clouds to fan her, Who could then her wing arrest-Victory beaming from her hreast?) While the broken line enlarging Fell, or fled along the plain; There be sure was Murat charging! There he ne'er shall charge again!

O'er glories gone the invaders march, Weeps Trinmph o'er each levell'd arch-But let Freedom rejoice, With her heart in her voice; But, her hand on the sword, Doubly shall she be adored; France hath twice too well been taught The "moral lesson" dearly bought— Her safety sits not on a throne, With Capet or Napoleon! But in equal rights and laws, Hearta and hands in one great cause— Freedom, such as God hath given Unto all beneath his heaven, With their breath, and from their birth, Though Guilt would sweep it from the earth-With a fierce and lavish hand Scattering nations' wealth like sand; Pouring nations' blood like water, In imperial seas of slaughter! But the heart and the mind, And the voice of mankind, Shall arise in communion-And who shall resist that proud union? The time is past when swords subdusd— Man may die—the soul's renew'd: Even in this low world of care Freedom ne'er shall want an heir; Millions breathe but to inherit Her forever bounding spirit-When once more her hosts assemble, Tyranta shall believe and tremble-Smile they at this idle threat? Crimson tears will follow yet.

NAPOLEON'S FAREWELL.

FAREWELL to the Land, where the gloom of my Glory Arose and o'ershadow'd the earth with her name—She abandons me now—but the page of her story, The hrightest or blackest, is filled with my fame. I have warr'd with a world which vanquish'd me only When the meteor of conquest allured me too far; I have coped with the nations which dread me thus lonely, The last single Captive to millions in war.

Farewell to thee, France! when thy diadem crown'd me, I made thee the gem and the wonder of earth—But thy weakness decrees I should leave as I found thee, Decay'd in thy glory, and sunk in thy worth. Oh! for the veteran hearts that were wasted In strife with the storm, when their battles were won—Then the Eagle, whose gaze in that moment was blasted, Had atill soar'd with eyes fix'd on victory's sun!

Farewell to thee, France!—but when Liberty rallies
Once more in thy regions, remember me then.
The violet still grows in the depth of thy valleys;
Though wither'd, thy tear will unfold it again.
Yet, yet, I may baffle the hosts that surround us,
And yet may thy heart leap awake to my voice—
There are links which must break in the chain that has bound us,
Then turn thee and call on the Chief of thy choice!

LAMENT OF TASSO.

Long years! It tries the thrilling frame to bear And eagle-spirit of a Child of Song Long years of outrage, calumny, and wrong; Imputed madness, prison'd solitude, And the mind's canker in its savage mood, When the impatient thirst of light and air Parches the heart; and the abhorr'd grate, Marring the sunbeams with its hideons shade, Works through the throbbing eyeball to the brain With a hot sense of heaviness and pain; And bare, at once, Captivity display'd Stands scoffing through the never-open'd gate, Which nothing through its bara admits, save day, And tasteless food, which I have eat alone Till its unsocial bitterness is gone; And I can banquet like a beast of prey, Sullen and lonely, couching in the cave Which is my lair, and—it may be-my grave. All this hath somewhat worn me, and may wear, But must be horne. I stoop not to despair; For I have battled with mine agony, And made me wings wherewith to overfly The narrow circus of my dungeon wall, And freed the Holy Sepulchre from thrall; And revell'd among men and things divine, And pour'd my spirit over Palestine, In honor of the sacred war for Him, The God who was on earth and is in heaven, For he hath strengthened me in heart and limb. That through this sufferance I might be forgiven, I have employ'd my penance to record How Salem's shrine was won, and how adored.

But this is o'er—my pleasant task is done:
My long-sustaining friend of many years!
If I do blot thy final page with tears,
Know, that my sorrows have wrung from me none.
But thou, my young creation! my soul's child!
Which ever playing round me came and smiled
And woo'd me from myself with that sweet sight,
Thou too art gone—and so is my delight:
And therefore do I weep and inly bleed
With this last bruise upon a broken reed.

DANTE IN EXILE.

("Prophecy of Dante," Canto i.)

ALAS! with what a weight upon my brow
The sense of earth and earthly things come back,
Corrosive passions, feelings dull and low,
The heart's quick throb upon the mental rack,
Long day, and dreary night; the retrospect
Of half a century bloody and black,
And the frail few years I may yet expect
Hoary and hopeless, but less hard to bear,

For I have been too long and deeply wreck'd On the lone rock of desolate Despair To lift my eyes more to the passing sail Which shuns that reef so horrible and bare; Nor raise my voice—for who would heed my wail? I am not of this people, nor this age, And yet my harpings will unfold a tale Which shall preserve these times when not a page Of their perturbed annals could attract An eye to gaze upon their civil rage, Did not my verse embalm full many au act Worthless as they who wrought it: 'tis the doom Of spirits of my order to be rack'd In life, to wear their hearts out, and consume Their days in endless strife, and die alone : Then future thousands crowd around their tomb, And pilgrims come from climes where they have known The name of him-who now is but a name, And wasting homage o'er the sullen stone, Spread his - by him unheard, unheeded - fame; And mine at least bath cost me dear: to die Is nothing; but to wither thus-to tame My mind down from its own infinity To live in narrow ways with little men, A common sight to every common eye A wanderer, while even wolves can find a den Ripp'd from all kindred, from all home, all things That make communion sweet, and soften pain-To feel me in the solitude of kings Without the power that makes them bear a crown-To envy every dove his nest and wings Which waft him where the Apennine looks down On Arno, till he perches, it may be, Within my all inexorable town Where yet my boys are, and that fatal she, Their mother, the cold partner who hath brought Destruction for a dowry—this to see And feel, and know without repair, bath taught A bitter lesson; but it leaves me free: I have not vilely found, nor basely sought, They made an Exile-not a slave of me.

THE ISLES OF GREECE.

SONG OF A GREEK.

THE isles of Greece, the isles of Greece!
Where burning Sappho loved and sang,
Where grew the arts of war and peace;
Where Delos rose, and Phœbus sprang!
Eternal summer gilds them yet,
But all, except their sun, is set.

The Scian and the Teian muse,
The hero's harp, the lover's lute,
Have found the fame your shores refuse;
Their place of birth alone is mute
To sounds which echo farther west
Than your sires' "Islands of the Blest."

The mountains look on Marsthon—
And Marsthon looks on the sea;
And musing there an hour alone,
I dream'd that Greece might still be free;
For standing on the Persians' grave,
I could not deem myself a slave.

A king sat on the rocky brow
Which looks o'er sea-born Salamis;
And ships, by thousands, lay below,
And men in nations—all were his!
He counted them at break of day—
And when the sun set where were they?

And where are they? and where art thou, My country? On thy voiceless shore The heroic lay is tuneless now—
The heroic bosom heats no more!
And must thy lyre, so long divine,
Degenerate into hands like mine?

'Tis something, in the dearth of fame,
Though link'd among a fetter'd race,
To feel at least a patriot's shame,
Even as 1 sing, suffuse my face;
For what is left the poet here?
For Greeks a blush—for Greece a tear.

Must we but weep o'er days more hlest?

Must we but hlush?—Our fathers hled.

Earth! render back from out thy breast A remnant of our Spartan dead! Of the three hundred grant but three, To make a new Thermopylæ!

What, silent still? and silent all? Ah! no; the voices of the dead Sound like a distant torrent's fall, And answer, "Let one living head, But one arise—we come, we come!" 'Tis but the living who are dumb.

In vain—in vain: strike other chords;
Fill high the cup with Samian wine!
Leave hattles to the Turkish hordes,
And shed the blood of Scio's vine!
Hark! rising to the ignoble call—
How answers each bold Bacchana!!

You have the Pyrrhic dance as yet, Where is the Pyrrhic phalanx gone? Of two such lessons, why forget The nobler and the manlier one? You have the letters Cadmus gave— Think ye he meant them for a slave?

Fill high the bowl with Samian wine!

We will not think of themes like these!

It made Anacreon's song divine:

He served—but served Polycrates—

A tyrant; but our masters then

Were still, at least, our countrymen.

The tyrant of the Chersonese
Was freedom's best and bravest friend;
That tyrant was Miltiades!
Oh! that the present hour would lend
Another despot of the kind!
Such chains as his were sure to bind.

Fill high the bowl with Samian wine!
On Suli's rock, and Parga's shore,
Exists the remnant of a line
Such as the Doric mothers bore;
And there, perhaps, some ased is sown,
The Herscleidan blood might own.

Trust not for freedom to the Franks— They have a king who buys and sells: In native swords, and native ranks, The only hope of courage dwella; But Turkish force, and Latin fraud, Would break your shield, however broad.

Fill high the bowl with Samian wine!
Our virgins dance beneath the shade—
1 see their glorious black eyes shine;
But gazing on each glowing maid,
My own the burning tear-drop laves,
To think such breasts must suckle slaves.

Place me on Suninm's marbled steep,
Where nothing, save the waves and 1,
May hear our mutual murmurs sweep;
There, swan-like, let me sing and die.
A land of slaves shall ne'er he mine—
Dash down yon cup of Samian wine!

LINES TO A LADY WEEPING.1

WEEF, daughter of a royal line, A Sire's disgrace, a realm's decay; Ah! happy if each tear of thine Could wash a father's fault away.

Weep—for thy tears are Virtue's tears— Auspicious to these suffering isles; And be each drop in future years Repaid thee by thy people's smiles!

DEATH OF THE PRINCESS CHARLOTTE.

("Childe Harold," Canto iv., Stanzas 167-172.)

HARK! forth from the abyss a voice proceeds, A long low distant murmur of dread sound,

¹ The Princess Charlotte.

Such as arises when a nation bleeds
With some deep and immedicable wound;
Through storm and darkness yawns the rending ground,
The gulf is thick with phantoms, but the chief
Seems royal still, though with her head discrown'd,
And pale, but lovely, with maternal grief
She clasps a babe, to whom her breast yields no relief.

Scion of chiefs and monarchs, where art thou? Fond hope of many nations, art thou dead? Could not the grave forget thee, and lay low Some less majestic, less beloved head? In the sad midnight, while thy heart still bled, The mother of a moment, o'er thy boy, Death hush'd that pang forever: with thee fied The present happiness and promised joy Which fill'd the imperial isles so full it seem'd to cloy.

Pessants bring forth in safety.—Can it he,
Oh thou that wert so happy, so adored!
Those who weep not for kings shall weep for thee,
And Freedom's heart, grown heavy, cesse to hoard
Her many griefs for ONE; for she had pour'd
Her orisons for thee, and o'er thy head
Beheld her Iris.—Thou, too, lonely lord,
And desolate consort—vainly wert thou wed!
The husband of a year! the father of the dead!

Of sackcloth was thy wedding garment made;
Thy bridal's fruit is ashes: in the dust
The fair-hair'd Dsughter of the Isles is laid,
The love of millions! How did we intrust
Futurity to her! and, though it must
Darken above our bones, yet fondly deem'd
Our children should obey her child, and bless'd
Her and her hoped-for seed, whose promise seem'd
Like stars to shepherds' eyes:—'twas but a meteor heam'd.

Woe unto us, not her; for she sleeps well:
The fickle reek of popular breath, the tongue
Of hollow counsel, the false oracle,
Which from the hirth of monarchy hath rung
Its knell in princely ears, till the o'erstung
Nations have arm'd in madness, the strange fate
Which tumbles mightiest sovereigns, and hath flung
Against their blind omnipotence a weight
Within the opposing scale, which crushes soon or late—

These might have been her destiny; but no,
Our hearts deny it: and so young, so fair,
Good without effort, great without a foe,
But now a bride and mother—and now there!
How many ties did that stern moment tear!
From thy Sire's to his humblest subject's breast
Is link'd the electric chain of that despair,
Whose shock was as an earthquake's, and opprest
The land which loved thee so that none could love thee best.

IMMORTALITY.

("Childe Harold," Canto ii., Stsuzas 7, 8.)

Well didst thou speak, Athena's wisest son!
"All that we know is, nothing can be known."
Why should we shrink from what we cannot shun?
Each hath his pang, but feehle sufferers groan
With brain-born dreams of evil all their own.
Pursue what Chance or Fate proclaimeth best;
Peace waits us on the shores of Acheron:
There no forced banquet claims the sated guest,
But Silence spreads the couch of ever welcome rest.

Yet if, as holiest men have deem'd, there be A land of souls beyond that sable shore, To shame the doctrine of the Sadducee And sophists, madly vain of dubious lore; How sweet it were in concert to adore
With those who made our mortal labors light!
To hear each voice we fear'd to hear no more!
Behold each mighty shade reveal'd to sight,
The Bactrian, Samian sage, and all who taught the right!

"ON THIS DAY I COMPLETE MY THIRTY-SIXTH YEAR."

'TIs time this heart should be unmoved, Since others it hath ceased to move; Yet, though I cannot be beloved, Still let me love!

My days are in the yellow leaf;
The flowers and fruits of love are gone;
The worm, the canker, and the grief
Are mine alone!

The fire that on my bosom preys
Is lone as some volcanic isle;
No torch is kindled at its blaze—
A funeral pile!

The hope, the fear, the jealous care,
The exalted portion of the pain
And power of love, I cannot share,
But wear the chain.

But 'tis not thus—and 'tis not here—
Such thoughts should shake my soul, nor now,
Where glory decks the hero's bier,
Or binds his brow.

The sword, the hanner, and the field, Glory and Greece, around me see! The Spartan, borne upon his shield, Was not more free.

Awske! (not Greece—she is awake!)
Awake, my spirit! Think through whom
Thy life-blood tracks its parent lake,
And then strike home!

Tread those reviving passions down, Unworthy manhood!—unto thee Indifferent should the smile or frown Of beauty he.

If thou regret'st thy youth, why live?
The land of honorable death
Is here:—up to the field, and give Away thy breath!

Seek out—less often sought than found— A soldier's grave, for thee the best; Then look around, and choose thy ground, And take thy rest.

LIFE.

("Don Juan," Canto xv., Stanza 99.)

BETWEEN two worlds life hovers like a star,
'Twixt night and morn, upon the horizon's verge.
How little do we know that which we are!
How less what we may be! The eternal surge
Of time and tide rolls on, and bears afar
Our bubbles; as the old burst, new emerge,
Lash'd from the foam of ages; while the graves
Of empires heave but like some passing waves.

II.-DESCRIPTIVE AND NARRATIVE.

GREECE.

("The Coreair," Canto iii,)

SLOW sinks, more lovely ere his race be run, Along Morea's hills the setting sun;
Not, as in northern climes, obscurely bright, But one unclouded blaze of living light;
O'er the hush'd deep the yellow beam he throws, Gilds the green wave that trembles as it glows;
On old Ægina's rock and Hydra's isle
The god of gladness sheds his parting smile;
O'er his own regions lingering loves to shine,
Though there his altars are no more divine.
Descending fast, the mountain-shadows kiss
Thy glorious gulf, unconquer'd Salamis!
Their azure arches through the long expanse,
More deeply purpled, meet his mellowing glance;
And tenderest tints, along their summits driven,
Mark his gay course, and own the hues of heaven;
Till, darkly shaded from the land and deep,
Behind his Delphian rock he sinks to sleep.

On such an eve his palest beam he cast When, Athens! here thy wisest look'd his last. How watch'd thy better sons his farewell ray, That closed their murder'd sage's latest day! Not yet—not yct—Sol pauses on the hill, The precious hour of parting lingers still; But sad his light to agonizing eyes, And dark the mountain's once delightful dyes; Gloom o'er the lovely land he spem'd to pour, The land where Phœbus never frown'd before; But ere he sunk below Citheron's head, The cup of woe was quaff'd—the spirit fled; The soul of him that scorn'd to fear or fly, Who lived and died as none can live or die.

But, lo! from high Hymettus to the plain
The queen of night asserts her silent reign;
No murky vapor, herald of the storm,
Hides her fair face or girds her glowing form.
With cornice glimmering as the moonbeams play,
There the white column greets her grateful ray;
And bright around, with quivering beams heset,
Her emblem aparkles o'er the minaret;
The groves of olive scatter'd dark and wide
Where meek Cephisus sheds his scanty tide,
The cypress saddening by the sacred mosque,
The glasming turret of the gay kiosk,
And, asd and sombre mid the holy calm,
Near Theseus' fane, yon solitary palm—
All, tinged with varied hues, arrest the eye;
And dull were his that pass'd them heedless by.

Again the Ægean, heard no more afar, Lulls his chafed breast from elemental war; Again his waves in milder tints unfold Their long expanse of sapphire and of gold, Mix'd with the shades of many a distant isle, That frown where gentler ocean deigna to smile.

THE SAME.

(From "The Giaour.")

FAIR clime! where every season smiles Benignant o'er those blassed isles, Which, seen from far Colonna's height, Make glad the heart that hails the eight, And lend to loneliness delight. There mildly dimpling, Ocean's cheek Reflects the tints of many a peak Caught by the laughing tides that lave These Edens of the eastern wave: And if at times a transient breeze Break the blue crystal of the seas, Or sweep one blossom from the trees, How welcome is each gentle air That wakes and wafts the odors there! For there—the Rose o'er crag or vale, Sultana of the Nightingale,

The maid for whom his melody, His thousand songs are heard on high, Blooms blushing to her lover's tale:

His queen, the garden queen, his Rose, Unbent by winds, unchill'd by snows, Far from the winters of the west, By every breeze and season bleat, Returns the sweets by nature given In softest incense back to heaven; And grateful yields that smiling sky Her fairest hue and fragrant sigh. And many a summer flower is there And many a shade that love might share, And many a grotto, meant for rest, That holds the pirate for a guest; Whose bark in sheltering cove below Lurks for the passing peaceful prow, Till the gay mariner's guitar Is heard, and seen the evening-star; Then stealing with the muffled oar Far shaded by the rocky shore Rush the night-prowlers on the prey, And turn to greans his roundelay Strange—that where Nature loved to trace, As if for Gods, a dwelling place And every charm and grace hath mix'd Within the paradise she fix'd, There man, enamor'd of distress Should mar it into wilderness, And trample, brute-like, o'er each flower That tasks not one laborious hour; Nor claims the culture of his hand To bloom along the fairy land, But springs as to preclude his care, And sweetly woos him—but to spare! Strange-that where all is peace beside, There'passion riots in her pride, And lust and rapine wildly reign To darken o'er the fair domain. It is as though the fiends prevail'd Against the seraphs they assail'd, And, fix'd on heavenly thrones, should dwell The freed inheritors of hell; So soft the scene, so form'd for joy, So curst the tyrants that deatroy!

He who hath bent him o'er the dead Ere the first day of death is fled,
The first dark day of nothingness,
The last of danger and distress
(Before Decay's effacing fingers
Have swept the lines where beauty lingers),
And mark'd the mild angelic air,
The rapture of repose that's there,
The fix'd yet tender traits that atreak
The languor of the placid cheek,
And—but for that sad shrouded eye,

That fires not, wins not, weeps not, now, And but for that chill, changeless brow, Where cold Obstruction's apathy Appalls the gazing mourner's heart, As if to him it could impart The doom he dreads, yet dwella upon; Yes, but for these and these alone, Some moments, ay, one treacherons hour, He still might doubt the tyrant's power: So fair, so calm, so softly seal'd, The first, last look by death reveal'd! Such is the aspect of this shore; 'Tis Greece, but living Greece no more! So coldly sweet, so deadly fair, We start, for soul is wanting there. Hers is the loveliness in death, That parts not quite with parting breath; But beauty with that fearful bloom, That hue which haunts it to the tomb, Expression's last receding ray A gilded halo hovering round decay, The farewell beam of Feeling past away! Spark of that flame, perchance of heavenly birth, Which gleams, but warms no more its cherish'd earth.

Clime of the unforgotten brave!
Whose land from plain to mountain-cave
Was Freedom's home or Glory's grave!
Shrine of the mighty! can it be,
That this is all remains of thee?
Approach, thou craven crouching slave:
Say, is not this Thermopylæ?

These waters blue that round you lave, Oh servile offspring of the free-Pronounce what sea, what shore is this? The gulf, the rock of Salamis! These scenes, their story not unknown, Arise, and make again your own; Snatch from the ashes of your sires The embers of their former fires; And he who in the strife expires Will add to theirs a name of fear That Tyranny shall quake to hear, And leave his sons a hope, a fame, They too will rather die than shame: For Freedom's battle once begun, Bequeath'd by bleeding Sire to Son, Though baffled oft, is ever won. Bear witness, Greece, thy living page, Attest it many a deathless age While kings, in dusky darkness hid, Have left a nameless pyramid, Thy heroes, though the general doom Hath swept the column from their tomb. A mightier monument command, The mountains of their native land! There points thy Muse to stranger's eye The graves of those that cannot die! 'Twere long to tell and sad to trace, Each step from splendor to disgrace; Enough—no foreign foe could quell Thy soul, till from itself it fell; Yes! Self-abasement paved the way To villain bonds and despot sway.

THE SAME.

("Childe Harold," Canto ii., Stanzas 73-77.)

FAIR GREECE! sad relic of departed worth!
Immortal, though no more; though fallen, great!
Who now shall lead thy scatter'd children forth,
And long accustom'd bondage uncreate?
Not such thy sons who whilom did await,
The hopeless warriors of a willing doom,
In bleak Thermopyle's sepulchral strait—
Oh! who that gallant spirit shall resume,
Leap from Eurotas' hanks, and call thee from the tomb?

Spirit of freedom! when on Phyle's brow
Thou sat'st with Thrasybulus and his train,
Couldet thou forehode the dismal hour which now
Dims the green beauties of thine Attic plain?
Not thirty tyrants now enforce the chain,
But every earle can lord it o'er thy land;
Nor rise thy sons, but idly rail in vain,
Trembling beneath the scourge of Turkish hand,
From birth till death enslaved; in word, in deed, unmann'd.

In all save form alone, how changed! and who That marks the fire still sparkling in each eye, Who but would deem their bosoms burn'd anew With thy unquenched beam, lost Liberty! And many dream withal the hour is nigh That gives them back their fathers' heritage: For foreign arms and aid they fondly sigh, Nor solely dare encounter hostile rage, Or tear their name defiled from Slavery's mournful page.

Hereditary bondsmen! know ye not
Who would be free themselves must strike the blow?
By their right arms the conquest must be wrought?
Will Gaul or Muscovite redress ye? No!
True, they may lay your proud despoilers low,
But not for you will Freedom'a altars flame.
Shades of the Helots! triumph o'er your foe! 'mindT'
Greece! change thy lords, thy state is still the strike?
Thy glorious day is o'er, but not thine years of shathles?
It against the strike the blow?

THE SAME.

("Childe Harold," Canto if., Stanzas 84-88.)

When riseth Lacedæmon's hardihood,
When Thebes Epaminondas rears again,
When Athens' children are with hearts endued,
When Grecian mothers shall give birth to men,
Then may'st thou be restored; but not till then!
A thousand years scarce serve to form a state;
An hour may lay it in the dust: and when
Can man its shatter'd splendor renovate,
Recall its virtues back, and vanquish Time and Fate?

And yet how lovely in thine age of woe,
Land of lost gods and godlike men! art thou.
Thy vales of evergreen, thy hills of snow, A.
Proclaim thee Nature's varied favorite nowet T.
Thy fanes, thy temples to thy surface bow.
Comminging slowly with heroic earths bir W.
Broke by the share of every rustic plotigh of T.
So perish monuments of mortal birth,
So perish all in turn, save well-recorded Wepth T.

Save where some solitary column months and Above its prostrate brethren of the leave of Above its prostrate brethren of the leave of Above where Tritonia's airy shring the leave of the leav

Some little

Yet are thy skies as blue, thy crags as wild;
Sweet are thy groves, and without are thy fields,
Thine olive ripe as when Minerva smiled.
And still his hunerved wealth Thymetens yields;
There the blithe the this tragstant formers builds.
The freehorn whitefelf of the findings builds,
The freehorn whitefelf of the findings air;
Apollo still the hill want of the findings of the find

And noble arch in proud decay, Look o'er this vale of vintage-howers: But one thing want these banks of Rhine-Thy gettle band to class in mine!
Thy gettle band to class in mine!
TNOOTESTATE

I send the lilies given to me.
This opinion generate hypointest without the class of the country of the country of the country of the country without the country of the countr I know that they must wither'd be, Busyswa sigillet inordigid same shriew and For the standard of the standa Borrascotitegroft, tnasy odwetsviole negdy Andysaid estitus of the branch and Andrews And Agin The done by tho per of Sectors' udate that W And knowski addragonal kinoda littline, Her turnetetorch wamblazing high, bal Though rising gale, and breaking foam, And shricking seashirds winn to him home; Andmoords aloftdand tides delowio edT Withesigns and notubule; for bade to go A The hymed thice theory by septime the bound of the hymed ignibotered itgis inhange tround The hymed in the hy Nor could evote filiadpit rateful and row To agence stored this content the agence of the content of the con Still sweeten amount three ellers shot Radile!

May nerve young hearts to prove as true.

TROY.

("Don Juan," Canto iv., Stanzas 76-78.)

THERE, on the green and village-cotted hill, is (Flank'd by the Hellespont, and by the sea) Entomb'd the bravest of the brave, Achilles; They say so—(Bryant says the contrary): And further downward, tall and towering still, is The tumulus—of whom? Heaven knows; 't may be Patroclus, Ajax, or Protesilsus; All heroes, who, if living still, would slay us.

High harrows, without marble, or a name,
A vast, untill'd, and mountain-skirted plain,
And Ida in the distance, still the same,
And old Scamander (if 'tis he) remain;
The situation seems still form'd for fame—
A hundred thousand men might fight again
With ease; but where I sought for Ilion's walls,
The quiet sheep feeds, and the tortoise crawls;

Troops of untended horses; here and there Some little bamlets, with new names uncouth; Some shepherds (unlike Paris) led to stare A moment at the European youth Whom to the spot their school-boy feelings besr; A Turk, with beads in hand, and pipe in mouth, Extremely taken with his own religion, Are what I found there—but the devil a Phrygian.

THE DRACHENFELS.

("Childe Harold," Canto iii.)

THE castled crag of Drachenfels
Frowns o'er the wide and winding Rhine,
Whose breast of waters broadly awells
Between the bsnks which bear the vine,
And hills all rich with blossom'd trees,
And fielda which promise corn and wine,
And scatter'd cities crowning these,
Whose far white walls along them shine,
Have strew'd a scene which I should see
With double joy wert thou with me.

And peasant girls, with deep-blue eyes,
And hands which offer early flowers,
Walk smiling o'er this paradise;
Above, the frequent feudal towers
Through green leaves lift their walls of gray;
And many a rock which steeply lowers,
And noble arch in proud decay,
Look o'er this vale of vintage-bowers:
But one thing want these banks of Rhine—
Thy gentle hand to clasp in mine!

I send the lilies given to me.
Though long before thy hand they touch
I know that they must wither'd be,
But yet reject them not as such;
For I have cherish'd them as dear,
Because they yet may meet thine eye,
And guide thy soul to mine ev'n here,
When thou behold'st them drooping nigh,
And know'st them gather'd by the Rhine,
And offer'd from my heart to thine!

The river nohly fosms and flows,
The charm of this enchanted ground,
And all its thousand turns disclose
Some fresher heauty varying round:
The haughtiest breast its wish might bound
Through life to dwell delighted here;
Nor could on earth a spot be found
To nature and to me so dear,
Could thy dear eyes in following mine
Still sweeten more these hanks of Rhine!

WATERLOO.

("Childe Harold," Canto iii., Stauzaa 21-30.)

THERE was a sound of revelry by night, And Belgium's capital had gather'd then Her Beauty and her Chivalry, and bright The lamps shons o'er fair women and brave men; A thousand hearts beat happily; and when Music arose with its voluptuous swell, Soft eyes look'd love to eyes which spake again, And all went merry as a marriage-bell; But hush! hark! a deep sound strikes like a rising knell!

Did ye not hear it?—No; 'twas but the wind,
Or the car rattling o'er the stony street;
On with the dance! let joy be unconfined;
No sleep till morn, when Youth and Pleasure meet
To chase the glowing Hours with flying feet—
But hark!—that heavy sound breaks in once more,
As if the clonds its echo would repeat;
And nearer, clearer, deadlier than before!

Arm! arm! it is—it is—the cannon's opening roar!

Within a window'd niche of that high hall
Sat Brunswick's fated chieftain; he did hear
That sound the first amidst the festival,
And caught its tone with Death's prophetic ear;
And when they smiled because he deem'd it near,
His heart more truly knew that peal too well
Which stretch'd his father on a bloody bier,
And roused the vengeance blood alone could quell:
He rush'd into the field, and, foremost fighting, fell.

Ah! then and there was hurrying to and fro,
And gathering tears, and tremblings of distress,
And cheeks all pale, which but an hour ago
Blush'd at the praise of their own loveliness;
And there were sudden partings, such as press
The life from out young hearts, and choking sighs
Which ne'er might be repeated; who could guess
If ever more should meet those mutual eyes,
Since upon night so sweet such awful morn could rise!

And there was mounting in hot haste: the steed,
The mustering squadron, and the clattering car
Went pouring forward with impetuous speed,
And swiftly forming in the ranks of war;
And the deep thunder peal on peal afar;
And near, the beat of the alarming drum
Roused up the soldier ere the morning star;
While throng'd the citizens with terror dumb,
Or whispering, with white lips, "The foe! They come! they come!"

And wild and high the "Cameron's gathering" rose! The war-note of Lochiel, which Albyn's hills Have heard, and heard, too, have her Saxon foes: How in the noon of night that pibroch thrills, Savage and shrill! But with the breath which fills Their mountain-pipe so fill the mountaineers With the fierce native daring which instils The stirring memory of a thousand years, And Evan's, Donald's fame rings in each clansman's ears!

And Ardennes waves above them her green leaves, Dewy with Nature's tear-drops, as they pass, Grieving, if aught inanimate e'er grieves, Over the unreturning brave—alas! Ere evening to be trodden like the grass Which now beneath them, but above shall grow In its next verdure, when this fiery mass Of living valor, rolling on the foe And burning with high hope, shall moulder cold and low.

Last noon beheld them full of lusty life,
Last eve in Beauty's circle proudly gay,
The midnight brought the signal-sound of strife,
The morn the marshalling in arms—the day
Battle's magnificently stern array!
The thunder-clouds close o'er it, which, when rent,
The earth is cover'd thick with other clay,
Which her own clay shall cover, heap'd and pent,
Rider and horss—friend, foe—in one red burial blent!

Their praise is hymn'd by loftier harps than mine;
Yet one I would select from that proud throng,
Partly because they blend me with his line,
And partly that I did his sire some wrong,
And partly that bright names will hallow song;
And his was of the hravest, and when shower'd
The death-bolts deadliest the thinn'd files along,
Even where the thickest of war's tempest lower'd,
They reach'd no nobler breast than thine, young, gallant Howard!

There have been tears and breaking hearts for thee, And mine were nothing, had I such to give; But when I stood beneath the fresh green tree Which living waves where thou didst cease to live, And saw around me the wide field revive
With fruits and fertile promise, and the Spring
Come forth her work of gladness to contrive,
With all her reckless birds upon the wing,
I turn'd from all she brought to those she could not bring.

LAKE OF GENEVA.-CALM.

("Childe Harold," Canto iii., Stanzas 85-87.)

CLEAR, placid Leman! thy contrasted lake,
With the wild world I dwelt in, is a thing
Which warns me, with its stillness, to forsake
Earth's troubled waters for a purer spring.
This quiet sail is as a noiseless wing
To waft me from distraction; once I loved
Torn ocean's roar, but thy soft murmuring
Sounds sweet as if a Sister's voice reproved,
That I with stern delights should e'er have been so moved.

It is the hush of night, and all between
Thy margin and the mountains, duek, yet clear,
Mellow'd and mingling, yet distinctly acen,
Save darken'd Jura, whose capp'd heights appear
Precipitously steep; and drawing near,
There breathes a living fragrance from the shore
Of flowers yet fresh with childhood; on the ear
Drops the light drip of the suspended oar,
Or chirps the grasshopper one good-night carol more;

He is an evening reveller, who makes
His life an infancy, and sings his fill;
At intervals, some bird from out the brakes
Starts into voice a moment, then is still.
There seems a floating whisper on the hill,
But that is fancy, for the starlight dews
All silently their tears of love instil,
Weeping themselves away, till they infuse
Deep into Nature's breast the spirit of her hues.

LAKE OF GENEVA. - STORM.

("Childe Harold," Canto iii., Stanzas 92-96.)

Thy sky is changed!—and such a change! Oh night, And storm, and darkness, ye are wondrous strong, Yet lovely in your strength, as is the light Of a dark eye in woman! Far along, From peak to peak, the rattling crags among Leaps the live thunder! Not from one lone cloud, But every mountain now hath found a tongue, And Jura answers, through her misty shroud, Back to the joyous Alps, who call to her aloud!

And this is in the night:—Most glorious night!
Thou wert not sent for elumber! let me be
A sharer in thy fierce and far delight,
A portion of the tempest and of thee!
How the lit lake shines, a phosphoric sea,
And the big rain comes dancing to the earth!
And now again 'tis black—and now, the glee
Of the loud hills ahakes with its mountain-mirth,
As if they did rejoice o'er a young earthquake's birth.

Now, where the swift Rhode cleaves his way between Heights which appear as lovers who have parted Id hate, whose mining depths so intervene, That they can meet no more, though broken-hearted! Though in their souls, which thus each other thwarted, Love was the very root of the fond rage Which blighted their life's bloom, and then departed: Itself expired, but leaving them an age Of years all winters—war within themselves to wage.

Now, where the quick Rhone thus hath cleft his way,
The mightiest of the storms hath ta'en his stand:
For here, not one, but many make their play,
And fling their thunder-bolts from hand to hand,
Flashing and cast around: of all the band,
The brightest through these parted hills hath fork'd
His lightnings—as if he did understand,
That in such gaps as desolation work'd,
There the hot shaft should blast whatever therein lurk'd.

Sky, mountains, river, winds, lake, lightnings! ye! With night, and clouds, and thunder, and a soul To make these felt and feeling, well may be Things that have made me watchful; the far roll Of your departing voices, is the knoll
Of what in me is elepless—if I rest.
But where of ye, oh tempests! is the goal?
Are ye like those within the human breast?
Or do ye find, at length, like eagles, some high nest?

CLARENS.

("Childe Harold," Caoto Iii., Stanzae 99-104.)

CLARENS! sweet Clarens, birthplace of deep Love!
Thine air is the young breath of passionate thought;
Thy trees take root in Love; the snows above
The very Glaciers have his colore caught,
And sunset into rose-hues sees them wrought
By rays which elsep there lovingly: the rocks,
The permanent crage, tell here of Love, who sought
In them a refuge from the worldly shocks
Which stir and sting the soul with hope that wooes, then mocks.

Clarens! hy heavenly feet thy paths are trod—Undying Love's, who here ascends a throne
To which the steps are mountains; where the god
Is a pervading life and light—so shown
Not on those summits solely, nor alone
In the still cave and forest; o'er the flower
His eye is sparkling, and his breath hath blown,
His soft and summer breath, whose tender power
Passes the strength of storms in their most desolate hour.

All things are here of him; from the black pines, Which are his shade on high, and the loud roar Of torrents, where he listeneth, to the vines Which slope his green path downward to the shore, Where the bow'd waters meet him, and adore, Kissing his feet with murmure; and the wood, The covert of old trees, with trunks all hoar, But light leaves, young as joy, stands where it stood, Offering to him, and his, a populous solitude.

A populous solitude of bees and birds,
And fairy-form'd and many-color'd things,
Who worship him with notes more sweet than words,
And innocently open their glad wings,
Fearless and full of life: the gush of springs,
And fall of lofty fountains, and the bend
Of stirring branches, and the bond which brings
The swiftest thought of beauty, here extend,
Mingling, and made by Love, unto one mighty end.

He who hath loved not, here would learn that lore,
And make his heart a spirit; he who knows
That tender mystery, will love the more,
For this is Love's recess, where vain men's woes,
And the world's waste, have driven him far from those,
For 'tis his nature to advance or die;
He stands not still, but or decays, or grows
Into a boundless blessing, which may vie
With the immortal lights, in its eternity.

'Twas not for fiction chose Rousseau this spot,
Peopling it with affections; but he found
It was the scene which passion must allot
To the mind's purified beings; 'twas the ground
Where early Love his Psyche's zone unbound,
And hallow'd it with loveliness: 'tis lone,
And wonderful, and deep, and hath a sound,
And sense, and sight of sweetness; here the Rhone
Hath spread himself a couch, the Alps have rear'd a throne.

ITALY.

("Childe Harold," Canto iv., Stanzas 42-47.)

ITALIA! oh Italia! thou who hast
The fatal gift of beauty, which became
A funeral dower of present wose and past,
On thy aweet brow is sorrow plough'd by shame,
And annals graved in characters of flame.
Oh, God! that thou wert in thy nakedness
Less lovely or more powerful, and couldst claim
Thy right, and awe the robbers back, who press
To shed thy blood, and drink the tears of thy distress;

Then might'st thou more appall; or, less desired, Be homely and be peaceful, undeplored For thy destructive charms; then, still untired, Would not be seen the armed torrents pour'd Down the deep Alps; nor would the hostile horde Of many-nation'd spoilers from the Po Quaff blood and water; nor the stranger's sword Be thy sad weapon of defence, and so, Victor or vanquish'd, thou the slave of friend or foe.

Wandering in youth, I traced the path of him, I The Roman friend of Rome's least-mortal mind, The friend of Tully: as my bark did skim The bright blue waters with a fanning wind, Came Megara hefore me, and behind Ægina lay, Piræus on the right, And Corinth on the left; I lay reclined Along the prow, and saw all these unite In ruin, even as he had seen the desolate sight;

For Time hath not rebuilt them, but uprear'd Barbaric dwellings on their shatter'd site, Which only make more mourn'd and more endear'd The few last rays of their far-scatter'd light, And the crush'd relics of their vanish'd might. The Roman saw these tombs in his own age, These sepulchres of cities, which excite Sad wonder, and his yet surviving page The moral lesson bears, drawn from such pilgrimage.

That page is now before me, and on mine His country's ruin added to the mass Of perish'd states he mourn'd in their decline, And I in desolation: all that was Of then destruction is; and now, slas! Rome—Rome imperial, bows her to the storm, In the same dust and blackness, and we pass The skeleton of her Titanic form, Wrecks of another world, whose ashes still are warm.

Yet, Italy! through every other land
Thy wrongs should ring, and shall, from side to side;
Mother of Arts! as once of arms; thy hand
Was then our guardisn, and is still our guide;
Parent of our Religion! whom the wide
Nations have knelt to for the keys of heaven!
Europe, repentant of her parricide,
Shall yet redeem thee, and, all backward driven,
Roll the barbarian tide, and sue to be forgiven.

VENICE.

("Childe Harold," Canto iv., Stanzas 1-4.)

I stood in Venice, on the Bridge of Sighs;
A palace and a prison on each hand:
I saw from out the wave her structures rise
As from the stroke of the enchanter's wand:
A thousand years their cloudy wings expand
Around me, and a dying Glory smiles
O'er the far times, when many a subject land
Look'd to the winged Lion's marble piles,
Where Venice sat in state, throned on her hundred isles!

She looks a sea Cyhele, fresh from ocean,
Rising with her tiars of proud towers
At airy distance, with majestic motion,
A ruler of the waters and their powers:
And such she was—her daughters had their dowers
From spoils of nations, and the exhaustless East
Pour'd in her lap all gems in sparkling showers.
In purple was she robed, and of her feast
Monarchs partook, and deem'd their dignity increased.

In Venice Tasso's echoes are no more,
And silent rows the songless gondolier;
Her palaces are crumbling to the shore,
And music meets not always now the ear:
Those days are gone—but Beauty still is here.
States fall, arts fade—but Nature doth not die,
Nor yet forget how Venice once was dear,
The plessant place of all festivity,
The revel of the earth, the masque of Italy!

But unto us she hath a spell beyond
Her name in story, and her long array
Of mighty shadows, whose dim forms despond
Above the dogeless city's vanish'd sway;
Ours is a trophy which will not decay
With the Rialto: Shylock and the Moor,
And Pierre, cannot be swept or worn away—
The keystones of the arch! though all were o'er,
For us repeopled were the solitary shore.

THE SAME.

("Childe Harold," Canto iv., Stauzas 11-13.)

The spouseless Adriatic mourns her lord;
And, annual marriage, now no more renew'd,
The Bucentaur lies rotting unrestored,
Neglected garment of her widowhood!
St. Mark yet sees his lion where he stood,
Stand, but in mockery of his wither'd power,
Over the proud Place where an Emperor sued,
And monarchs gazed and envied in the hour
When Venice was a queen with an unequall'd dower.

The Suabian sued, and now the Austrian reigns— An Emperor tramples where an Emperor knelt; Kingdoms are shrunk to provinces, and chains Clank over sceptred cities; nations melt From power's high pinnacle, when they have felt The sunshine for a while, and downward go Like lauwine loosen'd from the mountain's belt; Oh for one hour of blind old Dandolo! Th' octogenarian chief, Byzantium's conquering foe.

Before St. Mark still glow his steeds of brass,
Their gilded collars glittering in the sun;
But is not Doria's menace come to pass?
Are they not bridled?—Venice, lost and won,
Her thirteen hundred years of freedom done,
Sinks, like a sea-weed, into whence she rose!
Better be whelm'd beneath the waves, and shun,
Even in destruction's depth, her foreign foes,
From whom submission wrings an infamous repose.

THE SAME.

("Childe Harold," Canto iv., Stanza 18.)

I LOVED her from my boyhood—she to me Was as a fairy city of the heart,
Rising like water-columns from the sea,
Of joy the sojourn, and of wealth the mart;
And Otway, Radeliffe, Schiller, Shakspeare's art,
Had stamp'd her image in me, and even so,
Although I found her thus, we did not part,
Perchance even dearer in her day of woe,
Than when she was a boast, a marvel, and a show.

AN AUGUST EVENING IN ITALY.

("Childe Harold," Canto iv., Stanzas 27-29.)

The moon is up, and yet it is not night—
Sunset divides the sky with her—a sea ·
Of glory stresms along the Alpine height
Of blue Friuli's mountains; Heaven is free
From clouds, but of all colors seems to be ·Melted to one vast Iris of the West,
Where the Day joins the past Eternity;
While, on the other hand, meek Dian's crest
Floats through the azure air—an island of the blest!

A single star is at her side, and reigns
With her o'er half the lovely heaven; but still
Yon sunny sea heaves hrightly, and remains
Roll'd o'er the peak of the far Rhetian hill,
As Day and Night contending were, until
Nature reclaim'd her order:—gently flows
The deep-dyed Brenta, where their hues instil
The odorous purple of a new-born rose,
Which streams upon her stream, and glass'd within it glows,

Fill'd with the face of heaven, which, from afar, Comes down upon the waters; all its hues, From the rich sunset to the rising star, Their magical variety diffuse:
And now they change; a paler shadow strews Its mantle o'er the mountains; parting day Dies like the dolphin, whom each pang imhues With a new color as it gasps away,
The last still loveliest, till—'tis gone—and all is gray.

THE AVE MARIA.

("Don Juan," Canto iii., Stanzas 102-109.)

Ave Maria! blessed he the hour!
The time, the clime, the spot, where I so oft

¹ Servius Sulpicius. See Middleton's "Cicero," vol. il., p. 371.

Have felt that moment in its fullest power Sink o'er the earth so heautiful and soft, While awung the deep bell in the diatant tower, Or the faint dying day-hymn stole aloft, And not a breath crept through the roey sir, And yet the forest leaves seem'd stirr'd with pray'r.

Ave Maria! 'tis the hour of prayer!
Ave Maria! 'tis the hour of love!
Ave Maria! may our aprits dare
Look up to thine and to thy Son's above!
Ave Maria! oh, that face so fair!
Those downcast eyes beneuth the Almighty dove—
What though 'tis but a pictured image?—atrike—
That painting is no idol—'tis too like.

Sweet hour of twilight! in the solitude
Of the pine forest, and the silent shore
Which bounds Ravenna's immemorial wood,
Rooted where once the Adrian wave flowed o'er,
To where the last Cæsarean fortress stood,
Evergreen forest! which Boccaccio's lore
And Dryden's lay made haunted ground to me,
How have I loved the twilight hour and thee!

The shrill cicalas, people of the pine,
Making their summer lives one ceaseless song,
Were the sole echoes, save my steed's and mine,
And veeper bell's that rose the boughs along;
The spectre huntsman of Onesti's line,
His hell-dogs, and their chase, and the fair throng
Which learn'd from this example not to fly
From a true lover—shadow'd my mind's eye.

Oh, Hesperua! thou bringest all good things—
Home to the weary, to the hungry cheer,
To the young bird the parent's brooding wings,
The welcome stall to the o'erlabor'd steer;
Whate'er of peace about our hearthstone clings,
Whate'er our household gods protect of dear,
Are gather'd round us by thy look of rest:
Thou bring'at the child, too, to the mother's bresst.

Soft hour! which wakes the wish and melts the heart Of those who sail the seas, on the first day When they from their sweet friends are torn apart; Or fills with love the pilgrim on his way, As the far bell of veaper makes him start, Seeming to weep the dying day's decay; Is this a fancy which our reason scorns? Ah! surely nothing dies but something mourns!

When Nero perish'd by the justest doom Which ever the destroyer yet destroy'd, Amidat the roar of liberated Rome, Of nations freed, and the world overjoy'd, Some hand unseen strew'd flowers upon his tomh: Perhaps the weakness of a heart not void Of feeling for some kindness done, when power Had laft the wretch an uncorrupted hour.

ARQUA.

("Childe Harold," Canto iv., Stanzas 30-32.)

THERE is a tomb in Arqua—rear'd in air, Pillar'd in their sarcophagua, repose
The bones of Laura's lover; here repair
Many familiar with his well-sung woes,
The pilgrims of his genius. He arose
To raise a language, and his land reclaim
From the dull yoke of her barbaric foes:
Watering the tree which bears his lady's name
With his melodious tears, he gave himself to fame.

They keep his dust in Arqua, where he died;
The mountain-village where his latter days
Went down the vale of years; and 'tis their pride—
An honest pride—and let it be their praise,
To offer to the passing stranger's gaze
His mansion and his sepulchre; both plain
And venerably aimple, such as raise
A feeling more accordant with his strain
Than if a pyramid form'd his monumental fane.

And the soft quiet hamlet where he dwelt Is one of that complexion which seems made For those who their mortality have felt, And sought a refuge from their hopes decsy'd In the deep umbrage of a green hill's shade, Which shows a distant prospect far away Of busy cities, now in vain display'd, For they can lure no further; and the ray Of a bright sun can make sufficient holiday.

CLITUMNUS.

("Childe Hsrold," Csnto iv., Stanzaa 66, 67.)

Bur thou, Clitumnus! in thy aweetest wave
Of the most living crystal that was e'er
The haunt of river nymph, to gaze and lave
Her limbs where nothing hid them, thou dost rear
Thy grassy banks whereon the milk-white ateer
Grazea; the purest god of gentle waters!
And most serene of aspect, and most clear;
Surely that atream was unprofaned by slaughters—
A mirror and a bath for Beauty's youngest daughters!

And on thy happy shore a Temple still,
Of small and delicate proportion, keeps,
Upon a mild declivity of hill,
Its memory of thee; beneath it sweeps
Thy current's calmnesa; oft from out it leaps
The finny darter with the glittering scales,
Who dwells and revels in thy glassy deeps;
While, chance, some scatter'd water-lily sails
Down where the shallower wave still tells its bubbling tales.

TERNI.

("Childe Harold," Canto iv., Stanzas 69-72.)

THE roar of waters! from the headlong height Velino cleaves the wave-worn precipice; The fall of waters! rapid as the light The flashing mass foams shaking the ahyss; The hell of watera! where they howl and hiss, And boil in endless torture; while the sweat Of their great agony, wrung out from this Their Phlegethon, curls round the rocks of jet That gird the gulf around, in pitiless horror set,

And mounts in spray the skies, and thence again Returns in an uncessing shower, which round, With its unemptied cloud of gentle rain, Is an eternal April to the ground, Making it all one emerald—how profound The gulf! and how the giant element From rock to rock leaps with delirions bound, Crushing the cliffa, which, downward worn and rent With his fierce footsteps, yield in chasms a fearful vent

To the broad column which rolls on, and shows More like the fountain of an infant sea Torn from the womb of mountains by the throes Of a new world, than only thus to be Parent of rivers, which flow gushingly, With many windings, through the vale—Look back! Lo! where it comes like an eternity, As if to aweep down all things in its track, Charming the eye with dread, a matchless cataract.

Horrihly beantiful! but on the verge, From side to aide, beneath the glittering morn, An Iris sits, amidst the infernal surge, Like Hope upon a death-bed, and, unworn Ita staady dyea, while all around is torn By the distracted waters, bears aerene Its brilliant hues with all their beams unshorn: Resembling, 'mid the torture of the scene, Love watching Madness with unalterable mien.

ROME.

("Childe Harold," Canto iv., Stanzaa 78, 79.)

OH Rome! my country! city of the soul!
The orphans of the heart must turn to thee,
Lone mother of dead empires! and control
In their shut breasts their petty misery.
What are our woes and sufferance? Come and see.
The cypress, hear the owl, and plod your way
O'er stepa of broken thrones and temples, Ye!
Whose agonies are evils of a day—
A world is at our feet as fragile as our clay.

The Niobe of nations! there ahe stands,
Childless and crownless, in her voiceless woe;
An empty urn within her wither'd hands,
Whese holy dust was scatter'd long age;
The Scipios' tomb contains no ashes now;
The very sepulchres lie tenantless
Of their heroic dwellers: dost theu flow,
Old Tiber! through a marble wilderness?
Rise, with thy yellow waves, and mantle her distress.

THE COLISEUM.

("Childe Harold," Canto iv., Stanzss 139-145.)

And here the buzz of eager nations ran,
In murmun'd pity, or loud-roar'd applause,
As man was slaughter'd by his fellow-man.
And wherefore alaughter'd? wherefore, but because
Such were the bloody Circus' genial laws,
And the imperial pleasure. Wherefore not?
What matters where we fall to fill the maws
Of worms—on battle-plains or listed spot?
Both are hut theatres where the chief actors rot.

I see before me the Gladiator lie:
He leans upon his hand—his manly brow
Consents to death, but conquers agony,
And his droop'd head ainka gradually low—
And through his side the last dropa, ebbing slow
From the red gash, fall heavy, one by one,
Like the first of a thunder-shower; and now
The arena awims around him—he is gone,
Ere ceased the inhuman shout which hail'd the wretch who won.

He heard it, but he heeded not—his eyes
Were with his heart, and that was far away:
He reck'd not of the life he lost nor prize,
But where his rude hut by the Danuhe lay,
There were his young barbarians all at play,
There was their Dacian mother—he, their sire,
Butcher'd to make a Roman holiday—
All this rush'd with his blood.—Shall he expire,
And unavenged?—Arise! ye Goths, and glut your ire!

But here, where Murder breathed her bloody steam; And here, where buzzing nations choked the ways, And roar'd or murmur'd like a mountain stream Dashing or winding as its torrent strays; Here, where the Roman millions' blame or praise Was death or life, the playthings of a crowd, My voice sounds much—and fall the stars' faint rays On the arena void—seats crush'd—walls how'd—And galleries, where my steps seem echoes strangely loud.

A ruin—yet what ruin! from its mass
Walls, palaces, half-cities, have been rear'd;
Yet oft the enormous skeleton ye pass,
And marvel where the speil could have appear'd.
Hath it indeed been plunder'd, or but clear'd?
Alas! developed, opens the decay,
When the colossal fabric's form is near'd:
It will not bear the brightness of the day,
Which streams too much on all years, man, have reft away.

But when the rising moon begins to climb
Its topmost arch, and gently pauses there;
When the stars twinkle through the loops of time,
And the low night-breeze waves along the air
The garland forest, which the gray walls wear,
Like laurels on the hald first Casar's head;
When the light shines serene hut doth not glare,
Then in this magic circle raise the dead:
Heroes have trod this spot—'tis on their dust ye tread.

"While stands the Coliseum, Rome shall stand; When falls the Coliseum, Rome shall fall; And when Reme falls—the World." From our own land Thus spake the pilgrims o'er this mighty wall In Saxon times, which we are wont to call Ancient; and these three mortal things are still On their foundations, and unalter'd all; Rome and her Ruin past Redemption's skill, The World, the same wide den—of thieves, or what you will.

TOMB OF CECILIA METELLA.

("Childe Harold," Canto iv., Stanzas 99-103.)

THERE is a stern round tower of other days, Firm as a fortress, with its fence of stone, Such as an army's baffled strength delaya,
Standing with half its battlements alone,
And with two thousand years of ivy grown,
The garland of eternity, where wave
The green leaves over all by time o'erthrown;
What was this tower of strength? within its cave
What treasure lay so lock'd, so hid?—A woman's grave.

But who was sile, the lady of the dead,
Tomb'd in a palace? Was she chaste and fair?
Worthy a king's—or more—a Roman's bed?
What race of chiefs and heroes did she bear?
What daughter of her heauties was the heir?
How lived—how loved—how died she? Was she not
So honor'd—and conspicuously there,
Where meaner relics must not dare to rot,
Placed to commemorate a more than mortal lot?

Was she as those who love their lords, or they
Who love the lords of othera? such have been
Even in the olden time, Rome's annals say.
Was she a matron of Cornelia's mien,
Or the light air of Egypt's graceful queen,
Profuse of joy—or 'gainst it did she war,
Inveterate in virtue? Did she lean
To the soft side of the heart, or wisely bar
Love from amongst her griefs?—for such the affections are.

Perchance she died in youth: it may be, how'd With woes far heavier than the penderous tomb That weigh'd upon her gentle dust, a cloud Might gather o'er her beauty, and a gloom In her dark eye, prophetic of the doom Heaven gives its faverites—early death; yet shed A sunset charm around her, and illume With hectic light, the Hesperns of the dead, Of her consuming cheek the autumnal leaf-like red.

Perchance she died in age—surviving all,
Charms, kindred, children—with the ailver gray
On her long tressea, which might yet recall,
It may be, atill a something of the day
When they were braided, and her proud array
And lovely form were envied, praised, and eyed
By Rome—but whither would Conjecture stray?
Thus much alone we know—Metella died,
The wealthiest Roman's wife: Behold his love or pride!

GROTTO OF EGERIA.

("Childe Harold," Canto iv., Stanzas 115-124.)

EGERIA! sweet creation of some heart
Which found no mortal resting-place so fair
As thine ideal breast; whate'er then art
Or wert—a young Aurora of the air,
The nympholepsy of some fond despair;
Or, it might he, a heauty of the earth,
Who found a more than common votary there
Too much adoring; whatsoe'er thy birth,
Thou wert a heautiful thought, and softly bodied forth.

The mosses of thy feuntain still are sprinkled With thine Elyaian water-drops; the face Of thy cave-gnarded spring, with years unwrinkled, Reflecta the meek-eyed genius of the place, Whose green, wild margin now no more erase Art's works, nor must the delicate waters sleep, Prison'd in marble; bubbling from the base Of the cleft statue, with a gentle leap

The rill runs o'er, and round, fern, flowers, and ivy, creep

Fantastically tangled; the green hills
Are clethed with early blossoma, through the grass
The quick-eyed lizard rustles, and the bills
Of summer-birds sing welceme as ye pasa;
Flowers fresh in hue, and many in their class,
Implore the pausing atep, and with their dyes
Dance in the soft breeze in a fairy mass;
The sweetness of the violet's deep blue eyea,
Kiss'd by the breath of heaven, seems color'd by its skies.

Here didst thou dwell, in this enchanted cover, Egeria! thy all-heavenly bosom heating For the far footsteps of thy mortal lover; The purple Midnight veiled that mystic meeting With her most starry canopy, and seating Thyself by thine aderer, what befell? This cave was surely shaped out for the greeting Of an enamor'd Goddess, and the cell Haunted by holy Love—the earliest oracle!

And didst thou not, thy breast to his replying,
Blend a celestial with a human heart;
And Love, which dies as it was born, in sighing,
Share with immortal transports? could thine art
Make them indeed immortal, and impart
The purity of heaven to earthly joys,
Expel the venom and not hlunt the dart—
The dull satiety which all destroys—
And root from out the soul the deadly weed which cloys?

Alsa! our young affections run to waste,
Or water but the desert; whence arise
But weeds of dark luxuriance, tares of haste,
Rank at the core, though tempting to the eyes,
Flowers whose wild odors breathe but agonies,
And trees whose gums are poison; such the plants
Which apring beneath her steps as Passion files
O'er the world's wilderness, and vainly pants
For some celestial fruit forhidden to our wants.

Oh Love! no habitant of earth thou art—
An unseen eeraph, we believe in thee,
A faith whose martyrs are the broken heart,
But never yet hath seen, nor e'er shall see
The naked eye, thy form, as it should be;
The mind hath made thee, as it peopled heaven,
Even with its own desiring phantasy,
And to a thought such shape and image given,
As hannts the unquench'd soul—parch'd—wearied—wrung—and riven.

Of its own beauty is the mind diseased,
And fevera into false creation;—where,
Where are the forms the aculptor'a soul bath seized?
In him alone. Can Nature ahow ao fair?
Where are the charms and virtues which we dare
Conceive in boyhood and pursue as men,
The unreach'd Paradise of our despair,
Which o'er-informs the pencil and the pen,
And overpowera the page where it would bloom again?

Who leves, raves—'tis youth's frenzy—but the cure is bitterer still: as charm by charm unwinds Which robed cur idols, and we see too sure Nor worth nor beauty dwells from out the mind's ideal shape of such; yet still it binds. The fatal spall, and still it draws us on, Reaping the whirlwind from the oft-sown winds; The stubborn heart, its alchemy begun,

Seems ever near the prize—wealthiest when most undone.

We wither from our youth, we gasp away—
Sick—sick; unfound the hoon—unslaked the thirat,
Though to the last, in verge of our decay,
Some phantom lures, such as we sought at first—
But all too late—so are we doubly curat.
Love, fame, ambition, avarice—'tie the same,
Each idle—and all ill—and none the worst—
For all are meteors with a different name,
And Death the sable amoke where vanishes the flame.

SONNET ON CHILLON.

ETERNAL Spirit of the chainless Mind!
Brightest in dungeons, Liberty! thou art,
For there thy babitation is the heart—
The heart which love of thee alone can bind;
And when thy sons to fettera are consign'd—
To fetters, and the damp vault's dayless gloom,
Their country conquers with their martyrdom,
And Freedom's fame finds wings on every wind.
Chillen! thy prison is a holy place,
And thy sad floor an altar—for 'twas trod,
Until his very stepa have left a trace
Worn, as if thy cold pavement were a aod,
By Bonnivard!—May none those marks efface!
For they appeal from tyranny to God.

BONNIVARD AND HIS BROTHERS.

("Prisover of Chillon," Stanzas 6-8,)

LAKE LEMAN lies by Chillon's walls:
A thousand feet in depth below
Its massy waters meet and flow:
Thus much the fathom-line was sent
From Chillon's anow-white battlement,
Which round ahout the wave inthralls:

A double dungeon wall and wave
Have made—and like a living grave.
Below the surface of the lake
The dark vault lies wherein we lay,
We heard it ripple night and day;
Sounding o'er our heada it knock'd;
And I have felt the winter's apray
Wash through the bara when winds were high
And wanton in the happy sky;
And then the very rock hath rock'd,
And I have felt it ahake, unshock'd,
Because I could have amiled to see
The death that would have set me free.

I said my nearer brother pined, I said his mighty heart declined He loathed and put away his food; It was not that 'twas cearse and rude, For we were used to hunter's fare, And for the like had little care: The milk drawn from the mountain goat Was changed for water from the most, Our bread was such as captive's tears Have moisten'd many a thousand years, Since man first pent his fellow-men Like hrutes within an iron den; But what were these to us or him? These wasted not his heart or limb; My brother's soul was of that mould Which in a palace had grown cold, Had his free breathing been denied The range of the steep mountain's side; But why delay the truth?—he died. I saw, and could not held bis head, Nor reach his dying hand-nor dead-Though hard I strove, but strove in vain, To rend and gnash my bonds in twain. He died-and they unlock'd his chain, And accop'd for him a shallow grave Even from the cold earth of our cave. I begg'd them, as a boon, to lay His corse in dust whereon the day Might shine—it was a foolish thought, But then within my brain it wrought, That even in death his free-horn breast In such a dungeon could not rest. I might have spared my idle prayer-They coldly laugh'd-and laid him there: The flat and turfless earth above The being we so much did love; His empty chain above it leant, Such murder's fitting monument!

But he, the favorite and the flower. Most cherish'd aince his natal hour, His mother's image in fair face, The infant love of all his race, His martyr'd father's dearest thought, My latest care, for whom I sought To hoard my life, that his might be Less wretched now, and one day free; He, too, who yet had held untired A apirit natural or inspired-He, too, was struck, and day by day Was wither'd on the stalk away. Oh, God! it is a fearful thing To see the human soul take wing In any shape, in any mood:
I've seen it rushing forth in blood, I've seen it on the breaking ocean Strive with a swoln convulsive motion, I've seen the aick and ghaatly bed Of Sin delirious with its dread; But these were horrora—this was woe Unmix'd with such-but sure and slow: He faded, and so calm and meek, So softly worn, so sweetly weak, So tearless, yet so tender—kind, And grieved for those he left behind! With all the while a cheek whose bloom Was as a mockery of the tomb, Whose tints as gently sunk away As a departing rainbow'a ray An eye of most transparent light, That almost made the dungeon bright, And not a word of murmur-not A groan o'er his untimely lot-A little talk of hetter days A little hope my own to raise, For I was aunk in silence—lost In this last loss, of all the most;

And then the sighs he would suppress Of fainting nature's feebleness, More alowly drawn, grew less and less: I listen'd, but I could not hear-I call'd, for I was wild with fear; I knew 'twas hopeless, but my dread Would not be thus admonished: I call'd, and thought I heard a sound-I hurst my chain with one strong bound, And rush'd to him: I found him not, I only stirr'd in this black spot, I only lived-I only drew The accursed breath of dungeon-dew; The last-the sole-the dearest link Between me and the eternal brink, Which hound me to my failing race, Was broken in this fatal place.

BONNIVARD ALONE.

("Prisoner of Chillon," Stauzas 9-14.)

What next befell me then and there I know not well-I never knew First came the loss of light, and air, And then of darkness too: I had no thought, no feeling-none-Among the atones I stood a stone, And was, scarce conscious what I wist, As shrubless crags within the mist; For all was blank, and bleak, and gray, It was not night—it was not day, It was not even the dungeon-light, So hateful to my heavy sight, But vacancy absorbing space, And fixedness-without a place; There were no stars-no earth-no time-No check-no change-no good-no crime-But ailence, and a atirless breath Which neither was of life nor death; A sea of stagnant idleness, Blind, houndless, mute, and motionless!

A light broke in upon my brain—
It was the carol of a bird;
It ceased, and then it came again,
The sweetest song ear ever heard,
And mine was thankful till my eyes
Ran over with the glad aurprise,
And they that moment could not see
I was the mate of misery;
But then by dull degrees came back
My senses to their wonted track;
I saw the dungeon walls and floor
Close slowly round me as hefore,
I saw the glimmer of the sun
Creeping as it before had done,
But through the crevice where it came
That bird was perch'd, as fond and tame,

And tamer than upon the tree; A levely hird, with azure wings, And song that said a thousand things, And seem'd to say them all for me! I never saw its like before, I ne'er shall see its likeness more:

It seem'd like me to want a mate,
But was not half so desolate,
And it was come to love me when
None lived to love me so again,
And cheering from my dungeon's brink,
Had brought me back to feel and think.
I know not if it late were free,
Or broke its cage to perch on mine,

But knowing well captivity,
Sweet bird! I could not wish for thine!
Or if it were, in winged guise,
A visitant from Paradise;
For—Heaven forgive that thought! the while
Which made ms both to weep and smile—
I sometimes deem'd that it might be
My brother's soul come down to me;
But then at last away it flew,
And then 'twas mortal—well I knew;
For he would never thus have flown,
And left me twice so doubly lone—
Lone—as the corse within its shroud,
Lone—as a solitary cloud,
A single cloud on a sunny day,
While all the reat of heaven is clear,

A frown upon the atmosphere, That hath no business to appear When skies are blue, and earth is gay-

A kind of change came in my fate,
My keepers grew compassionate;
I know not what had made them so,
They were inured to sights of wee,
But so it was: my broken chain
With links unfasten'd did remain,
And it was liberty to stride
Along my cell from side to side,
And up and down, and then athwart,
And tread it over every part;
And round the pillara one by one,
Returning where my walk begun,
Avoiding only, as I trod,
My brothers' graves without a sod;
For if I thought with heedleas tread
My atep profaned their lowly bed,
My breath came gaspingly and thick,
And my crush'd heart fell blind and sick.

I made a footing in the wall,
It was not therefrom to escape,
For I had buried one and all
Who loved me in a human shape;
And the whole earth would henceforth be
A wider prison unto me:
No child—no sire—no kin had I,
No partner in my misery;
I thought of thia, and I was glad,
For thought of them had made me mad;
But I was curious to ascend
To my barr'd windowa, and to bend
Once more, upon the mountains high,
The quiet of a loving eye.

I saw them—and they were the same,
They were not changed like me in frame;
I saw their thousand years of snow
On high—their wide long lake below,
And the blue Rhone in fullest flow;
I heard the torrents leap and gush
O'er channell'd rock and broken bush;
I saw the white-wall'd distant town,
And whiter sails go skimming down;
And then there was a little isle,
Which in my very face did smile.

The only one in view;
A small green isle, it seem'd no more,
Scarce broader than my dungeon floor,
But in it there were three tall trees,
And o'er it blew the mountain breeze,
And by it there were waters flowing,

And on it there were young flowers growing, Of gentle breath and hue. The fish swam by the castle wall, And they seem'd joyous each and all; The eagle rode the rising blast, Methought he never flew so fast As then to me he seem'd to fly, And then new tears came in my eye. And I felt troubled—and would fain I had not left my recent chain; And when I did descend again, The darkness of my dim abode Fell on me as a heavy load; It was as is a new-dug grave, Closing o'er one we sought to save-And yet my glance, too much oppress'd, Had almost need of such a rest.

It might be months, or years, or days, I kept no count, I took no note, I had no hope my eyes to raise, And clear them of their dreary mote: At last men came to aet me free, I ask'd not why, and reck'd not where, It was at length the same to me Fetter'd or fetterless to be, I learn'd to love despair. And thus when they appear'd at last, And all my bonds aside were cast, These heavy walls to me had grown A hermitage—and all my own! And half I felt as they were come To tear me from a second home: With spiders I had friendship made, And watch'd them in their sullen trade, Had seen the mice by moonlight play,

And why should I feel less than they?

We were all inmates of one place, And I, the monarch of each race, Had power to kill-yet, strange to tell! In quiet we had learn'd to dwell. My very chains and I grew friends, So much a long communion tends To make us what we are-even I Regain'd my freedom with a sigh.

THE EAST.

("Bride of Abydos," Canto i., Stanza 1.)

Know ye the land where the cypress and myrtle Are emblems of deeds that are done in their clime, Where the rage of the vulture, the love of the turtls, Now melt into sorrow, now madden to crime? Know ye the land of the cedar and vine, Where the flowers ever blossom, the beams ever shine; Where the light wings of Zephyr, oppress'd with perfume, Wax faint o'er the Gardens of Gúl in her bloom; Where the citron and olive are fairest of fruit, And the voice of the nightingale never is mute Where the tints of the earth, and the hues of the sky, In color though varied, in beauty may vie, And the purple of Ocean is deepest in dye; Where the virgins are soft as the roses they twine, And all, save the spirit of man, is divine?
'Tis the clime of the East; 'tis the land of the Sun-Can he smile on such deeds as his children have done? Oh! wild as the accents of lovers' farewell Are the hearts which they bear, and the tales which they tell.

JOURNEY AND DEATH OF HASSAN.

(From "The Gisour.")

Stern Hassan hath a journey ta'en, With twenty vassals in his train Each arm'd, as best becomes a man, With arquebuss and ataghan; The chief before, as deck'd for war, Bears in his belt the scimitar Stain'd with the best of Arnaut blood, When in the pass the rebels stood, And few return'd to tell the tale Of what befell in Parne's vale. The pistols which his girdle bore Were those that once a pasha wore, Which still, though gemmed and boss'd with gold, Even robbers tremble to behold. Tia said he goes to woo a bride More true than her who left his side; The faithless slave that broke her bower, And, worse than faithless, for a Giaour!

The sun's last rays are on the hill, And sparkle in the fountain rill, Whose welcome waters, cool and clear, Draw blessings from the mountaineer: Here may the loitering merchant Greek Find that repose 'twere vain to seek In cities lodged too near his lord, And trembling for his secret heard-Here may he rest where none can see, In crowds a slave, in deserts free; And with forbidden wine may stain The bowl a Moslem must not drain.

The foremost Tartar's in the gap, Conspicuous by his yellow cap; The rest in lengthening line the while Wind slowly through the long defile: Above, the mountain rears a peak, Where vultures whet the thirsty beak, And theirs may be a feast to-night, Shall tempt them down ere morrow's light; Beneath, a river's wintry stream Has shrunk before the summer beam, And left a channel bleak and hare Save shruhs that spring to perish there: Each side the midway path there lay Small broken crags of granite gray, By time, or mountain lightning, riven From summits clad in mists of heaven; For where is he that hath beheld The peak of Liakura unveil'd?

They reach the grove of pine at last: "Bismillah! now the peril's past; For yonder view the opening plain, And there we'll prick our steeds amain:" The Chiaus spake, and as he said, A bullet whistled o'er his head; The foremost Tartar hites the ground! Scarce had they time to check the rein, Swift from their steeds the riders bound; But three shall never mount again: Unseen the foes that gave the wound, The dying ask revenge in vain. With steel unsheath'd, and carhine bent, Some o'er their courser's harness leant, Half shelter'd by the steed; Some fly behind the nearest rock, And there await the coming shock, Nor tamely stand to bleed Beneath the shaft of foes unseen, Who dare not quit their craggy screen. Stern Hassan only from his horse Disdains to light, and keeps his course, Till fiery flashes in the van Proclaim too sure the robber-clan Have well secured the only way Could now avail the promised prey; Then curl'd his very beard with ire, And glared his eye with fiercer fire: "Though far and near the bullets hiss, I've 'scaped a bloodier hour than this." And now the foe their covert quit, And call his vassals to submit; But Hassan's frown and furious word Are dreaded more than bostile sword, Nor of his little band a man Resign'd carbine or ataghan, Nor raised the craven cry, Amaun!1 In fuller sight, more near and near, The lately ambush'd foes appear, And, issuing from the grove, advance Some who on battle-charger prance. Who leads them on with foreign brand, Far flashing in his red right hand?
"'Tis he! 'tis he! I know bim now; I know him by his pallid brow; I know him by the evil eye That aids his envious treachery I know him by his jet-black barb: Though now array'd in Arnaut garh, Apostate from his own vile faith, It shall not save him from the death: 'Tis he! well met in any hour,

With sabre shiver'd to the hilt, Yet dripping with the blood he spilt ; Yet strain'd within the sever'd hand Which quivers round that faithless brand: His turban far behind him roll'd. And cleft in twain its firmest fold: His flowing robe by falcbion torn, And crimson as those clouds of morn That, streak'd with dusky red, portend The day shall have a stormy end; A stain on every bush that bore A fragment of his palampore,2 His breast with wounds unnumber'd riven. His back to earth, his face to heaven, Fall'n Hassan lies-his unclosed eye Yet lowering on his enemy, As if the hour that seal'd his fate Surviving left bis quenchless hate; And o'er him bends that foe with brow As dark as his that bled helow.

Lost Leila's love, accursed Giaour!"

HASSAN'S MOTHER.

(From "The Giaour.")

HE browsing camels' bells are tinkling: His Mother look'd from her lattice high, She saw the dews of eve hesprinkling The pasture green heneath her eye. She saw the planets faintly twinkling: "'Tis twilight—sure his train is nigh."

Quarter, pardon.
 The flowered shawl generally worn by persons of rank.

She could not rest in the garden-bower,
But gazed through the grate of his steepsst tower:
"Why comes he not? his steeds are fleet,
Nor shrink they from the summer heat;
Why sends not the Bridegroom his promised gift:
Is his heart more cold, or his barb less swift?
Oh, false reproach! you Tartar now
Has gain'd our nesrest mountsin's brow,
And warily the steep descends,
And now within the valley bends;
And he bears the gift at his saddle bow—
How could I deem his conrect slow?
Right well my largess shall repsy
His welcome spssd, and weary way."

The Tartar lighted at the gate,
But scarcs upheld his fainting weight:
His swarthy visage spake distrsss,
But this might be from wsariness;
His garb with sanguine spots was dyed,
But these might be from his courser's side;
He drew the token from his vest—
Angel of Death! 'tis Hassan's cloven crest!
His calpac' rent—his caftan red—
"Lady, a fearful bride thy Son hath wed:
Me, not from mercy, did they spare,
But this empurpled pledge to bear.
Peace to the brave! whose blood is spilt;
Woe to the Giaour! for his the guilt."

THE GIAOUR'S LOVE.

(From "The Giaour.")

THE cold in clime are cold in blood, Their love can scarce deserve the name; But mine was like the lava flood That boils in Ætna's breast of flame. I cannot prate in puling strain Of ladye-love, and beauty's chain: If changing cheek, and scorching vein, Lips taught to writhe, but not complain, If bursting heart, and madd'ning brain, And daring deed, and vengeful steel, And all that I bave felt, and feel, Betoken love-that love was mine. And shown by many a bitter sign. 'Tis true, I could not whine nor sigh, I knew but to obtain or die. I die-but first I have possess'd, And come what may, I have been blest. Shall I the doom I sought upbraid? No-reft of all, yet undismay'd But for the thought of Leils slain, Give me the plessure with the pain, So would I live and love again. I grieve, but not, my boly guide! For him who dies, but her who died: She slesps beneath the wandering wave Ah! had she but an earthly grave, This breaking heart and throubing head Should seek and share her narrow bed. She was a form of life and light, That, seen, became a part of sight; And rose, where'er I turn'd mine eys, The Morning-star of Memory!

DEATH OF SELIM.

("Bride of Abydos," Canto ii., Stanzas 22-26.)

ZULEIKA, mute and motionless,
Stood like that statue of distress,
When, her last hope forever gone,
The mother harden'd into stone;
All in the maid that eye could see
Was but a younger Niohe.
But ere her lip, or even her eye,
Essay'd to speak, or look reply,
Beneath the garden's wicket porch
Far flash'd on high a blazing torch!
Another—and another—and another—
"Oh! fly—no more—yet now my more than brother!"
Far, wide, through svary thicket spread,
The fearful lights are gleaming rad;

Nor these alone—for each right hand Is ready with a sheathless brand. They part, pursue, return, and wheel With searching:flambeau, shining steel; And last of all, his sabra waving, Stern Giaffir in his fury raving: And now almost they touch the cave—Oh! must that grot be Selim's grave?

Dauntless he stood—"'Tis come-One kiss, Zuleika-'tis my last: But yet my band not far from shore May hear this signal, see the flash; Yet now too few—the attempt were rash:
No matter—yet one effort more." Forth to the cavern mouth he stept; His pistol's echo rang on high, Znleiks started not, nor wept, Despair benumb'd her breast and eys! "They hear me not, or if they ply Their cars, 'tis but to see me die; That sound hath drawn my foes more nigh. Then forth my father's scimitar, Thou ne'er hast seen less equal war! Farewell, Zuleika!—Sweet 1 retire: Yet stay within—here linger safe, At thee his rage will only chafe. Stir not-lest even to thee perchance Some erring blade or ball should glance. Fear'st thou for him? may I expire If in this strife I seek thy sire! No—though by him that poison pour'd: No—though again he call me coward! But tamely shall I meet their steel? No-as each crest save his may feel!"

One hound he made, and gain'd the sand: Already at his feet hath sunk The foremost of the prying band, A gasping head, a quivering trunk; Another falls-but round him close A swarming circle of his foes; From right to left his path he cleft, And almost met the meeting wave: His bost appears-not five oars' length-His comrades strain with desperate strength-Oh! are they yet in time to save? His feet the foremost breakers lave ; His band are plunging in the bay, Their sabres glitter through the spray; Wet-wild-unwearied to the strand They struggle-now they touch the land! They come-'tis but to add to slaughter His heart's best blood is on the water.

Escaped from shot, unharm'd by steel.

Or scarcely grazed its force to feel. Had Selim won, betray'd, beset, To where the strand and billows met; There as his last step left the land, And the last death-blow dealt his hand-Ah! wherefore did he turn to look For her his eye but sought in vain? That pause, that fatal gaze he took Hath doom'd his death, or fix'd his chain. Sad proof, in peril and in pain, How late will Lover's hope remain! His back was to the dashing spray; Behind, but close, his comrades lay, When at the instant hiss'd the ball "So may the foes of Giaffir fall!" Whose voice is heard? whose carbine rang? Whose bullet through the night-sir sang, Too nearly, deadly sim'd to err? 'Tis thine-Abdallsh's Murderer! The father slowly rued thy hate, The son listh found a quicker fate: Fast from his breast the blood is bubbling, The whiteness of the sea-foam troubling If aught his lips essay'd to groan, The rushing billows choked the tone!

Morn slowly rolls the clouds away;
Few trophies of the fight are there:
The shouts that shook the midnight-bay
Are silent; but some signs of fray
That strand of strife may hear,
And fragments of each shiver'd brand;
Steps stamp'd; and dash'd into the sand
The print of many a struggling hand

¹ The solid cap or centre of the head-dress; the shawl is wound round it and forms the turban.

May there he mark'd; nor far remote A broken torch, on oarless hoat; And, tangled on the weeds that heap The beach where shelving to the deep, There lies a white capote! 'Tis reut in twain—ons dark-red stain The wave yet ripples c'er in vain; But where is he who wore? Ye! who would o'er his relics weep, Go, seek them where the surges sweep Their burden round Sigæum's steep And cast on Lemnes' shore: The sea-birds shrick above the prey O'er which their hungry beaks delay, As, shaken on his restless pillow, His head heaves with the heaving billow; That hand, whose motion is not life, Yet feebly seems to menace strife, Flung by the tossing tide on high, Then levell'd with the wave-What recks it, though that corse shall lie Within a living grave? The bird that tears that prostrate form Hath only robb'd the meaner worm; The only heart, the only eye Had bled or wept to see him die, Had seen those scatter'd limbs composed, And mourn'd above his turban-stone, That heart hath burst-that eye was closed-Yea-closed before his own!

CORSAIR LIFE.

("Corssir," Canto i., Stanza 1.)

O'ER the glad waters of the dark blue sea, Our thoughts as boundless, and our souls as free, Far as the breeze can bear, the billows feam, Survey our empire, and behold our home! These are our realms, no limits to their sway-Our flag the sceptre all who meet obey. Ours the wild life in tumult still to range From toil to rest, and joy in every change. Oh, who can tell? not thou, luxurious slave! Whose soul would sicken o'er the heaving wave; Not thou, vain lord of wantonness and ease! Whom slumber soothes not—pleasure cannot please— Oh, who can tell, save he whose heart hath tried, And danced in triumph o'er the waters wide, The exulting sense-the pulse's maddening play, That thrills the wanderer of that trackless way? That for itself can woo the approaching fight, And turn what some deem danger to delight; That seeks what cravens shun with more than zeal, And where the feebler faint—can only feel— Feel-to the rising bosom's inmost core, Its hope awaken and its spirit soar? No dread of death-if with us die our foes-Save that it seems even duller than repose: Come when it will-we snatch the life of life When lost-what recks it-by disease or strife? Let him who crawls enamor'd of decay Cling to his couch, and sicken years away; Heave his thick breath, and shake his palsied head; Ours—the fresh turf, and not the feverish bed. While gasp by gasp he falters forth his soul, Ours with one pang—one bound—escapes control. His corse may boast its urn and narrow cave, And they who leath'd his life may gild his grave: Ours are the tears, though few, sincerely shed, When Ocean shrouds and sepulchres our dead. For us, even banquets fond regret supply In the red cup that crowns our memory; And the brief epitaph in danger's day, When those who win at length divide the prey, And cry, remembrance saddening c'cr each brow, How had the brave who fell exulted now!

PARTING OF CONRAD AND MEDORA.

("Corsair," Canto i., Stanzas 14, 15.)

SHE rose—she sprung—she clung to his embrace, Till his heart heaved beneath her hidden face. He dared not raise to his that deep-blue eye, Which downcast droop'd in tearless agony. Her long fair hair lay floating o'er his arms, In all the wildness of dishevell'd charms;

Scarce beat that bosom where his image dwelt So full—that feeling seem'd almost unfelt! Hark—psals the thunder of the signal-gun! It told 'twss sunset—snd he cursed that sun. Again—again—that form he madly press'd, Which mutely clasp'd, imploringly caress'd! And tottering to the couch his bride he bore, One moment gazed—as if to gaze no more; Felt—that for him earth held but her alone, Kiss'd her cold forehead—turn'd—is Conrad gone?

"And is he gone?"—on sudden solitude How oft that fearful question will intrude!
"'Twas but an instant past—and here he stood! And now "-without the portal's porch she rush'd, And then at length her tears in freedom gush'd; Big-bright -and fast, unknown to her they fell; But still her lips refused to send-"Farewell!" For in that word—that fatal word—howe'er We promise—hope—believe—there breathes despair. O'er every feature of that still, pale face, Had sorrow fix'd what time can ne'er erase: The tender blue of that large loving eye Grew frozen with its gaze on vacancy, Till—oh, how far l—it caught a glimpse of him, And then it flow'd—and frenzied seem'd to swim Through those long, dark, and glistening lashes dew'd. With drops of sadness oft to be renew'd. "He's gone!"-against her heart that hand is driven, Convulsed and quick—then gently raised to heaven; She look'd and saw the heaving of the main; The white sail set-she dared not look again; But turn'd with sickening soul within the gate-"It is no dream-and I am desolate!"

CONRAD'S RETURN.

("Coreair," Canto iii., Stauzae 19-21.)

The lights are high on beacon and from bower,
And 'midst them Conrad seeks Medora's tower:
He looks in vain—'tis strange—and all remark,
Amid so many, hers alone is dark.
'Tis strange—of yore its welcome never fail'd,
Nor now, perchance, extinguish'd, only veil'd.
With the first boat descends he for the shore,
And looks impatient on the lingering oar.
Oh! for a wing beyond the falcon's flight,
To bear him like an arrow to that height!
With the first pause the resting rowers gave,
He waits not—looks not—leaps into the wave,
Strives through the surge, bestrides the beach, and high.
Ascends the path familiar to his eye.

He reach'd his turret door—he paused—no sound Broke from within; and all was night around. He knock'd, and loudly—footstep nor reply Announced that any heard or deem'd him nigh; He knock'd—but faintly—for his trembling hand. Refused to aid his heavy heart's demand.
The portal opens—'tis a well-known face—But not the form he panted to embrace.
Its lips are silent—twice his own essay'd, And fail'd to frame the question they delay'd; He snatch'd the lamp—its light will answer all—It quits his grasp, expiring in the fall.
He would not wait for that reviving ray—As soon could he have linger'd there for day; But, glimmering through the dusky corridor, Another checkers o'er the shadow'd floor; His steps the chamber gain—his eyes behold All that his heart believed not—yet foretold!

He turn'd not—spoke not—sunk not—fix'd his look, And set the anxious frame that lately shook:
He gazed—how long we gaze despite of pain, And know, but dare not own, we gaze in vain!
In life itself she was so still and fair,
That death with gentler aspect wither'd there;
And the cold flowers her colder hand contain'd,
In that last grasp as tenderly were strain'd
As if she scarcely felt, but feign'd a sleep,
And made it almost mockery yet to weep:
The long dark lashes fringed her lids of snow,
And veil'd—thought shrinks from all that lurk'd below—
Oh! o'er the eye Death most exerts his might,
And hurls the spirit from her throne of light!
Sinks those blue orbs in that long last eclipse,
But spares, as yet, the charm around her lips—

Yet, yet they seem as they forbore to smile, And wish'd repose—but only for a while; But the white shroud, and each extended tress, Long—fair—but spread in utter lifelessness, Which, late the sport of every summer wind, Escaped the baffled wreath that strove to bind; These—and the pale pure cheek, became the hier—But she is nothing—wherefore is he here?

He ask'd no question—all were answer'd now By the first glance on that still—marble brow. It was enough—she died—what reck'd it how?

ALP AND FRANCESCA.

("Siege of Coriuth," Stanzas 16-21.)

STILL by the shore Alp mutely mused. And woo'd the freshness Night diffused. There shrinks no ebb in that tideless sea, Which changeless rolls eternally; So that wildest of waves, in their angriest mood, Scarce break on the bounds of the land for a rood; And the powerless moon beholds them flow, Heedless if she come or go: Calm or high, in main or bay, On their course she hath no sway. The rock unworn its base doth bare, And looks o'er the surf, but it comes not there; And the fringe of the feam may be seen below, On the line that it left long ages ago: A smooth short space of yellow sand Between it and the greener land.

He wander'd on, along the beach, Till within the range of a carbine's reach Of the leaguer'd wall; but they saw him not, Or how could he 'scape from the hostile shot? Did traitors lurk in the Christians' hold? Were their hands grown stiff, or their hearts wax'd cold? I know not, in sooth; but from yonder wall There flash'd no fire, and there hiss'd no ball, Though he stood beneath the bastion's frown, That flank'd the seaward gate of the town; Though he heard the sound, and could almost tell The sullen words of the sentinel, As his measured step on the stone below Clank'd as he paced it to and fro; And he saw the lean dogs beneath the wall Hold o'er the dead their carnival, Gorging and growling o'er carcass and limb; They were too busy to bark at him! From a Tartar's skull they had stripp'd the flesh, As ye peal the fig when its fruit is fresh; And their white tusks crunch'd o'er the whiter skull, As it slipp'd through their jaws, when their edge grew dull, As they lazily mumbled the bones of the dead, When they scarce could rise from the spot where they fed; So well had they broken a lingering fast With those who had fallen for that night's repast. And Alp knew, by the turbans that roll'd on the sand, The foremost of these were the best of his band: Crimson and green were the shawls of their wear, And each scalp had a single long tuft of hair, All the rest were shaven and bare. The scalps were in the wild dog's maw, The hair was tangled round his jaw. But close by the shore, on the edge of the gulf, There sat a vulture flapping a wolf, Who had stolen from the hills, but kept away, Scared by the dogs, from the human prey; But he seized on his share of a steed that lay, Pick'd by the birds, on the sands of the bay.

Alp turn'd him from the sickening sight.

Never had shaken his nerves in fight;
But he better could brook to behold the dying,
Deep in the tide of their warm blood lying,
Scorch'd with the death-thirst, and writhing in vain,
Than the perishing dead who are past all pain.

There is something of pride in the perilous hour,
Whate'er be the shape in which death may lower;
For Fame is there to say who bleeds,
And Honor's eye on daring deeds!
But when all is past, it is humbling to tread
O'er the weltering field of the tombless dead,
And see worms of the earth, and fowls of the sir,
Beaste of the forest, all gathering there;
All regarding man as their prey,
All rejoicing in his decay.

There is a temple in ruin stands,
Fashion'd by long forgotten hands;
Two or three columns, and msny a stone,
Marble and granite, with grass o'ergrown!
Out upon Time! it will leave no more
Of the things to come than the things before!
Out npon Time! who forever will leave
But enough of the past for the future to grieve
O'er that which hath been, and o'er that which must be:
What we have seen, our sons shall see;
Remnants of things that have pass'd away,
Fragments of stone, rear'd by creatures of clay!

He sat him down at a pillar's base, And pass'd his hand athwart his face; Like one in dreary musing mood, Declining was his attitude; His head was drooping on his breast, Fever'd, throbbing, and oppress'd; And o'er his brow, so downward bent, Oft his beating fingers went, Hurriedly, as you may see Your own run over the ivory key, Ere the measured tone is taken By the chords you would awaken. There he sat all heavily, As he heard the night-wind sigh. Was it the wind, through some hollow stone, Sent that soft and tender moan? He lifted his head, and he look'd on the sea, But it was unrippled as glass may be ; He look'd on the long grass-it waved not a blade; How was that gentle sound convey'd? He look'd to the banners-each flag lay still, So did the leaves on Cithæron's hill, And he felt not a breath come over his cheek; What did that sudden sound bespeak? He turn'd to the left-is he sure of sight? There sat a lady, youthful and bright!

He started up with more of fear Than if an armed foe were near. "God of my fathers! what is here? Who art thou, and wherefore sent So near a hostile armament?" His trembling hands refused to eign The cross he deem'd no more divine: He had resumed it in that hour, But conscience wrung away the power. He gazed, he saw: he knew the face Of beauty, and the form of grace; It was Francesca by his side, The maid who might have been his bride! The rose was yet upon her cheek, But mellow'd with a tenderer streak: Where was the play of her soft lips fled? Gone was the smile that enliven'd their red. The ocean's calm within their view. Beside her eye had less of blue; But like that cold wave it stood still And its glance, though clear, was chill. Around her form a thin robe twining, Naught conceal'd her bosom shining; Through the parting of her hair, Floating darkly downward there Her rounded arm show'd white and bare: And ere yet she made reply, Once she raised her hand on high; It was so wan, and transparent of hue, You might have seen the moon shine through.

"I come from my rest to him I love best That I may be happy, and he may be bless'd. I have pase'd the guards, the gate, the wall; Sought thes in safety through foes and all. 'Tis said the lion will turn and flee From a maid in the pride of her purity; And the Power on high, that can shield the good Thus from the tyrant of the wood, Hath extended its mercy to guard me as well From the hands of the leaguering infidel. I come-and if I come in vain, Never, oh never, we meet again! Thou hast done a fearful deed In falling away from thy father's creed: But dash that turban to earth, and sign The sign of the cross, and forever be mine; Wring the black drop from thy heart, And to-morrow unites us no more to part."

"And where should our bridal couch be spread? In the midst of the dying and the dead? For to-morrow we give to the slaughter and flame
The sons and the shrines of the Christian name.
None, save thou and thine, I've sworn,
Shall be left upon the morn:
But thee will I hear to a lovely spot,
Where our hands shall be join'd, and our sorrow forgot.
There thou yet shalt be my bride,
When once again I've quall'd the pride
Of Venice; and her hated race
Have felt the arm they would debase
Scourge with a whip of scorpions those Whom vice and envy made my foes."

Upon his hand she laid her own-Light was the touch, but it thrill'd to the bone, And shot a chillness to his heart, Which fix'd him beyond the power to start. Though slight, was that grasp so mortal cold, He could not loose him from its hold; But never did clasp of one se dear Strike on the pulse with such feeling of fear, As those thin fingers, long and white, Froze through his blood by their touch that night. The feverish glow of his brow was gone, And his heart sank so still that it felt like stone, As he look'd on the face, and beheld its huc, So deeply changed from what he knew: Fair but faint-without the ray Of mind, that made each feature play Like sparkling waves on a sunny day; And her motionless lips lay still as death, And her words came forth without her breath, And there rose not a heave o'er her bosom's swell. And there seem'd not a pulse in her veins to dwell. Though her eye shone out, yet the lids were fix'd, And the glance that it gave was wild and unmix'd With aught of change, as the eyes may seem Of the restless who walk in a troubled dream; Like the figures on arras, that gloomily glare, Stirr'd by the breath of the wintry air, So seen by the dying lamp's fitful light, Lifeless, but life-like, and awful to sight; As they seem, through the dimness, about to come down From the shadowy wall where their images frown; Fearfully flitting to and fro,
As the gusts on the tapestry come and go.
"If not for love of me be given Thus much, then, for the love of heaven-Again I say-that turban tear From off thy faithless brow, and swear Thine injured country's sons to spare, Or thou art lost; and never shalt see— Not earth—that's past—but heaven or me. If this thou dost accord, albeit A heavy doom 'tis thine to meet That doom shall half absolve thy sin, And mercy's gate may receive thee within: But pause one moment more, and take The curse of Him thou didst forsake; And look once more to heaven, and see Its love forever shut from thee. There is a light cloud by the moon-'Tis passing, and will pass full soon— If, by the time its vapory sail Hath ceased her shaded orb to veil, Thy heart within thee is not changed, Then God and man are both avenged; Dark will thy doom be, darker still Thine immortality of ill." Alp look'd to heaven, and saw on high The sign she spake of in the sky; But his heart was swollen, and turn'd aside By deep interminable pride. This first false passion of his breast Roll'd like a torrent o'er the rest. He sue for mercy! He dismay'd By wild words of a timid maid! He, wrong'd by Venice, vow to save Her sons, devoted to the grave! No-though that cloud were thunder's worst, And charged to crush him-let it burst!

He look'd upon it earnestly,
Without an accent of reply;
He watch'd it passing; it is flown;
Full on his eye the clear moon shone,
And thus he spake:—"Whate'er my fate,
I am no changeling—'tis too late:
The reed in storms may bow and quiver,
Then rise again; the tree must shiver.

What Venice made me, I must be, Her foe in all, save love to thee: But thou art safe: ob, fly with me!" He turned, but she is gone! Nothing is there but the column stone. Hath she sunk in the earth, or melted in air? He saw not—he knew not—but nothing is there.

THE ASSAULT.

("Siege of Corinth," Stanzas 22-27.)

LIGHTLY and brightly breaks away The Morning from her mantle gray, And the Noon will look on a sultry day. Hark to the trump, and the drum, And the mournful sound of the barbarous born, And the flap of the banners, that flit as they're borne, And the neigh of the steed, and the multitude's hum, And the clash, and the shout, "They come! they come!" The horsetsils are plnck'd from the ground, and the sword From its sheath; and they form, and but wait for the word. Tartar, and Spahi, and Turcoman, Strike your tents, and throng to the van; Mount ye, spnr ye, skirr the plain, That the fugitive may flee in vain, When he breaks from the town; and none escape, Aged or young, in the Christian shape; While your fellows on foot, in a fiery mass, Bloodstain the breach through which they pass. The steeds are all bridled, and snort to the rein; Curved is each neck, and flowing each mane; White is the foam of their champ on the bit: The spears are uplifted; the matches are lit; The cannon are pointed, and ready to roar, And crush the wall they have crumbled before: Forms in his phalanx each Janizar; Alp at their head; his right arm is bare, So is the blade of his scimitar; The khan and the pachas are all at their post; The vizier himself at the head of the host. When the culverin's signal is fired, then on; Leave not in Corinth a living one A priest at her altars, a chief in her halls, A hearth in her mansions, a stone on her walls. God and the prophet—Alla Hu! Up to the skies with that wild halloo!
"There the breach lies for passage, the ladder to scale;
And your hands on your sabres, and how should ye fail?
He who first downs with the red cross may crave His heart's degreet wish; let him ask it, and have!"
Thus utter'd Coumourgi, the dauntless vizier;
The reply was the brandish of sabre and spear, And the short of fierce thousands in joyous ire:-Silence—hark to the signal—fire!

The rampart is won, and the spoil begun, And all but the after carnage done. But here and there, where 'vantage ground Against the foe may still be found, Desperate groups of twelve or ten Make a pause, and turn again—With banded backs against the wall Fiercely stand, or fighting fall.

There stood an old man-his hairs were white, But his veteran arm was full of might: So gallantly hore he the brunt of the fray, The dead before him, on that day, In a semicircle lay; Still be combated unwounded, Though retreating, unsurrounded. Many a scar of former fight Lurk'd beneath his corslet bright; But of every wound his body bore, Each and all had been ta'en before: Though aged, he was so iron of limb, Few of our youth could cope with him. Still the old man stood erect, And Alp's career a moment check'd. "Yield thee, Minotti; quarter take, For thine own, thy daughter's sake." "Never, renegado, never! Though the life of thy gift would last forever."

"Francesca!—Oh, my promised bride!
Must she too perish by thy pride?"
"She is safe."—"Where? where?"—"In heaven;
From whence thy traitor soul is driven—

Far from thee, and undefiled." Grimly then Minotti smiled, As he saw Alp staggering bow Before his words, as with a blow.

"Oh God! when died she?"-"Yesternight-Nor weep I for her spirit's flight: None of my pure race shall he Slaves to Mahomet and thee-Come on!"-that challenge is in vain-Alp's already with the slain!
While Minotti's words were wreaking More revenge in bitter speaking Than his falchion's point had found Had the time allow'd to wound, From within the neighboring porch Of a long defended church, Where the last and desperate few Would the failing fight renew, The sharp shot dash'd Alp to the ground. Ere an eye could view the wound That crash'd through the brain of the infidel, Round he spun, and down he fell.

PARISINA.

("Parisiua," Stanzas 1, 2.)

It is the hour when from the boughs
The nightingale's high note is heard;
It is the hour when lovers' vows
Seem sweet in every whisper'd word;
And gentle winds, and waters near,
Make music to the lonely ear.
Each flower the dews have lightly wet,
And in the sky the stars are met,
And on the wave is deeper blue,
And on the leaf a hrowner hue,
And in the heaven that clear obscure,
So softly dark, and darkly pure,
Which follows the decline of day,
As twilight melts beneath the moon away.

But it is not to list to the water-fall
That Parisina leaves her hall,
And it is not to gaze on the heavenly light
That the lady walks in the shadow of night;
And if she sits in Este's bower,
'Tis not for the sake of its full-blown flower—
She listens—but not for the nightingale—
Though her ear expects as soft a tale.
There glides a step through the foliage thick,
And her cheek grows pale—and her heart beats quick.
There whispers a voice through the rustling leaves,
And her blush returns, and her bosom heaves:
A moment more—and they shall meet—
'Tis past—her lover's at her feet.

THE LAST OF EZZELIN.

(" Lara," Canto ii., Stanza 24.)

Upon that night (a peasant's is the tale) A Serf that cross'd the intervening vale When Cynthia's light almost gave way to morn, And nearly veil'd in mist her waning horn-A Serf, that rose betimes to thread the wood, And hew the bough that hought his children's food, Pass'd by the river that divides the plain Of Otho's lands and Lara's broad domain: He heard a tramp—a horse and horseman broke From out the wood—before him was a cloak Wrapt round some burden at his saddle-bow, Bent was his head, and hidden was his brow. Roused by the sudden sight at such a time. And some fereboding that it might be crime, Himself unheeded watch'd the stranger's course, Who reach'd the river, bounded from his horse, And lifting thence the burden which he bore, Heaved up the bank, and dash'd it from the shore, Then paused, and look'd, and turn'd, and seem'd to watch, And still another hurried glance would snatch And follow with his step the stream that flow'd, As if even yet too much its surface show'd. At once he started—stoop'd; around him strown The winter floods had scatter'd heaps of stone; Of these the heaviest thence he gather'd there, And slung them with a more than common care.

Meantime the Serf had crept to where unseen Himself might safely mark what this might mean; He caught a glimpse, as of a floating breast, And something glitter'd starlike on the vest But ere he well could mark the buoyant trunk, A massy fragment smote it, and it sunk: It rose again, but indistinct to view, And left the waters of a purple hue, Then deeply disappear'd: the horseman gazed Till ebb'd the latest eddy it had raised; Then turning, vaulted on his pawing steed, And instant spurr'd him into panting speed. His face was mask'd-the features of the dead, If dead it were, escaped the observer's dread; But if in sooth a star its bosom bore, Such is the badge that knighthood ever wore, And such 'tis known Sir Ezzelin had worn Upon the night that led to such a morn.

MAZEPPA'S RIDE.

("Mazeppa," Stanzaa 9-17.)

"Bring forth the horse!"-the horse was brought; In truth he was a noble steed A Tartar of the Ukraine breed, Who look'd as though the speed of thought Were in his limbs; but he was wild, Wild as the wild deer, and untanght, With apur and bridle undefiled-'Twas but a day he had been caught; And snorting, with erected mane, And struggling fiercely, but in vain, In the full foam of wrath and dread To me the desert-born was led: They bound me on, that menial throng, Upon his back with many a thong; Then loosed him with a sudden lash-Away! away!—and on we dash!-Torrents less rapid and less rash.

Away! away!—My breath was gone— I saw not where he hurried on: 'Twas acarcely yet the break of day And on he foam'd-away !-away !-The last of human sounds which rose, As I was darted from my foes, Was the wild shout of savage laughter, Which on the wind came roaring after A moment from that rabble rout: With sudden wrath I wrench'd my head, And snapp'd the cord, which to the mane Had bound my neck in lieu of rein, And, writhing half my form about, Howl'd hack my curse; hut 'midst the tread, The thunder of my courser's speed, Perchance they did not hear nor heed: It vexes me-for I would fain Have paid their insult back again. I paid it well in after days: There is not of that castle gate, Its drawbridge and portcullis' weight, Stone, bar, moat, bridge, or barrier left; Nor of its fields a blade of grass, Save what grows on a ridge of wall, Where stood the hearth-stone of the hall; And many a time ye there might pass, Nor dream that e'er that fortress was : I saw its turrets in a blaze, Their crackling battlements all cleft, And the hot lead pour down like rain From off the scorch'd and blackening roof, Whose thickness was not vengeance-proof. They little thought that day of pain, When launch'd as on the lightning's flash, They bade me to destruction dash, That one day I should come again, With twice five thousand horse, to thank The Count for his uncourteous ride. They play'd me then a bitter prank, When, with the wild horse for my guide, They bound me to his foaming flank: At length I play'd them one as frank-For time at last sets all things even-And if we do but watch the hour, There never yet was human power Which could evade, if unforgiven,

The patient search and vigil long

Of him who treasures up a wrong.

Away, away, my steed and I,
Upon the pinions of the wind,
All human dwellings left behind;
We sped like meteers through the sky,
When with its crackling sound the night
Is checker'd with the northern light:
Town—village—none were on our track,

But a wild plain of far extent, And bounded by a forest hlack;

And, save the scarce seen battlement
On distant heights of some stronghold,
Against the Tartars built of old,
No trace of man. The year before
A Turkish army had march'd o'er;
And where the Spahi's hoef hath trod,
The verdure flies the bloody and.
The sky was dull, and dim, and gray,
And a low hreeze crept meaning by—

And a low hreeze crept meaning by—
I could have answer'd with a sigh—
But fast we fied, away, away—
And I could neither sigh nor pray;
And my cold sweat-drops fell like rain
Upon the courser's bristling mane;
But, snorting still with rage and fear,
He flew upon his far career:
At times I almost thought, indeed,
He must have slacken'd in his speed;
But no—my bound and slender frame

Was nothing to his angry might, And merely like a spur became: Each motion which I made to free My sweln limbs from their agony

Increased his fury and affright:
I tried my voice—'twas faint and lew,
But yet he swerved as from a blow;
And, starting to each accent, sprang
As from a sudden trumpet's clang:
Meantime my corda were wet with gore,
Which, oezing through my limbs, ran o'er;
And in my tongue the thirst became
A something fierier far than flame.

We near'd the wild wood-'twas so wide, I saw no bounds on either side. 'Twas studded with old aturdy trees, That bent not to the roughest breeze Which howls down from Siberia's waste, And strips the forest in ita haste-But these were few, and far between Set thick with shrubs more young and green, Luxuriant with their annual leaves, Ere strown by those autumnal eves That nipt the fereat's foliage dead, Discolor'd with a lifeless red, Which atanda thereon like stiffen'd gore Upon the slain when battle's e'er, And some long winter's night hath shed Its froat e'er every tembless head, Se celd and stark the raven's beak May peck unpierced each frozen cheek: 'Twas a wild waste of underwood, And here and there a chestnut stood The strong oak, and the hardy pine;

But far apart—and well it were, Or else a different lot were mine—

The beughs gave way, and did not tear My limbs; and I found strength to bear My wounds, already scarr'd with celd-My bonds ferbade to loose my hold. We rustled through the leaves like wind, Left shrubs, and trees, and welves behind; By night I heard them on the track, Their troop came hard upon our back, With their long gallep, which can tire The hound's deep hate, and hunter's fire: Where'er we flew they follow'd on, Nor left us with the morning sun; Behind I saw them, scarce a rood, At daybreak winding through the woed, And through the night had heard their feet Their stealing, rustling step repeat.
Oh! how I wish'd for spear or sword,
At least to die amidst the horde, And perish—if it must be so At bay, destroying many a foe. When first my courser's race begun, I wish'd the goal already won; But now I doubted strength and speed. Vain doubt! his swift and savage breed Had nerved him like the mountain-roe; Nor faster falls the blinding snow

Which whelms the peasant near the door Whose threshold he shall cross no more, Bewilder'd with the dazzling blast, Than through the forest-paths he past—Untired, untsmed, and worse than wild; All furious as a favor'd child Balk'd of its wish; or fiercer still—A woman piqued—who has her will.

The wood was past; 'twas more than noon, But chill the air, although in June; Or it might he my veins ran cold-Prolong'd endurance tames the bold; And I was then not what I seem, But headlong as a wintry stream, And were my feelings out before I well could count their causes o'er: And what with fury, fear, and wrath, The tertures which beset my path, Cold, hunger, sorrow, shame, distress, Thus bound in nature's nakedness Sprung from a race whose rising blood When stirr'd beyond its calmer mood, And tredden hard upon, is like The rattlesnake's in act to strike, What marvel if this worn-out trunk Beneath its wees a moment aunk? The earth gave way, the skies roll'd round, I seem'd to sink upon the ground; But err'd, for I was fastly bound. My heart turn'd sick, my brain grew sore, And throbb'd awhile, then beat no more; The skies apun like a mighty wheel; I saw the trees like drunkards reel, And a slight flash sprang e'er my eyes, Which saw no farther: he who dies Can die no more than then I died. O'ertertured by that ghastly ride, I felt the blackness come and go, And streve to wake; but could not make My senses climb up from below: I felt as on a plank at sea When all the waves that dash o'er thee, At the same time upheave and whelm, And hurl thee toward a desert realm. My undulating life was as The fancied lights that flitting pass Our shut eyes in deep midnight, when Fever begins upon the brain; But soon it pasa'd, with little pain,

But a confusion worse than such:
I own that I should deem it much,
Dying, to feel the same again;
And yet I do auppose we must.
Feel far more ere we turn to dnst:
No matter; I have bared my brow
Full in Death's face—before—and now.

My blood reflow'd, though thick and chill;
My heart began once more to thrill;
Methought the dash of waves was nigh;
There was a gleam too of the sky,
Studded with stara;—it is ne dream;
The wild horse swims the wilder stream!
The bright broad river's gushing tide
Sweepa, winding onward, far and wide,
And we are half-way, atruggling o'er
To you unknown and silent shore.
The waters broke my hollow trance,
And with a temporary strength

My stiffen'd limbs were rehaptized.
My courser's broad breast proudly braves
And dashes off the ascending waves,
And onward we advance!
We reach the slippery shore at length,

A haven I but little prized,
For all behind was dark and drear,
And all before was night and fear.
How many hours of night or day
In those auspended pangs I lay,
I could not tell; I scarcely knew
If this were human breath I drew.

With glossy skin, and dripping mane,
And reeling limbs, and reeking flank,
The wild steed's sinewy nerves still strain
Up the repelling bank.
We gain the top: a boundless plain
Spreads through the shadow of the night,
And onward, onward, onward seems,
Like precipices in our dreams,
To stretch beyond the sight;

And here and there a speck of white,
Or scatter'd spot of dusky green,
In masses broke into the light,
As rose the moon upon my right.
But naught distinctly seen
In the dim waste would indicate
The omen of a cottage gate;
No twinkling taper from afar
Stood like a hoapitable star;
Nor even an ignis-fatuus rose
To make him merry with my woes:
That very cheat had cheer'd me then!
Although detected, welcome still,
Reminding me, through every ill,
Of the abodes of men.

Onward we went-but slack and slow; His savage force at length o'erspent, The drooping courser, faint and low, All feebly foaming went. A sickly infant had had power To guide him forward in that hour; But useless all to me. His new-born tameness naught avail'd, My limbs were bound; my force had fail'd, Perchance, had they been free. With feeble effort still I tried To rend the bonds so starkly tied-But still it was in vain ; My limbs were only wrung the more, And soon the idle strife gave o'er, Which but prolonged their pain. The dizzy race seem'd almost run; Some streaks announced the coming sun-How slow, alas! he came! Methought that mist of dawning gray Would never dapple into day; How heavily it roll'd away Before the eastern flame Rose crimson, and deposed the stars, And call'd the radiance from their cara, And fill'd the earth, from his deep throne, With lonely lustre, all his own.

Up rose the sun; the mists were curl'd Back from the solitary world Which lay around—behind—before; What booted it to traverse o'er Plain, forest, river? Man nor brute, Nor dint of boof, nor print of foot, Lay in the wild luxuriant soil; No sign of travel-none of toil; The very air was mute : And not an insect's shrill small horn, Nor matin bird's new voice was borne From herb nor thicket. Many a werst, Panting as if his heart would burst, The weary brute still stagger'd on; And still we were—or seem'd—alone: At length, while reeling on our way, Methought I heard a courser neigh, From out you tuft of blackening firs. Is it the wind those branches stirs? No, no! from out the forest prance

A trampling troop; I see them come! In one vast squadron they advance!
I strove to cry—my lipa were dumb.
The steeds rush on in plunging pride;
But where are they the reins to guide?
A thousand horse—and none to ride!
With flowing tail, and flying mane,
Wide nostrils—never atretch'd by pain,
Months bloodleas to the bit or rein,
And feet that iron never shod,
And flanks unscarr'd by spur or rod,
A thousand horse, the wild, the free,
Like waves that follow o'er the sea,

Came thickly thundering on,
As if our faint approach to meet;
The sight re-nerved my courser's feet,
A moment staggering, feebly fleet,
A moment, with a faint low neigh,
He answer'd, and then fell;
With gasps and glazing eyes he lay,
And recking limbs immovable,

His first and last career is done. On came the troop—they aaw him stoop, They aaw me strangely bound along His back with many a bloody thong: Headed by one black mighty steed,
Who seem'd the patriarch of his hreed,
Without a single speck or hair
Of white upon his shaggy hide;
They snort—they foam—neigh—swerve aside,
And backward to the forest fly,
By instinct, from a human eye.—
They left me there to my despair,
Link'd to the dead and stiffening wretch,
Whose lifeless limbs beneath me stretch,
Relieved from that unwonted weight,
From whence I could not extricate
Nor him nor me—and there we lay
The dying on the dead!
And there from morn till twilight bound,
I felt the heavy hours toil round,

They stop-they start-they snuff the air,

Approach, retire, wheel round and round,

Then plunging back with sudden bound,

Gallop a moment here and there

With just enough of life to see My last of suns go down on me.

I know no more—my latest dream
Is something of a lovely star
Which fix'd my dull eyes from afar,
And went and came with wandering beam,
And of the cold, dull, swimming, dense
Sensation of recurring sense,
And then subsiding back to death,
And then again a little breath,
A little thrill, a short suapense,
An icy sickness curdling o'er
My heart, and sparks that cross'd my brain—
A gasp, a throb, a start of pain,
A sigh, and nothing more.

I woke—Where was I?—Do I see A human face look down on me? And doth a roof above me close? Do these limbs on a couch repoae? Is this a chamber where I lie? And is it mortal yon bright eye, That watches me with gentle glance?

I closed my own again once more, As doubtful that the former trance Could not as yet be o'er. A slender girl, long-hair'd, and tall, Sat watching by the cottage wall; The aparkle of her eye I caught, Even with my first return of thought; For ever and anon she threw

A prying, pitying glance on me
With her black eyes ao wild and free:
I gazed, and gazed, until I knew
No vision it could be—
But that I lived, and was released
From adding to the yulture's feast.

But that I lived, and was released From adding to the vulture's feast: And when the Cossack maid beheld My heavy eyes at length unseal'd, She amiled—and I essay'd to speak, But failed—and she approach'd a

But failed—and she approach'd, and made With lip and finger signs that said, I must not strive as yet to break The silence, till my strength should be Enough to leave my accents free; And then her hand on mine she laid, And smooth'd the pillow for my head, And stole along on tiptoe tread,

And gently oped the door, and spake In whispera—ne'er was voice so sweet! Even music follow'd her light feet;

But those she call'd were not awake, And she went forth; but, ere she pass'd, Another look on me she cast,

Another sign she made, to say,
That I had naught to fear, that all
Were near, at my command or call,
And she would not delay

Her due return:—while she was gone, Methought I felt too much alone.

She came with mother and with sire—What need of more?—I will not tire With long recital of the reat,
Since I became the Cossack's guest.
They found me senseless on the plain—They bore me to the nearest hut—They brought me into life again.

They brought me into life again—
Me—one day o'er their realm to reign!

THE STREAMLET FROM THE CLIFF.

("The Island," Canto ill., Stanza 3.)

A LITTLE stream came tumbling from the height, And straggling into ocean as it might, Ite bounding crystal frelick'd in the ray, And gush'd from cliff to crag with saltless spray; Close on the wild, wide ocean, yet as pure And fresh as innocence, and more secure, Its silver torrent glitter'd o'er the deep, As the shy chamois' eye o'erlocks the steep, While far below the vast and sullen swell Of ocean's alpine azure rose and fell.

THE SHIPWRECK.

("Don Juan," Canto ii., Stanzas 49-53.)

'Twas twilight, and the sunless day went down
Over the waste of waters; like a veil,
Which, if withdrawn, would but disclose the frown
Of one whose hate is mask'd but to assail.
Thus te their hopeless eyes the night was shown,
And grimly darkled o'er the faces pale,
And the dim desolate deep: twelve days had Fear
Been their familiar, and now Death was here.

Some trial had been making at a raft,
With little hope in such a rolling sea,
A sort of thing at which one would have laugh'd
If any laughter at such times could be,
Unless with people who tee much have quaff'd,
And have a kind of wild and horrid glee,
Half epileptical, and half hysterical—
Their preservation would have been a miracle.

At half-past eight c'clock, beoms, hen-coops, spars, And all things, for a chance, had been cast loose, That still could keep afloat the struggling tars, For yet they strove, although of no great use: There was no light in heaven but a few stars, The boats put off o'ercrowded with their crews; She gave a heel, and then a lurch to port, And, going down head-foremost—sunk, in short.

Then rose from sea to sky the wild farewell—
Then shriek'd the timid, and stood still the brave—
Then some leap'd overboard with dreadful yell,
As eager to anticipate their grave;
And the sea yawn'd around her like a hell,
And down she suck'd with her the whirling wave,
Like one who grapples with his enemy,
And strives to strangle him before he die.

And first one universal shriek there rush'd,
Louder than the lond ocean, like a crash
Of echoing thunder; and then all was hush'd,
Save the wild wind and the remorseless dash
Of billows; but at intervals there gush'd,
Accompanied with a convulsive splash,
A solitary shriek, the hubbling cry
Of some strong swimmer in his agony.

HAIDÉE.

("Don Juau," Canto ii., Stanzas 111-118.)

How long in his damp trance young Juan lay
He knew not, for the earth was gone for him,
And Time had nothing more of night nor day
For his congealing blood, and senses dim;
And how this heavy faintness pase'd away
He knew not, till each painful pulse and limb,
And tingling vein seem'd throbbing back to life,
For Death, though vanquish'd, still retired with strife.

His eyes he open'd, shut, again unclosed,
For all was doubt and dizziness; he thought
He still was in the boat, and had but dozed,
And felt again with his despair o'erwrought,
And wish'd it death in which he had reposed,
And then once more his feelings back were brought,
And slowly hy his awimming eyes was seen
A lovely female face of seventeen.

'Twas bending close o'er his, and the small mouth Seem'd almost prying into his for breath; And, chafing him, the seft warm hand of youth Recall'd his answering spirits back from death; And bathing his chill temples, tried to soothe Each pulse to animation, till beneath Its gentle touch and trembling care, a sigh To these kind efforts made a low reply.

Then was the cordial pour'd, and mantle flung
Around his scarce-clad limbs; and the fair arm
Raised higher the faint head which o'er it hung;
And her transparent cheek, all pure and warm,
Pillow'd his death-like forehead; then she wrung
His dewy curls, long drench'd by every storm;
And watch'd with eagerness each throb that drew
A sigh from his heaved bosom—and hers, too.

And lifting him with care into the cave,

The gentle girl, and her attendant—one
Young, yet her elder, and of brow less grave,
And more robust of figure—then begun
To kindle fire, and as the new flames gave
Light to the rocks that roof'd them, which the sun
Had never seen, the maid, or whatsee'er
She was, appear'd distinct, and tall, and fair.

Her brow was overhung with coins of gold,
That sparkled o'er the auburn of her hair,
Her clustering hair, whose lenger lecks were roll'd
In braids behind; and though her stature were
Even of the highest for a female mould,
They nearly reach'd her heel; and in her air
There was a something which bespoke command,
As one who was a lady in the land.

Her hair, I said, was aubnrn; but her eyes
Were hlack as death, their lashes the same hue,
Of downcast length, in whose silk shadows lies
Deepest attraction; for when to the view
Forth from its raven fringe the full glance flies,
Ne'er with such force the swiftest arrow flew;
'Tis as the anake late coil'd, who pours his length,
And hurls at once his venom and his strength.

Her brow was white and low, her cheek's pure dye Like twilight rosy still with the set sun; Short upper lip—sweet lips! that make us sigh Ever to have seen such; for she was one Fit for the model of a statuary (A race of mere impostors, when all's done—I've seea much finer women, ripe and real, Than all the nonsense of their stone ideal).

HAIDÉE AGAIN.

("Den Juan," Cante iii., Stanzas 70-75.)

Or all the dresses I select Haidée's:

She were two jelicks—one was of pale yellow;
Of azure, pink, and white was her chemise—
'Neath which her breast heaved like a little billow;
With buttons form'd of pearls as large as peas,
All gold and crimson shone her jelick's fellow,
And the striped white gauze baracan that bennd her,
Like fleecy clouds abent the moon flow'd round her.

One large gold bracelet clasp'd each lovely arm,
Lockless—so pliable from the pure gold
That the hand stretch'd and shut it without harm,
The limb which it adorn'd its only mould;
So beantiful—its very shape would charm,
And clioging as if loath to lose its held,
The purest one enclosed the whitest skin
That e'er by precious metal was held in.

Around, as princess of her father's land,
A like geld bar above her instep roll'd
Announced her rank; twelve rings were on her hand;
Her hair was starr'd with gems; her veil's fine fold
Below her breast was fasten'd with a band
Of lavish pearls, whose worth could scarce be told;
Her orange silk full Turkish trousers furl'd
About the prettiest ankle in the world.

Her hair's long anhurn waves down to her heel Flow'd like an Alpine torrent which the sun Dyes with his morning light—and would conceal Her persen if allow'd at large to run, And still they seem resentfully to feel The silken fillet's curb, and songht to shun Their bonds whene'er some Zephyr caught began To offer his young pinien as her fan.

Round her she made an atmosphere of life,
The very air seem'd lighter from her eyes,
They were so soft and beautiful, and rife
With all we can imagine of the skies,
And pure as Psyche ere she grew a wife—
Too pure even for the purest human ties;
Her overpowering presence made you feel
It would not be idolatry to kneel.

Her eyelashea, though dark as night, were tinged (It is the country's custom), but in vain;
For those large black eyes were so blackly fringed,
The glossy rebels mock'd the jetty stain,
And in their native beauty stood avenged;
Her nails were touch'd with henna: but again
The power of art was turned to nothing, for
They could not look more rosy than before.

AURORA RABY.

("Don Juan," Canto xv., Stauzas 43-47.)

And then there was—but why should I go on,
Unless the ladies should go eff?—there was Indeed a certain fair and fairy one,
Of the best class, and better than her class—
Aurora Raby, a young star who shone
O'er life, too aweet an image for such glass,
A lovely being, scarcely form'd er moulded,
A rose with all its sweetest leaves yet folded;

Rich, noble, but an orphan: left an only Child to the care of guardians good and kind; But still her aspect had an air so lonely!

Blood is not water; and where shall we find
Feelings of youth like those which everthrown lie
By death, when we are left, alas! hehind,
To feel, in friendless palaces, a home
Is wanting, and our hest ties in the tomb?

Early in years, and yet more infantice
In figure, she had something of sublime
In eyes which sadly shone, as seraphs' shine.
All youth—but with an aspect beyond time;
Radiant and grave—as pitying man's decline;
Mournful—but mournful of another's crime,
She look'd as if she sat by Eden's door,
And grieved for those who could return no more.

She was a Catholic, too, sincere, austere,
As far as her own gentle heart allow'd,
And deem'd that fallen wership far more dear
Perhaps hecause 'twas fall'n: her sires were proud
Of deeds and days when they had fill'd the ear
Of nations, and had never hent or how'd
To novel power; and as she was the last,
She held their old faith and old feelings fast.

She gazed upon a world she scarcely knew,
As seeking not to know it; silent, lene,
As grows a flower, thus quietly she grew,
And kept her heart serene within its zone.
There was awe in the homage which she drew;
Her spirit seem'd as seated on a throne
Apart from the surrounding world, and strong
In its own strength—most strange in one so young?

III.—DRAMATIC.

MANFRED AND THE SEVEN SPIRITS.

("Manfred," Act i., Scene 1.)

Manfred alone.—Scene, a Gothic Gallery.—Time, Midnight.

Man. The lamp must be replenish'd, but even then It will not hurn so long as I must watch: My slumbers—if I slumber—are not sleep, But a continuance of enduring thought, Which then I can resist not: in my heart There is a vigil, and these eyes but close To look within; and yet I live, and bear The aspect and the form of breathing men. But grief should be the instructor of the wise; Sorrow is knowledge: they who know the most Must mourn the deepest o'er the fatal truth, The Tree of Knowledge is not that of Life. Philosophy and science, and the springs Of wonder, and the wisdom of the world, I have easay'd, and in my mind there is A power to make these subject to itself-But they avail not: I have done men good, And I have met with good even among men. But this avail'd not: I have had my foes, And none have baffled, many fallen before me-But this avail'd not: Good, or evil, life, Powers, passions, all I see in ether beings, Have been to me as rain unto the sands, Since that all-nameless hour. I have no dread, And feel the curse to have no natural fear, Nor fluttering throb, that beats with hopes or wishes, Or lurking love of something on the earth. Now to my task .-

Mysterious Agency!
Ye spirits of the unbounded Universe!
Whom I have sought in darkness and in light—
Ye, who do compass earth ahout, and dwell
In subtler essence—ye, to whem the tops
Of meuntains inaccessible are haunts,
And earth's and ocean's caves familiar things—
I call upon ye by the written charm
Which gives me power upon you—Rise! appear!

They come not yet.—Now by the voice of him Who is the first among you—by this sign, Which makes you tremble—by the claims of him Who is undying,—Rise! appear!—Appear!

[A pause.

If it he so.—Spirits of earth and air, Ye shall not thus elude me: by a power, Deeper than all yet urged, a tyrant-spell, Which had its birthplace in a star condemn'd, The burning wreck of a demelish'd world, A wanderiog hell in the eternal space; By the strong curse which is upon my soul, The thought which is within me and around me, I do compel ye to my will.—Appear!

[A star is seen at the darker end of the gallery: ii is stationary; and a voice is heard singing.

FIRST SPIRIT.

Mortal! to thy bidding bow'd,
From my mansion in the cloud,
Which the breath of twilight huilds,
And the summer sunset gilds
With the azure and vermilien,
Which is mix'd for my pavilien;
Though thy quest may be forbidden,
On a atar-beam I have ridden;
Te thine adjuration bow'd,
Mortal—be thy wish avow'd!

Voice of the SECOND SPIRIT.

Mont Blanc is the Monarch of mountains;
They crown'd him long age
On a throne of rocks, in a robe of clouds,
With a diadem of snew.
Around his waist are forests braced,
The Avalanche in his hand;
But ere it fall, that thundering hall
Must pause for my command.
The Glacier's cold and restless mass
Moves enward day by day;
But I am he whe bids it pass,
Or with its ice delay.
I am the spirit of the place,
Could make the mountain bow
And quiver to his cavern'd base—
And what with me wouldst Thou?

Voice of the THIRD SPIRIT.

In the blue depth of the waters,
Where the wave hath no strife,
Where the wind is a stranger,
And the sea-snake hath life,
Where the Mermaid is decking
Her green hair with shells;
Like the storm on the surface
Came the sound of thy spells;

O'er my calm Hall of Coral The deep echo roll'd-To the Spirit of Ocean Thy wishes unfold!

FOURTH SPIRIT.

Where the alumbering earthquake Lies pillow'd on fire, And the lakes of bitumen Rise boilingly higher; Where the roots of the Andes Strike deep in the earth, As their summits to heaven Shoot soaringly forth; I have quitted my hirthplace, Thy bidding to bide-Thy spell hath aubdued me, Thy will be my guide!

FIFTH SPIRIT.

I am the Rider of the wind, The Stirrer of the storm ; The hurricane I left behind Is yet with lightning warm; To speed to thee, o'er shore and sea I swept upon the blast: The fleet I met sail'd well, and yet 'Twill sink ere night be past.

SIXTH SPIRIT

My dwelling is the ahadow of the night, Why doth thy magic torture me with light?

SEVENTH SPIRIT.

The star which rules thy destiny Was ruled, ere earth began, by me: It was a world as fresh and fair As e'er revolved round sin in air: Ita course was free and regular, Space bosom'd not a lovelier star. The hour arrived—and it became A wandering mass of shapeless flame, A pathless comet, and a curse, The menace of the universe; Still rolling on with innate force, Without a aphere, without a course, A bright deformity on high, The monster of the upper aky! And thou! beneath its influence born-Thou worm! whom I obey and scorn-Forced by a power (which is not thine, And lent thee but to make thee mine) For this brief moment to descend. Where these weak spirits round thee bend And parley with a thing like thee—
What wouldst thou, Child of Clay! with me?

The SEVEN SPIRITS.

Earth, ocean, air, night, mountains, winds, thy star, Are at thy beck and bidding, Child of Clay! Before thee at thy quest their spirits are-What wouldst thou with us, son of mortals-say?

Man. Forgetfulness-

First Spirit. Of what-of whom-and why? Man. Of that which is within me; read it there-Ye know it, and I cannot utter it. Spirit. We can but give thee that which we possess:

Ask of us subjects, sovereignty, the power O'er earth, the whole, or portion, or a sign Which shall control the elements, whereof We are the dominators, each and all,

These shall be thine.

Oblivion, self-oblivion-Man.Can ye not wring from out the hidden realms Ye offer so profusely what I ask? Spirit. It is not in our essence, in our skill;

But-thou mayest die.

Will death bestow it on me? Spirit. We are immortal, and do not forget; We are sternal; and to us the past

Ia, as the future, present. Art thou answer'd?

Man. Ye mock me—but the power which brought ye here Hath made you mine. Slaves, scoff not at my will!
The mind, the spirit, the Promethean spark, The lightning of my being, is as bright, Pervading, and far darting as your own, And shall not yield to yours, though coop'd in clay! Answer, or I will teach you what I am.

Spirit. We answer as we answer'd; our raply Is even in thine own words.

Man.

Why say ya so?

Spirit. If, as thou say'st, thine essence he as ours, We have replied in telling thee, the thing Mortals call death hath naught to do with us. Man. I then have call'd ye from your realms in vsin; Ye cannot, or ye will not, aid me. Spirit. Say; What we possess we offer; it is thine: Bethink ere thou dismiss us, ask again-Kingdom, and away, and strength, and length of days — Man. Accursed! what have I to do with days? They are too long slready.—Hence—begone! Spirit. Yet pause: being here, our will would do thee service; Bethink thee, is there then no other gift Which we can make not worthless in thine eyes? Man. No, none; yet stay-one moment, ere we part-I would behold ye face to face. I hear Your voices, awest and melancholy sounds, As music on the waters; and I see The steady aspect of a clear large star; But nothing more. Approach me as ye are, Or one, or all, in your accustom'd forms. Spirit. We have no forms, beyond the elements Of which we are the mind and principle: But choose a form—in that we will appear. Man. I have no choice; there is no form on earth Hideous or beautiful to me. Let him, Who is most powerful of ye, take such aspect

As unto him may seem most fitting-Come! Seventh Spirit. (Appearing in the shape of a beautiful female figure.)

Behold!

Man. Oh God! if it be thus, and thou Art not a madness and a mockery, I yet might be most happy. I clasp thee, The figure vanishes. And we again will be-My heart is crnsh'd! [MANFRED falls senseless.

(A Voice is heard in the Incantation which follows.)

When the moon is on the wave, And the glowworm in the grass, And the meteor on the grave, And the wisp on the morass; When the falling stars are shooting, And the answer'd owls are hooting, And the silent leaves are still In the shadow of the hill, Shall my soul be upon thice, With a power and with a sign.

Though thy slumber may be deep, Yet thy spirit shall not sleep: There are shades which will not vanish, There are thoughts thou canat not banish; By a power to thee unknown, Thon canst never be alone; Thon art wrapt as with a shroud, Thou art gather'd in a cloud; And forever shalt thou dwell In the spirit of this spell.

Though thou seest me not pass by. Thou shalt feel me with thine eye As a thing that, though noseen, Must be near thee, and hath been; And when in that accret dread Thou hast turn'd around thy head, Thou shalt marvel I am not As thy shadow on the spot, And the power which thou dost feel Shall be what thou must conceal.

And a magic voice and verse Hath baptized thee with a curse; And a spirit of the air Hath begirt thee with a snare; In the wind there is a voice Shall forbid thee to rejoice; And to thee shall Night deny All the quiet of her aky; And the Day shall have a ann, Which shall make thee wish it done.

MANFRED ON THE CLIFFS.

("Maofred," Act i., Scene 2.)

The Mountain of the Jungfrau. Time, Morning. MANFRED alone upon the Cliffs.

Man. The spirits I have raised abandon me-The spells which I have studied baffle me-The remedy I reck'd of tortured me,

I lean no more on superhuman aid : It hath no power upon the past, and for The future, till the past be gulf'd in darkness, It is not of my search.—My mother Earth! And thou fresh breaking Day, and you, ye Mountains, Why are ye beautiful? I cannot love ye. And thou, the bright eye of the universe, That openest over all, and unto all
Art a delight—thou shin'st not on my heart. And you, ye crags, upon whose extreme edge I stand, and on the torrent's brink beneath Behold the tall pines dwindled as to shrubs In dizziness of distance; when a leap A stir, a motion, even a breath, would bring My breast upon its rocky bosom's bed To rest forever-wherefore do I pause? I feel the impulse -- yet I do not plunge; I see the peril-yet do not recede; And my brain reels—and yet my foot is firm: There is a power upon me which withholda, And makes it my fatality to live: If it be life to wear within myself This barrenness of spirit, and to be My own soul's sepulchre, for I have ceased To justify my deeds unto myself— The last infirmity of evil. Ay, Thou winged and cloud-cleaving minister, [An eagle passes. Whose happy flight is highest into heaven Well may'at thou swoop so near me-I should be Thy prey, and gorge thine eaglets; thou art gone Where the eye cannot follow thee; but thine Yet piercea downward, onward, or above, With a pervading vision.—Beautiful!

How beautiful is all this visible world! How glorious in its action and itself! But we, who name ourselves its sovereigns, we, Half dust, half deity, alike unfit To sink or soar, with our mix'd essence make A conflict of its clements, and breathe The breath of degradation and of pride Contending with low wants and lofty will, Till our mortality predominatea,
And men are—what they name not to themselvea, And trust not to each other. Hark! the note,

[The Shepherd's pipe in the distance is heard.

The natural music of the mountain reed—
For here the patriarchal days are not
A pastoral fable—pipes in the lilueral air,
Mix'd with the aweet bells of the sauntering herd;
My soul would drink those echoes.—Oh, that I were
The viewless spirit of a lovely sound.
A living voice, a breathing harmony,
A bodiless enjoyment—born and dying
With the bleat tone which made me!

Enter from below a CHAMOIS HUNTER.

Chamois Hunter. Even so This way the chamois leap'd: her nimble feet Have baffled me; my gains to-day will scarce Repay my breakneck travail.—What is here? Who seems not of my trade, and yet hath reach'd A height which none even of our mountaineers, Save our best hunters, may attain: his garb Is goodly, his mien manly, and his air Proud as a free-born peasant's, at this distance—I will approach him nearer.

Man. (not perceiving the other). To be thus—Gray-hair'd with anguish, like theae blaated pines, Wrecks of a single winter, barklesa, branchleaa, A blighted trunk upon a cursed root, Which but supplies a feeling to decay—And to be thus, eternally but thua, Having been otherwise! Now furrow'd o'er With wrinklea, plough'd by moments, not by years And hours—all tortured into ages—houra Which I outlive!—Ye toppling crags of ice! Ye avalanchea, whom a breath draws down In mountainous o'erwhelming, come and crush me! I hear ye momently above, beneath, Crash with a frequent conflict; but ye pass, And only fall on things that atill would live; On the young flourishing forest, or the hut And hamlet of the harmless villager.

C. Hun. The mists begin to rise from up the valley;
I'll warn him to descend, or he may chance
To lose at once his way and life together.

Man. The mists boil up around the glaciers; clouds Rise curling fast beneath me, white and sulphury, Like foam from the roused ocean of deep Hell, Whose every wave breaks on a living shore, Heap'd with the damn'd like pebbles.—I am giddy.

C. Hun. I must approach him cantioualy; if near, A sudden step will startle him, and he Seems tottering already. Mountains have fallen, Leaving a gap in the clouds, and with the shock Rocking their Alpine brethren; filling up The ripe green valleys with destruction's splinters; Damming the rivers with a sudden dash, Which crush'd the waters into mist, and made Their fountains find another channel—thus, Thus, in its old age, did Mount Rosenberg-Why stood I not beneath it? Friend! have a care, Your next step may be fatal!—for the love Of Him who made you, stand not on that brink!

Man. (not hearing him). Such would have been for me a fitting tom! My bones had then been quiet in their depth; They had not then been strewn upon the rocks For the wind's pastime—as thua—thus they shall be— In this one plunge.—Farewell, ye opening heavens! Look not upon me thus repreachfully Ye were not meant for me—Earth! take these atoms!

[As MANFRED is in act to spring from the cliff the CHAMO!

HUNTER seizes and retains him with a sudden grasp.

C. Hun. Hold, madman!—though aweary of thy life, Stain not our pure vales with thy guilty blood. Away with me——I will not quit my hold. Man. I am most sick at heart—nay, grasp me not— I am all feebleness—the mountains whirl Spinning around me __ I grow blind __ What art thou? C. Hun. I'll answer that anon.—Away with me—
The clouds grow thicker—there—now lean on me— Place your foot here-here, take this staff, and cling A moment to that shrub—now give me your hand, And hold fast by my girdle—aoftly—well-The Chalet will be gain'd within an hour— Come on, we'll quickly find a surer footing, And something like a pathway, which the torrent Hath wash'd since winter.—Come, 'tis bravely done

THE WITCH OF THE ALPS.

You should have been a hunter.—Follow me.

("Manfred," Act ii., Scene 2.)

A lower Valley in the Alps .- A Cataract.

Enter MANFRED.

It is not noon—the sunbow's raya still arch The torrent with the many hues of heaven, And roll the aheeted allver'a waving column O'er the crag's headlong perpendicular, And filing its lines of foaming light along, And to and fro, like the pale courser's tail, The Giant steed, to be heatrode by Death, As told in our Apocalypse. No eyes But mine now drink this sight of loveliness; I should be sole in this sweet solitude, And with the Spirit of the place divide The homage of these waters.—I will call her.

[MANFIED takes some of the water into the palm of hi hand, and flings it into the air, muttering the adjurtion. After a pause, the WITCH OF THE ALPS rise beneath the arch of the sunbow of the torrent.

They descend the rock

Beautiful Spirit! with thy hair of light, And dazzling eyes of glory, in whose form The charms of earth's least mortal daughters grow To an unearthly atature, in an essence Of purer elements; while the hnea of youth-Carnation'd like a sleeping infant's cheek, Rock'd by the beating of her mother's heart Or the rose tints, which summer's twilight leaves Upon the lefty glacier's virgin enew The blush of earth embracing with her heaven-Tinge thy celestial aspect, and make tame The beauties of the sunbow which bends o'er thee. Beautiful Spirit! in thy calm clear brow, Wherein is glass'd screnity of soul, Which of itself shows immortality, I read that thou wilt pardon to a Son Of Earth, whom the abstruaer powers permit At times to commune with them-if that he Avail him of his spells—to call thee thus, And gaze on thee a moment. Son of Earth!

Witch. Son of Earth!

I know thee, and the powers which give thee power;

I know thee for a man of many thoughta,

And deeda of good and ill, extreme in both,

Fatal and fated in thy sufferings.

I have expected this—what would'st thon with me?

Man. To look upon thy beauty—nothing further. The face of the earth hath madden'd me, and I Take refuge in her mysteries, and pierce To the abodes of those who govern her-But they can nothing aid me. I have sought From them what they could not bestow, and now I search no further.

Witch. What could be the quest Which is not in the power of the most powerful, The rulers of the invisible? Man. A boon; But why should I repeat it? 'twere in vain. Witch. I know not that; let thy lips atter it. Man. Well, though it torture me, 'tis but the same; My pang shall find a voice. From my youth upward My spirit walk'd not with the souls of men, Nor look'd upon the earth with human eyes; The thirst of their ambition was not mine. The aim of their existence was not mine; My joys, my griefs, my passions, and my powers, Made me a stranger; though I wore the form, I had no sympathy with bresthing flesh, Nor midst the creatures of clay that girded me Was there but one who—but of her anon. I said with men, and with the thoughts of men, I held but slight communion; but instead, My joy was in the Wilderness, to breathe The difficult air of the iced mountain's top,
Where the birds dare not huild, nor insect's wing Flit o'er the herbless granite; or to plunge Into the torrent, and to roll along On the swift whirl of the new breaking wave Of river-stream, or ocean, in their flow. In these my early strength exulted; or To follow through the night the moving moon, The stars and their development; or catch The dazzling lightnings till my eyes grew dim; Or to look, list'ning, on the scatter'd leaves, While Autumn winds were at their evening song. These were my pastimes, and to be alone; For if the beings, of whom I was one— Hating to be so—cross'd me in my path, I felt myself degraded back to them, And was all clay again. And then I dived. In my lone wanderiogs, to the caves of death, Searching its cause in its effect; and drew From wither'd bones, and skolls, and heap'd up dust, Conclusions most forbidden. Then I pass'd The nights of years in sciences untaught, Save in the old time; and with time and toil. And terrible ordeal, and such penance As in itself hath power upon the air, And spirits that do compass air and earth, Space, and the peopled infinite, I made Mine eyes familiar with Eternity, Such as, before me, did the Magi, and He who from out their fountain-dwellings raised Eros and Anteros, at Gadara, As I do thee ;—and with my knowledge grew The thirst of knowledge, and the power and joy Of this most bright intelligence, until—

Ob! I but thus prolong'd my words, Man. Boasting these idle attributes, because As I approach the core of my heart's grief-But to my task. I have not named to thee Father or mother, mistress, friend, or being, With whom I wore the chain of human ties; If I had such, they seem'd not such to me-Yet there was one-

Witch. Proceed.

Witch. Spare not thyself—proceed.

Man. She was like me in lineaments—her eyes, Her hair, her features, all, to the very tone Even of her voice, they said were like to mine; But soften'd all, and temper'd into beauty; She had the same lone thoughts and wanderings, The quest of hidden knowledge, and a mind To comprehend the universe: nor these Alone, but with them gentler powers than mine, Pity, and smiles, and tears - which I had not; And tenderness-but that I had for her; Homility—and that I never had.
Her faults were mine—her virtues were her own— I loved her, and destroy'd her! Witch. With thy hand?

Man. Not with my hand, but heart-which broke her heart-It gazed on mine, and wither'd. I have shed Blood, but not hers-and yet her blood was shed-I saw-and could not stanch it.

Witch. And for this-

A being of the race thou doet despise, The order which thine own would rise shove, Mingling with us and ours, thou dost forego The gifts of our great knowledge, and shrink'st back To recreant mortality --- Away!

Man. Daughter of Air! I tell thee, since that hour-Bnt words are breath-look on me in my sleep, Or watch my watchings-Come and sit by me! My solitude no more, But peopled with the Furies;—I have gnash'd My teeth in darkness till returning morn, Then cursed myself till sunset ;—I have pray'd. For madness as a blessing—'tis denied me. I have affronted death—but in the war Of elements the waters shrunk from me, And fatal things pass'd harmless-the cold hand Of an all-pitiless demon held me back, Back by a single hair, which would not break. In fantasy, imagination, all
The affluence of my soul—which one day was A Crœsus in creation-I plunged deep, But, like an abbing wave, it dashed me back Into the gulf of my unfathom'd thought. I plunged amidst mankind-Forgetfulness I sought in all, save where 'tis to be found, And that I have to learn; -my sciences, My long-pursued and superhuman art, Is mortal here-I dwell in my despair-And live-and live forever.

It may be Witch.

That I can aid thee. Man. To do this, thy power Must wake the dead, or lay me low with them. Do so-in any shape-in any hour-With any torture-so it be the last.

Witch. That is not in my province; hut if thou Wilt swear obedience to my will, and do My bidding, it may help thee to thy wishes.

Man. 1 will not swear-Obey! and whom? the spirits Whose presence I command, and be the slave Of those who served me-Never! Witch.

Hast thou no gentler answer ?-Yet betbink thee, And pause ere thou rejectest.

Man. I have said it. Witch. Enough !- I may retire then-say! Man.

Retire! [The Witch disappears.

Man. (alone). We are the fools of time and terror: Days Steal on us and steal from us; yet we live, Loathing our life, and dreading still to die. In all the days of this detested yoke-This vital weight upon the struggling heart, Which sinks with sorrow, or beats quick with pain, Or joy that ends in agony or faintness In all the days of past and future, for In life there is no present, we can number How few-how less than few-wherein the soul Forbears to pant for death, and yet draws back As from a stream in winter, though the chill Be but a moment's. I have one resource Still in my science—I can call the dead, And ask them what it is we dread to be: The sternest answer can but he the Grave, And that is nothing ;-if they answer not-The baried Prophet answered to the Hsg Of Endor; and the Spartan Monarch drew From the Byzantine maid's unsleeping spirit An answer and his destiny - he slew That which he loved, unknowing what he slew, And died anpardon'd—though he call'd in aid The Phyxian Jove, and in Phigalia roused The Arcadian Evocators to compel The indignant shadow to depose her wrath, Or fix her term of vengeance-she replied In words of dubious import, but fulfill'd. If I had never lived, that which I love Had still been living; had I never loved, That which I love would still be beautiful-Happy and giving happiness. What is she? What is she now ?-a sufferer for my sins-A thing I dare not think upon—or nothing. Within few hours I shall not call in vain— Yet in this hour I dread the thing I dare: Until this hour I never shrunk to gaze On spirit, good or evil-new I tremble, And feel a strange cold thaw upon my heart. But I can act even what I most abhor, And champion human fears .- The night approaches.

ASTARTE.

("Manfred," Act ii., Scene 4.)

The Hall of Arimanes - Arimanes on his Throne, a Globe of Fire, surrounded by the Spirits.

Enter the Destinies and Nemesis; then Manfred.

What is here? A Spirit. A mortal!-Thou most rash and fatal wretch!

Bow down and worship!

Second Spirit. I do know the man-A Magian of great power, and fearful skill!

Third Spirit. Bow down and worship, slave !- What, know'st thou not Thine sad our Sovereign?-Tremble, and obey!

All the Spirits. Prostrate thyself, and thy condemned clay,

Child of the Earth! or dread the worst.

I know it:

And yet ye see I kneel not.

Fourth Spirit. Twill be taught thee.

Man. 'Tis taught already;—many a night on the earth, On the bare ground, have I how'd down my face,

And strew'd my head with ashes; I have known The fulness of humiliation, for

I sunk before my vain despair, and knelt

To my own desolation. Fifth Spirit. Dost thou dare Refuse to Arimanes on his throne

What the whole earth accords, beholding not The terror of his Glory?—Crouch! I say

Man. Bid him bow down to that which is above him, The overruling Infinite-the Maker

Who made him not for worship-let him kneel, And we will kneel together.

The Spirits. Crush the worm!

Tear him in pieces!—
First Desting. Hence! Avaunt!—he's mine.

Prince of the Powers invisible! This mau Is of no common order, as his port And presence here denote; his sufferings

Have been of an immortal nature, like

Our own; his knowledge, and his powers and will, As far as is compatible with clay, Which cloge the ethereal essence, have been such

As clay hath seldom borne; his aspirations Have been beyond the dwellers of the earth, And they have only taught him what we know-

That knowledge is not happiness, and science But an exchange of ignorance for that

Which is another kind of ignorance. This is not all—the passions, attributes

Of earth and heaven, from which no power, nor being, Nor breath from the worm upwards is exempt,

Have pierced his heart; and in their consequence

Made him a thing, which I, who pity not, Yet pardon those who pity. He is mine, And thine, it may be—be it so, or not,

No other Spirit in this region hath A soul like his-or power upon his soul.

Nemesis. What doth he here then? First Des. Let him answer that.

Man. Ye know what I have known; and without power I could not be amongst ye: but there are Powers deeper still beyond-I come in quest

Of such, to answer unto what I seek. Nem. What would'st thou?

Thou caust not reply to me.

Call up the dead—my question is for them.

Nem. Great Arimanes, doth thy will avouch

The wishes of this mortal?

Arimanes.

Nem.

Whom would'st thou Uncharnel?

Man. One without a tomb-call up Astarte.

NEMESIS.

Shadow! or Spirit! Whatever thou art, Which still doth inherit The whole or a part Of the form of thy birth, Of the mould of thy clay, Which return'd to the earth, Reappear to the day! Bear what thou borest, The heart and the form, And the aspect thou worest Redeem from the worm.

Appear!—Appear!—Appear! Who sent thee there requires thee here! The Phantom of ASTARTE rises and stands in the midst.

Man. Can this be death? there's bloom upon her cheek; But now I see it is no living hue, But a strange hectic-like the unnatural red Which Autumn plants upon the perish'd leaf. It is the same! Oh, God! that I should dread To look upon the same—Astarte!—No, I cannot speak to her-but bid her speak-Forgive me or condemn me.

By the power which hath broken The grave which inthrall'd thee, Speak to him who hath spoken, Or those who have call'd thee!

Man. And in that silence I am more than answer'd. Nem. My power extends no farther. Prince of sir! It rests with thee alone—command her voice.

Ari. Spirit-obey this sceptre!

Silent still! She is not of our order, but belongs To the other powers. Mortal! thy quest is vain,

And we are baffled also. Man. Hear me, hear me-Astarte! my beloved! speak to me: I have so much endured—so much endure— Look on me! the grave hath not changed thee more Than I am changed for thee. Thou lovedst me Too much, as I loved thee: we were not made To torture thus each other, though it were The deadliest sin to love as we have loved.

Say that thou loath'st me not-that I do bear This punishment for both—that thou wilt be One of the blessed—and that I shall die; For hitherto all hateful things conspire To bind me in existence-in a life

Which makes me shrink from immortality-A future like the past. I cannot rest. I know not what I ask, nor what I seek: I feel but what thou art-and what I am; And I would hear yet once before I perish

The voice which was my music—Speak to me! For I have call'd on thee in the still night, Startled the slumbering birds from the hush'd boughs, And woke the mountain wolves, and made the caves

Acquainted with thy vainly echoed name, Which answer'd me—many things answer'd me Spirits and men-but thou wert silent all. Yet speak to me! I have outwatch'd the stars, And gazed o'er heaven in vain in search of thee.

Speak to me! I have wander'd o'er the earth, And never found thy likeness-Speak to me! Look on the fiends around—they feel for me: I fear them not, and feel for thee alone—

Speak to me! though it be in wrath; -but say-I reck not what—but let me hear thee once-This once—once more!

Phantom of Astarte. Manfred! Say on, say on-Man.I live but in the sound-it is thy voice!

Phan. Manfred! To-morrow ends thy earthly ills. Farewell!

Man. Yet one word more-am I forgiven? Phan. Farewell!

Man. Say, shall we meet again? Phan. Farewell!

Man. One word for mercy! Say, thou lovest me.

Phan. Manfred! [The Spirit of ASTARTE disappears.]

She's gone, and will not be recall'd; Nem.Her words will be fulfill'd. Return to the earth. A Spirit. He is convulsed-This is to be a mortal

And seek the things beyond mortality.

Another Spirit. Yet, see, he mastereth himself, and makes
His torture tributary to his will. Had he been one of us, he would have made

An awful spirit. Nem.Hast thou further question

Of our great sovereign, or his worshippers? Man. None.

Nem. Then for a time farewell.

Man. We meet then! Where? On the earth?— Even as thou wilt: and for the grace accorded I now depart a debtor. Fare ye well! Exit MANFRED

MANFRED'S FAREWELL TO THE SUN.

("Manfred," Act lil., Sceue 2.)

GLORIOUS Orb! the idol Of early nature, and the vigorous race

Of undiseased mankind, the giant sons Of the embrace of angels, with a sex More heautiful than they, which did draw down The erring spirits who can ne'er return-Most glorious orb! that wert a worship, ere The mystery of thy making was reveal'd! Thou earliest minister of the Almighty, Which gladden'd, on their mountain tops, the hearts Of the Chaldean shepherds, till they pour'd Themselves in orisons! Thou material God, And representative of the Unknown-Who chose thee for His shadow! Thou chief star, Centre of many stars! which mak'st our earth Endurable, and temperest the hues And hearts of all who walk within thy rays! Sire of the seasons! Monarch of the climes, And those who dwell in them! for near or far, Our inborn spirits have a tint of thee Even as our outward aspects;—thou dost rise, And shine, and set in glory. Fare thee well! I ne'er shall see thee more. As my first glance Of love and wonder was for thee, then take My latest look: thou wilt not beam on one To whom the gifts of life and warmth have been Of a more fatal nature. Ho is gone: I follow.

MANFRED'S END.

("Manfred," Act iii., Scene 4.)

Interior of a Tower. MANFRED alone.

THE stars are forth, the moon above the tops Of the snow-shining mountains.—Beautiful! I linger yet with Nature, for the night Hath heen to me a more familiar face Than that of man; and in her starry shade Of dim and solitary leveliness I learn'd the language of another world. I do remember me, that in my youth, When I was wandering-upon auch a night I stood within the Coliseum's wall, Midst the chief relics of almighty Rome; The trees which grew along the hroken arches Waved dark in the blue midnight, and the stars Shone through the rents of ruin; from afar The watch-dog bay'd heyond the Tiher; and More near from out the Cæsars' palace came The owl's long cry, and, interruptedly, Of distant sentinels the fitful song Begun and died upon the gentle wind. Some cypresses beyond the time-worn breach Appear'd to skirt the horizon, yet they stood Within a howahot.—Where the Cæsars dwelt, And dwell the tuneless hirds of night, amidst A grove which springs through levell'd battlements, And twines its roots with the imperial hearths, Ivy nsurps the laurel's place of growth-But the gladiators' bloody Circus stands, A noble wreck in ruinous perfection! While Cæsar's chambers, and the Augustan halls, Grovel on earth in indistinct decay. -And thou didst shine, thou rolling moon, upon All this, and cast a wide and tender light, Which soften'd down the hoar austerity Of rugged desolation, and fill'd up, As 'twere anew, the gaps of centuries; Leaving that heautiful which still was so, And making that which was not, till the place Became religion, and the heart ran o'er With ailent worship of the great of old! The dead, but sceptred sovereigns, who still rule Our spirits from their urns .-

'Twas such a night! Tis strange that I recall it at this time; But I have found our thoughts take wildest flight Even at the moment when they should array Themselves in pensive order.

Enter the Abbot.

Abbot. My good lord! I crave a second grace for this approach; But yet let not my humble zeal offend By its abruptness—all it hath of ill Recoils on me; its good in the effect May light upon your head—could I say heart—Could I touch that, with words or prayers, I should Recall a noble spirit which hath wander'd, But is not yet all lost.

Man. Thou know'st me not;

```
My days are number'd, and my deeds recorded:
Retire, or 'twill be dangerous-Away!
   Abbot. Thou dost not mean to menace me?
                                                        Not I;
I simply tell thee peril is at hand,
And would preserve thee.
                                 What dost thou mean?
  Abbot.
   Man
                                           Look there!
What dost thou see?
                           Nothing.
   Abbot.
                                        Look there, I say,
   Man.
And steadfastly—now tell me what thou seest?
   Abbot. That which should shake me-hut I fear it not-
I see a dusk and awful figure rise,
Like an infernal god, from out the earth;
His face wrapt in a mantle, and his form
Robed as with angry clouds; he stands between Thyself and me-but I do fear him not.
Man. Thou hast no cause—he shall not harm thee—but His sight may shock thine old limbs into palsy.
I say to thee-Retire!
   Abbot.
                            And I reply—
Never-till I have battled with this fiend :-
What doth he here?
                          Why-ay-what doth he here?
I did not send for him-he is unbidden.
   Abbot. Alas! lost mortal! what with guests like these Hast thou to do? I tremble for thy sake: Why doth he gaze on thee, and thou on him?
Ah! he unveils his aspect: on his brow
The thunder-scars are graven; from his eye
Glares forth the immortality of hell-
Avaunt !-
   Man. Pronounce-what is thy mission?
   Spirit.
                                                    Come!
   Abbot. What art thou, unknown being? answer!—speak! Spirit. The genius of this mortal.—Come! 'tia time.
   Man. I am prepared for all things, but deny
The power which summons me. Who sent thee here? Spirit. Thou'lt know anon—Come! come!
                                    I have commanded
Things of an essence greater far than thine,
And striven with thy masters. Get thee hence!

Spirit. Mortal! thine hour is come—Away! I say.
   Man. I knew, and know my hour is come, but not
To render up my soul to such as thee:
Away! I'll die as I have lived—alone.
   Spirit. Then I must summon up my hrethren.—Rise!
                                                  Other Spirits rise up.
   Abbot. Avaunt! ye evil ones—Avaunt! I say-
Ye have no power where piety hath power,
And I do charge ye in the name-
  Spirit.
We know ourselves, our mission, and thine order:
Waste not thy holy words on idle uses,
It were in vain: this man is forfeited.
Once more I summon him-Away! away!
Man. I do defy ye—though I feel my soul Is ebbing from me, yet I do defy ye;
Nor will I hence, while I have earthly breath To breathe my scorn upon ye—earthly strength
To wrestle, though with spirits; what ye take
Shall be ta'en limb by limb.
                                    Reluctant mortal!
Is this the Magian who would so pervade
The world invisible, and make himself
Almost our equal?—Can it be that thou
Art thus in love with life? the very life
Which made thee wretched!
                                     Thou false fiend, thou liest!
   Man.
My life is in its last hour-that I know,
Nor would redeem a moment of that hour:
I do not combat against death, but thee
And thy surrounding angels; my past power Was purchased by no compact with thy crew,
But by superior science—penance—daring—
And length of watching—strength of mind—and skill
In knowledge of our fathers-when the earth
Saw men and spirita walking side by side,
And gave ye no supremacy: I stand
Upon my strength-I do defy-deny-
Sparn back, and scorn ye!-
   Spirit.
                                    But thy many crimes:
Have made thee-
   Man.
                         What are they to such as thee?
Must crimes he punish'd but by other crimes,
And greater criminals?—Back to thy hell!
Thou hast no power upon me, that I feel;
Thon never shalt possess me, that I know: What I have done is done; I bear within
A torture which could nothing gain from thine:
```

The mind which is immortal makes itself Requital for its good or evil thoughts-Is its own origin of ill and end-And its own place and time—its innate sense, When stripp'd of this mortality, derives No color from the fleeting things without; But is absorb'd in sufferance or in joy, Born from the knowledge of its own desert. Thou didst not tempt me, and thou couldst not tempt me; I have not been thy dupe, nor am thy prey— But was my own destroyer, and will be My own hereafter.—Back, ye buffled fiends! The hand of death is on me-but not yours!

The Demons disappear. Abbot. Alas! how pale than art—thy lips are white— And thy breast heaves-and in thy gasping throat The accents rattle.—Give thy prayers to Heaven—Pray—albeit but in thought—but die not thus.

Man. 'Tis uver—my dull eyes can fix thee not; But all things swim around me, and the earth Heaves as it were heneath me. Fare thee well— Give me thy hand.

Abbot. Cold-cold-even to the heart-But yet one prayer—Alas! how fares it with thee?

Man. Old man! 'tis not so difficult to die.

[Manfred expires.

DYING SPEECH OF THE DOGE OF VENICE.

("Marino Faliero," Act v., Scene 3.)

I SPEAK to Time and to Eternity, Of which I grow a pertion, not to man. Ye elements! in which to be resolved I hasten, let my voice be as a spirit Upon you! Ye blue waves! which hore my banner, Ye winds! which flutter'd o'er as if you loved it, And fill'd my swelling sails as they were wafted To many a triumph! Thou, my native earth, Which I have bled for, and then fereign earth, Which drank this willing blood from many a wound! Ye atones, in which my gore will not sink, but Reek up to Heaven! Ye skies, which will receive it! Thou sun! which shinest on these things, and Thou! Who kindlest and who quenchest auns!—Attest! I am not innocent—but are these guiltless? I perish, but not unavenged; far ages Float up from the abyss of time to be, And show these eyes, before they close, the doom Of this proud city, and I leave my curse On her and hers forever!——Yes, the hours Are allently engendering of the day, When she, who built 'gainst Attila a bulwark, Shall yield, and bloodlessly and basely yield Unto a bastard Attila, without Shedding so much blood in her last defence As these old veins, oft drain'd in shielding her, Shall pour in sacrifice. She shall be bought And sold, and be an appanage to those And sold, and on an appanage to those Who shall despise her!—She shall atoop to be
A province for an empire, petty town
In lieu of capital, with slaves for senates,
Beggars for nobles, panders for a people!
Then when the Hebraw's in thy palaces,
The Hun in thy high places, and the Greek
Welles clar thy meet and emiles on it for high Walks o'er thy mart, and amiles on it for his! When thy patricians beg their bitter bread In narrow streets, and in their shameful need Make their nobility a plea for pity! Then, when the few who still retain a wreck Of their great fathers' heritage shall fawn Round a harbarian Vice of Kings' Vicegerent, Even in the palace where they away'd as acvereigns, Even in the palace where they alew their sovereign, Prend of some name they have disgraced, or sprung From an adulteress hoaatful of her guilt With some large gundolier or foreign soldier, Shall bear about their bastardy in triumph To the third spurious generation ;-when Thy sons are in the lowest scale of heing, Slaves turn'd o'er to the vanquish'd by the victors, Despised by cowards for greater cowardice, And scorn'd even by the vicious for such vices As in the monstrous grasp of their conception Defy all codes to image or to name them When all the ills of conquer'd states shall cling thee, Vice without splendor, sin without reliaf Even from the gless of love to amenth it o'er. But in its atead, coarse lusts of habitude,

Prurient yet passionless, cold studied lewdness, Depraving nature's frailty to an art ;-When these and more are heavy on thee, when Smiles without mirth, and pastimes without pleasure, Youth without honor, age without respect, Meanness and weakness, and a sense of woe 'Gainst which thon wilt not strive, and dar'st not murmur, Have made thee last and worst of peopled deserta-Then, in the last gasp of thine agony, Amidst thy many murders, think of mine! Thou den of drunkards with the blood of princes! Gehenna of the waters! thou sea Sodom! Thus I devote thee to the infernal gods! Thee and thy serpent seed!

DEATH OF SALEMENES.

("Sardaeapalus," Act v., Scene i.)

To Myrrha and Balea, enter Soldiers, bearing in Salemenes wounder with a broken javelin in his side: they seat him upon one of the conclusion. which furnish the opartment.

Myr. Oh, Jove!

Then all is over. Bal.

Sal. That is false.

Hew down the slave who says so, if a soldier.

Myr. Spare him—he's nene: a mere court butterfly,

That flutters in the pageant of a monarch.

Sal. Let him live on, then.

Myr. So wilt then, I trust. Sal. I fain would live this hour out, and the event,

But doubt it. Wherefore did ye bear me here?

Sol. By the king's order. When the javelin atruck you,

You fell and fainted: 'twas his strict command To bear you to this hall.

'Twas not ill done: Sal. For seeming slain in that cold dizzy trance,

The sight might shake our soldiers-but-'tis vain, I feel it ebbing!

Myr. Let me see the wound;

I am not quite skilless: in my native land
'Tia part of our instruction. War being constant,

We are nerved to look on such things.

Sol. Best extract

The javelin.

Myr. Hold! ne Sal. I am sped, then! Hold! no, no, it cannot be.

With the blood that fast must follow

The extracted weapon, I do fear thy life.

Sal. And I not death. Where was the king when you

Convey'd me from the spot where I was stricken?

Sol. Upon the same ground, and encouraging

With voice and gesture the dispirited troops Who had seen you fall, and falter'd back. Sal. Whom heard ye

Named next to the command?

Sol. I did not hear. Sal. Fly, then, and tell him, 'twas my last request That Zames take my pest until the junction, So hoped for, yet delay'd, of Ofratanes.

Satrap of Susa. Leave me here: our troops

Are not so numerous as to spare your absence. Sol. But prince-

Sal.

Hence, I say! Here's a courtier and A woman, the best chamber company.

As you would not permit me to expire Upon the field, I'll have no idle soldiers About my sick couch. Hence! and do my bidding!

Exeunt the Soldiers.

Myr. Gallant and glorious spirit! must the earth So soon resign thee?

Sal. Gentle Myrrha, 'tie The end I would have chosen had I saved The monarch or the monarchy by this;

As 'tis, I have not outlived them. You wax paler. Sal. Your hand; this broken weapon but prolongs

My pangs, without sustaining life enough To make me useful; I would draw it forth, And my life with it, could I but hear how The fight goes.

Enter SARDANAPALUS and Soldiers.

My best brother!

Sar. Sal. And the battle

Is lost? Sar. (despendingly). You see me here.

I'd rather see you thus! [He draws out the weapon from the wound, and dies.

DEATH OF JACOPO FOSCARI.

* ("Two Foscari," Act iv., Scene i.)

To JACOPO FOSCARI, MARINA, and the DOGE, enter an Officer and Guards.

Offi. SIGNOR! the boat is at the shore—the wind

Is rising—we are ready to attend you.

Jac. Fos. And I to be attended. Once more, father,

Your hand.

Doge. Take it. Alas! how thine own trembles!

Jac. Fos. No-you mistake; 'tis yours that shakes, my father.

Farewell! Doge. Farewell! Is there aught else?

Jac. Fos.

No-nothing.

Now, I'm ready-

To the Officer.

He dies.

Exit Officer.

Ay, weep on!

Lend me your arm, good signor.

You turn pale-Let me support you-paler-ho! some aid there!

Some water!

Mar.Ah, he is dying!

Juc. Fos.

My eyes swim strangely-where's the door? Away!

Let me support him-my best love! Oh, God!

How faintly beats this heart-this pulse! Jac. Fos.

The light! Is it the light?—I am faint. [Officer presents him with water. He will be better,

Offi. Perhaps, in the air.

Jac. Fos. I doubt not. Father-wife-

Your hands.

Mar. There's death in that damp, clammy grasp.

Oh, God !--My Foscari, how fare you?

Jac. Fos.

Offi. He's gone!

Doge. He's free.

Mar. No-no, he is not dead;

There must be life yet in that heart-he could not

Thus leave me.

Daughter!

Mar. Hold thy peace, old man !

I am no daughter now-thou hast no son.

Oh, Foscari!

Off. We must remove the body.

Mar. Touch it not, dungeon miscreants! your base office

Ends with his life, and goes not beyond murder, Even by your murderous laws. Leave his remains

To those who know to honor them.

Offi. I must

Inform the Signory, and learn their pleasure.

Doge. Inform the Signory, from me, the Doge,

They have no further power upon those ashes: While he lived, he was theirs, as fits a subject-

Now he is mine-my broken-hearted boy!

Mar. And I must live!

Doge. Your children live, Marina.

Mar. My children! true-they live, and I must live

To bring them up to serve the state, and die

As died their father. Oh! what hest of blessings Were barrenness in Venice! Would my mother

Had been so!

Doge. My nnhappy children! Mar.

What! You feel it then at last-you!-Where is now

The stoic of the state?

Doge (throwing himself down by the body). Here!

Mar.

I thought you had no tears—you hoarded them Until they are useless; but weep on! he never

Shall weep more-never, never more.

CAIN AND LUCIFER IN THE ABYSS OF SPACE.

("Cain." Act ii., Scene 1.)

Point me out the site

Cain. On, god, or demon, or whate'er thou art,

Is you our earth?

Lucifer. Dost thou not recognize

The dust which form'd your father?

Can it be?

You small blue circle, swinging in far ether,

With an inferior circlet near it still,

Which looks like that which lit our earthly night? Is this our Paradise? Where are its walls,

And they who guard them?

Lucifer. Of Paradise.

How should I? As we move

Like sunheams onward, it grows small and smaller,

And as it waxes little, and then less Gathers a halo round it, like the light Which shone the roundest of the stars, when I Beheld them from the skirts of Paradise: Methinks they both, as we recede from them, Appear to join the innumerable stars Which are around us; and, as we move on, Increase their myriads.

And if there should be Lucifer. Worlds greater than thine own, inhabited By greater things, and they themselves far more In number than the dust of thy dull earth, Though multiplied to animated atoms,

All living, and all doom'd to death, and wretched,

What wouldst thou think? Cain.

I should be proud of thought Which knew such things.

But if that high thought were Lucifer. Link'd to a servile mass of matter, and, Knowing such things, aspiring to such things And science still beyond them, were chain'd down

To the most gross and petty paltry wants, All foul and fulsome, and the very best Of thine enjoyments a sweet degradation,

A most enervating and filthy chest To lure thee on to the renewal of

Freah souls and bodies, all foredoom'd to be

As frail, and few so happy-

Spirit! I

Know naught of death, save as a dreadful thing Of which I have heard my parents speak, as of A hideons heritage I owe to them No less than life; a heritage not happy, If I may judge, till now. But, spirit! if It be as thou hast said (and I within Feel the prophetic torture of its truth). Here let me die: for to give hirth to those

Who can but suffer many years, and die, Methinks is merely propagating death, And multiplying murder. Lucifer. Thou canst not

All die-there is what must survive.

Spake not of this unto my father, when He shut him forth from Paradise, with death Written upon his forehead. But at least Let what is mortal of me perish, that

I may be in the rest as angels are.

Lucifer. I am angelic: wouldst thon be as I am?

Cain. I know not what thou art: I see thy power, And see thou show'at me things beyond my power, Beyond all power of my born faculties, Although inferior still to my desires

And my conceptions.

Lucifer. What are they which dwell So humbly in their pride, as to sojourn

With worms in clay?

And what art thou who dwellest Se haughtily in spirit, and canst rauge Nature and immortality-and yet

Seem'st sorrowful?

Lucifer. I seem that which I am; And therefore do I ask of thee, if thou

Wonldst be immortal? Thon hast said, I must be

Immortal in despite of ma. I knew no This until lately—but since it must be, I knew not Let me, or happy or unhappy, learn To anticipate my immortality.

Lucifer. Thou didst before I came upon thee.

Lucifer. By suffering.

And must torture he immortal? Lucifer. We and thy sons will try. But now behold!

Is it not glorious? Cain. Oh, thou beautiful And unimaginable ether! and

Ye multiplying masses of increased And still increasing lights! what are ye? what Is this blue wilderness of interminable

Air, where ye roll along, as I have seen The leaves along the limpid streams of Eden? Is your course measured for ye? Or do ye Sweep on in your unbounded revelry

Through an aërial universe of endless Expansion—at which my soul aches to think—

Intoxicated with eternity?
Oh God! Oh Gods! or whatsoe'er ye are! How beautiful ye are! how beautiful

Your works, or accidents, or whatsoe'es They may be! Let me die, as atoms die, (If that they die) or know ye in your might And knowledge! My thoughts are not in this hour Unworthy what I see, though my dust is; Spirit! let me expire, or see them nearer. Lucifer. Art thou not nearer? look back to thine earth! Cain. Where is it? I see nothing save a mass Of most innumerable lights. Lucifer. Look there! Cain. I cannot see it. Lucifer. Yet it sparkles still. Cain. That !- yonder! Lucifer. Yea. And wilt thou tell me so? Cain. Why, I have seen the fire-flies and fire-worms Sprinkle the dusky groves and the green banks In the dim twilight, brighter than you world Which bears them. Lucifer. Thou hast seen both worms and worlds, Each bright and sparkling—what dost think of them?
Cain. That they are beautiful in their own sphere, And that the night, which makes both beautiful, The little shining fire-fly in its flight, And the immortal star in its great course, Must both be guided. Lucifer. But by whom or what? Cain. Show me. Dar'st thou behold? Lucifer. Cain. How know I what I dare behold? As yet, thou hast shown naught

CAIN AND ADAH.

On, then, with me.

("Caiu," Act iii., Scene 1.)

Adah. Hush! tread softly, Cain. I will; but wherefore? Cain Adah. Our little Enoch sleeps upon yon bed Of leaves, beneath the cypress. Cain. Cypress! 'tis A gloomy tree, which looks as if it mourn'd O'er what it shadows; wherefore didst thou choose it For our child's canopy? Adah. Because its branches Shut out the sun like night, and therefore seem'd Fitting to shadow slumber. Ay, the last-Cain. And longest; but no matter-lead me to him.

[They go up to the child.

How lovely he appears! his little cheeks, In their pure incarnation, vying with The rose-leaves strewn beneath them. Adah. And his lips, too.

How beautifully parted! No; you shall not Kiss him, at least not now: he will awake soon-His hour of mid-day rest is nearly over; But it were pity to disturb him till

'Tis closed.

I dare not gaze on further.

Lucifer.

You have said well; I will contain Cain. My heart till then. He smiles, and sleeps!-Sleep on And smile, thou little, young inheritor Of a world scarce less young: sleep on, and smile! Thine are the hours and days when both are cheering And innocent! thou hast not pluck'd the fruit-Thou know'st not thou art naked! Must the time Come thou shalt be amerced for sins unknown, Which were not thine nor mine? But now sleep on! His cheeks are reddening into deeper smiles, And shining lids are trembling o'er his long Lashes, dark as the cypress which waves o'er them; Half open, from beneath them the clear blue
Laughs out, although in slumber. He must dreamOf what? Of Paradise!—Ay! dream of it,
My disinherited boy! 'Tis but a dream; For never more thyself, thy sons, nor fathers,

Shall walk in that forbidden place of joy!

Adah. Dear Cain! Nay, do not whisper o'er our son Such melancholy yearnings o'er the past:

Why wilt thou always mourn for Paradise? Can we not make another?

Cain. Adah. Where'er thou wilt: where'er thou art, I feel not The want of this so much regretted Eden. Have I not thee, our boy, our sire, and brother, And Zillah—our sweet sister, and our Eve. To whom we owe so much hesides our birth?

Cain. Yes-death, too, is among the debts we owe her.

Adak. Cain! that proud spirit, who withdrew thec hence, Hath sadden'd thine still deeper. I had hoped The promised wonders which thou hast beheld, Visions, thou say'st, of past and present worlds, Would have composed thy mind into the calm Of a contented knowledge; but I see Thy guide hath done thee evil; still I thank him, And can forgive him all, that he so soon Hath given thee back to us. So soon? Cain. 'Tis scarcely Adah. Two hours since ye departed: two long hours

To me, hut only hours upon the sun. Cain. And yet I have approach'd that sun, and seen Worlds which he once shone on, and never more Shall light; and worlds he never lit: methought Years had roll'd o'er my absence.

Hardly hours. Adah. Cain. The mind then hath capacity of time, And measures it by that which it beholds, Pleasing or painful; little or almighty. I had beheld the immemorial works Of endless beings; skirr'd extinguish'd worlds; And, gazing on eternity, methought I had borrow'd more by a few drops of ages From its immensity: but now I feel Well said the spirit, My littleness again. That I was nothing! Adah. Wherefore said he so?

Jehovah said not that. No: he contents him Cain. With making us the nothing which we are;

And after flattering dust with glimpses of Eden and Immortality, resolves It back to dust again-for what?

Adah. Thou know'st-Even for our parents' error.

What is that Cain. To us? they sinn'd, then let them die!

Adah. Thou hast not spoken well, nor is that thought Thy own, but of the spirit who was with thee.

Would I could die for them, so they might live! Cain. Why, so say I—provided that one victim Might satiate the insatiable of life,

And that our little rosy sleeper there Might never taste of death nor human sorrow Nor hand it down to those who spring from him.

Adah. How know we that some such atonement one day May not redeem our race?

By sacrificing The harmless for the guilty? what atonement Were there? why, we are innocent: what have we Done, that we must be victims for a deed Before our hirth, or need have victims to Atone for this mysterious, nameless sin-If it be such a sin to seek for knowledge?

Adah. Alas! thou sinnest now, my Cain: thy words Sound impious in mine ears. Cain. Then leave me!

Never,

Adah. Though thy God left thee.

Say, what have we here? Cain. Adah. Two altars, which our brother Abel made

During thine absence, whereupon to offer A sacrifice to God on thy return. Cain. And how knew he that I would be so ready With the burnt offerings, which he daily brings

With a meek brow, whose base humility Shows more of fear than worship, as a bribe To the Creator? Surely, 'tis well done. Adah.

Cain. One altar may suffice; I have no offering.

Adah. The fruits of the earth, the early, beautiful Blossom and bud, and bloom of flowers, and fruits; These are a goodly offering to the Lord, Given with a gentle and a contrite spirit.

Cain. I have toil'd, and till'd, and sweaten in the sun According to the curse: -must I do more? For what should I be gentle? for a war With all the elements ere they will yield The bread we eat? For what must I be grateful? For being dust, and grovelling in the dust,

Till I return to dust? If I am nothing-For nothing shall I be an hypocrite, And seem well-pleased with pain? For what should I Be contrite? for my father's sin, already Expiate with what we all have undergone, And to be more than expiated by The ages prophesied, upon our seed.

Little deems our young blooming sleeper, there,

The germs of an eternal misery

To myriade is within him! better 'twere I snatch'd him in his sleep, and dash'd him 'gainst. The rocks, than let him live to-Adah. Oh, my Ged!
Touch not the child—my child! thy child! Oh, Cain! Cain. Fear not! for all the stars, and all the power Which sways them, I would not accest you infant With ruder greeting than a father's kiss. Adah. Then, why so awful in thy speech? Cain. I said. 'Twere hetter that he ceased to live, than give Life to se much of sorrow as he must Endure, and, harder still, bequeath; but since That saying jars you, let us only say—
'Twere better that he never had been born.

Adah. Oh, de net say so! Where were then the joys, The mother's joya of watching, neurishing, And loving him? Soft! he awakes. Sweet Enoch!

For then we are all alike; is't not so, Cain? Mother, and sire, and son, our features are Reflected in each other; as they are In the clear waters, when they are gentle, and When thou art gentle. Love us, then, my Cain! And love thyself for our sakes, for we love thee. Lock! how he laughe and stretches out his arms, And opens wide his blue eyes upon thine, Te hail his father; while his little form Flutters as wing'd with jey. Talk not of pain! The childless cheruba well might envy thee
The pleasures of a parent! Bless him, Cain! As yet he hath ne words to thank thee, but His heart will, and thine own too. Cain. Bless thee, boy! If that a mortal blessing may avail thee, To save thee from the serpent's curse! It shall. Adah. Surely a father's blessing may avert A reptile's subtlety. Cain. Of that I doubt; But bless him ne'er the less.

IV.—SATIRIC.

She goes to the child.

FAME.

OH, talk not to me of a name great in story; The days of our youth are the days of our glery; And the myrtle and ivy of sweet two-and-twenty Are worth all your laurels, though ever so plenty.

Oh, Cain! lock on him; see how full of life, Of strength, of bloom, of heauty, and of joy, How like to me—how like to thee, when gentle,

What are garlands and crowns to the brow that is wrinkled? 'Tis but as a dead-flower with May-dew beaprinkled. Then away with all such from the head that is hoary! What care I for the wreaths that can only give glory?

Oh, FAME!—if I e'er took delight in thy praises, 'Twas less for the sake of thy high-sounding phrases, Than to see the bright eyes of the dear one discover She thought that I was not unworthy to love her.

There chiefly I sought thee, there only I found thee; Her glance was the best of the rays that surround thee; When it sparkled o'er aught that was bright in my story, I knew it was love, and I felt it was glory.

WRITTEN AFTER SWIMMING FROM SESTOS TO ABYDOS.

IF, in the month of dark December, Leander, who was nightly wont (What maid will not the tale remember?) To cross thy stream, broad Hellespont!

If, when the wintry tempest rear'd,
He sped to Hero, nothing leath,
And thus of old thy current peur'd,
Fair Venus! how I pity both!

For me, degenerate modern wretch, Though in the genial month of May, My dripping limbs I faintly stretch, And think I've done a feat to-day.

But since he crosa'd the rapid tide, According to the doubtful story, To woo—and—Lord knowa what beside, And swam for Love, as I for glery;

'Twere hard to say who fared the best:
Sad mortals! thus the Gods still plague you!
He lost his labor, I my jest:
For he was drown'd, and I've the ague.

ON MY THIRTY-THIRD BIRTHDAY.

January 22, 1821.

Through life's dull read, so dim and dirty, I have dragg'd to three-and-thirty. What have these years left to me? Nothing—except thirty-three.

TO MR. MURRAY.

FOR Orford and for Waldegrave
You give much more than me you gave;
Which is not fairly to behave,
My Murray.

Because if a live dog, 'tis said, Be worth a lion fairly sped, A live lord must be worth two dead, My Murray.

And if, as the opinion goes,
Verse hath a better sale than prose—
Certes, I should have more than those,
My Murray.

But now this sheet is nearly cramm'd, So, if you will, I sha'n't be shamm'd; And if you won't, you may be damn'd, My Murray.

EPISTLE FROM MR. MURRAY TO DR. POLIDORI.

DEAR Doctor, I have read your play, Which is a good one in its way: Purges the eyes and moves the bowels, And drenches handkerchiefs like towels With tears, that, in a flux of grief, Afford hysterical relief To shatter'd nerves and quicken'd pulses, Which your catastrophe convulses.

I like your moral and machinery; Your plet, too, has such scope for scenery; Your dialogue is apt and smart; The play's concoction full of art Your here raves, your hereine cries, All stab, and everybody dies. In abort, your tragedy would be The very thing to hear and see: And for a piece of publication, If I decline on this occasion, It is not that I am not sensible To merits in themselves estensible, But-and I grieve to speak it-plays Are drugs—mere drugs, sir—newadays. I had a beavy loss by "Manuel"— Too lucky if it prove not annual-And Setheby, with his "Orestes" (Which, hy-the-bye, the author's best is), Has lain so very long on hand That I despair of all demand. I've advertised, but see my books, Or only watch my shopman's looks Still Ivan, Ina, and such lumber, My back-shop glut, my shelves encumber.

There's Byren, too, who once did better, Has sent me, folded in a letter, A sort of-it's no more a drama Than "Darnley," "Ivan," or "Kehama;" So alter'd since last year his pen is, I think he's lost his wits at Venice. In short, sir, what with one and t'other, I dare not venture on another. I write in haste; excuse each blunder; The coaches through the street so thunder! My room's so full—we've Gifford here Reading MS., with Hookham Frere, Pronouncing on the nouns and particles Of some of our forthcoming articles.

The Quarterly-Ah, sir, if you Had but the genius to review ! A smurt critique upon St. Helena, Or if you only would but tell in a Short compass what - But, to resume: As I was saying, sir, the room-The room's so full of wits and bards, Crabbes, Campbella, Crokers, Freres, and Wards, And others, neither hards nor wits-My bumble tenement admits All persons in the dreas of gent. From Mr. Hammond to Dog Dent.

A party dines with me to-day, All clever men, who make their way; Crabbe, Malcolm, Hamilton, and Chantrey, Are all partakers of my pantry. They're at this moment in discussion On poor De Staël's late dissolution. Her book, they say, was in advance— Pray heaven, she tell the truth of France! Thus run our time and tongues away. But, to return, sir, to your play: Sorry, sir, but I can not deal Unless 'twere acted by O'Neill. My hands so full, my head so busy, I'm almost dead, and always dizzy; And so, with endless truth and hurry, Dear Doctor, I am yours,

JOHN MURRAY.

TO MR. MURRAY.

STRAHAN, Tonson, Lintot of the times, Patron and publisher of rhymes, For thee the bard up Pindus climba, My Murray.

To thee, with hope and terror dumb, The unfledged MS. authors come; Thou printest all -and sellest some-My Murray.

Upon thy table's baize so green The last new Quarterly is seen,-But where is thy new Magazine, My Murray?

Along thy sprucest bookshelves shine The works thou deemest most divine.
The "Art of Cookery," and mine,
My Murray.

Tours, Travels, Essays too, I wist, And Sermons to thy mill bring grist; And then thou hast the "Navy List," My Murray.

And Heaven forbid I should conclude Without "the Board of Longitude,' Although this narrow paper would, My Murray!

HOLLAND HOUSE.

(From "English Bards and Scotch Reviewers.")

ILLUSTRIOUS Holland! hard would be his lot, His hirelings mention'd, and himself forgot! Holland, with Henry Petty at his back, The whipper-in and huntsman of the pack. Bleat he the hanquet spread at Holland Houss, Where Scotchmen feed, and critics may carouse! Long, long beneath that hospitable roof Shall Grub-street dine, while duns are kept aloof. See honest Hallam lay aside his fork, Resume his pen, review his Lordship's work, And, grateful for the dainties on his plate, Declare his landlord can at least translate! Dunedin! view thy children with delight, They write for food - and feed because they write : And lest, when heated with the unusual grape, Some glowing thoughts should to the press escape, And tinge with red the female reader's cheek, My lady skims the cream of each critique; Breathes o'er the page her purity of soul, Reforms each error, and refines the whole.

EPILOGUE TO

ENGLISH BARDS AND SCOTCH REVIEWERS.

Thus far I've held my undisturb'd career, Prepared for rancor, steel'd 'gainst selfish fear: This thing of rhyme I ne'er diadain'd to own-Though not obtrusive, yet not quite unknown: My voice was heard again, though not so loud, My page, though nameless, never disavow'd; And now at once I tear the veil away:— Cheer on the pack! the quarry stands at bay, Unscared by all the din of Melbourne house By Lambe's resentment, or by Holland's apouse, By Jeffrey's harmless pistol, Hallam's rage, Edina's hrawny sons and brimstone page. Our men in buckram shall have blows enough, And feel they too are "penetrable stuff;" And though I hope not hence unscathed to go, Who conquers me shall find a stubborn foe. The time hath been, when no harsh sound would fall From lips that now may seem imbued with gall; Nor fools nor follies tempt me to despise The meanest thing that crawl'd beneath my eyes: But now, so callous grown, so changed since youth, I've learn'd to think, and sternly speak the truth; Learn'd to deride the critic's starch decree, And break him on the wheel he meant for me; To spurn the rod a acribbler bids me kiss. Nor care if courts and crowds applaud or hisa: Nay, more, though all my rival rhymesters frown, I too can hunt a poetaster down; And, arm'd in proof, the gauntlet cast at once To Scotch marander, and to Southern dunce.

THE LANDED INTEREST.

("Age of Brouze," Stanza 14.)

ALAS, the country! how shall tongue or pen Bewail her now uncountry gentlemen? The last to bid the cry of warfare cease, The first to make a malady of peace. For what were all these country patriots born? To hunt, and vote, and raise the price of corn? But corn, like every mortal thing, must fall; Kings, conquerors—and markets most of all.
And must ye fall with every ear of grain?
Why would you trouble Bonaparte's reign? He was your great Triptolemne; his vices Destroy'd but realms, and still maintain'd your prices; He amplified to every lord's content The grand agrarian alchymy, high rent. Why did the tyrant stamble on the Tartars, And lower wheat to such desponding quarters? Why did you chain him on yon isle so lone? The man was worth much more upon his throne. True, blood and treasure boundlessly were spilt, But what of that? the Gaul may bear the guilt; But bread was high, the farmer paid his way, And acres told upon the appointed day. But where is now the goodly audit ala? The purse-proud tenant, never known to fail? The farm which never yet was left on hand? The marsh reclaim'd to most improving land? The impatient hops of the expiring lease? The doubling rental?-What an evil's peace! In vain the prize excites the ploughman's skill, In vain the Commons pass their patriot bill; The landed interest-(you may understand The phrase much better leaving out the land)-The land self-interest grouns from shore to shore, For fear that plenty should attain the poor. Up, up again, ye rents! exalt your notes, Or else the ministry will lose their votes.

And patriotism, so delicately nice, Her loaves will lower to the market price; For, ah! "the loaves and fishes," once so high, Are gone-their oven closed, their ocean dry, And naught remains of all the millions spent, Excepting to grow moderate and content. They who are not so had their turn-and turn About still flows from Fortune's equal urn; Now let their virtue be its own reward, And share the hlessings which themselves prepared. See these inglorious Cincinnati swarm, Farmers of war, dictators of the farm; Their ploughshare was the sword in hirsling hands, Their fields manured by gore of other lands; Safe in their barns, these Sabine tillers sent Their brethren out to battle-why? for rent! Year after year they voted cent. per cent., Blood, sweat, and tear-wrung millions—why? for rent! They roar'd, they dined, they drank, they swore they meant To die for England—why then live?—for rent! The peace has made one general malcontent Of these high-market patriots; war was rent! Their love of country, millions all misspent, How reconcile? by reconciling rent! And will they not repay the tressures lent? No: down with everything, and up with rent! Their good, ill, health, wealth, joy, or discontent, Being, end, aim, religion-rent, rent, rent!

ITALY.

("Beppo," Stauzas 41-45.)

With all its sinful doings, I must say,
That Italy's a pleasant place to me,
Who love to see the sun abine every day,
And vines (not nail'd to walls) from tree to tree
Festoon'd, much like the back scene of a play,
Or melodrame, which people flock to see,
When the first act is ended by a dance
In vineyards copied from the south of France.

I like on Antumn evenings to ride out,
Without being forced to bid my groom be sure
My cloak is round his middle strapp'd about,
Because the skies are not the most secure;
I know too that, if stopp'd upon my route,
Where the green alleys windingly allure,
Reeling with grapes red wagons choke the way—
In England 'twould be dung, dust, or à dray.

I also like to dine on becaficas,
To see the sun ect, sure he'll rise to-morrow,
Not through a misty morning, twinkling weak as
A drunken man's dead eye in mandlin sorrow,
But with all Heaven t'himself; that day will break as Beanteous as cloudless, not be ferced to borrow
That sort of farthing candle-light which glimmers
Where reeking London's smoky caldron simmers.

I love the language, that soft bastard Latin,
Which melts like kisses from a female month,
And sounds as if it should he writ on satin,
With syllables which breathe of the sweet South,
And gentle liquids gliding all so pat in,
That not a single accent seems uncouth,
Like our barsh northern whistling, grunting guttural,
Which we're obliged to hiss, and spit, and sputter all.

I like the women too (fergive my folly),
From the rich peasant cheek of ruddy bronze,
And large black eyes that flash on you a volley
Of rays that say a thousand things at once,
To the high dama's brow, more melancholy,
But clear, and with a wild and liquid glance,
Heart on her lips, and soul within her eyes,
Soft as her clime, and suuny as her skies.

.ENGLAND.

("Beppo," Stanzae 47-49.)

"ENGLAND! with all thy faults I love thee still,"
I said at Calais, and have not forgot it;
I like to speak and lucubrate my fill;
I like the Government (but that is not it);
I like the freedom of the press and quill;
I like the Haheas Corpus (when we've got it);
I like a parliamentary debate,
Particularly when 'tis not too late;

I like the taxes, when they're not too many;
I like a sea-coal fire, when not too dear;
I like a heef-steak, too, as well as any;
Have no objection to a pot of beer;
I like the weather, when it is not rainy,
That is, I like two months of every year.
And so God save the Regent, Church, and King!
Which means that I like all and everything.

Our standing army, and disbanded seamen,
Poor's rate, Reform, my own, the natiou's debt,
Our little riots just to show we are free men,
Our trifling bankruptcies in the Gazette,
Our cloudy climate, and our chilly women,
All these I can forgive, and those forget,
And greatly venerate our recent glories,
And wish they were not owing to the Tories.

WANTED-A HERO.

("Den Juan," Cauto I., Stanzas 1-5.)

I want a hero: an uncommon want,
When every year and month sends forth a new one,
Till, after cloying the gazettes with cant,
The age discovers he is not the true one;
Of such as these I should not care to vuunt;
I'll therefore take our ancient friend Don Juan—
We all have seen him, in the pantomime,
Sent to the devil somewhat ere his time.

Vernon, the butcher Cumberland, Wolfe, Hawke, Prince Ferdinand, Granby, Burgoyne, Kappel, Howe, Evil and good, have had their tithe of talk, And fill'd their sign-posts then, like Wellesley now; Each in their turn like Banquo's monarchs stalk, Followers of fame, "nine farrow" of that sow: France, too, had Benaparté and Dumourier Recorded in the Moniteur and Courier.

Barnave, Brissot, Condorcet, Mirabean,
Petion, Clootz, Danton, Marat, La Fayette,
Were French and famous people, as we know;
And there were others, scarce forgotten yet,
Jonbert, Hoche, Marceau, Lannes, Desaix, Moreau,
With many of the military set,
Exceedingly remarkable at times,
But not at all adapted to my rhymes.

Nelson was once Britannia's god of war,
And still should be so, but the tide is turn'd;
There's no more to be said of Trafalgar,
'Tis with our here quietly inuru'd;
Because the army's grown more popular,
At which the naval people are concern'd;
Besides, the Prince is all for the land-service,
Forgetting Duncan, Nelson, Howe, and Jervis.

Brave men were living before Agamemnon
And since, exceeding valoreus and sage,
A good deal like him too, though quite the same none;
But then they shene not on the poet's page,
And so have been forgotten:—I condemn none,
But can't find any in the present age
Fit for my peem (that is, for my new one);
So, as I said, I'll take my friend Don Juan.

LONDON.

("Don Jusa," Canto x., Stanzas 81, 82.)

The sun went down, the smoke rose up as from A half-unquench'd volcano, o'er a space Which well beseem'd the "devil's drawing-room," As some have qualified that woodrous place: But Juan felt, though not approaching home, As one who, though he were not of the race, Revered the soil, of those true sons the mother, Who butcher'd half the earth, and bullied t'other.

A mighty mass of brick, and smoke, and shipping,
Dirty and dusky, but as wide as eye
Could reach, with here and there a sail just skipping
In sight, then lost amidst the forestry
Of masts; a wilderness of steeples peeping
On tiptoe through their sea-ceal canopy;
A huge, dun cupola, like a foolscap crown
On a fool's head—and there is Lendon Town?

THINGS SWEET.

("Den Juan," Canto i., Stanzas 123-127.)

'Tis sweet to hear the watch-dog's honest bark
Bay deep-mouth'd welcome as we draw near home;
'Tis aweet to know there is an eye will mark
Our coming, and look brighter when we come;
'Tis sweet to be awaken'd by the lark,
Or lull'd by falling waters; sweet the hum
Of bees, the voice of girls, the song of hirds,
The lisp of children, and their earliest words.

Sweet is the vintage, when the showering grapes
In Bacchanal profusion reel to earth
Purple and gushing; sweet are our escapes
From civic revelry to rural mirth;
Sweet to the miser are his glittering heaps,
Sweet to the father is his first-born's birth,
Sweet is revenge—especially to women—
Pillage to soldiers, prize-money to seamen.

Sweet is a lagacy, and passing sweet
The unexpected death of some old lady
Or gentleman of seventy years complete,
Who've made "us youth" wait too—too long already
For an estate, or cash, or country-seat,
Still breaking, but with stamina so steady,
That all the Israelites are fit to mob its Next owner for their double-damn'd post-obits.

'Tis sweet to win, no matter how, one's laurels,
By blood or ink; 'tis sweet to put an end
To strife; 'tis sometimes sweet to have our quarrels,
Particularly with a tiresome friend;
Sweet is old wine in bottles, ale in barrels;
Dear is the helpless creature we defend
Against the world; and dear the school-boy spot
We ne'er forget, though there we are forgot.

But sweeter still than this, than these, than all,
Is first and passionate love—it stands alone,
Like Adam's recollection of his fall;
The tree of knowledge has been pluck'd—all's known—
And life yields nothing further to recall
Worthy of this ambrosial sin, so shown,
No doubt in fable, as the unforgiven
Fire which Prometheus filch'd for us from heaven.

LAMBRO'S RETURN.

("Don Juan," Canto iii., Stanzae 27, 29-41.)

He saw his white walls shining in the sun,
His garden trees all shadowy and green;
He heard his rivulet's light bubbling run,
The distant dog-bark; and perceived between
The umbrage of the wood so cool and dun
The moving figures, and the sparkling sheen
Of arms (in the East all arm)—and various dyes
Of color'd garbs, as bright as hutterflies.

And still more nearly to the place advancing,
Descending rather quickly the declivity,
Through the waved branches, o'er the greensward glancing,
'Midst other indications of festivity,
Seeing a troop of his domestics dancing
Like dervises, who turn as on a pivot, he Perceived it was the Pyrrhic dance so martial,
To which the Levantines are very partial.

And further on a group of Grecian girls,
The first and tallest her white kerchief waving,
Were strung together like a row of pearls,
Link'd hand-in-hand, and dancing; each too having
Down her white neck long floating auburn curls—
(The least of which would set ten poets raving);
Their leader sang—and bounded to her song,
With choral step and voice, the virgin throng.

And here, assembled cross-legg'd round their trays,
Small social parties just begun to dine;
Pilaus and meats of all sorts met the gaze,
And flasks of Samian and of Chian wine,
And sherbet cooling in the porous vase;
Above them their dessert grew on its vine,
The orange and pomegranate nedding o'er,
Dropp'd in their laps, scarce pluck'd, their mellow store.

A band of children, round a snow-white ram,
There wreathe his venerable horns with flowers;
While peaceful, as if still an unwean'd lamb,
The patriarch of the flock all gently cowers
His sober head, majestically tame,
Or eats from out the palm, or playful lowers
His brow, as if in act to butt, and then
Yielding to their small hands, draws back again.

Their classic profiles, and glittering dresses,

Their large black eyes, and soft, seraphic cheeks,
Crimson as cleft pomegranates, their long tresses,
The gesture which enchants, the eye that speaks,
The innocence which happy childhood blesses,
Made quite a picture of these little Greeks;
So that the philosophical beholder
Sigh'd, for their sakes—that they should e'er grow older.

Afar, a dwarf buffoon stood telling talea
To a sedate, gray circle of old smokers
Of secret treasures found in hidden vales,
Of wonderful replies from Arab jokers,
Of charms to make good gold and cure bad ails,
Of rocks bewitch'd that open to the knockers,
Of magic ladies who, by one sole act,
Transform'd their lords to beasts (but that's a fact).

Here was no lack of innocent diversion
For the imagination or the senses,
Song, dance, wine, music, stories from the Persian,
All pretty pastimes in which no offence is;
But Lambro saw all these things with aversion,
Perceiving in his absence such expenses,
Dreading that climax of all human ills,
The inflammation of his weekly bills.

Ah! what is man? what perils still environ
The happiest mortals even after dinner—
A day of gold from out an age of iron
Is all that life allows the luckiest sinner;
Pleasure (whene'er she sings, at least) 's a siren,
That lures, to flay alive, the young beginner;
Lambro's reception at his people's bacquet
Was such as fire accords to a wet blanket.

He—being a man who seldom used a word Too much, and wishing gladly to surprise (In general he surprised men with the sword) His daughter—had not sent before to advise Of his arrival, so that no one stirr'd; And long he paused to reassure his eyes; In fact, much mere astonish'd than delighted, To find so much good company invited.

He did not know (alas! how men will lie)
That a report (especially the Greeks)
Avouch'd his death (such people never die),
And put his house in mourning several weeks—
But now their eyes and also lips were dry;
The bloom, too, had return'd to Haidée's cheeks.
Her tears, too, being return'd into their fount,
She now kept house upon her own account.

Hence all this rice, meat, dancing, wine, and fiddling, Which turn'd the isle into a place of pleasure; The servants all were getting drnnk or idling, A life which made them happy beyond measure. Her father's hospitality seem'd middling, Compared with what Haidée did with his treasure; "Twas wonderful how things went on improving, While she had not one hour to spare from loving.

Perhaps you think in stumbling on this feast
He flew into a passion, and in fact
There was no mighty reason to be pleased;
Perhaps you prophesy some sudden act,
The whip, the rack, or dungeon at the least,
To teach his people to be more exact,
And that, proceeding at a very high rate,
He show'd the royal penchants of a pirate.

You're wrong.—He was the mildest-manner'd man.
That ever scuttled ship or cut a throat;
With such true breeding of a gentleman,
You never could divine his real thought;
No courtier could, and scarcely woman can
Gird more deceit within a petticoat;
Pity he leved adventurous life's variety,
He was so great a loss to good society.

A STORMED CITY.

("Don Juan," Canto viil., Stanzas 123-127.)

ALL that the mind would shrink from of excesses;
All that the body perpetrates of had;
All that we read, hear, dream, of man's distresses;
All that the devil would do if run stark mad;
All that defies the worst which pen expresses;
All by which hell is peopled, or as sad
As hell—mere mortals who their power abuse—
Was here (as heretofore and since) let loose.

If here and there some transient trait of pity
Was shown, and some more noble heart broke through
Its bloody bond, and saved, perhaps, some pretty
Child, or an aged, helpless man or two—
What's this in one annihilated city,
Where thousand loves, and ties, and duties grow?
Cockneys of London! Muscadins of Paris!
Just ponder what a plous pastime war is.

Think how the joys of reading a Gazette
Are purchased by all agonies and crimes;
Or if these do not move you, don't forget
Such doom may he your own in after-times.
Meantime the Taxes, Castlereagh, and Debt,
Are hints as good as sermone, or as rhymes.
Read your own hearts and Ireland's present story,
Then feed her famine fat with Wellesley's glory.

But still there is unto a patriot nation,
Which loves so well its country and its king,
A subject of sublimest exultation—
Bear it, ye Muses, on your brightest wing!
Howe'er the mighty locust, Desolation,
Strip your green fields, and to your harvest cling,
Gaunt famine never shall approach the throne—
Though Ireland starve, great George weighs twenty stone.

But let me put an end unto my theme:
There was an end of Ismail—hapless town!
Far flash'd her burning towers o'er Danube's stream,
And redly ran his blushing waters down.
The horrid war-whoop and the shriller scream
Rose still; but fainter were the thunders grown:
Of forty thousand who had mann'd the wall,
Some hundreds breathed—the rest were silent all!

EXHORTATION TO MR. WILBERFORCE.

("Don Juau," Canto xiv., Stanzas 82-84.)

O WILBERFORCE! thou man of black renown, Whose merit none enough can sing or say,

Thou hast struck one immense Colossus down,

Thou moral Washington of Africa!

But there's another little thing, I own,

Which you should perpetrate some summer's day,

And set the other half of earth to rights;

You have freed the blacks—now pray shut up the whites.

Shut up the bald-coot bully Alexander!
Ship off the Holy Three to Senegal;
Teach them that "sauce for goose is sauce for gander,"
And ask them how they like to be in thrall?
Shut up each high, heroic salamander.
Who eats fire gratis (since the pay's but small);
Shut up—no, not the King, but the Pavilion,
Or else 'twill cost us all another million.

Shut up the world at large, let Bedlam out;
And you will be perhaps surprised to find
All things pursue exactly the same route,
As now with those of soi-disant sound mind.
This I could prove beyond a single doubt,
Were there a jot of sense among mankind;
But till that point d'appui is found, alas!
Like Archimedes, I leave earth as 'twas.

EXHORTATION TO MRS. FRY.

("Don Juan," Cauto x., Stauzas 85-87.)

On, Mrs. Fry! Why go to Newgate? Why
Preach to poor rogues? And wherefore not begin
With Carlton, or with other houses? Try
Your hand at harden'd and imperial sin.

To mend the people 's an absurdity.

A jargon, a mere philanthropie din,
Unless you make their betters better:—Fy!
I thought you had more religion, Mrs. Fry.

Teach them the decencies of good threescore;
Cure them of tours, hussar and Highland dresses;
Tell them that youth once gone returns no more,
That hired huzzas redeem no land's distresses;
Tell them Sir William Curtis is a bore,
Too dull even for the dullest of excesses,
The witless Falstaff of a hoary Hal,
A fool whose hells have ceased to ring at all,

Tell them, though it may be perhaps too late
On life's worn confine, jaded, bloated, sated,
To set np vain pretences of being great,
'Tis not so to be good; and he it stated,
The worthiest kings have ever loved least state;
And tell them— But you won't, and I have prated
Just now enough; but by-and-by I'll prattle
Like Roland's horn in Roncesyalles' battle,

SATAN CLAIMS, AT HEAVEN'S GATE, GEORGE THE THIRD.

("Vision of Judgmeut," Stsnzas 42-49.)

"Look to the earth, I said, and say again:
When this old, blind, mad, helpless, weak, poor worm
Began in youth's first bloom and flush to reign
The world and he both wore a different form,
And much of earth and all the watery plain
Of ocean call'd him king: through many a storm
His isles had floated on the abyss of time;
For the rough virtues chose them for their clime.

"He came to his sceptre young; he leaves it old:
Look to the state in which he found his realm,
And left it; and his annals too hehold,
How to a minion first he gave the helm;
How grew upon his heart a thirst for gold,
The beggar's vice, which can but overwhelm
The meanest hearts; and for the rest, but glance
Thine eye along America and France.

"'Tis true, he was a tool from first to last
(I have the workmen safe); but as a tool
So let him be consumed. From out the past
Of ages, since mankind have known the rule
Of monarchs—from the bloody rolls amass'd
Of sin and slaughter—from the Cæsar's school,
Take the worst pupil; and produce a reign
More drench'd with gore, more cumher'd with the slain.

"He ever warr'd with freedom and the free:
Nations as men, home subjects, foreign foes,
So that they utter'd the word 'Liberty!'
Found George the Third their first opponent. Whose History was ever stain'd as his will be
With national and individual woes?
I grant his household abstinence; I grant
His neutral virtues, which most monarchs want,

"I know he was a constant consort; own
He was a decent sire, and middling lord.
All this is much, and most upon a throne;
As temperance, if at Apioius' board,
Is more than at an anchorite's supper shown.
I grant him all the kindest can accord;
And this was well for him, but not for those
Millions who found him what oppression chose,

"The New World shook bim off: the Old yet groans Beneath what he and his prepared, if not Completed: he leaves heirs on many thrones To all his vices, without what hegot Compassion for him—his tame virtues; drones Who sleep, or despots who have now forgot A lesson which shall be retaught them, wake Upon the thrones of earth; but let them quake!

"Five millions of the primitive, who hold
The faith which makes ye great on earth, implored
A part of that vast all they held of old—
Freedom to worship—not alone your Lord,
Michael! but you; and you, Saint Peter! Cold
Must be your souls, if you have not abhorr'd
The foe to Catholic participation
In all the license of a Christian nation.

"True! he allow'd them to pray God; but, as
A consequence of prayer, refused the law
Which would have placed them upon the same base
With those who did not hold the saints in awe."—
But here Saint Peter started from his place,
And cried, "You may the prisoner withdraw:
Ere Heaven shall ope her portals to this Guelph,
While I am guard, may I be damn'd myself!"

THE SEX.

("Childe Haroid," Canto li., Stanza 34.)

Nor much he kens, I ween, of woman's breast Who thinks that wanton thing is won hy aigha; What careth she for hearts when once possess'd? Do proper homage to thine idol's eyes, But not too humbly, or ahe will despise Thee and thy snit, though told in moving tropes: Dieguise ev'n tenderness, if thou art wise; Brisk Confidence still best with woman copes; Pique her and soothe in turn, scon Passion crowns thy hopes.

OUR CHILDREN.

("Dnn Juan," Canto iii., Stanzse 59, 60.)

It is a hard although a common case

To find our children running restive;—they,
In whom our brightest days we would retrace,
Onr little selves re-form'd in finer clay,
Just as old age is creeping on apace,
And clouds come o'er the sunset of our day,
They kindly leave us, though not quite alone,
But in good company—the gout or stone.

Yet a fine family is a fine thing
(Provided they don't come in after dinner);
"Tis beautiful to see a matron bring
Her children up (if nursing them don't thin her);
Like cherubs round an altar-piece they cling
To the fireside (a sight to touch a sinner).
A lady with her daughters or her nieces
Shine like a guinea and seven-shilling pieces.

SOUL.

("Don Juan," Canto xiv., Stanzaa 70-72.)

HE was a cold, good, honorable man,
Proud of his birth, and proud of everything;
A goodly spirit for a state divan,
A figure fit to walk before a king;
Tall, atately, form'd to lead the courtly van
On birthdays, glorious with a star and string;
The very nodel of a chamberlain—
And such I mean to make him when I reign.

But there was something wanting on the whole—
I don't know what, and therefore cannot tell—
Which pretty women—the sweet souls!—call soul.
Certes it was not body; he was well
Proportion'd, as a poplar or a pole,
A handsome man, that human miracle;
And in each circumstance of love or war
Had atill preserved his perpendicular.

Still there was something wanting, as I've said—
That undefinable "Je ne sçais quoi,"
Which, for what I know, may of yore have led
To Homer's "Iliad," since it drew to Troy
The Greek Eve, Helen, from the Spartan's bed;
Though on the whole, no doubt, the Dardan boy
Was much inferior to King Menelaüs:—
But thus it is some women will betray us.

MOBILITY.

("Don Juan," Canto xvi., Stanzas 96-98.)

JUAN, when he caat a glance
On Adeline while playing her grand rôle,
Which she went through as though it were a dance
(Betraying only now and then her soul
By a look acarce perceptibly askance
Of wearinces or scorn), began to feel
Some doubt how much of Adeline was real;

So well she acted all and every part
By tnrns—with that vivacious versatility,
Which many people take for want of heart.
They err—'tis merely what is call'd mobility,
A thing of temperament—and not of art,
Though seeming so from its supposed facility;
And false—though true; for surely they're sincerest.
Who are strongly acted on by what is nearest.

Thia makes your actors, artists, and romancera
Heroea sometimes, though seldom—sages never;
But speakers, hards, diplomatists, and dancera,
Little that's great, but much of what is clever;
Most oratora, but very few financiers,
Though all Exchequer chancellors endeavor,
Of late years to dispense with Cocker's rigors,
And grow quite figurative with their figures.

GREAT NAMES.

("Don Joan," Canto iii., Stanzas 90-95 and 98-100."

And glory long has made the sages smile;
"Tis aomething, nothing, words, illusion, wind—
Depending more upon the historian's style
Than on the name a person leaves behind:
Troy owes to Homer what whist owes to Hoyle;
The present century was growing blind
To the great Marlborough's skill in giving knocks,
Until his late Life by Archdeacon Coxe.

Milton'a the prince of poets—so we say;
A little heavy, but no less divine:
An independent being in his day—
Learn'd, pions, temperate in love and wine;
But his life falling into Johnson's way,
We're told this great high-priest of all the Nine
Was whipt at college—a harsh aire—odd spouse,
For the first Mrs. Milton left his house.

All these are, certes, entertaining facts,
Like Shakspeare's stealing deer, Lord Bacon's bribes;
Like Titus' youth, and Cæsar's earliest acts;
Like Burns (whom Doctor Currie well describes);
Like Cromwell's pranks;—but although truth exacts.
These amiable descriptions from the scribes,
As most essential to their hero's story,
They do not much contribute to his glory.

All are not moralists, ithe Southey, when He prated to the world of "Pantisocrasy;" Or Wordsworth unexcised, mnhired, who then Season'd his peddler poema with democracy; Or Coleridge, long before his flighty pen Let to the Morning Post ita aristocracy; When he and Southey, following the same path, Espoused two partners (milliners of Bath).

Such names at present out a convict figure,
The very Botany Bay in moral geography;
Their loyal treason, renegado rigor,
Are good manure for their more bare biography.
Wordsworth's last quarto, by-the-way, ia bigger
Than any since the birthday of typography;
A drowsy, frowsy poem, call'd the "Excursion,"
Writ in a manner which is my aversion.

He there builds up a formidable dike
Between his own and others' intellect;
But Wordsworth's poem, and his followers, like
Jeanna Southcote's Shiloh, and her sect,
Are things which in this century don't strike
The public mind—so few are the elect;
And the new births of both their stale virginities
Have proved but dropsies—taken for divinities,

We learn from Horace, "Homer sometimes sleepa;"
We feel without him, Wordsworth sometimes wakes—
To show with what complacency he creepa,
With his dear "Wagoners," around his lakes.
He wishes for "a hoat" to sail the deeps—
Of ocean?—No, of air; and then he makea
Another outcry for "a little boat,"
And drivels seus to set it well affoat.

If he must fain sweep o'er the etherial plnin, And Pegasus runs restive in his "Wagon," Could he not beg the losn of Charles's Wain? Or pray Medea for a single dragon? Or if too classic for his vulgar brain,

He fear'd his neck to venture such a nag on,
And he must needs mount nearer to the moon,
Could not the blockhead ask for a halloon?

"Peddlers," and "Boats," and "Wagona!" Oh! ye shades
Of Pope and Dryden, are we come to this?
That trash of such sort not alone evades
Contempt, but from the bathos' vast abyes
Floats scumlike uppermost, and these Jack Cades
Of sense and song above your graves may hiss!—
The "little boatman," and his "Peter Bell,"
Can sneer at him who drew "Achitophel!"

POETICAL COMMANDMENTS.

/("Don Juan," Canto i., Stanzaa 204-206.)

If ever I should condescend to prose,
I'll write poetical commandments, which Shall supersede beyond all doubt all those
That went before; in these I shall enrich
My text with many things that no one knows,
And carry precept to the highest pitch:
I'll call the work "Longinus o'er a Bottle;
Or, Every Puet his own Aristotle."

Thou shalt believe in Milton, Dryden, Pope;
Thou shalt not set up Wordsworth, Coleridge, Southey;
Because the first is crazed beyond all hope,
The second drunk, the third so quaint and mouthy:
With Crabbe it may be difficult to cope,
And Campbell's Hippocrene is somewhat drouthy:
Thou shalt not steal from Samuel Rogers, nor Commit—flirtation with the muse of Moore.

Thou shalt not covet Mr. Sotheby's Muse,
His Pegaaua, nor any thing that's hia;
Thou shalt not bear false witness like "the Blues"—
(There's one, at least, is very fond of this);
Thou shalt not write, in short, but what I choose:
This is true criticism, and you may kisa—
Exactly as you please, or not—the rod;
But if you doo't, I'll lay it on, by G—d!

BYRON AND HIS CONTEMPORARIES.

("Don Juan," Canto xi., Stanzas 53-60.)

Juan knew aeveral languages—as well

He might—and brought them op with skill, in time
To save his fame with each accomplish'd belle,
Who still regretted that he did not rhyme.
There wanted but this requisite to swell
His qualities (with them) into aublime:
Lady Fitz-Frisky and Miss Mævia Mannish,
Both long'd extremely to be sung in Spanish.

However, he did pretty well, and was Admitted as an aspirant to all.
The coteries, and, as in Banquo's glass,
At great assemblies or in parties small,
Ha saw ten thousand living authors pass,
That being about their average numeral,
Also the eighty "greatest living poets,"
As every paltry magazine can abow it's.

In twice five years the "greatest living poet,"
Like to the champion in the fisty ring,
Is call'd on to support his claim, or show it,
Although 'tis an imaginary thing.
Even I—albeit I'm sure I did not know it,
Nor sought of foolscap subjects to be king—
Was reckon'd a considerable time
The grand Napoleon of the realms of rhyme.

But Juan was my Moscow, and Faliero
My Leipsie, and my Mont Saint Jean seems Cain:
"La Belle Alliance" of dunces down at zero,
Now that the Lion's fall'n, may rise again:
But I will fall at least as fell my hero;
Nor reign at all. or as a monarch reign;
Or to some lonely isle of jailers go,
With turncoat Southey for my turnkey Lowe.

Sir Walter reign'd before me; Moore and Camphell Before and after; hut now grown more holy, The Muses upon Sion's hill must ramble With poets almost clergynnen, or wholly; And Pegaaus hath a psalmodic amble Beneath the very Reverend Rowley Powley, Who shoes the glurious animal with stilts, A modern Ancient Pistol—by the hilts!

Then there's my gentle Euphues; who, they say,
Sets up for being a sort of moral me;
He'll find it rather difficult some day
To turn out both, or either, it may he.
Some persons think that Coleridge hath the away;
And Wordsworth has aupporters, two or three;
And that deep-mouth'd Bootian "Savage Landor"
Has taken for a swan rogue Southey's gander.

John Keats, who was kill'd off by one critique, Just as he really promised something great, If not intelligitle, without Greek Contrived to talk about the gods of late Much as they might have been supposed to speak. Poor fellow! His was an untoward fate; 'Tis atrange the mind, that very fiery particle, Should let itself be sauff'd out by an article.

The list growa long of live and dead pretendera
To that which none will gain—or none will know
The conqueror at least; who, ere time rendera
His last award, will have the long grasa grow
Ahove his burnt-out brain, and sapless cindera.
If I might augur, I should rate but low
Their chances; they're too numerons, like the thirty
Mock tyrants, when Rome's annals wax'd hut dirty.

POETICAL PRODUCTION.

("Don Juan," Canto xiv., Stanzas 10, 11.)

I HAVE brought this world about my ears, and eke
The other; that's to say, the clergy—who
Upon my head have bid their thunders break
In pious libels by no means a few.
And yet I can't help scribbling once a week,
Tiring old reades, nor discovering new.
In youth I wrote because my mind was foll,
And now because I feel it growing dull.

But "why then publish?"—There are no rewards
Of fame or profit when the world grows weary.
I ask in turn—Why do you play at cards?
Why drink? Why read?—To make some hour less dreary.
It occupies me to turn back regards
On what I've seen or ponder'd, sad or cheery;
And what I write I cast upon the stream,
To awim or sink—I have had at least my dream.

THE LIGHTER SIDE.

("Don Juan," Canto iv., Stauzaa 3, 4.)

As hoy, I thought myself a clever fellow,
And wish'd that others held the same opinion;
They took it up when my days grew more mellow,
And other minds acknowledged my dominion:
Now my sere fancy "falls into the yellow
Leaf," and Imagination droops her pinion,
And the sad truth which hovers o'er my desk
Turns what was once romantic to hurleaque.

And if I laugh at any mortal thing,
'Tis that I may not weep; and if I weep,
'Tis that our nature cannot always bring
Itself to apathy, for we must steep
Our hearts first in the depths of Lethe's apring,
Ere what we least wish to behold will aleep;
Thetis baptized her mortal son in Styx;
A mortal mother would on Lethe fix.

THE END.

HARPER & BROTHERS will send "Poems of Wordsworth, chosen and edited by Matthew Arnold," 4to, Paper, 15 cents, and "SELECTED POEMS OF MATTHEW Arnold," 4to, Paper, 10 cents, to any address in the United States, postage prepaid, on receipt of the price.

NEW LIBRARY EDITIONS

OF

THE STANDARD HISTORIES.

Macaulay's England.

The History of England from the Accession of James II. By Thomas Babington Macaulay. New and Elegant Library Edition, from New Electrotype Plates. 8vo, Cloth, Gilt Tops, Five Volumes in a Box, $10 00 per set. Sold only in Sets.

Hume's England.

History of England, from the Invasion of Julius Cæsar to the Abdication of James II., 1688. By David Hume. New and Elegant Library Edition, from New Electrotype Plates. Six Volumes in a Box, 8vo, Cloth, with Paper Labels, Uncut Edges and Gilt Tops, $12 00. Sold only in Sets.

Motley's Dutch Republic.

The Rise of the Dutch Republic. A History. By John Lothrop Motley, LL.D., D.C.L. With a Portrait of William of Orange. Three Volumes in a Box, 8vo, Cloth, with Paper Labels, Uncut Edges and Gilt Tops, $6 00. Sold only in Sets.

Motley's United Netherlands.

History of the United Netherlands, from the Death of William the Silent to the Twelve Years' Truce. With a full View of the English-Dutch Struggle against Spain, and of the Origin and Destruction of the Spanish Armada. By John Lothrop Motley, Ll.D., D.C.L. With Portraits. Four Volumes in a Box, 8vo, Cloth, with Paper Labels, Uncut Edges and Gilt Tops, $8 00. Sold only in Sets.

Motley's John of Barneveld.

Life and Death of John of Barneveld, Advocate of Holland. With a View of the Primary Causes and Movements of the "Thirty Years' War." By John Lothrop Motley, LL.D., D.C.L. Illustrated. Two Volumes in a Box, 8vo, Cloth, with Paper Labels, Uncut Edges and Gilt Tops, $4 00. Sold only in Sets.

The original Library Edition, on larger paper, of Mr. Motley's Histories, can still be supplied: "The Dutch Republic," 3 vols.; "The History of the United Netherlands," 4 vols.; "Life and Death of John of Barneveld," 2 vols. Price per volume, in Cloth, $3 50; in Sheep, $4 00; in Half Calf, $5 75. The volumes of this original edition sold separately.

Readers who have incomplete sets of the original Library Edition are requested to order at once the volumes required to perfect their sets.

Gibbon's Rome.

The History of the Decline and Fall of the Roman Empire. By Edward Gibbon. With Notes by Dean Milman, M. Guizot, and Dr. William Smith. New Edition, from new Electrotype Plates. Six Volumes in a Box, 8vo, Cloth, with Paper Labels, Uncut Edges and Gilt Tops, $12 00. Sold only in Sets.

Hildreth's United States.

The History of the United States. First Series.—From the First Settlement of the Country to the Adoption of the Federal Constitution. Second Series.—From the Adoption of the Federal Constitution to the End of the Sixteenth Congress. By Richard Hildreth. Six Volumes, 8vo, Cloth, with Paper Labels, Uncut Edges and Gilt Tops, $12 00. Sold only in Sets.

Published by HARPER & BROTHERS, New York.

Any of the above works sent by mail, postage prepaid, to any part of the United States, on receipt of the price.

GEORGE ELIOT'S WORKS.

LIBRARY EDITION.

ADAM BEDE.

Illustrated. 12mo, Cloth, $1 25.

DANIEL DERONDA.

2 vols., 12mo, Cloth, $2 50.

FELIX HOLT, THE RADICAL.

Illustrated. 12mo, Cloth, $1 25.

THE MILL ON THE FLOSS.

Illustrated. 12mo, Cloth, $1 25.

MIDDLEMARCH.

A Study of Provincial life. 2 vols., 12mo, Cloth, $2 50.

ROMOLA.

Illustrated. 12mo, Cloth, $1 25.

SCENES OF CLERICAL LIFE, AND SILAS MARNER.

Illustrated. 12mo, Cloth, $1 25.

The above nine vols. in Cloth, 10 00; in Half Calf, $27 00.

POPULAR EDITION.

AMOS BARTON.

32mo, Paper, 20 cents.

BROTHER JACOB.—THE LIFTED VEIL. 32mo, Paper, 20 cents.

DANIEL DERONDA.

8vo, Paper, 50 cents.

FELIX HOLT, THE RADICAL.

8vo, Paper, 50 cents.

IMPRESSIONS OF THEOPHRASTUS SUCH. 12mo, Cloth, $1 25; 4to, Paper, 10 cents.

JANET'S REPENTANCE.

32mo, Paper, 20 cents.

MIDDLEMARCH.

8vo, Paper, 75 cents; Cloth, $1 25.

MR. GILFIL'S LOVE STORY.

32mo, Paper, 20 cents.

ROMOLA.

Illustrated. 8vo, Paper, 50 cents.

SCENES OF CLERICAL LIFE.

8vo, Paper, 50 cents.

SILAS MARNER.

12mo, Cloth, 75 cents.

THE MILL ON THE FLOSS.

8vo, Paper, 50 cents.

George Eliot's novels belong to the enduring literature of our country—durable, not for the fashionableness of its pattern, but for the texture of its stuff.—Examiner, London.

Few women—no living woman, indeed—have so much strength as George Eliot, and, more than that, she has never allowed it to degenerate into coarseness—Boston Transcript.

She looks out upon the world with the most entire enjoyment of all the good that there is in it to enjoy, and with an enlarged compassion for all the ill that there is in it to pity. But she never either whimpers over the sorrowful lot of man, or snarls and ohnckles over his follies and littlenesses and impotence.—Saturday Review, London.

No larger and more intellectual audience probably waits upon any living writer in the English language than George Eliot now assembles by the touch of her pen.—Congregationalist, Boston.

There is strength in her words, vehemence in her sentences, and majesty in her thought. * * * No writer of this generation is more worthy of heing studied; to none can the term "many-sided" be so fittingly applied.—Cincinnati Times.

George Eliot is at the same time novelist and philosopher. * * * She has a Shakspearean power in creating and portraying her characters, and then, having done this, she proceeds to make their acquaintance, analyze the hidden forces of their life and conduct, and study them as if she had simply found them in the world, and happened to become absorbed in ascertaining whatever it may be that is most deeply affecting their destiny. * * * The vital pith of her philosophy of human life is distinctly and eminently Christian.—Advance, Chicago.

PUBLISHED BY HARPER & BROTHERS, NEW YORK.

HARPER & BROTHERS will send any of the above works by mail, postage prepaid, to any part of the United States, on receipt of the price.

IARPER'S PERIODICALS.

HARPER'S MAGAZINE, One Year $4 00
HARPER'S WEEKLY, One Year 4 00
HARPER'S BAZAR, One Year 4 00
HARPER'S YOUNG PEOPLE, One Year . 1 50 for day
A COMBINATION OFFER.
HARPER'S MAGAZINE
HARPER'S WEEKLY
HARPER'S BAZAR

HARPER'S WEEKLY One Year . .

The Volumes of the Weekly and Bazar begin with the first Numbers for January, the Volumes of the Young People with the first Number for November, and the Volumes of the Magazine with the Numbers for June and December of each year.

Subscriptions will be commenced with the Number of each Periodical current at the time of receipt of order, except in cases where the subscriber otherwise directs.

BOUND VOLUMES.

Bound Volumes of the Magazine, each Volume containing the Numbers for Six Months, will be sent by mail, postage prevail. on receipt of $3 00 per Volume in Cloth, or $5 25 in Half Calf.

Bound Volumes of, the Weekly or Bazar from 1870, each containing the Numbers for a year, will be sent by mail, postage prepaid, on receipt of $7 00 per Volume in Cloth, or $10 50 in Half Morocco.

Harper's Young People for 1880, handsomely bound in Illuminated Cloth, will be sent by mail, postage prepaid, on receipt of $3 00. The Bound Volume of HARPER'S Young PEOPLE for 1880 is out of stock, and will not be reprinted at present.

ADVERTISING.

The extent and character of the circulation of Harper's Weekly, Harper's Bazar, and Harper's Young People render them advantageous mediums for advertising. A limited number of suitable advertisements will be inserted at the following rates: -In the Weekly, Outside Page, $2 00 a line; Inside Pages, $1 50 a line: in the Bazar, $1 00 a line: in the Young People, Outside Cover Page, 50 cents a line; Inside Cover Pages, 40 cents a line. Average, eight words to a line, twelve lines to an inch. Cuts and display charged the same rates for space occupied as solid matter.

Remittances should be made by Post-Office Money Order or Draft, to avoid chance of loss.

Address:

HARPER & BROTHERS.

Franklin Square, New York

7 00

Cornell University Library PR 4352.A75 1881

The poetry of Byron.

3 1924 013 449 206 dia, ovel

