ENIGME REVEALED.

It has always been the practice to allow the widest latitude of investigation in the proceedings of royal commissions. All material documents having the slightest relevance to the case must be produced and cannot be withheld on any plea of privilege. The public has read the telegrams which appeared in last night's Times, and we shall leave it to the judge whether they were relevant to the matters which the royal commissioner was called upon to investigate. Yet these were all ruled out, together with others which possibly might have proved even more material and of greater interest to the public. These were telegrams from Greenshields to the government, charged to the government and paid for by the people, which were held to be private and confidential and therefore inadmissible. It was also held that the government used must be kept inviolate. It would be a terrible thing to reveal the secret things connected with the government's manner of communication with its confidential agents in distant parts. As a matter of fact, a dispatch was put in containing both the cipher and its interpretation, thus furnishing a key by which the other messages could be deciphered and by means of which the celebrated appeal to Mr. Greenshields from the opposition which was "in his hands" was translated. Now the charge of Mr. Curtis practically was that the Ministers were in the hands of Mr. Greenshields and that they were therefore not in a position to make a bargain with him which was in the best interests of the province. This was proved in a perfectly satisfactory manner by other evidence, but these telegrams might even have convinced the commissioner if he had permitted his mind to dwell upon them. But as he had evidently made up his mind, it could hardly be expected that he would take cognizance of anything that might unsettle it. As he told witnesses when they were brought to any point of importance that they need not answer questions unless they liked," so he apparently ruled the telegrams out because he "did not like them," thus bringing the case to a sudden end. The case may be at an end, but more will be heard of some matters connected with it.

A SORRY SPECTACLE.

The opposition met its Waterloo yesterday, according to an ardent organic supporter of the government. A want of confidence motion was defeated by one vote, with one constituency unrepresented. For several reasons, one of which was made apparent yesterday, the administration thinks it is just as well that the House should not contain too many members at the present time. It is a difficult matter to retain a majority even with an incomplete House. More, the government could not afford to risk defeat in North Victoria. It would be just as necessary to insure a victory there as it was in Victoria city, and it costs a lot of money to carry seats in which the political sentiment is strongly in opposition to a ministry bound to remain in power regardless of cost. It is also worthy of note that an at present indefinite number of the nominal supporters of the government have studiously refrained from committing themselves to stand by all its acts. One of these exultingly proclaimed that "we" passed the Redistribution bill "with the assistance of the government." Almost any day it may be announced from a seat in the same neighborhood that "we" killed the government "with the assistance of the opposition." Looking at the situation from an unbiased position, we cannot see that the Ministers have achieved such a very glorious victory as that they have anything in particular to exult over, saving and excepting that they have forced the distinguished caterpillar who are keeping them in power to ignominiously swallow their principles and abjectly call the words they uttered so triumphantly when they last session announced that they had converted the government to their views upon transportation matters. And it must always be remembered that the members in question have not digested the principles which they have been forced to swallow in preference to precipitating an election before they are ready. These convenient principles may be brought up at any convenient time like a cow's cud and chewed over again for the enlightenment of the electorate. And the electorate may not approve of the operation. Principles which may be sunk at any moment on the command of an unprincipled leader are not such as command universal respect. We should not be surprised if the country when it has an opportunity will declare that the general welfare is of more importance than the political ambition of one would-be leader or the social aspirations of another.

It must be confessed that it is an extremely difficult matter to analyze the motives which are perpetuating the present deplorable political conditions in British Columbia. It is quite clear, however, that the petty passions of men—the miserable jealousies and ambitious schemings, and even more deplorable passions than these—are at the root of the instability and uncertainty which is doing so much harm to the province. It is a pity that our legislators are not large enough to rise above these things and put the interests of the country in the first place for a little while.

TAXATION IN BRITAIN.

The Times was somewhat hasty yesterday in announcing that the old stand-by of the British Chancellor of the Exchequer, the income tax, alone was to be increased in order to provide for the present extraordinary demands upon the treasury. Later dispatches inform us that the dreaded plunge has been taken by Sir Michael Hicks-Beach, and that the bread of the people is to be taxed to the extent of six cents per hundred pounds on wheat, with the same relative duty on flour and meal. It has been estimated for several years that Sir Michael has been opposing this same proposal with all his might and that the advanced spirits led by Mr. Chamberlain have for the same time been besieging his position. The Chancellor has at last capitulated, while protesting that the terms of surrender do not imply an increase in the cost of the people's food. This is a repetition of the old cry which was so often heard in Canada in years gone by, that the producer pays the duty, as compared with the impost of protectionist countries like Germany, France and the United States, the British duty on wheat is insignificant. It may cause a flurry and possibly a slight increase in the price of bread, but it will take time to finally determine the exact effect of the change.

There was a time when such a radical departure from the principles which have so long dominated both the great political parties in Great Britain would have caused a tremendous upheaval. If the Liberals were led by a Gladstone now there would be trouble in store for Salisbury. It is extremely doubtful whether such a step would have been taken if the opposition had been a unit in the House. Even on such a vital point as this it is divided. The Liberal Imperialists favor the tax and correspondingly weaken the force of the attack which is to be made upon it. The proposal was sustained in the House by a large majority. The farmers of the United Kingdom will henceforth have an advantage in their own markets. This they will not give up without a struggle if it should at any time be determined that the tax is not necessary for the creation of revenue. The protectionist proclivities of the other nations are having the natural and not unexpected effect. The virus is taking in Great Britain. The protection that was accorded the farmers because of the alleged dangers to their herds through a disease that was supposed to be prevalent in Canadian cattle has never been removed, notwithstanding that it has been proved conclusively by agents of the Canadian Minister of Agriculture that there was no warrant for the exclusion on the grounds alleged. The embargo remains, and the Old Country cattle man will fight to the last ditch in its defence. They will do the same when the question of the removal of the taxes on wheat comes up for consideration. Their case will be strongly supported by all those who believe they have been unjustly discriminated against through the repeated increases of the income tax. The truth will therefore once more be forcibly illustrated that it is much easier to impose than to repeal a tax of this character. The fact is that the Britisher is at last becoming infused with the protectionist proclivities of his neighbors. Whether for good or for evil, he feels like retaliating upon those who have never hesitated about inflicting what they were foolish enough to think would prove knock-out blows upon him. The Times has long felt that the day of the fair trader, or whatever one may choose to call him, would sooner or later come in Great Britain. It has dawned, and there is no united opposition to fight him. Gladstone never had such a chance to test the feeling of the country.

The curious thing is that there is a humorous side to this very serious budget deliverance of Sir Michael. We find British statesmen wondering already, if the Associated Press is to be believed, how the departure will be received in the United States. It is being pointed out that the country which has been at particular pains to search out all vulnerable points in British trade and hit the hardest when her rival was found to be the

April 1st, 2nd and 3rd.

This is an excellent record and decidedly flattering to us, especially as these young people were called for; we did not select for them. However, this is the time of the year when there is naturally a great deal of work. We are short of boys, and we are going to run short of girls. We have trained and have working in Vancouver and in the Province over 400 graduates; none of them have ever had to work for experience, but took hold right away. These facts speak for themselves. Most positions, however, are filled in spring and fall, and this is the reason why we are filling so many positions now, and it will be very much the same next fall. So if you want a position next fall you will have to begin now at the College. You are sure of employment; in fact we are running short of girls now, and we are always short of young men.

The Scrub-Lady's Baby

Motherhood and its Drawbacks.

A great deal has been said about the mischievousness of the word 'lady' in such expressions as 'scrub-lady', 'scrub-lady', 'scrub-lady', etc. It may not be good form to use the word 'lady' rather than the nobler word 'woman' in such connection, and yet perhaps this emphasis of the 'lady' in popular speech has its origin in a sort of necessity.

There's still the same original house work for the 'scrub-lady' to do. But every baby adds to the work and the care of the home. Yes, and while each baby adds to the mother's burden it also subtracts from her strength.
